And armede and attured hom, and hor bedes gerne bade.
R. Gloucester, p. 547.

Of smale corall aboute hire arm she baro
A pair of bedes, gauded all with grene;
And theron heng a broche of gold ful shene.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Knightes Tale, v. 158.

Where that he shulde bidde his bede,
He doth his theft in holy stede,
And taketh what thyng he fint therin.
Gower. Con. A. b v.

Then layeth he the cause of al these pore beggars, both their increase in nũber, and their default in finding, al this he laith to ye onely fault of the clergie, naming the in his bederolle, bishops, &c.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 290.

The senate now destitute of all helpe and comfort of man, moved the people to devotion, to their beads, and prayers unto the gods.—Holland. Livie, p. 92.

Ah! my deere sonne, (quoth he) how should, alass,
Silly old man, that liues in hidden cell,
Bidding his beades all day for his trespass,
Tidings of warre, and worldly trouble tell?
With holy father fits not with such things to mell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Though now their acts be no where to be found,
As that renowned poet them compiled,
With warlike numbers, and heroick sound,
Dan Chaucer (well of English vndefiled)
On fames eternall bead-roll worthy to be filed.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 2

Rob. ———'Twas such a bountie
And honour done to your poore beaus woman,
I know not how to owe it, but to thanke you.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc 6.

The form of bidding prayer was not begun by king Henry, as some have weakly imagined, but was used in the times of popery, as will appear by the form of bidding the beads in King Henry the 7th's time. The way was, first, for the preacher to name and open his text, and then to call on the people to go to their prayers, and to tell them what they were to pray for: after which all the people said their beads in a general silence, and the minister kneeled down also and said his.
Burnet. Hist. of Ref. b. i. pt ii. an 1547.

"Tell your beads," quoth the priest, "and be fairly truss'd up,
For you surely to-night shall in Paradise sup."
Prior. The Thief and the Cordelier.

Should I, my friend, at large repeat
Her borrow'd sense, her fond conceit,
The bead-roll of her vicious tricks,
My poem would be too prolix.—Id. Alma, c. 3.

In this dim cave, of diff'rent creed,
An hermit's holy ashes rest:
The schoolboy finds the frequent bead,
Which many a formal matin blest.—Langhorne, Fab. 11.

BE'ADLE. } See Bedeau, Bedeaux, and
BE'ADELRY. } Bidello, in Menage. Bedellus,
BE'ADLE-SHIP. } in Du Cange. Sp. Bedel; Ger. Bedelle; A. S. Bydel, Bædel, (Bæd-del,) from Biddan, Beadan, to bid, to tell, to order; because, says Junius, he proclaims, and executes the will of the superior powers.

A messenger, a servitor; a bearer of messages, orders, warrants: an officer to execute certain orders, mandates, &c.

Now is Mede the mayde, and no mo of hem alle
Thorow beedles and baniis, brouht before the kynge.
Piers Ploughman, p 38.

Nowe when they stode before the image, which Nabuchodonosor set up the bedel cried oute with al hys mighte, O ye people kynredes and tonges, to you hee it sayde.
Bible, 1551. Daniel, c. 3

Edward Wotton, son of Rich. Wotton, superior beadle of divinity of the University of Oxon, by Margaret his wife, was born within the City of Oxon.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Edmund Gayton, superior beadle of arts and physic of this University, bach. of phys. actually created, by virtue of a dispensation from the delegates, 1647, turn'd out of his headship in the year following by the parliamentarian visitors, lived afterwards in London in a sharking condition, and wrote trite things merely to get bread to sustain him and his wife.—Id. Ib.

I remember the time when rascally company was kept out, and the unlucky boys with toys and bells were whipped away by a beadle. I have seen this done indeed of late, but then it has been only to chase the lads from chuck, that the beadle might seize their copper.—Spectator, No. 509.

"Want money!" replied the host, "that must be impossible, for it was no later than yesterday he paid three guineas to our beadle to spare an old broken soldier that was to be whipped through the town for dog stealing."
Goldsmith. The Vicar of Wakefield.

BEAGLE. Perhaps, says Skinner, from the French Bugler, to bellow; from their deep and sonorous bark (or bay.) Fr. Bugles, of which Menage offers no etymology. Skinner also suggests, that both the English and French words may be derived from the It. Piccolo, (from the Lat. Pauculus,) q. d. cani piccoli, smaller dogs; for such beagles are when compared with other dogs of the chase. It is perhaps Bay-ell, a dim. of Bay, to bark: the y changed into the guttural g.

After the deliueraunce of this toune, the Frenchemen set the good begles, foloweyng their preye, besieged the toune of Lagayse.—Hall. Hen. VI an. 27.

But list, alas! loue's beagles be
Vncoupeld, beautie praites
And drawes my heart from out the thicks,
And at recent awaites.—Warner. Albion's England, b. vii.

Gallio may pull me roses ere they fall,
Or in his net entrap the tennis ball:
Or tend his spar-hawke mantling in her mew,
Or yeeping beagles busy heeles pursue.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 4.

With crowds attended of your ancient race,
You seek the champion sports, or sylvan chase:
With well breath'd beagles you surround the wood,
Eye them turn, industrious of the common good.
Dryden, Epist. 13.

Already, see the deep-mouth'd beagles catch
The tainted maze, and, on eager sport
Intent, with emulous impatience try
Each doubtful trace.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, b. iii.

BEAK. } Fr. Bec; It. Becco, Sp. Pico, Dut. Beck. Fr. Becquer, It. Beccare, to peck. A.S. Pycan, Ger. Picken, to pick or peck.
BEAKED.
BE'AKER.

The Ger. Becher, Dut. Beker, Vossius derives from the Lat. Bacar, explained by Festus to be vas contrarium; and thus bacar or baccar perhaps from Bacchus. Menage derives the It. Bicchiere from the Gr. Βικος, Vas sive urna habens ansas, (Hesych.) see also Wachter.

The beak is that which picketh or pecketh: also applied to any thing shaped or placed prominently, like the beak of a bird. A beaker, Skinner thinks, may be—

A beaked cup, such as perhaps were formerly in use.

In tyme of whiche solempnyzacyon doynge, the holy crisme or oyle, by neclygence of the mynistres, or otherwise lacke, a doue discendynge from heuen brught in her beckes bill a vyall fylled with oyle of moost sweteste sauour, and conueyed to seynt Remygius.—Fabyan, c. 98.

As touching the Athenyans, although that there were none of them drowned: yet there were seuene of theym crusheelde and brused in their foure partes with the beckes of the Corynthyans, that was more stronge than theirs.
Nicols. Thucydides, p. 183.

By shooting a piece out of our forecastle being close by her, we fired a mat on her beak-head, which more and more kindled, and ran from thence to the mat on the bowsprit
Hackluyt Voyages, vol ii p 200.

A little wren in beake with laurell greene that flew,
Foreshew'd my dolefull death, as after all men knew.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 137.

—— Down rusht the rain
Impetuous, and continu'd till the earth
No more was seen: the floating vessel swum
Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow
Rode tilting o're the waves.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

And then the armies buckling and dashing one against another, like unto ships pointed in the beakhead with pikes of brasse, and thrusting one at another by turnes, were with reciprocall and alternative motions as waves of the sea driven to and fro.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 422.

Did they coin • • • • bowls, and flaggons,
Int' officers of horse and dragons?
And into pikes and musquetteers
Stamp beakers, cups, and porringers?—Hudibras, pt. i. c 2.

Birds, for instance, in general, procure their food by means of their beak; and the distance between the eye and the point of the beak being small, it becomes necessary that they should have the power of seeing very near objects distinctly.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

Lo! where incumbent o'er the shade,
Rome's rav'ning eagle bowes his beaked head!
Mason, Ode 2.

He lives, and o'er his brimming beaker boasts,
(As if barbarity were high desert)
Th' ingenious feat, and, clamorous in praise
Of the poor brute, seems wisely to suppose
The honours of his matchless horse his own!
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

BEAM. } A.S. Beam, Matt. vii., as below, from Wiclif. Dut. Boom. "In A.S." says Junius, "Beam est arbor; from the Goth. Bagms, the true etymology of which I have still to seek." Wachter suggests, that the Goth. Bagms, may be immediately from the Icel. Byggia; and the A.S. Beam, from the Ger. Bauen, to build.
BE'AMY.

The beams or rafters of a house sustain the whole building; the beam of a balance sustains the scales appended to each end. Also applied to—

The horn or antler of a stag.

Wythoute gret harm, of scapedo, bote Seyn Dunston by cas,
That bente hym by a bem, and ysaued was.
R. Gloucester, p 288.

But what seest thou a litil mote in the yghe of thi brothir, and seest not a beem in thine owne yghe? Or how seist thou to thi brother, brother suffre, I schal do out a mote fro thin yghe, and lo a beem is in thin owne yghe? Ypocrite, do out first the beem of thin yghe, and thanne thou schalt se to do out the mote of the yghe of thi brother.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

Why sevst ye a moote in thy brothers eye, & perceauest not ye beame yt is i thine owne eye. Or why sayest ye to thy brother suffre me to plucke out the moote out of thyne eye, & behold a beame is in thine own eye. Ypocrit, first cast out ye beame out of thyne owne eye, and then shalt ye se clearly to plucke out the moote out of thy brothers eye.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

O Chaunteclere, accursed be the morwe,
That thou into thy yerd flew fro the bemes:
Thou were ful well ywarned by thy dremes,
That thilke day was perilous to thee.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,236.

Wherefore sodaynly serche was made, and theyr weyghtes founde and proued false, and ouer that all suche wares, as they shulde haue weyed at the kynges beame, they weyed moche therof in theyr sayde houses, to the hynderaunce of the kynges customs.—Fabyan, an. 1286. ed. 1.

With that, at him his beam-like speare he aymed,
And thereto all his powre and might applyde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

And [the stag] like a bold knight-errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame:
And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam.
Denham. Cooper's Hill.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair;
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 5.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles, and his brawn commend,
His double hitting AX and beamy spear,
Each asking a Gigantick force to rear.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

With cries of hounds, thou mayst pursue the fear
Of flying herds, and chace the fallow deer:
Rouze from their desart dens, the brinded rage
Of boars, and beamy stags in toyls engage
Id. Virgil, Geor. 3.

A bard—a lord—let reason take her scales,
And fairly weigh those words; see which prevails,
Which in the balance lightly kicks the beam,
And which by sinking, we the victor deem.
Churchill. Independence.

BEAM, v. } A. S. Beamian, radiare, to shine, to cast forth rays or BEAM, s. beames of the sun. (Sonner.)
BE'AMLESS. And this Skinner declares to be
BE'AMY. from the preceding beam, because a ray or beam represents the figure of a beam drawn out in length.

A ray of light emitted from an enlightened mass.

To beam; to emit such rays; to emit, to effuse, to throw light, warmth; passion or strong feeling; to emit, to effuse, to kindle.

But a thing sothly dare I tell
That ye wold hold a great mervaile,
Whan it is tolde withouten faile;
For whan the sunne clere in sight
Cast in that well his beames bright,
And that the heat descended is
Than taketh the cristall stone swis
Againe the sunne an hundred hewes,
Blew, yelow, and reed that fresh and new is.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

Suche ought to be sette in a more highe place, than the residue, where they may se, and also be sene, that by the beames of theyr excellente wytte, shewed throughe the glasse of auctorite, other of the inferiour vnderstanding, maye be directed to the waye of vertu and cõmodious liuing.
Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 1.

I saw a beauty from the sea to rise,
That all earth look'd on; and that earth, all eyes!
It cast a beam as when the cheerful sun,
Is fair got up, and day some hours begun
B Jonson. Vision on Drayton's Muse.

And so at last, Minerva clear'd the cloud Jove let fall
Before their eyes a mighty light flew beaming every way,
As well about their ships, as where their darts did hottest play.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
Of beaming sunnie rales, a golden tiar
Circl'd his head.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

I can resemble you to none above,
So neare as to the chast borne birth of Jove,
The beamie Cynthia.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. vi.

As belief first engages practice, so practice strengthens and confirms belief God beams in peculiar evidences and discoveries of the truth to such as embrace it in their affections, and own it in their actions.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

But in persons of eminent place and dignity, they [virtue and piety] are seated to a great advantage, so as to cast a lustre upon their very place, and by a strong reflexion to double the beams of majesty.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 3.

—— You, gallant Vernon, saw,
The miserable scene; you, pitying, saw,
To infant weakness sunk the warrior's arm;
Saw the deep-racking pang, the ghastly form,
The lip pale-quivering, and the beamless eye
No more with ardour bright.—Thomson. Summer.

The sun now rolling down the western way,
A blaze of fires renews the fading day;
Vnnumber'd barks the regal barge infold,
Brightening the twilight with its beamy gold
Tickell. The Royal Progress.

I see the radiant visions, where they rise
More lovely than when Lucifer displays
His beaming forehead through the gates of morn,
To lead the train of Phœbus and the spring.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. i.

What are the sciences they beamed out to enlighten it?
What are the arts they introduced to cheer and to adorn it?
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts

A third, possessed of full grown reputation, shades off every beam of favour from those who endeavour to grow beneath him, and keeps down that merit, which, but for his influence, might rise into equal eminence.
Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 4.

A sullen calm unusual, dark and dead,
Arises inauspicious o'er the heavens.
The beamless sun looks wan; a sighing cold
Winters the shadow'd air.—Mallet. The Excursion, c. 1

BEAN, s. Ger. Bone; Dut. Boon; Sw. Bœna; Sax. Bean, Bien. Junius thinks from the Gr. κυαμος, vel κυαμος, the same with κυαμος, which Eustathius would believe to be so called παρα το κυειν αιμα, because they produce blood.

The king of Alimayne sende specialliche inou
To king Jon, that he withdrowe him of is wou, [wrong]
& vndernemge the erchbissop, & hed churche al clene
Lete aobe ii franchise, & al nas wurth a bene.
R. Gloucester, p. 497.

But God wot what that May thought in hire herte,
When she him saw up sitting in his sherte
In his night cap, and with his necke lene:
She praises not his playing worth a bene.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9724.

I lest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and beane-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likenesse of a silly foale.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Long let us walk,
Where the breeze blows from yon extended field
Of blossom'd beans. Arabia cannot boast
A fuller gale of joy, than, liberal, thence Breathes through the sense, and takes the ravish'd soul.
Thomson. Spring.

The bill of this species of duck [the king duck] is red, and extends high up the forehead on each side, in form of a broad bean-shaped plate.—Pennant. British Zoology.

BEAR, v.
BE'ARER.
BE'ARING.
BE'ARN.

Goth. Bairan; Sax. Bæran, Beran, Beoran; Ger. Bæren; Dut. Beuren; Sw. Bära, Bæra. Ferre, portare, parere. Gr. Φερ-ειν.

To carry, to support, to uphold, to sustain, to undergo, to suffer, to endure.

To carry, to stand firmly under or against; to resist, to repress, to urge, push or press,—upon or against.

To carry, or bring forward or forth, to produce; (subaud. fruit, children, &c.)

To bear in hand, Mr. Steevens says, is "to delude with false promises." It is merely to carry along with us, to lead along, as suitors, dependents, expectants, believers.

And bygynth to blowe, & suththe to bere frut.
R. Gloucester, p. 352.

And hem wolde obligi, and sikernesse finde gode,
To bere hem clene here truage, wyle the world stode.
Id. p 98.

For in traunyl of hys beryng hys moder was first ded.
Id. p. 11.

We salle leue that pas vnto we com ageyn,
& telle gow other tales of Edward curteise,
& of Leulyn of Wales, & his beryng hie.
R. Brunne, p. 236.

For shal never brere bere beries as a vyne.
Piers Plouhman, p. 25.

——— Also ich fedde gowe
With flashes and with fyf loves, fyfe thousend at ones
And ther of lefte baskettes ful of broke mete
Broke bred to beren it aweye hoo so wolde.—Id. Ib. p 312.

Nothr faith ne fyn hope, so festered aren hus wondes
With oute the blod of thi barn, he beoth nouht y savede
The wiche barn not needes, be bare of a mavde.
Id. Ib. p. 325.

Lo a virgyn schal have in wombe and sche schal bere a sone and they schulen clepe his name Emanuel.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 1.

Men schulen be louynge hemsilff, coueitouse, high of berynge.—Id. Tyte, c. 3.

But faire escaped child Thopas,
And all it was thurgh Goddes grace,
And thurgh his faire bering.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,759.

A shepe right in the same plite
His woll beareth, but on a daie
An other taketh the flees awaie.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

First let the torche bearers be wrapte in weedes of woe,
Let all their lightes be virgin waxe, because I lou'de it so,
And care not though the twist be course that lends them light.—Gascoigne. Last Wyll, &c.

When they neither by manifest reason could gainstand the matter contained in the booke, nor yet abide the comming out thereof, then sought they by a subtile deuised traine to deprane the translation, notes and prologues thereof, bearing the king in hand and all the people, that there was in it a thousand lies, and I cannot tell how manie mo.—Foxe. Martyrs, Ded.

Judge not amiss what so befall;
In me there lieth no power of choyse:
It is but hope that doth me moue,
Who standerd bearer is to loue.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer thinkes, &c.

Now is the noon of sorrow's night;
High in his patience as their spight.
Lo the faint lamb, with weary limb
Bears that huge tree which must bear him.
Crashaw. Sacred Poems.

But sure it was some one or other had bewraied the plot, and Agrippina vnderstanding the practise, and doubtfull whether she should beleeue it, caused herself to be carried to Baiae in a bearing-chair.—Greeneway. Tacitus, p. 200.

Nowe blesse thy selfe: thou met'st with things dying, I with things new borne. Here's a sight for thee: Looke thee, a bearing-cloath for a squires childe.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 3.

Isa. Oh, let him marry her.
Luc This is the point.
The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Bore many gentlemen (my selfe being one)
In hand, and hope of action.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act i. sc. 5.

Thus praying you to send vs determinate answere herein by master Secretary Peter (or if yee will not let him goe) by this bearer, we beseech God to giue both you and vs grace to determine this matter.—Stowe. Chron. Edw. VI. an. 1549.

The bearers of the Arke had need bee faithfull; they must first set their foot into the streams of Jordan, and beleeve that it will give way; the same faith that led Peter upon the water, must carry them into it.
Hall. Cont. Jordan divided.

His lines are a description of the sun in eclipse, which I know nothing more like than a brave man in sorrow, who bears it as he should do, without imploring the pity of his friends, or being dejected with the contempt of his enemies.
Tatler, No. 111.

Be of good cheer, the bearer brings with him five thousand pounds, and has my order to answer your drawing as much more on my account.—Spectator, No. 218.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,
Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,
Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes,
The bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens;
To Thames's banks which fragrant breezes fill,
Or where the Muses sport on Cooper's Hill.
Pope. Windsor Forest.

They do not adapt the burthen to the strength; but they estimate the strength of the bearers by the burthen they impose.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

I shall discuss them in such a manner as shall appear to me the best adapted for shewing their mutual bearings and relations.—Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let 1.

BEAR.
BE'ARISH.
BE'ARHERD, or BE'ARWARD.

A. S. Bera, Bere; Ger. Bær; Dut. Baer; Sw. Biorn. The northern etymologists abandon this word to the Gr. Βερος; which they find in Hesychius interpreted, pilosum, villosum, (ursus, quasi hursus, hirsutus, pilis horrens.) May it not (and Boar also) derive its origin from the old English verb, To Bay; It. Baiare?—Bay, bay-er, baer, bare, or bear. See BRUTE, and BOAR; also the quotation from the Tatler.

Hym thogte he sey a grysly beore fle in the eyr anhey.
R. Gloucester, p. 202.

Instede of cote-armure on his harnais,
With nayles yelwe, and bright as any gold,
He hadde a beres skin, cole-blake for old.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2142.

Thy large fronte, thy elen graye
I shall hem chaunge in other waye,
And all the feture of thy face
In suche a wise I shall deface,
That euery man the shall forbeare.
With that the likenes of a beare
She toke, and was forshapen anone.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The shee beare thirty daies after is discharged of her burden, and bringeth forth commonly five whelpes at a time. At the firste, they seem to be a lumpe of white fleshe without all forme. this rude lumpe they fashion by little and little into some shape.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 36.

Iche were better to bee a bearward, and set to keep beares.
Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act i. sc. 2.

Old Clif. And from thy burgonet I'le rend thy bears,
And tread it vnder foot with all contempt,
Despight the bearard, that protects the beare.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 1.

Macb. They haue tied me to a stake, I cannot flye,
But beare-like I must fight the course. What's he
That was not borne of woman? Such a one
Am I to feare, or none. Id. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 7.

I fear the word bear is hardly to be understood among the polite people; but I take the meaning to be, that one who ensures a real value upon an imaginary thing, is said to sell a bear: and is the same thing as a promise among courtiers, or a vow between lovers.—Tatler, No. 38.

But now a sport more formidable
Had rak'd together village rabble;
'Twas an old way of recreating,
Which learned butchers call bear-baiting;
A bold adventurous exercise,
With ancient heroes in high prize.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

I must propose some methods for the improvement of the bear-garden, by dismissing all the bodily actors to that quarter.—Spectator, No. 141.

The voice of a bear is a kind of growl.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. vi. c. 9.

In our own language we seem to allude to this degeneracy of human nature, when we call men, by way of reproach, sheepish, bearish, &c.—Harris. Three Treatises, Notes.

Our nobility also kept their bear-ward: twenty shillings was the annual reward of that officer from his lord the fifth Earl of Northumberland.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Bear.

BEARD, v.
BEARD, n.
BE'ARDED.
BE'ARDLESS.

A. S. Beard; Dut. Baerd; Ger. Bart. Wachter thinks perhaps from Ger. Barten; A. S. Brytan, secare, dissecare, (which he finds so interpreted by Benson only) to cut, pare, or shave. Otherwise: from Ger. Baren, to shew, to manifest; because the beard, shews or manifests, or is the sign of manhood.

Mr. Steevens observes, that, "in ancient language, to head a man was to cut off his head, and to beard him signified to cut off his beard; a punishment which was frequently inflicted by Giants on such unfortunate princes as fell into their hands." Hence—

To beard is to oppose face to face in a hostile or daring manner.

A vois he hadde, as smale as hath a gote,
No berd hadde he, ne never non shulde have,
As smothe it was as it were newe shave.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Knightes Tale, v. 691

The pardoner, beardles all his chin
Glassie eyes, and face of Cherubin
Telling a tale, to anger with the frere.
Lidgate. Prol. to the Story of Thebes.

As I myn eie aboute caste,
His large berde than at laste
I sigh, and thought anone therfore,
Howe that his father hym before,
Whiche stode vpon the same place,
Was berdles, with a yongly face.
And in suche wise, as ye haue herde,
I toke away the sonnes berde,
For that his father had none,
To make him liche, and here vpon
I aske for to ben excused.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

In Joue his mighty name, this eight and twentith day,
Of frosted bearded Januar, the enemy to May.
Gascoigne. Last Wyll, &c.

Olde sophistrie, I say not well, not olde, but that new rotten sophistrie, began to beard and sholder logicke in her owne tonge.—Ascham. The Schole-Master, b. ii.

Winch. Doo what thou dar'st, I beard thee to thy face.
Glost. What! am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this priueledged place,
Blew coats to tawny coats. Priest, beware your beard,
I meane to tugge it, and to cuffe you soundly.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 3.

And they laughing came to him, and took him softly by the beard with both their hands, and even in the market place his hair being black before, was presently turned yellow. This miracle made them beleeve the report the man made, who ever after was called Ænobarbus, as you would say, bearded as yellow as gold.—North. Plut. p. 215.

The goodly well-grown trout I with my angle strike,
And with my bearded wire I take the ravenous pike.
Drayton. Nymphal 6.

These filberds likewise are covered with a soft bearded husk, and as well the shale as the kernell is round and solide, all of one entire peece.—Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 22

Th' accurs'd Philistian stands on th'other side,
Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride.
'The plagues of Dagon! a smooth boy,' said he,
'A cursed beardless foe oppos'd to me!'
Cowley. Davideis, b iii.

And yet these are their great objections against putting the scriptures into the hands of the people. Which is just like their arguing against giving the cup to the laity from the inconveniency of their beards, lest some of the consecrated wine should be spilt upon them: as if errours and beards were inconveniences lately sprung up in the world, and which mankind were not liable to in the first ages of Christianity.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 30.

How hard the contest, and how sharp the strife
To part the great from pageauntry of life!
To wean the bearded infant from his toys,
Vain hopes, vain honours, and still vainer joys.
Hart. Boetius to Rusticiana.

BEAST.
BE'ASTLY.
BE'ASTLINESS.
BE'ASTLIHOOD.
BE'ASTINGS.

Fr. Beste; It. & Sp. Bestia; Ger. Beeste, from the Lat. Bestia; perhaps so called, quasi, Βιαστικαι, from Βιαω, to offer violence. See Vossius and Martinius.

Game of hondes he louede y nou, and of wylde best,
And hys forest and hys wodes, and miest the nywe forest.
R. Gloucester, p. 375.

Mache myrthe is in May, a monge wilde bestes
And so fort wil somet lasteth, heore solace dureth.
Piers Ploukman, p. 260.

A beestli man parseyueth not tho thingis that ben of the spiryt of God, for it is foli to him.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 2.

Wery and wet, as bestes in the rain,
Cometh sely John, and with him cometh Alein.
Alas quod John, the day that I was borne!
Now are we driven til hething and til scorne.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4104.

If that the good man, that the bestes oweth,
Wol every weke, er that the cok him croweth,
Fatte drunken of this well a draught,
As thikke hony Jew our eldre taught,
His bestes and his store shall multiplie.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,294.

He taught men the forth drawynge
Of beestaile, and eke the makynge
Of oxen, and of hors the same,
How men hem shulde ride and tame.—Gower. Con. A. b v.

And though hym lacke voice of speche,
He gan vp with his feete areche,
And wayend in his beastly steuen
He made his plaint vnto the heuen.—Id. Ib. b. i.

He dyd cause the houses of L.ti. parishes to be pulled downe, the people to be expelled, and all beinge desolate, to be tourned into deserte, and made pasture for beastis sauage.—Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 12.

With lyke bestiall fury, he caused the heed of Marcus Antonius, one of the moste eloquente oratours of all the Romaynes, to be brought vnto hym, as he sate at dyner, and there toke the heed all blody betweene his handes.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 6.

A man that is valiaunte, dothe anaunce hym selfe as inuincible in thynges that do seme most terrible, not vnadui-sedly, and as it were in a bestely rage, but of gentyl courage, and with premeditation.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 8.

The Lacedemonians for the auoyding of drunkennesse, did cause their sonnes to beholde their seruauntes when they were drunke, that by beholding their beastlynesse, they might auoide the like vice.—Sir J. Cheke. Hurt of Sedition.

But throw her foorth to beasts and birds of prey:
Her life was beast-like, and deuoid of pitty,
And being so, shall haue like want of pitty.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act v. sc. 3.

A cow hath no milke ordinarily, before that shee hath calved. The first milke that she giveth downe, is called beestings; which, vnless it be delaied with some water, will soone turne to be as hard as pumish stone.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 12.

So may the first of all our fells be thine,
And both the beestning of our goats and kine.
B. Jonson. To Pan. Hymn 4.

And therefore the ancient Lacedæmonians in their solemn feasts forced their Ilotes the bondmen, to overcharge themselves with wine and such they shewed them unto their youth, by their apparent beastliness of drunken men, to work into them an abhoring so loathsome vice.
North. Plutarch, p. 732.

Ensaunter they should be as seeme they would;
Or sengen lowly for so deere desart;
Or else be peregall to nymphes of old,
From which their beastlihed now freely start.
Eclogue to W. Browne.

Their conceptions of God were very unworthy, and their worship unanswerably such (full of sottish, savage, beastly superstitions).—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

——— Inspiring dumb
And helpless victims with a sense so keen
Of injury, with such knowledge of their strength,
And such sagacity to take revenge,
That oft the beast has seem'd to judge the man.
Cowper. Task, b vi.

BEAT, r. } A. S. Beatan, Beotan; Ger. Batten; Fr. Battre, It. Battere; Sp. Batir; Lat. Batuere.
BEAT, n. }
BEATER. }
BEATING, n. } To hit, knock, strike or dash; to thresh, whether with sticks or fists, or any other thing; to impel or give impulse to.

To beat down, to level, to depress, to lower, to subject, to subdue, to repell, to conquer.

To beat into, (met.) to impress or imprint by repetition; to inculcate.

Hou vchulle perry the ost, and knygtes adoun caste,
And bete wyth thys suerd thes false kyng vaste.
R. Gloucester, p. 453.

That prefere a man to bete, for tuo schilynges or thre,
With ytked staues grete, beten saule he be.
R. Brunne, p. 328.

There sat a fancon over hire hed ful hie,
That with a pitous vois so gan to crie,
That all the wood resouned of hire cry,
And beten had hireself so pitously
With bothe hire winges, til the rede blood
Ran endelong the tree, ther as she stood.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,725.

Herest thou not the great swough
Yes perde, (qd. I) wel vnough
And what sowne is it like (qd. he)
Peter, like the beating of the see
(Qd. I) against the rockes holow.
Id. The House of Fame, b. iii.

The stronge walles downe thei bete,
So that into the large strete
Thu horse with great solemnitie
Was brought within the citte.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

M. Haddon was fullie of M. Peters opinion, and said, "That the best scholemaster of our time was the greatest beater," and named the person (sc. Nic. Udal, Master of Eton College.)—Ascham. Scholemaster.

Surely in this poynt I must compare you vnto a shrewde and vngratious wyfe, which beating hir husbande, by hir clamorous complaynts, maketh hir neighbours beleeue that hir husbande beateth hir.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 706.

Who with his sword (disdaining now to stay,
And see the blood he lov'd so rudely spilt)
Piere't a bold Lombard, who would stop his way;
Even till his heart did beat against his hilt.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i.

Whereas the diseases that possesse the body and the flesh, are discovered and known by their inflammations and red colour, by pulses also or beating of the arteries.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 257.

One portion of informing fire was given
To brutes, th' inferior family of Heaven:
The smith divine, as with a careless beat,
Struck out the mute creation at a heat.
Dryden. The Hind & Panther, pt i.

Being resolved to regard merit more than any thing else in the persons who made their applications to her, she married a Captain of dragoons who happened to be beating up for recruits in those parts.—Spectator, No. 261.

God knows, I knew nothing of sea-business; he beat me without considering what he was about.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World.

I remember, that once laying a-bed, and having been put into a fright, I heard my own heart beat: but I took it to be one knocking at the door, and arose and opened the door oftener than once, before I discovered that the sound was in my own breast.—Reid. Enq. into the Hum. Mind, c. 4. s. 1.

There is also one species of battery, more atrocious and penal than the rest, which is the beating of a Clerk in orders, or Clergyman; on account of the respect and reverence due to his sacred character, as the minister and ambassador of peace.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 15.

BEATH. "Beathing or bathing wood by the fire. Setting or straitening unseasoned wood by heat. Norf. and Suff." (Grose.) A. S. Bathian, Bathian; to bathe.

And in his hand a tall young oake he bore.
Whose knotty snags were sharpned all afore,
And beath'd in fire for steele, to be inated.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

BEA'TIFY. } From Beo, Beatus and fio. Beo, says Vossius, may be BEATI'FICK. } deduced from Beow, i. e. Baw.
BEATI'FICAL. } Thus, Beo will be facio ut
BEATI'FICALLY. } res eat, sive procedat; I so
BEATIFICA'TION. } act, that the matter may go
BEA'TITUDE. } on, or proceed; (sc.) succeed, or go well.

To make, or cause to be, blissed or blessed; happy; to bring into a state of happiness or felicity.

Christe on the mountayne taught the perfeccionyng of the lawe, whan he pronounced those straunge beatitudes neuer afore heard of.—Udal. Luke, c. 24. p 157.

If at a conversion of a sinner there is joy before the beatified spirits, the angels of God, and that is the consummation of our pardon and our consignation to felicity, then we may imagine how great an evil it is to grieve the spirit of God, who is greater than the Angels.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 8.

We shall know him to be the fullest God, the nearest to us, and the most certain. And consequently, the most beatifying of all others.—Grew. Cosmologia Sacra, p. 118.

As the saints and angels in their state of beatific vision cannot chuse but love God, and yet the liberty of their choice is not lessen'd, because the object fills all the capacities of the will and the understanding.
Bp Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

In midst of this city celestial,
Where the eternal temple should have rose,
Light ned th' idea beatifical:
End, and beginning of each thing that grows.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death

Beatifically to behold the face of God, in the fulnesse of wisdome, righteousness and peace, is a blessednes I confesse no way incident vnto the creature beneath man.
Hakewill. Apologie, p. 495.

It is the duty of Christian prudence to chuse the end of a Christian, that which is perfective of a man, satisfactory to reason, the rest of a Christian, and the beatification of his spirit.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

What fulnesse of beatitude is here?
What love with mercy mixed doth appeare?
To style us friends, who were by nature foes?
Adopt us heires, by grace, who were of those
Had lost ourselves?—B. Jonson. An Elegy on my Muse.

Above him all the sanctities of heaven
Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd
Beatitude past utterance.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii

To have the light of his countnance shining upon us, and by it to behold his special love and kindness to us, his pleasure and delight in us, and shewing himself to be reconciled to us, and well pleased with us, this is that blessed sight, which we call the beatifick vision, the sight that fills the soul with love, and light, and joy, and bliss, and happiness, as full as ever it can hold.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 123.

To the love of God, to charity towards our neighbour, to purity of heart, to meekness, to humility, to patience, to mercifulness, to peaceableness, beatitude is ascribed by our Lord (the great Judge and Dispenser of it.)
Barrow, vol i. Ser. 3

BEAU. } From the Fr. Beau, good. In BEA'UISH. } G. Douglas, Bew schyris, is good
BEA'UISHLY. } sirs. In Gower, Beaue retreat, is a good retreat. See BEAUPEERS. A Beau (bellus homo, of Martial) is a good, smart, pretty dresser; one who decks himself prettily, smartly, gaily, according to the fashion of the times. The pl. Beaux is perhaps corrupted into bucks, by English pronunciation.

My herte wolde, and I ne male,
Is nought beloued now a daies,
Er thou make any suche assaies,
To loue, and faile vpon thy fete,
Better is to make beaue-retreate.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Sir Cloudesly Shovel's monument has very often given me great offence: instead of the brave rough English Admiral, which was the distinguishing character of that plain gallant man, he is represented on his tomb by the figure of a beau, dress'd in a long perriwig, and reposing himself upon velvet cushions, under a canopy of state.—Spectator, No 27.

It would be of great benefit to the beaux of our age to carry this glass in their pocket, whereby they might learn to think, rather than dress well.
Tate. Pref. to Sir J. Davies' Poems

You laugh not, gallants, as by proof appears,
At what his beauship says, but what he wears;
So 'tis your eyes are tickled, not your ears.
Dryden. Prologue to the Husband his own Cuckold

Just at that time of life, when man by rule.
The fop laid down, takes up the graver fool.
He started up a fop, and, fond of show,
He started up a fop, and, fond of show,
Look'd like another Hercules turn'd beau.
Churchill. Independence

Peace to the beaux, and every scented belle,
Who cry "Tobacco has an odious smell."
Fawkes. The Smoking Doctor's Soliloquy.

A patient in Bedlam that did pretty well,
Was permitted sometimes to go out of his cell
One day, when they gave him that freedom, he spy'd
A beauish young spark with a sword by his side
Byrom. The Beau & Bedlamite

BE'AVER. A. S. Befer; Dut. Bever; Ger. Biber. A word, says Wachter, common to most languages, and by the consent of all from the Lat. Fiber; because it inhabits the edges (fibrum from finis) of the water.

The beuer in Pontus—this is a daungerous and terrible beast with his teeth. Verily, he will bite downe the trees growing by the river sides, as if they were cut with an axe
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 30

Nor is the provident industry of animals confined to insects, since it is to be found in divers of the greater animals, particularly in beavers.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 431

Naturalists assure us, that all animals are sagacious in proportion as they are removed from the tyranny of others in native liberty, the elephant is a citizen, and the beaver an architect.—Goldsmith. Present State of Learning, c. 2.

BE/AVER. Made of the skin of the animal, the Beaver.

And yet vnder that cope, a cote hath he furred
With foyns, or with fchewes, other fyn beuere.
Piers Ploukman. Crede.

Whan in a mantill, and a beuer hat
With cuype and clapper wonder priuely
He opened a secrete gate and out thereat
Conueyed her, that no man should espie.
Chaucer. The Testament of Cresside.

Among the Frenchmen were certayn light horsmen called Stradiotes, with short styroppes, beuer hatts, small speares and swerdes like semiteries of Turkay
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French beuer and tweeses you writ for: beuer hats are grown dearer of late, because the Jesuits have got the monopoly of them from the king.—Howell, b i. s. 1. Let. 17.

I was surprised at all this civility, and knew not to what I might ascribe it, except to my brigat beauer and shining scarf that were new that day.—Tatler, No. 259.

BE/AVER. } Fr. Bavière; It. Baviera; Ba-
BE/AVERED. } vero, from Bava, (Menage.) The It. Bava, Fr. Bave, are, foam, slaver. Bavière (says Cotgrave) is the bib, mocket or mocketer to put before the bosom of a (slavering) child. So that bavière or beaver is—

That part of the helmet, which lets down to enable the wearer to drink; and is so exposed to catch the drops or dribblings. By Shakespeare and others it is differently applied.

The Duke of Hertforde was quickely horsed and closed his bauser and caste hys spere into the rest & when the trūpet sounded, set forward coragiously toward his enemy, vi or vii paces.—Hall. Hen. IV. Introd.

Rich. What, is my beauer easier than it was?
And all my armour laid into my tent
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act v. s. 3.

For immediatly, you should not have seene ouer all the campe one man idle and doing nothing: some fell to whet and sharpen their swords; other furbushed their head peeces, bulles and beauers.—Holland. Livius, p. 1192.

He lifts his fauchion with a threatning grace,
And hewes the beuer off from Howard's face.
Sir J. Beaumont. Bosworth Field

When lo! a spectre rose, whose index hand
Held forth by virtue of the dreadful wand,
His beaver'd brow a birchen garland weares,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears.
Pope. The Dunciad.

BEA/UPEERS, from beau and peere, phere, or fere, (see FERE,) companion, associate.
A good companion, or friend.

Ingrac'd into so high a favour, there
The saints, with their beau-peers, whole worlds outwear;
And things unseen do see, and things unheard do hear.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

BEAU/TY, n. } Fr. Beauté, Beau; It.
BEAU/TY, v. } Bello; Lat. Bellus, from BEAU/TEOUS. } Benulus, from the ancient
BEAU/TEOUSLY. } Benus; i. e. Bonus; itself
BEAU/TEOUSNESS. } of uncertain etymology.
BEAU/TIFUL. } Beauty is a term of most
BEAU/TIFULLY. } extensive application.
BEAU/TIFULNESS. }
BEAU/TIFY. }
BEAU/TIFIER. }
BEAU/TIFYING, n. }
BEAU/TILESS. }

1. To those qualities or objects, which are agreeable or pleasing to the senses, particularly to the eye and ear; as colour, form, and motion; and the various combinations of them:—to sounds, and their combinations.

2. To the intellectual and moral qualities of man; and to the productions of the human mind.

I may you not deuise all hire beautee;
But thus moch of hire beautee tell I may,
That she was like the brighte morwe of May
Fulfilled of all beautee, and pleasance.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9619.

But so good hede on hir he toke,
That hym ne thought vnder the heuen,
Of beautee sighe he neuer hir eueu,
With all that felle to womanhede.—Gower. Con. A. b v.

He [John Picus] was of feture and shappe semely, and bewteous, of stature goodly, and high.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 2.

For he feared to call her hys wyfe, lest the men of the place shoulde haue kylled hi for her sake, because she was bewtyful to ye eye.—Bible, 1531. Genesis, c. 26.

After the deathe of this noble prince, and valeaunt captain, the bright sunne that commonly shone in Fraunce feaire and beautifully vpon the Englishemen, began to be cloudie, and daily to waxe darker.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 14.

God looketh not first on thy woorke as the world doth, as though the bewtyfulnes of the worke pleased hym, as it doth the world, or as though he had nede of them.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 85.

He gaue carlage again to all mē that wanted, and restored their armour to the former bewtifulneess, and excellencye.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 285.

The story of Daniel is a testimony of the preseruacion of the chirche beutified with great glory, euen then when it seemeth almost extincte and destroid
Joye. The Exposicion of Daniel. The Argument.

Though another of the same occupacion put his hande to the bettering and perfecting of it, yet is not the so dooyng any displeasure, nor cause of grutche to the other but rather a beautifying of his dooing, & a cause of rendreing thankes to the partie.—Udal. Pref. to the Reader.

Beauty is as summer fruits, which are easie to corrupt, and cannot last and for the most part, it makes a dissolute youth, and an age a little out of countenance but yet certainly againe, if it light well, it maketh vertues shine, and vices blush.—Bacon. Ess. On Beauty.

How smart a lash that speech doth giue my conscience!
That harlot's cheeke, beautied with plaist'ring art
Is not more vgly to the thing that helpes it,
Then is my deede, to my most painted word.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— A poore petitioner,
A care-cras'd mother to a many sonnes,
A beautie-wainting, and distressed widow,
Euen in the after noone of her best dayes,
Made prise and purchase of his wonton eye.
Id. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 7.

Fair is the lily; fair
The rose, of flow'rs the eye!
Both wither in the air,
Their beauteous colours die.
Daniel. A Description of Beauty.

A man hears the precepts of God injoining us to give alms of all we possess; he readily obeys with much chearfulness, and alacritie, and his charity like a fair spreading tree, looks beauteously.—Bp. Taylor, vol ii. Ser. 7.

For from less virtue and less beauteousness
The Gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses.
Donne. Elegie. Death.

The Pantheon, like unto a round region supported with archworke right beautifully, of a great height.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 64.

If you speake of the churche, as it is a communion and societie of the faithfull and elect onely: and of the gouernment thereof, as it is onely spirituall, then it is moste certaine, that the churche is thoroughly established, as perfectely gouerned, as gloriously decked and beautified in the tyme of persecution, as it is or can be vnder the cluill magistrate.—Whitgift. Defense, p. 181.

He trimmed it besides, and garnished it with the spoiles of the enemies, whereof there was such store and abundance, that not only the foresayd Temple and the market-place were therewith set out and bravely decked, but they were distributed abroad to their allies also and colonels, neere inhabitants, for the decoration and beautifying of their churches and publicke places.—Holland. Livius, p. 387.

The Barabbas becomes a Barabbas indeed, according to the origination of the name, a son of a father, a beloved son in whom they are well pleased, a chosen vessel of their honour, and Christ the only refuse vessel of dishonour, the only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiless reprobate in the mass.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

Beauty is an over-weaning self-sufficient thing, careless of providing itself any more substantial ornaments; nay, so little does it consult its own interests, that it too often defeats itself, by betraying that innocence which renders it lovely and desirable.—Spectator, No. 302.

In Ida's shady vale a bull appear'd,
White as the snow, the fairest of the herd;
A beauty-spot of black there only rose,
Betwixt his equal horns and ample brows.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love.

It is in this taste that the scenery is so beautifully ordered in the description which Antony makes, in the dialogue between him and Dolabella, of Cleopatra in her barge
Spectator, No. 400.

How faint and spiritless are the charms of a coquette, when compared with the real loveliness of Sophronia's innocence, piety, good humour, and truth: virtues which add a new softness to her sex, and even beautify her beauty.
Id. No. 33.

The Britannick beautifier, being an Essay on Modesty, No. 231, which gives such a delightful blushing colour to the cheeks of those that are white or pale, that it is not to be distinguished from a natural fine complection, nor perceived to be artificial by the nearest friend.—Id. No. 518.

This water has a peculiar virtue in it, which makes it the only true cosmetick or beauty-wash in the world. The nature of it is such, that if you go to a glass, with a design to admire your face, it immediately changes it into downright deformity.—Tatler, No. 34.

Where's all the young, the valiant, and the gay,
That on her festivals were us'd to play
Harmonious tunes, and beautify the day?
Pomfret. Eleazar's Lamentation.

In like manner, I have heard it observed by thoughtless people, that there are a few women possessed of beauty in comparison of those who want it; not considering, that we bestow the epithet of beautiful only on such as possess a degree of beauty that is common to them with a few.
Hume, pt. i. Ess. 11.

As beauteous Tweed, and wealth-importing Thames,
Flow each the envy of their country's streams;
So, loveliest of her sex, my heav'nly maid
Appears, and all their fainter glories fade.
Blacklock. Desiderium Lutetiæ.

The whole coast is beautifully diversified by the contiguous or detached villas that are spread upon it, which whether you view them from the sea or the shore, have the appearance of so many different cities.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. ii. Let. 17.

Your letter informe me, that you have erected a noble publike portico, as a memorial of yourself and your son; and that, the next day after the ceremony of opening it, you engaged to repair and beautify the gates of our city at your own charge.—Id. Ib. b. v. Let. 12.

BE-BATHE. A. S. Bebathod, lotus, washed, bathed, (Somner.) See BATHE.
To wet, to wash.

Euery one with a dagger in their hand, (which dagger they call a crise, and is as sharpe as a rasor) stab themselues to the heart, and with their hands bee-bath themselues in their owne blood, and falling groueling on their faces so ende their dayes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 822.

BE-BLAST. To blow, to strike or beat against with the suddenness, swiftness, and violence of the wind; of a whirlwind: to wither, to parch up.

O bleareyde foole, are both thine eyes beblast?
Canst thou not see? looke vp (what man!) God mend thee,
Locke at these lawyers howe they purchase fast,
Marke wel these marchants (better minde God send thee.)
Gascoigne. Fruites of Warre.

BE-BLED. } Covered with blood.
BE-BLO/ODED. }
BE-BLO/ODIED. }

Ther saw I first the derke imagining
Of felonie, and alle the compassing;
* * * * *
The open worre, with woundes all bebledde.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2004.

——— All was tourned into bloud,
The dishe forth with the cuppe and all
Bebled thei weren ouer all.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The daughter of Julius Cæsar, which was married vnto Pompei the Great, when one brought vpon a time home out of the felde a coat of her husband's beblouded, shee suspecting that her husband had beene wounded, fell to the ground into a swooning, and almost dead.
Vives. Instruction of a Christ. Woman, b. ii. c. 4.

He drew his sword at last, and gaue the tree
A mightie blow, that made a gaping wound,
Out of the rift red streames he trickling see
That all bebled the verdant plaine around.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. xiii. s. 41.

Yet after the death of this wicked malefactor, the simple people honored him as a martyre, insomuch that they stole away the gibbit whereon hee was hanged, and pared away the earth, that was bebled with his blood, and kept the same as holy reliques to heale sicke men.—Stowe. Rich. I. an. 1196.

And when Antonius also did shew them his gown all bebloodied, cut, and thrust through with swords, then they were like madmen for anger, and sought up and down the market-place if they could meet with any of them that had slain him.—North. Plutarch, p. 727.

BE-BLIND. To stop; viz. the sense of sight;—the understanding, or senses generally.

Terence was wise which taught by Pamphilus,
How courage quailes where loue beblinds the sence,
Though proofe of times makes louers quarelous,
Yet small excuse serues loue for lust defence.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

BE-BLI/STER. A blowing, or puffing up of the skin; a pustule, a blain.

Or if you will rather beblister your hands with a nettle, then comfort your senses by smelling to the pleasant marioram, then wanton is your pastime, and small will be your profit.—Gascoigne. To the Youth of England.

BE-BLOT. A be-blot or blot upon any thing extends just as far as that thing is covered, and no farther.

Beblotte it with thy teares eke alite
And if thou write a goodly worde all soft,
Though it be good, rehearce it not to oft.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

No might could move my mind to any wrong,
Which might beblot the glory of my name:
For so I thought, to live in honour long,
And far exceed all other men of fame.
North. Plutarch, p. 72.

BE-BLU'BBER. To blubber, is to cover with blebs or blubs. (qv.)

He would be first man in the market place, apparelled all in black, his face beblubbered with tears, and looking heavily upon the matter, praying the people assembled to have compassion upon him, saying, that he was afraid lest his enemies would come in the night, and overthrow his house to kill him.—North. Plutarch, p. 688.

BE-CALM. } To becalm, is to make or cause
BECA'LMING. } to be calm. And calm, as the Fr. Calme is—

Still, quiet, peaceable, fair, gentle, unmoved, without storm, without surges, (Cotgrave.)

These small shippes, accompanied with the centurion, sayling along the coast of Spaine, were vpon Easter day in the straight of Gibraltar suddenly becalmed, where immediately they saw sundry galies make towards them, in very valiant and courageous sort.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 168.

Their trouble turn'd me to a quiet life,
My common weale did prosper passing well,
When all the world agreed like doues in hed,
Then I and mine becalmed from hatred's blast
In happie haven harboured were at last.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 106.

Compar'd with me, wert thou but half so kind,
Thy sighs should stuff thy sails, tho' wanting wind:
But thy breast is becalm'd, thy sighs be slack,
And mine, too stiff, do blow thy broad sails back.
Drayton. Mary. To Duke of Suffolk.

And see the seas becalm'd behind
Not crisp'd with any breese of wind:
The tempest has forsook the waves,
And on the land begins his braves.—Cotton. Winter.

In the night my heart must needs repine
And storm with sighs, to ease me as I may,
Whilst others are becalm'd, or lie them still,
Or sail secure, with tide and wind at will.
Thomas Watson. Elits, vol. ii.

They are becalm'd in clearest days,
And in rough weather tost,
They wither under cold delays,
And are in tempests lost.
Sir Charles Sedley. Ib. vol. iii.

But now 'tis o'er, the dear delusion's o'er!
A stagnant breezeless air becalms my soul,
A fond aspiring candidate no more,
I scorn the palm, before I reach the goal.
Shenstone. To Mr. Jago, Eleg. 2.

BE-CAUSE. Written Bicas, Bicause, Bycause, be and cause. Cause being; there being cause · because of his syeknesse; his sickness being the cause. Because we earn before we eat; we earn before we eat being the cause why our food is so very sweet.

His squiers, which that stoden ther beside,
Excused him, because of his sikenesse,
Which letted him to don his besinesse.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9776.

——— Triptolemus,
Her scone goth amonges vs,
And maketh the corne good chepe or dere;
Reyneth as hir list from yere to yere.
So that his wife because of this
Goddesse of corne cleped is.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

God persecuteth vs, bycause we abuse his holy Testament, and bycause when we knowe the truth, we folowe it not.
Tyndall. Works, p. 7.

She that loketh towardes marryage, is not therfore condempned because she would marry, but because she hath refused it afore by an vngodly promyse.
Bale. Apologie, fol 82.

When a man is holy, then God is gracious, and a holy life is the best, and it is a continual prayer, and repentance is the best argument to move God to mercy, because it is the instrument to unite our prayers to the intercession of the Holy Jesus.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Aristotle saith, that young men are not fit hearers of moral doctrine; because (saith he) they are unexperienced in affairs of life: and because they are apt to follow their passions, which indispose to hear with fruit or profit; but his conclusion is false, and his reason may be well turned against him; for because young men want experience, therefore is there no bad prejudice, no contrary habit to obstruct their embracing sound doctrine, because their passions are vehement and strong, therefore being rightly ordered, and set upon good objects they with great force will carry them to vertuous practice.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

Why is our food so very sweet?
Because we earn before we eat.
Why are our wants so very few?
Because we Nature's calls pursue.
Whence our complacency of mind?
Because we act our parts assigned.—Cotton, Fable I.

BE-CHANCE, v. } Chance, a fall, a hap;
BECHA'NCE, ad. } that which falls or happens; an accident. To bechance, to befal, to happen.

And if they be good, there is perpetuall care, least they should dye, or some harme bechance them.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 11.

And yet we haue withstood them till at the last battayle of Bramston, where we bechaunce lost our souereigne lorde, and many noble men.—Grafton. Hen. VIII. an. 14.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bed-rid groans:
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him moan, but pity not his moans.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

BE-CHARM. To chant, to inchant; to act upon by incantation or charms.

Cas. Antinous, by my shame observe
What a close witchcraft popular applause is;
I am awak'd, and with clear eyes behold
The lethargie wherein my reason long
Hath been be-charm'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lawes of Candy, Act v. sc. 1.

BECK, v. } Beck, Becken, to nod to, to give
BECK, n. } a sign or signal. A. S. Beacen,
BE'CKING. } Beacn, is a sign or signal. See BEACON. A. S. Beknian, is—

To nod to: to shew, point out, or indicate by a nod, (Junius.) Also by a similar motion of the hand or finger.

With that he gan her humbly salue
With dredful chere, and oft his hewes mue
And vp his loke debonairly he cast
And becked on Pandare, and forth by past.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

Than peine I me to stretchen forth my necke,
And est and west upon the peple I becke,
As doth a dove, sitting upon a berne.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,329.

From the bright skies the ruler of the gods
Sent me to thee, that with his beck commaundes
Both heuen and earth.—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

What helpeth it also that the priest whē he goeth to masse disguiseth himselfe with a great part of the passion of Christ, and playeth out the rest vnder silence with signs and prefers, with noddyng, beckyng, and mowyng as it were jacke an apes.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 132.

We do profoundly consider that the perfection of Christian living doth not consist in some ceremonies, wearing of a white coat, disguising our selves after strange fashions, dockyng and beckyng.—Burnet. Rec. b. iii. No. 2.

Then I was crowned Queene this realm to hold,
Till fiue yeares past I did this island guide;
I had the Britaines at what becke I would,
Till that my louing King, mine Aganippus dide.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 64.

These rocks vpraught, that threatened most our wreck,
We seemd to saile much surer in the streame:
And fortune faring as she were at becke
Laid in our lap the rule of all the realme.—Id. p. 433.

He with a nod seem'd the world for to direct:
Who's he but bow'd, if this great prince but beck'd?
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band,
Of spirits likest to himself in guile
To be at hand, and at his beck appear.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Arvi. ——— Let th' event,
That never erring arbitrator, tell us
When we know all our selves, and let us follow
The becking of our chance.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

Under one pretence or other, he [the devil] separated as many as he could from the church, that so he might have them at his own beck, and fit them for the work he designed to do by them.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Quick, at his beck, the guards, who waited round,
With chains, the brave, the blooming stripling bound,
Then back to back the lovely pair they tied,
And whom they join in death, in death divide.
Brooke. Jerusalem Delivered, b. ii.

BE'CKON, v. }
BE'CKON, n. } See To BECK.

And he gede out and myghte not speke to hem and thei knewen that he hadde seyn a visioun in the temple, and he beckenide to hem.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 1.

Whē he came out, he coulde not speake vnto thē. Wherby they perceaued that he had sene some visyon in the temple. And he beckened vnto them.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Peter hearyng the greate noyse of those that reioyced that he was come agayne, beckened to them wyth his hande, that they should holde theyr peace.—Udal. Acts, c. 12.

Antonius passed by him and said never a word, but only beckened to him with his hand and head, as though he willed him to be of good courage, although indeed he had no great courage of himself.—North. Plutarch, p. 777.

What gentle ghost, besprent with April dewe,
Hayles me, so solemnly, to yonder yewgh?
And beckning wooes me, from the fatall tree
To pluck a garland, for herself or mee?
B. Jonson. An Elegie on Lady A. Pawlet.

What beckoning ghost, along the moonlight shade,
Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade?
Pope. On an Unfortunate Lady.

Thou dost but as it were beckon to them with thy head and shew them the way to heaven by thy good counsel, but thou takest them by the hand and leadest them in the way to hell by thy contrary example.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 32.

He that is corrupted co-operates with him that corrupts. He runs into his arms at the first beckon; or in order sometimes to raise the price, he meets him but half way.
Bolingbroke. On Parties, Let. 1.

My little prattlers lifting up their hands,
Beckon me back to them, to life, and light;
I come, ye spotless sweets! I come again,
Nor have your tears been shed, nor have ye knelt in vain.
Smart. Hymn to the Supreme Being.

BE-CLAP. To seize hold of quickly, to catch.

For he that with his thousand cordes slie
Continually us waiteth to beclappe,
Whan he may man in idelnesse espie,
He can so lightly cacche him in his trappe.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,475.

BE-CLAWE. To claw or scratch with nailes, talons, clawes.

After that he came to the crowne, he caught one of the nobles, a great friend and companion of his brother Pantaleon, who had before time been his adversary, and within a fuller's mill all to beclawed and mangled with the tucker's cards and burling combs, so as he died therewith.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1003.

BE-CLEPE. To cry out, to call, to name.

For thilke honour, whiche Aaron toke,
Shall none receiue, as seith the boke,
But he becleped, as he was.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

BE-CLIP. A. S. Be-clippan, amplecti, to embrace or clip.

To embrace, to surround, to encircle.

———Wan ich ofte was
In chambre mid my felawes, ther com to me bi cas
And swythe fair mon with alle, & bi clupte wel softe,
And semblant made fair ynow, & custe me wel ofte.
R. Gloucester, p. 129.

And he took a child and sette him in the myddil of hem and whanne he hadde beclipped him he seyde to hem, whoever resseyveth oon of siche children in my name he resseyveth me and whoever resseyveth me he resseyveth not me alloone but him that sent me.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

For it betid vpon a daie,
In to the paas whan he was fall
The embussheinentes to breaken all,
And hym beclipte on euery side,
That flee ne might he not aside.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Edmunde and Canutus, agreed to trye theyr quarrelles betwene them two only, and for this was assygned, by theyr bothe agrementes, a lytell ile called than Olney nere vnto Gloucestour, or after some wryters, named Olenege, beclipped with the water of Seuarne.—Fabyan, c. 204.

BE-CLOUD. To cover; to overshadow.

Therefore, when sorrow shall becloud
Thy fair serenest day,
Weep not! my sighs shall be allow'd
To chase the storm away.
Kinaston. Ellis, vol. III.

His inward grief in outward change appears;
His cheeks with sudden fires bright flaming glow,
Which quench'd, end all in ashes; stormes of tears,
Becloud his eyes, which soon forc'd smiling cleares.
R. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogue 5.

BE-COME. BECO'MING, n. BECO'MING, adj. BECO'MINGLY. BECO'MINGNESS. A. S. Cuman; Dut. Komen; Ger. Kommen; Sw. Komma. A. S. Becuman, ingredi, occurrere, pervenire, supervenire, to go, or enter in, to meet with, to come or attain to, to come upon suddenly, (Somner,) who might have included convenire. Ær hi to somne becomon. Antequam convenirent. Πριν η συνελθειν αυτους, Matt. i. 18. The Ger. Bequemen (from the Goth. and A. S. Cuiman, to come) and the Eng. Become, like the Gr. συνερχεσθαι, and the Lat. Convenire, signify—

To come together (sc. to the same place, with the same design, at the same time), to convene, to concur; and, consequentially—

To be convenient or concurrent; to be fit, decent, appropriate, suitable; and, further, graceful, ornamental.

And doth hem alle wel an horse, as a kyng bi cometh to.
R. Gloucester, p. 36.

Where ere now all thise, where are thei bicomen,
Thise hardi men & wise? the dede has all tham nomen
R. Brunne, p 340.

If gour God be so clere, and of so grete vertewe,
As ge preche oft tide, for sothe ge schew & seie,
We Saraxins on our side be that tyme salle purueie,
That this lond salle be gours, & we bicome Cristen.
Id. p. 184.

For thorwe synne thy sone, sent was tyl erthe
And by cam man of mayde, mankynde to amende.
Piers Ploughman, p. 117.

Fornyracioun and al unclennesse or aunrice be not named among ghou as it bicometh hooli men —Wiclif. Ephesies, c. 5.

So that fornycacyon and all vnclennes or couetousnes bee not once named amonge you as it becommeth saynctes
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Upon that other side Damian
Becomin is the sorwefullest man
That ever was.—Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9971.

Let eche of us hold up his hond to other,
And eche of us becomen others brother,
And we wol slen this false traitour deth.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,634.

For he to Bacchus than preid,
That wherupon his honde he leyd,
It shulde through his touche anone
Become golde. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And whan him thought it was enough,
Againe the daie he him withdrough
So priuely, that she ne wiste
Where he become, but as hym liste
Out of his temple he goth his waie.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Her vertue shall appeare if hir husband be cast into aduersitie, whome if she loue and worship, nor loath his misery, but entreate, as is becomming to do her husband, the world shall take good of her perpetually.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 4.

So well did me these dignities befit,
And honour so me every way became,
As more than man I had been made for it,
Or as from me it had deriv'd the name.
Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

Since my becommings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you. Your honor calles you hence,
Therefore be deafe to my vnpittied folly,
And all the Gods go with you.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act I. sc. 3.

As for my own part, I cannot but publickly profess, I never met with any yet so truly and becomingly religious, where the right knowledge of God and Christ bears the inlightned mind so even, that it is as far removed from superstition as irreligion itself.
More. Epistle Ded. Conj. Cabbalistica.

For nothing can be more certain, than that he expecteth we should do every thing, after the becomingness of human nature, and in conformity to the relation we have unto mankind, and more especially, to himself
Grew. Cosmologia Sacra, p. 122.

Or if men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to consider the proper consequences of such a principle, not to demean ourselves towards him as becomes our relation to him and dependance upon him and the duty which we naturally owe him, this is great stupidity and inconsiderateness.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 1.

In these it was found, that what became inconvenient or useless to one man, was highly convenient and useful to another; who was ready to give in exchange for it some equivalent, that was equally desirable to the former proprietor.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 9.

Then, with becoming rev'rence let each power,
In deep attention, hear the voice of God,
That awful voice, which, speaking to the soul,
Commands its resignation to the law.
Blacklock. A Soliloquy.

The throne itself is now the altar of the graces, and whoever sacrifices to them becomingly, is sure that his offerings will be smiled upon by a prince, who is at once the example and patron of accomplishments.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. I. Pref.

BE-CURL. To curve, to turn, to bend.

Is the beau compelled against his will to practise winning airs before the glass, or employ for whole hours all the thought within side his noddle to bepowder and becurl the outside?—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. c. 26.

BED, v. BED, n. BE'DDING. BE'DSTEAD. BE'DWARD. A. S. Beddian; Ger. Bedden or Betten, sternere. "Bed, i. e. stratum, is the past part. of this verb; therefore we speak of a garden bed, a bed of gravel, &c. In the A. S. Bedde is sometimes used for a table." (Tooke, ii. 375.) Bedde is used in A. S. for a table in Mark, iv. 21.

Bed is much used prefixed to other words. As bed-chamber, clothes, fellow, fere, &c. &c.

To bed, is to strew, to spread, to lay out or beat down, smoothly or flatly, to flatten down, to level; and also, to put into bed, to go to bed with.

The kyng, he seyde, of Engelond halt hym to hys bedde,
And lyth myd hys gret wombe at Reyns a chyld bedde
R. Gloucester, p. 379.

He was in poynt to gelde the gaste & sone to die,
For euel he ne myght him wende, in bed behoued him lie.
R. Brunne, p. 185.

Hit is reuthe to rede, hou ryght holy men lyveden,
How thei defouleden here fleessh, for soken here owen wil,
Feer fro kuth and fro kyn, uvel clothed geoden,
Haddelicke beddyd. Piers Ploughman, p. 296.

Thauh hus glotenye be of good ale, he goth to a cold bedding
And hus heved unheled, uneisyliche ywrye.—Id. p. 264.

For sholde no bed borde be bote yf the be there were
Clene of lyf and love in soule, and in leel wedlock.
Id. p. 181.

To bed he goth, and with him goth his wife;
As any jay she light was and jolif,
So was hire joly whistle wel ywette.
The cradel at hir beddes feet was nette,
To rocken, and to yeve the child to souke.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4151.

And in a bedde of wortes stille he lay,
Till it was passed undern of the day,
Waiting his time on Chanteclere to faile.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,227.

And mete and drinke this night wol I bring
Ynough for thee, and clothes for thy bedding
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1617.

And hath his soft pas begonne,
With all the chere that he maie,
Towarde the bedde there as she laie,
Till he came to the beddes side.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

The lorde Chauncelor sayd; you of this worshipfull house I am sure be not so ignorant but you know well that the kyng our soueraigne lord hath maried his brothers wife, for she was both wedded and bedded with his brother Prince Arthur.—Hall. Hen. VIII.

Generall Norris hauing by his skilfull view of the towne (which is almost all seated vpon a rocke) found one place thereof mineable, did presently set workemen in hand withall; who after three dayes labour (and the seuenth after we were entred the base towne) had bedded their powder, but indeed not farre enough into the wall.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. I. p. 140.

The Marques thretened her, that if he wanne her by force, he wolde sette her in a towre, with bredde and water, as long as she lyued, whiche made the quene afrayed, for she sawe well she was but in a weake place, w'out men, vitayle, or prouision, than she treated with the Marques, and delyuered hym her dere doughter, and incontynent he dyd wedde her and bedde her.—Froissart. Cronycle, vol ii. c 9.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margent she was set.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

The Kinges Maiestie gaue to him, to the communalty and cittizens, for to be a worke-house for the poore and idle persons of the Cittie of London, his place of Bride-well, and seuen hundred marke land of the Sauoy rents, with all the beds, bedding, and all other furniture of the hospitall of ye Sauoy, towards the maintenance of sayde worke-house of Bride-well.—Stowe. Edw. VI. an. 1553.

—— Here thought they to haue done
Some wanton charme, vpon this man and maide,
Whose vowes are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act IV. sc. 1.

The comicall poet said pleasantly in one comedy, speaking of those who had their bedsteds thick with gold and silver Why do you make your sleep deare and costly unto yourselves, which is the only gift that the gods have given us freely?—Holland. Plutarch, p. 215.

—— Others on the grass
Coucht, and now fild with pasture gazing sat,
Or bedward ruminating.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

From our bed of rest and security we then issue forth, exposing ourselves to the cares and toils, to the dangers, troubles, and temptations of the world: then especially therefore it is reasonable, that we should sacrifice thanks to the gracious preserver of our life, and the faithful restorer of its supports and comforts.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

And, that a better ease thou may'st abide,
Bedding and cloaths I will this night provide,
And needful sustenance, that thou mayst be
A conquest better won, and worthy me.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

He, therefore, who would see his flow'rs dispos'd
Sightly and in just order, ere he gives
The beds the trusted treasure of their seeds,
Forecasts the future whole.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

BE-DA'BBLE. To move or stir the water, dirt, or dust, about with hands or feet; to dip into them, to besprinkle with them.

Her. Neuer so wearie, neuer so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torne with briars,
I can no further crawle, nor further goe:
My legs can keepe no pace with my desires.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act III. sc 2.

BE-DAFF. To deafen, deaden, (sc.) the wits; to befool.

Beth not bedaffed for your innocence,
But sharply taketh on you the gouernaille.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9067

But Bartholomew his wife did so bedaft,
That all seemd good which might of hir begotten,
Although it proude no sooner ripe than rotten.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bath.

Each one of you (O men) in private acte
Can play the Fox, for slie and subtill craft:
But when you come, yfore (in all your facts)
Then are you blind, dull witted, and bedaft.
North. Plutarch, p. 80.

BE-DA'GGLE. To bedew, to wet, to besmear with wet dirt.

It may be remarked, that Richardson, in his notes on Paradise Lost, p. 322, has the following explanation:—"Bases, from Bas, they fall low to the ground; they are also called the housing, from housse, be-daggled." Steevens.
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act II. sc. 2. Notes.

BE-DARK. To obscure, or make dark or dim.

But whan the blacke winter nighte,
(Without moone or sterre lighte)
Bederked hath the water stronde,
All priuely thei gone to londe.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

BE-DASH. To beat or strike against; as waves against a shore, a ship against a rock, &c.

Thou wycked variet, durst thou be so bolde as thus bedect with skarlet and bedashte with golde, to come into the open face of so many of thy wretched citezens, and to enter into this sorrowfull and mourning camp, swimming in these tokens of quiet prosperity, like as if thou shouldst triumphe ouer vs.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 90.

Dead men, and weapons broke, do on the earth abound,
The drums, bedash'd with brains, do give a dismal sound
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s 22.

Whence swelling on both sides in manner of an halfe globe and opening a wide partition of lands, with the armes of Propontis that stretch round about, it bedasheth on that side Cyzicum and Lindyma, the religious and sacred temples of the great dame and mother (Cybele)
Holland. Ammianus, p. 196.

BE-DAW. See ADAW. To awake. No day them awaketh; they being always awake: on the watch.

There is no daie whiche hem bedaweth,
No more the sonne than the moone,
When there is any thing to doone.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

BE-DAUB. See BEDABBLE. To dip, (sc.) in mud or dirt, &c.

He changed was, that in Achilles spoyles came home before,
Or when among the ships of Greece the fires so fierce he flung:
But now in dust his beard bedawb'd, his haire with bloud is clung. Phaer. Æneidos, b. ii.

Great use there is and to good purpose, of the mud which these fountains do yeeld; but with this regard, that when the bodie is besmeared and bedawbed outwardly therewith, the same may drie upon it in the sun.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 6.

Nur. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,
God save the marke, here on his manly brest,
A pitteous coarse, a bloody pitcous coarse.
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood,
All in gore blood, I sounded at the sight.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 2.

Is it worth the paine to devise plausible shifts, which shall instantly, we know, be detected and defeated; to besmear foul designs with a fair varnish, which death will presently wipe off?—Barrow, vol. iii. ser. 15.

The veriest clown who stumps along the streets,
And doffs his hat to each grave cit he meets,
Some twelve months hence, bedaub'd with livery lace,
Shall thrust his saucy flambeau in your face.
Whitehead. Prol. to the School for Lovers.

BE-DEAD, killed, destroyed, bereaved of life.

Whereupon he [Epictetus] further adds, that there is a double mortification or petrification of the soul; the one, when it is stupified and besotted in its intellectuals; the other, when it is bedeaded in its morals, as to that pudor that naturally should belong to a man.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 193.

BE-DECK. To cover, to array, to dress.

For when dame nature first had framde hir heauenly face,
And thoroughly bedecked it, with goodly gleames of grace.
Gascoigne. In prayse of Lady Sandes.

When May is in his prime,
Then may each heart rejoice;
When May bedecks each branch with green
Each bird straine forth his voice.
Richard Edwards. Ellis, vol. ii.

My deeds at Rome, inricht me with renoune,
My talke abroad with proper filed phrase,
Adorn'd my head euen with a laurell crowne.
The emperour did much commend my waies,
So that I was bedecked with double praise.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 187.

Where rest my muse: till (jolly shepheards swaines)
Next morne, with pearles of dew bedecks our plaines,
We'll fold our flockes, then in fit time go on,
To tune mine oaten pipe for Doridon.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

Sir Walter might, upon some great assemblies at court, have his very shoes bedeck'd with precious stones, that exceeded the value of six thousand six hundred pieces of gold.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

A very antient pit, called the Old Brine, was also held in great veneration, and till within these few years, was annually, on that festival, bedecked with boughs, flowers, and garlands, and was encircled by a jovial band of young people, celebrating the day with song and dance.
Pennant. Journey from Chester.

BE-DEVIL. See DEVIL.

Recruited once more, I forgot all my pain,
And was jilted, and burnt, and bedevil'd again;
Not a petticoat fring'd, or the heel of a shoe,
Ever pass'd you by day-light, but at it I flew.
Moore. Song I.

I popp'd upon Smelfungus again at Turin, in his return home, and a sad tale of sorrowful adventures he had to tell. He had been flay'd alive, and bedevil'd, and used worse than St. Bartholomew at every stage he had come at.
Sterne. Sentimental Journey.

BE-DEW. } To wet, to moisten.
BEDE'WY. }

The hot sommer drieth the cornes, and autumpne cometh aven of hexute apples, and the fleeting raine bedeweth the winter.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Up start my staring locks,
I lay for dead a space:
And what with bloud and brine I all
bedewde the dreerie place.
Turberville. Pyndara's Aunswere.

And her faire face, faire bosome he bedewes
With teares, teares of remorse, of ruth, of sorrow.
As the pale rose her colour lost renewes,
With the fresh drops faine from the siluer morrow;
So she reuiues, and cheekes impurpled shewes,
Moist with their owne teares, and with teares they borrow.—Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. xx. s. 129.

And when dark night from her bedewy wings,
Drops sleepy silence to the eyes of all.
Brewer. Lingua, Act v. sc. 16.

For, neuer gentle knight, as he of late,
So tossed was in fortune's cruell freakes;
And all the while salt teares bedewd the hearers cheeks.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Both nations shall, in Britaine's royall crowne,
Their diff'ring names the signs of faction drowne;
The siluer streames which from this spring increase,
Bedew all Christian hearts with drops of peace.
Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

What slender youth bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave,
Pyrrha?
Milton. Hor. Od. 5.

Thrice happy he! who, on the sunless side
Of a romantic mountain, forest crown'd,
Beneath the whole collected shade reclines:
Or in the gelid caverns, woodbine-wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever spouting streams,
Sits coolly calm.
Thomson. Summer.

Go, my boy, and if you fall, though distant, exposed, and unwept by those that love you, the most precious tears are those with which heaven bedews the unburied head of a soldier.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield.

BE-DIGHT. Bedecked, (qv.)

Whereas he sitting found, in secret shade,
An vncouth, salvage, and vnciuil wight,
Of grisely hew, and foule illfavour'd sight,
His face with smoake was tand, and eyes were bleard,
His head and beard with sout were ill bedight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

For, all his armour was like saluage weed,
With woody moose bedight, and all his steed
With oaken leaues attrapt, that seemed fit
For saluage wight.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 4.

That Christian theefe (quoth he) that was so bold
To combat me in hard and single fight,
Shall wounded fall inglorious on the mold,
His locks with clods of bloud and dust bedight.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. viii. s. 54.

I have a bower at Bucklesford-Bury,
Full daintilye bedight,
If thoult wend thither, my little Musgrave,
Thoust lig in mine armes all night.
Little Musgrave. Percy, vol. iii.

With sorrow for my guide, as there I stood,
A troope of men the most in armes bedight,
In tumult cluster'd 'bout both sides the flood.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 270.

With me it fares now, as with him whose outward garment hath bin injur'd and ill-bedighted; for having no other shift, what help but to turn the inside outwards, especially if the lining be of the same, or, as it is sometimes, much better?—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

BE-DIM. To dull, to darken, or make dim.

——— By whose ayde
(Weake masters though ye be) I haue bedymm'd
The noone-tide sun, call'd forth the mutenous windes,
And twixt the greene sea, and the azur'd vault
Set roaring warre.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

What dextrous thousands just within the goal
Of wild debauch direct their nightly course!
Perhaps no sickly qualms bedim their days,
No morning admonitions shock the head.
But, ah! what woes remain!
Armstrong. On Preserving Health, b. ii.

BE-DIRTY. To dirty, or daub; to cover, smear, or stain with mud or filth; to pollute.

How shall then a sinner be ashamed to see himself before the Lord of all, naked of good works, be-dirted and defiled with abominable and horrid crimes?
Bp. Taylor. Cont. Of the State of Man, b. i. c. 9.

BE-DIZEN. To dress too much, awkwardly, improperly.

Nor lightly deem, ye apes of modern race,
Ye cits that sore bedizen Nature's face,
Of the more manly structures here ye view;
They rose for greatness that ye never knew.
Langhorne. The Country Justice.

Well, now you're bedizen'd, I'll swear as ye pass,
I can scarcely help laughing—don't look in the glass.
Those tittering boys shall be whipt if they tease you,
So come away, girls.—Whitehead. Emus attiring the Graces.

BE'DLAM, s. } Bethlehem, Bethlem, Bedlam.
BE'DLAM, adj. } The Hospital of St. Mary
BE'DLAMITE. } Bethlem, bestowed in 1545 upon the city of London, who appropriated it to the reception of lunatics. See Pennant's London.

Sometimes, in thinking of what I have had,
I from a sudden ecstasy grow mad:
Then, like a bedlam, forth thy Li'nor runs,
Like one of Bacchus' raging frantic nuns.
Drayton. Elinor to D. Humphrey.

And as he would proceed with his oration,
One of the chiefest of this bedlam nation
Lays hold on him, and asks who he should be.
Id. The Moon-Calf.

But still distracted in loue's lunacy,
And bedlam-like thus raving in my grief,
Now rail upon her hair, then on her eye,
Now call her goddess, then I call her thief.
Id. Idea, 31

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders in the world, an Inquisition and a Bedlam. If any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first of these, the Inquisition, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such an one should be put into Bedlam.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser 1.

At this rate we are wonderfully mistaken, when we speak of Don Quixote as a madman, and of Leonidas, Brutus, Wallace, Hampden, Paoli, as wise, and good, and great! The case, it seems, is just the reverse: these deserve no other name than that of raving bedlamites.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 2

BE-DOLVEN. A. S. Be-delfan, Be-dolfen. Dug.

Right as a manne delfe the earth, because of tilling of the field, and found there a gobbet of gold bedolven, than weneu folke, that it is befall by fortunous betidyng.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

BE-DOTE. To befool, to mock, to delude.

And all this was compassed on the night
Betwixe him Jason, and this Hercules,
Of these two here was a shreude lees
To come to house vpon an innocent:
For to be-dote this quene was her entent.
Chaucer. Legend of Hipsiphile.

BE-DOWL. Bedowld seems here used as if dowl meant down: but see DOWL.

At Aganip, than, lay thee downe to drinke
Untill thy stomacke swell to raise thy name,
What tho' time yet hannot bedowld thy chin?
Browne. An Eclogue.

BE-DRAGGLE. To drag, draw, or drawl along.

Poor Patty Blount no more be seen,
Bedraggled in my walks so green.
Swift. Pastoral Dialogue.

BE-DRAWE. To drag or draw.

And after take the deade corn,
And let it bedrawe awey with hors
Unto the hounde, vnto the rauen,
She was none other wise grauen.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

BE-DREINTE. A. S. Bedrencean, Drencean. To drench.

With doleful chere, full fele in their complaint
Cried Lady Venus, rewe vpon our sore
Receiue our billes, with teares all be-dreint.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

BE-DRIBBLE. To drip or drop, slowly, in small quantities. See BESPAUL.

His fathers, like sepulchrall dogges, tore up the graves of God's saints and gnawed upon their dead bones: and now this whelps of theirs, commingit cineres, bedribbles their ashes.—Hall. The Hon. of the Maried Clergie, c. 8.

BE'DRID. A. S. Ridan, Insidere, incumbere. A. S. Bedreda. One so weak through sickness or old age, that he cannot rise from his bed. Bedred.

(Somner.) Bedd-reise. A man fixed to his bed by continued sickness. Rise from Riesen, cadere, (Wachter.)

And a blynde man for a bordiour, oth' a bed reden womman.—Piers Ploughman, p. 115.

For wele or wo she n'ill him not forsake:
She n'is not wery him to love and serve,
Though that he lie bedrede til that he sterve.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9166.

Why diddest thou, not onely heale him that was bedrid thirty eight yeares, but also baddest him beare his bedde away vpon the Sabboth day.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 237.

When showres of teares from the celestial globe,
Bewail'd the fate of sea-lov'd Britannie,
When sighes as frequent were at various sights,
When Hope lay bed-rid and all pleasures dying
Browne. Elegy on Prince of Wales.

Man. Wilt thou then serve the Philistines with that gift
Which was expressly giv'n thee to annoy them?
Better at home lie bed-rid, not only idle,
Inglorious, unimploy'd, with age out worn.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Fear not now the fever's fire,
Fear not now the death-bed groan,
Pangs that torture, pangs that tire,
Bed rid age with feebie moan.—Mason. Caractacus.

BE-DROPT. To drip or drop; to fall, to hang, to cover with drops.

And as men sene the dew bedroppe
The leues and the flowres eke,
Right so vpon hir white cheke
The wofull salte teres feile.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

——— (Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropt with blood of Gorgon, or the Isle
Ophiusa.) Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

She [Lady Raleigh] has on a dark colour'd hanging sleeve robe, tufted on the arms; and under it, a close bodied gown of white sattin, flower'd with black, with close sleeves down her wrist, has a rich ruby in her ear, bedrop'd with large pearls.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

The priest whose flattery bedropt the crown,
How hurt he you, he only stain'd the gown.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, Ep 7.

BE-DU'CKED. To dip, to dive, to sink down.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely lept,
And deepe himselfe beducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steept,
Ne of his safety seemed care he kept.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

BE-DUNG. Applied to that which is cast down, (sc.) after passing through the body of an animal.

And had still gone on to triumph over that trembling army, had not God's inexpected champion, by divine instinct, taken up the monster, and vanquisht him, leaving all but his head to bedung that earth, which had lately shaken at his terrour.—Bp. Hall. Resolutions, Doc. 1.

BE-DWARF. To be of small size, low stature; to stint the growth.

But 'tis not so: we're not retir'd, but damp'd,
And as our bodies, so our minds are cramp'd:
'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us.
Donne. Anatomy of the World.

BE-DYE. To stain, to colour, to dip or steep.

Faire Goddesse lay that furious fit aside,
Till I of warres and bloudy Mars doe sing,
And Briton fields with Sarazin bloud bedide,
Twixt that great Faery Queene and Paynim King,
That with their horrour heauen and earth did ring.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

And therewithall shee threw her garments lap aside,
Vnder the which a thousand things I saw with eies,
Both kniues, sharpe swords, poinadoes all bedide
With bloud, and poisons prest which she could well deuise. Mirror for Magistrates, p. 66.

BEE. BE'EHIVE. BE'EMASTER. } A. S. Beo; Dut. Bie or Bye; Ger. Bien; Sw. Bi. Wachter, because these animals dwell together under one government, and build their dwelling with great skill and industry, would derive their name from the A. S. Byan, habitare, ædificare, to dwell, to build a dwelling-place.

Lo, like a busy bee withouten gile
Thee serveth ay thin owen thral Cecile.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,663.

And lyke as bees among the floures, whan fresh the sommer Lades
In shyne of son applie their work, when growen is vp their yong;
Or when their hiues they gin to stop, and hony sweet is syrong.
That al their caues and cellars close with dulcet liquor filles:
Some doth vnlade, some other brings the stuffe with ready willes;
Sometime they ioine, and all at once do from their maungers fet
The slouthful drones, that would consume, and nought will do to get;
The worke it heates, the hony smelles of floures and time ywet. Phaer. Æneidos, b. i.

Thus to their toils, in early summer, run
The busy ring bees, and labour in the sun;
Led forth, in colonies, their buzzing race,
Or work the liquid sweets, and thicken to a mass.
The busy nation flies from flow'r to flow'r,
And hoards, in curious cells, the golden store;
A chosen troop before the gate attends,
To take the burdens, and relieve their friends:
Warm at the fragrant work, in bands, they drive
The drone, a lazy robber, from the hive.—Pitt. Ib.

And Mr. Butler, a great bee-master, in his Feminine Monarchie hath observed, that the drones are such by kinde, not by accident, (i. e. not by losing their stinges.)
Hakewill. Apologie, p. 11.

[He should] take it well and be thankfull, if haply by some sharp words and cutting speeches, any man hath cleansed and purified his heart full of cloudy mists and palpable darknesse, like as men drive bees nests, and rid away bees with smoake.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 47.

BEECH. BE'ECHEN. BE'ECHY. } A. S. Boc, Bece; Dut. Beeche, Ger. Buche; Sw. Bok. There are not a few (says Ihre) who derive the northern word from the Gr. Φηγος, and Lat. Fagus, f being changed into b, as in a hundred instances: Φηγος, so called, απο του φαγειν, to eat, because the mast-bearing tree supplied men with food in the earliest ages.

This false Chanon (the foule fend him fetch)
Out of his bosom tooke a beechen cole,
In which full subtilly was made an hole.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,629.

But oft, when vnderneath the greene wood shade,
Her flocks lay hid from Phœbus scorching raies,
Vnto her knight she songs and sonnets made,
And them engrau'd in barke of beeche and baies
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. vii. s. 19.

A beechen mast then, in a hollow bave
They put, and hoisted; fixt it in his place
With cables. Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. ii.

On earth's fair bed beneath some sacred shade,
Amidst his equal friends carelessly laid,
He sings thee, Bacchus, patron of the vine;
The beechen bowl foames with a flood of wine,
Not to the loss of reason, or of strength.—Cowley. Virgil.

The gentle shepherds on an hillock plac'd,
(Whose shady head a beechy garland crown'd,)
View'd all their flocks that on the pastures gaz'd:
Then down they sit while Thenot 'gan the round.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 6.

I know not why the beech delights the glade,
With boughs extended, and a rounder shade;
Whilst towering firs in conic forms arise,
And with a pointed spear divide the skies.
Prior. Knowledge, b. i.

When Emma hunts, in huntsman's habit dreat,
Henry on foot pursues the bounding beast,
In his right hand his beechen pole he bears:
And graceful at his side his horn he wears.
Id. Henry & Emma.

——— Heroes and their feats
Fatigued me, never weary of the pipe
Of Tityrus, assembling, as he sang,
The rustic throng beneath his fav'rite beech.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BEEF, s. BEEF, adj. } Fr. Bœuf; from the Lat. Bos, Bovis; the Gr. Βους, from Βοειν, (Βοσκειν) to feed. Applied to—

The flesh of kine: formerly to the animal, as the plural, Beeves, still is.

Or yeve us of your braun, if ye have any,
* * * * *
Bacon or beef, or swiche thing as ye find.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7332.

Befues and motons were also dere for scantnesse of grasse and pasture.—Fabyan. Edw. III. an. 1353.

Han by the night accursed thieves
Slaine his lambs, or stolne his beeves.
Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 3.

Ara. Thou bitch-wolfes-sonne, canst y^e not heare? Feele then.
Ther. The plague of Greece vpon thee thou Mungrell beef-witted lord.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 1.

[I shall lay down a] conjecture (for the greater facility of the calculation) what proportion each of them (beasts in the ark) may bear, either to a beef, or a sheep, or a wolf; and then what kind of room may be allotted to the making of sufficient stalls for their reception.
Wilkins. Real Character, pt. ii. c. 5.

He, that of honour, wit, and mirth, partakes,
May be a fit companion o'er beef-steaks;
His name may be to future times enroll'd,
In Estcourt's book, whose gridiron's fram'd of gold.
King. Art of Cookery.

On some, a priest succinct in amice white
Attends; all flesh is nothing in his sight!
Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

As these were dishes with which I was utterly unacquainted, I was desirous of eating only what I knew, and therefore begged to be helped from a piece of beef that lay on the side table: my request at once disconcerted the whole company.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 32.

BEER. Ger. and Dut. Bier. In A. S. Bere is barley. Goldast thinks a pyris; beer being first made of pears. Vossius, from the Lat. Bibere, Biber, and (extrito b) Bier. Somner, from Bar, Heb. Frumentum. Noel (cited by Somner) says Beor is metheglin, or a kind of drink made with honey, whence it hath the name of Bee. Wachter quotes Luc. i. 15, "And he ne drineth win ne beor;" whence he infers that beer was made of any grain, or from honey or pears, &c.; and supposes the Welsh, Berwy, coquere, to be the parent of the word. Single beer and double beer seem applied to beers of different strength.

And eke their braines with double beere are lynde.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande.

And then shypmen and other euyl disposid persones as then drewe to y^e said Goffrey Gate, robbyd agayne the berehouses, and sette some of theym on fyre.—Fabyan. Edw. IV. an. 1469.

Among those that were without the fort, and which were of the foresaid company of Captaine Ribault, there was a carpenter of three score yeeres olde, one a beere brewer.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 354.

They shot off; but the French retired with diligence, and returned to Edinburgh without harme done, except the destruction of some drinking beere, which lay in the sands, chappell and church.—Knox. Hist. of the Reformation, p. 90.

Flow, Welsted, flow! like thine inspirer, beer;
Though stale, not ripe; though thin, yet never clear;
So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;
Heady, not strong; o'erflowing, though not full.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

BE'ETLE, v. BE'ETLE, s. BE'ETLEBROWS. BE'ETLEBROWED. BE'ETLEHEADED. } Beetle, a mallet, Skinner and Junius say is perhaps from the verb to beat. A three man beetle was one so heavy that it required three men to manage it, (Nares.) *Beetle*headed, as thick as a beetle; Beetle, the insect, Skinner also supposes to be from the same verb, to beat; because in their evening flight, they beat against us. *Beetle*brow is a brow, overhanging like that of a beetle. Hence Mr. Malone thinks Shakespeare coined the verb, to beetle, to hang over.

He was bytellbrowede and baberlupped, whit two blery eyen.—Piers Ploughman, p. 97.

Proude Jerusalem deserued not to haue this preeminence, which, albeit she were in every deale as blynde as a beetil, yet thought herselfe to haue a perfect good syght, and for that cause was more vncurable.—Udal. Mark, c. 1.

Fal. If I do, fillop me with a three man beetle.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 2.

Say not the people well, that fortune fauours fooles?
So well they say, I thinke, which name her beetle blind.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 149.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood, my Lord?
Or to the dreadfull sonnet [summit] of the cliffe,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 4.

Giue me a case to put my visage in,
A visor for a visor, what care I
What curious eye doth quote deformitie:
Here are the beetle-browes shall blush for me.
Id. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 1.

Kate. Patience I pray you, 'twas a fault vnwilling.
Pet. A horson beetle headed flap-ear'd knaue.
Come Kate sit downe, I know you haue a stomacke.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 1.

——— Whence borne on liquid wing,
The sounding culver shoots, or where the hawk
High in the beetling cliff his aery builds
Thomson. Spring.

Oh! if I could, how I would maul
His brawn face, and wainscot paws,
His beetle brows, and eyes of wood,
And make him soon give up the cause.
Swift. The Dean at Sir Arthur Acheson's.

He [John Evans] was the most perfect saturnine person that ever was beheld.—He was of a middle stature, broad forehead, beetle-brow'd, thick shouldered, flat-nos'd, full lips, down look'd, of black curling stiff hair, and splay-footed.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Where the brow beetling from the mountain sprung,
With stunted thorn, and shaggy rocks o'erhung
Brooke. The Fox-chase.

——— Or when the stillness of the grey-ey'd eve,
Broken only by the beetle's drowsy hum,
Invites us forth to solitary vales,
Where awful ruins on their mossy roofs
Denote the flight of time.
Cooper. The Power of Harmony, b. ii.

Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,
As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum.
Collins. Ode to Evening.

BE-FALL. A.S. Befeallan; Dut. Bevallen. To fall, to happen, to become, to come to pass.

The kyng made hym Ioye ynow, & amon hem alle
Bed hym telle of som thing, that hym schulde bi falle.
R. Gloucester, p. 145.

Here now of their schame, what chance bifelle.
R. Brunne, p. 123.

Ac on a May morwenyng, on Malverne hulles
Me bi fel for to slepe, for weyrynesse of wandryng.
Piers Ploughman, p. 1.

And it bifel that whanne Zacarye schould do the office of preesthod in the ordir of his cours to fore God
Wiclif. Luke, c. 1.

Befelle that in that seson on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay,
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury with deuoute corage.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 19.

What shall befalle here afterwarde
God wote, for nowe vpon this tide
Men see the worlde on euery side
In sondrie wise so diuersed
That it well nigh stant all reuersed.
Gower. Con. A. Prologue.

In the meane season a bitter plague befelle among them for their corupt liuing, consuming in short tyme such a multitude of people, that the quicke were not sufficient to bury the dead.—Stowe. Brytaines & Saxons, an. 447.

I could say much more of the king's majesty, without flattery, did I not fear the imputation of presumption, and with all suspect, that it might befal these papers of mine (though the loss were little) as it did the pictures of Queen Elizabeth made by unskilful and common painters, which, by her own commandment, were knock'd in pieces and cast into the fire.—Sir Walter Raleigh, Pref. p. 10.

[Plato] lays it down as a principle, that whatever is permitted to befal a just man, whether poverty, sickness, or any of those things which seem to be evils, shall either in life or death conduce to his good.—Spectator, No. 237.

As for myself, I am well, if to be well, can with any propriety be said of a man, who lives in the utmost suspense and anxiety, under the apprehension of all the accidents which can possibly befal the friend he most affectionately loves. Farewell.—Mermoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 17.

BE-FIGHT. To combat, to contend, to battle.

As wrastling windes, out of dispersed whirl,
Befight themselues, the west with southern blast.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

BE-FIT. To adapt, to suit, to become.

So that it semes her will
Phy, phy, phy, phy, to sing,
Since phy befitteth him so well,
In euery kind of thing.
Gascoigne. The Comp. of Phylomene.

For which, ere long to his just trial led
In all the robes befitting his degree,
Where Scrope, chief justice in that dang'rous stead,
Commission had his lawful judge to be
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

What eye can now pittie the deepest miseries of Manasseh? What but bondage can befit him, that hath so lawlesly abused his liberty? What but an utter abdication can befit him that hath cast off his God, and doted upon Devils? What but a dying life, and a tormenting death can befit for a man of blood?—Bp. Hall. Cont. Manasseh.

Ill it befits thee, oh it ill befits
Acasto's daughter, his whose open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ampler heart,
The father of a country, thus to pick
The very refuse of these harvest fields,
Which from his bounteous friendship I enjoy.
Thomson. Autumn.

And now let nine of the selected band,
Whose greener years befit such station best,
With wary circuit pace around the grove
And guard each inlet. Mason. Caractacus.

BE-FLAINE. Having the skin flayed, stripped or torn off.

Out of his skin he was beflaine
All quicke: and in that wise slaine.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

BE-FOAM. To foam, or froth; to throw forth or emit foam or froth.

His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected, like a field of spears.
Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

At last the dropping wings, befoam'd all o'er,
With flaggy heaviness their master bore;
A rock he spy'd, whose humble head was low,
Bare at an ebb, but cover'd at a flow.—Euseden. Ib. b. v.

BE-FOOL. To be, or cause to be, a fool, or foolish; to delude into folly or error; to infatuate.

And netheles full many wise
Befooled haue hem selfe er this.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Debauch'd by those they thought would teach and rule 'em
Who now they find did ruin and befool 'em.
W. Browne to Lord General Monk.

Canst thou ingross a slavish shame, which men,
Far, far below the region of thy state,
Not more abhor, than study to revenge?
Thou an Italian! I could burst with rage,
To think I have a brother so befool'd.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act iv. sc. 1.

Do but for a little realise to yourselves this, when the wise men of the world, those that are wise in their generation, shall appear before God, when they shall reflect upon all earthly objects, and consider the vanity and vexation of them, how will they befool themselves.
Bates. On the Fear of God, c. 2.

BE-FORE.
BEFO'REHAND.
BEFO'RETIME.

The imper. Be and the noun Fore. Written Bifore, byfore, beforne.

Anterior or prior to, in space or time; in front or presence of; in preference to. See Afore.

Fyf hundred ger and tuenti it was eke bi fore,
Er than oure Lord Jhesu Cryst on erthe was y bore.
R. Gloucester, p. 40.

——— And ther geode byuore hym there
Four kynges, and four auerdes of golde byuore hym bere.
Id. p. 190.

In Acres of hir is born a mayden childe dame Jone.
Was non fairer biforn of Inglis als scho one.
R. Brunne, p. 230.

That tyme in Scotland was a mayden geng.
As I red biforhand, Malcome douhter the kyng.—Id. p. 95.

And reson revested, rygt as a pope
And conscience his crocer, byfore the kynge stande.
Piers Ploughman, p. 81.

Joie ye and be ye glade; for your meede is plenteous in hevenes; for so thei han pursued also prophetis that weren bifore you.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

I loved hire firste, and tolde thee my wo
As to my conseil, and my brother sworne
To forther me, as I have told beforne.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1148.

The prophecie had geuen knowledge beforehande that Messias shoulde cum out of Bethleem, where Jesus was borne.—Udal. John, c. 7.

By this provident councell, and laying downe this good foundation beforehand, all things went forward in a due course, to the atchieving of our happy enterprise.
Drake. West Indie Voyage, p. 16.

And if the auenger of blood pursue after him, thei shal not deliuer the slayer into his hand because he smote his neighbour ignorantly neither hated he him beforetime.
Bible. Geneva Version. Joshua, xx. 5.

Lady, yee must openly you confesse,
And if against good conscience and right,
Any good han ye take more or lesse,
Beforne this houre, of any manner wight,
Yeeld it anon. Browne. Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

Yet the fears of Herod over ruled all the prejudices of his sect, and raised up before his eyes the semblance of the murdered Baptist armed with the power of miracles, for the very purpose he perhaps, imagined, of inflicting exemplary vengeance upon him for that atrocious deed, as well as for his adultery, his incest, and all his other crimes.
Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 14.

So far, therefore, from adapting the means, she [the hen] is not beforehand apprised of the effect
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 4.

BE-FORTUNE. To happen, to betide, to bechance, to fall to the lot of.

Egl. Madam, I pitty much your grieuances,
Which, since I know they vertuously are plac'd,
I giue consent to goe along with you,
Wreaking as little what betideth me
As much, I wish all good befortune you.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 3.

BE-FRECKLE. To freak; to spot, or colour with various spots.

As when the evening is with darkness overspread,
Her star befreckled face with clouds inveloped,
You oftentimes behold, the trembling lightning fly.
Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 22.

BE-FRIEND. To act as a friend or well-wisher to.
To benefit, to aid, to serve.

This last request to you I do commend
That pitying my sad plaints, you may befriend
My wretched soule with quicke dispatch in death,
And not with torture, when I yeeld my breath.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 613.

The mercy of our good God allowes his favourites, not onely to receive but to give, not only to receive for themselves, but to convey blessings to others: what can that man want that is befriended of the faithfull?
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Rapture of Elijah.

Yet mad they rush'd, as whirling wind descends,
And deem'd for friendless those the Lord befriends.
Parnel. The Gift of Poetry. Habakkuk.

Here he [Pliny the elder] stopped to consider whether he should return back; to which the pilot advising him, "Fortune," he said, "befriends the brave; steer to Pomponianus."
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vi. Let. 16.

BE-FRINGE. To edge with fringe; to cut or snip the edges.

And when I flatter, let my dirty leaves
(Like Journals, odes, and such forgotten things
As Eusden, Philips, Settle writ of kings)
Clothe spice, line trunks, or, fluttering in a row,
Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, Ep. i.

BEG, v.
BE'GGAR, v.
BE'GGAR, n.
BE'GGAR, adj.
BE'GGING, n.
BE'GGARY.
BE'GGARING.
BE'GGARLY, adj.
BE'GGARLY, ad.
BE'GGARLINESS.

Some, says Junius, think Beg derived from the Ger. Begeren; Dut. Be-gheeren, cupere, appetere. Beg and Beggar, vel, q. d. Baggar, because beggars carry with them bags, into which they put the victuals or money that may be given to them.

To ask, to crave, petition, solicit, or entreat for.

To beggar is to bring or reduce to the state of meanness, wretchedness, or poverty of one who asks, craves, petitions, &c.

For he that beggeth othr byddeth, bote yf thei have nede
He ys fals and faitour, and defraudeth the neede
And also gyleth hym that gyveth.—Piers Ploughman, p. 150.

For hit blameth alle beggerye be ge ful certeyn.—Id. p. 155.

Whanne he gede forth fro Jerico and hise disciplis and ful myche puple, Barthymeus a blynde man the sone of Thymey satt bisidis the waye and beggide.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 10.

And as he went oute of Hiericho with hys dyscyples, and a greate nombre of people: Barthimeus the sonne of Thimeus whiche was blynde, sate by the hye waies syde beggynge.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For sikerly my dette shal be quit
Towardes you, how so that ever I fare
To gon a begging in my kirtle bare.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,881.

And she was clad full poorely,
All in an olde torne courtpy
As she were all with dogges torne,
And both behind and eke before
Clouted was she beggerly.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

But of the body, whiche shall deye,
Although there be diuers weye
To deth, yet, is there but one ende,
To whiche that euery man shall wende,
As well the begger as the lorde,
Of one nature of one accorde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Wee hauing nothing to do at all, haue medled yet in all matters, and haue spent for our prelats causes more then all Christendome, euen vnto the vtter beggering of our selues, & haue gotten nothing but rebuke and shame & hate among all nations.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 375.

By whose ayed ryches and auctorite the pope wt his prelates ascended from poore beggerly fryers and flaterers vnto suche an imperial maiestye aboue emprours and kinges
Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 7.

Amonge these things comes out of his ship the poore captaine Hamilco, in a filthy and beggerlye cloak girt aboute him, at the sight of whome the mourners as they stoode in rankes clustered about him.—Goldynge. Justine, fol. 92.

The Pharisels, beeyng made extreme woode with this courage and boldnes that the beggar was of, fal to extremitie, and to saye the vttermost they could. They vpbrayed him with his olde blindnesse, they cast him in the teeth with his beggerlynesse, as though God hadde punished him therewithall for his sinnes.—Udal. John, c. 9.

And the same sayth Innocent in on of his bookes: he sayth, that sorweful and vnhappy is the condition of a poure begger, for if he axe not his mete, he dieth for hunger, and if he axe, he dieth for shame, and alwates necessitee constreineth him to axe.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

So as their begging now them failed quite;
For none would giue, but all men would them wyte.
Yet would they take no paines to get their liuing,
But seeke some other way to gaine by gniling,
Much like to begging, but much better named,
For many beg, which are thereof ashamed.
Spenser. Mother Hobberds Tale.

And for as much as all good thinges come of God, whether they pertayne to the bodie, or to the soule, and at all times to be deliuered from aduersitie is one of his singular benefites, we may no doubt begge the same at his handes, referring notwithstanding the graunting of it to him, who knoweth what is better for vs than we do our selues.
Whitgifte. Defense, p. 492

Trebellius obiecting to Cœlius, and charging him with factious behauiour, and dissoluing of discipline. Cœlius againe that Trebellius had spoyled and beggered the legions
Savile. Tacites. Historie, p. 54.

And to what end is all this, but that seeing himself forsaken of all, he may at length, like the beggar's prodigal, return again to his father?—Hopkins. Works, p. 14.

Some it highly displeaseth, that so great expenses this way [in building churches] are employed. Touching God himselfe, hath hee any where reuealed, that it is his delight to dwell beggerly? and that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saue onely in poore cottages?
Hooker. Eccles. Pol. b. v. s. 15.

But the strength of this argument lies partly in the ignorance of Zeno, that great champion of necessity, and the beggarliness of his cause, which admitted no defence but with a cudgell.—Bramhall. Ans. to Hobbes, p. 89.

——But chief of all,
O loss of sight, of thee I most complain,
Blinde among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon, or beggery, decrepit age.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

In begging other inferiour things, it may become us to be reserved, indifferent and modest; but about these matters (wherein all our felicity is extremely concerned) it were a folly to be slack or timorous.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

He owed him money, which he had promised to pay him several times, but never kept his word; and in short, he was an idle, beggarly fellow and of no use to the publick.
Tatler, No. 256.

——With half an eye
Your far-fetched sophistry I spy;
Which ne'er so subtilely disputed,
By two plain words shall be confuted:
I first affirm you beg the question.
R. O. Cambridge. Learning.

Persuade a man that he is a beggar and a vagabond, and you shall instantly see him change his manners.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 2.

A mistake in which I had no share, decides at once upon my libertie and property, sending me from the court to a prison, and adjudging my family to beggary and famine.
Burke. Vindication of Nat. Society.

The poverty of the lower ranks of people in China far surpasses that of the most beggarly nations in Europe.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 8.

BE-GA'LLED. To gall, to fret, to chafe, to rub sore.

And shake your sturdy trunks, ye prouder pines,
Whose swelling graines are like begalld alone,
With the deep furrowes of the thunder-stone.
Bp. Hall. Defiance to Envy.

BE-GA'WED. To bedeck with gawdy things, with any fine, showy, gay things.

The senate liked very well of this device, and chose such a number of bond maids as she desired to have, and trimming them up in fine apparel, begawded with chains of gold and jewels, they sent them forth to the Latins, who were encamped not far from the city.—North. Plutarch, p. 127.

BE-GAY. To make gay; to begawd, (qv.)

The rural swain, whose courser eyes
Ne'r star'd on other beauteous things than what
Begay the simple fields.—Beaumont. Psyche, c. 3. § 75.

BE-GET. BEGE'TTER. BEGE'TTING, n. A. S. Begettan, Gettan. To gain, to acquire, to reach, to attain, to obtain, to procure, to produce, to generate.

Tho adde the Brutons the maystrye al bygyte.
R. Gloucester, p. 219.

He scolde be othere's eyt of al that he adde,
Gyf he of hym sulue non other eyt bygyte nadde.
Id. p. 383.

A litelle ther biforn died Margarete,
The heyr of Scotlond born, of Alisander bigete.
R. Brunne, p. 248.

Which delyueride us fro the power of derknessis, and translatide into the kingdom of the sone of his louyng in whom we han aghen biyng and remyssioun of synnes: which is the ymage of God vnuysible, the first bigeten of ech creature.—Wielif. Coloss. c. 1.

A yonge man called Melibeus, mighty and riche, begate upon his wif, that called was Prudence, a daughter which that called was Sophie.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus

He had a brother netheles,
Whose right name was Eson,
And he the worthie knight Jason
Begatte. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For what is he that cauue by very imagination, comprise how that God the father, beyng without beginning, doeth continually beget God the sonne? in to whom the begetter doeth so wholy powre out himself, that yet thereby he is nothyng diminished.—Udal. John, Pref.

This is but an imperfect generation, where that which is begotten doth not receive its whole being originally from that which did beget, but from God and nature, the begetter being but either a channel or an instrument and having been himself before begotten or produced by some other
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 587.

For it was not begotten from that as any way moved towards its generation; but it proceeded from God as it were self-begottenly.—Id. Ib. p. 574.

My walks of trees, all planted by my hand,
Like children of my own begetting stand.
Denham. Of Old Age.

Such is not man, who mixing better seed
With worse, begets a base degenerate breed
The bad corrupts the good, and leaves behind
No trace of all the great begetter's mind.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

Good laws may beget order and moderation in the government, where the manners and customs have instilled little humanity or justice into the tempers of men.
Hume, pt. i. Ess. 3.

BE-GILT. To cover or overlay with gold.

Six maids attending on her, attir'd with buckram bridelaces, beguilt: white sleeves, and stammele petticotes, drest after the cleanliest countrey guise.
B. Jonson. The King's Entertainment at Welbeck.

BE-GIN, v. BEGI'N, n. BEGI'NNER. BEGI'NNING. BEGI'NNINGLESS. Be and gin. A. S. Aginnan, beginnan, ginnan, incipere, inchoare, aggredi, instituere; Ger. Beginnen, ginnen; Dut. Be-ghin-nen, ghinnen; Sw. Begynna. The A. S. Beginnan, Junius thinks is evidently composed of be and gangan, gan, or gen; to go. And Ihre observes in confirmation, that the Lat. Initium is formed from inire, initum. Applied to—

The first motion towards any act, purpose, or design. To take the first step, to make the first motion, to do the first act, to enter upon, to commence.

——& al for a wommon,
That Elyne was y clepud, this batalle first bi gan.
R. Gloucester, p. 10.

Heo gederede folk faste, the werre to bi gynne.—Id. p. 96.

Toward this lond heo gonne for to robby faste.—Id. p. 97.

That Eneas bigan hys of spyring to Lumbardie first bring
Thre thousant & sixe & tuenti ger fro tho worlde's bi gynnynge.—Id. p. 10.

For now biggynne Dauid to wax a werreour,
With Leulyn gan he kith to be the kynge's traytour.
R. Brunne, p. 240.

For God that al by gan in gynnynge of the worlde
Formede furst as a fust with o fynger. y folde to gederes
Til hym liked and luste. to vnclose the fynger
And profrede hit forth as with the paume. to what place it sholde.—Piers Plouhman, p. 327.

An hyne that had hys hyre ere he begonne.—Id. p. 74

Fro that tyme Jhesus bigan to preche and seie, do ye penaunce: for the kyngdom of heuenes schal come nigh
Wiclif. Matt. c. 4.

From yt time Jesus began to preach, and to say, repent, for the kyngdom of heauen is at hande.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thou Lord in the biyynnyng foundidist the erthe, and heuenes ben werkis of thin hondis.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 1.

And thou Lorde in the beginnynge hast layd the foundacion of the earth. And the heuens are the workes of thy handes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Yet may the highe God, and so hope I,
Graunten me grace to liuen vertuously:
Than am I gentil, whan that I beginne
To liuen vertuously, and weiven sinne.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6755

And though there be none other skille,
But onely for thei wolde winne,
Thei lerne nought, whan thei beginne
Upon their acte to procede.—Gower. Con. A. Prologue

The mightie God, which unbegonne
Stont of hymselfe, and hath begonne
All other thinges at his will.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Mindes he our teares? or euer moued his eyen?
Wept he for ruth? or pitied he our loue?
What shall I set before? or where begin?
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

And lette hym not teache vs our leaso in a small ragged hande, wherein a yonge beginner can scant perceiue one letter from another, but lette hym teache vs in a fayre great letter of some text hande, that is more easye to learne vpon
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 574.

Most noble virgine, that by fatall lore
Hast learn'd to loue, let no whit thee dismay
The hard begin, that meets thee in the dore
And with sharpe fits thy tender heart oppresseth sore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3

But to begin that which never was, whereof there was no example, whereto there was no inclination, wherein there was no possibilitie of that which it should be, is proper onely to such power as thine, the infinite power of an infinite Creator.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Creation.

What can I see, O God, in thy creation, but miracles of wonders? Thou madest something of nothing, and of that something, all things. Those which wast without a beginning, gavest a beginning to time, and to the world in time
Id. Ib.

The said Tanaquil was the first that made the coat or cassocke woven right out, all through, such as new beginners (namely, young souldiours, barristers, and fresh brides) put on under white plaine gowns, without any guard of purple.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 48.

It will, they presume, be soon enough to begin to-morrow or next day, a month or a year hence when they shall find more commodious opportunity, or shall prove better disposed thereto; in the mean time with Solomon's sluggard, yet, say they, a little sleep, and little slumber, a little folding of the hands.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

'Tis in reality, and in point of argument, the very same supposition [to suppose an infinite succession of changeable and dependent beings produced one from another in endless progression, without any original cause at all] as it would be to suppose one continued being, of beginningless and endless duration, neither self-existent and necessary in itself, nor having its existence founded in any self-existent cause, which is directly absurd and contradictory.
Clarke. Demons. of the Attributes, prop. 2.

The sense of the word eternity has nothing to do with that distinction, being but one, and importing neither more nor less than beginningless and endless duration.
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 327.

Some writers upon art carry this point too far, and suppose that such a body of universal and profound learning is requisite, that the very enumeration of its kinds is enough to frighten a beginner.—Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. 7.

Such, too, seem to have been the manufactures of fine cloths that anciently flourished in Flanders, and which were introduced into England in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 3.

BE-GIRT. } A.S. Begierdan, Begyrdan.
BEGIRTED. } To girt, surround, close in round about.

The noble citie Neice, so strongly wall'd,
We with our conquering host begirted round,
Her gates we wonne, her turrets tops we scall'd,
Her towring walles we equall'd with the ground.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 642.

From Dardanus am I descended, he
From Jove, where gods, immortal though they be,
Do not serve mortals, who begirt our town
Round with a wall, a wall that ne'er shall down.
Sherburne. The Rape of Helen.

——— Then thou shalt behold
Whether by supplication we intend
Address, and to begirt th' Almighty throne
Beseeching or besieging.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears.
Prior. Solomon, b. iii

Whence Hardyknute, a baron bold,
In Scotland's martial days of old,
Descended from the stately feast,
Begirt with many a warrior guest,
To quell the pride of Norway's king,
With quiv'ring lance and twanging string.
Warton, Ode II

BE-GNAW. A.S. Begnagan, rodere, corrodere, to eat into; corrode.

The worme of conscience still begnaw thy soule.
Thy friends suspect for traytors while thou liu'st,
And take deep traytors for thy dearest friends.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. s. 3.

His horse hip'd with an old mothy saddle, besides, begnawne with the bots.—Id. T. of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 2.

BE-GODDED. Endowed as gods, with the attributes of gods.

Thus by degrees paganism came to be christened into a new form and name, by their setting up their Dii, or begodded mortal saints, and prosecuting their apotheosis with divine worship.—Scots, vol. v. Ser. 97.

BE-GONE. Gone far; sunk deep; (sc. in woe or weal.) Also the imper. Be, and the past part. Gone, be it, that you are gone. get you gone; go.

I trow that no wight might her plese
Nor do that thing that might her ese,
Nor she ne would her sorow slake
Nor comfort none vnto her take,
So deepe was her wo begonne
And eke her hert in angre ronne
A sorowful thing well semed she.—Chaucer. B. of the D.

That other said no thynge so,
But he is ryche and well bego,
To whome that god wol sende wele.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And witteth well, that one of the
Is with treasour so full begone,
That if ye happe therupon,
Ye shall be riche men for euer.—Id. Ib. b. v.

There was a kyng, which Lichomede
Was hote, and he was well begone,
With faire doughters many one,
And dwelt fette out in an yle.—Id. Ib. b. v.

When he awoke, and neither he ne fond
Woman, ne child, he wept bitterly,
And said, "Alas! now there is in no lond
Man worse I know begon than am I."
Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ec. i.

Proteus. I will not heare thy vain excuse,
But as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. sc. 1

Unnatural wretch, begone, and no longer pollute my dwelling with thy baseness. begone, and never let me see thee again; go from my doors, and the only punishment I wish thee is an alarmed conscience, which will be a sufficient tormentor!—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 15

BE-GRACED. } Endowed with the rank,
BE-LORDED. } treated, addressed, as possessing the rank or title, of Grace or Lord.

When you are begrac'd and belorded, and crouched and kneeled vnto, then find I small grace with our Irish borderers.—Hollinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1524.

BE-GORED. Covered with gore, or slimy, clotted blood.

On chief of sable (taken from the dame)
A sucking babe (oh!) borne to bide mischaunce,
Begorde with blood, and pierced with a launce.
Gascoigne. The Prattes of Warre.

For, wall'd it was with waues, which rag'd and ror'd
As they the cliffe in peeces would haue cleft:
Beasts, ten thousand monsters foule abhor'd
Did waste about it, gaping grisly, all begor'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

BE-GRAVE. To carve or cut out, to dig, to excavate.

——— And with great slight
Of werkmenship it was begraue
Of suche worke, as it shulde haue.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Than at last came in there
His masons, for thei shulde graue,
Where that he wolde be begraue,
And of what stone his sepulture
Thei shulden make, and what sculpture.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Whan thei to Rome come were,
So priuely thei dwelte there
As thei that thoughten to deceiue.
Was none, that might of hem perceiue,
Tul thei in sondry stedes haue
Her golde vnder the erthe begraue
In two treasours, that to beholde
Thei shulde seme as thei were olde.—Id. Ib. b. v.

BE-GREY, is used in Browne, as if equivalent to Malgre, (qv.) No other instance has occurred.

So thou maist with thy past'rall minstrelsy
Beating the aire, atween resounding hills,
Draw to the bonfires as smirke, as ivy,
And wrap them in thy love—begrey their wils.
Davies. To William Browne.

BE-GRIME. To make grim; to smear with any thing dirty or sooty, and thus give a grim appearance; a fierce aspect.

——— My name that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act III. sc. 3.

Upon a vaine and foolish superstition, enjoyning men to begrime and bewray themselves with dirt, to lie and wallow in the mire.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 215.

——— Some there are,
Great lords of counties, mighty men of war,
And well-dress'd courtiers, who with leering eye
Can in the face begrim'd with dirt discern
Strange charms, and pant for Cynthia in a cloud.
Whitehead. The Sweepers.

We must take up the prince in his laboratory, begrimed, uncombed, perhaps in a dirty shirt.
Walpole. Cat. of Engravers. Prince Rupert.

BE-GRIPE. A.S. Be-grip-an. To grasp, to hold tight. As used by Gower, simply—To surround.

——— Asie, Affrike, Europe,
The whiche vnder the heuen cope
Begripeth all this earth rounde,
As ferre as stretcheth any grounde.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

BE-GROWN. Covered over by the growth of any thing; any thing grown, sprung or sprouted up.

——— The hyll
Of Tmolus, which was begroune
With vines. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Such faces foule she [Alecto] shifts, so many mouthes she turning makes,
So serpent-full she seemes, and ouer all begrowne with snakes. Phaer. Æneidos, b. vii.

BE-GRUDGE. A very old, and in speech a very common word.

To grieve, fret, or repine (sub. at the good fortune of another.)

And alle that helpen me to erye, oth' elles to weden
Shal have leve by oure Lorde, to go and glene after
And make hym murye th' myd. in angre ho by grutche.
Piers Ploughman, p. 131.

None will have cause to begrudge the beauty or height of corner stones, when beholding them to beare a double degree of weight in the building.—Standard of Equality, § 25.

BE-GUILE. } To wile; to deceive, to
BEGUILERS. } delude, to cheat, to ensnare.
BEGUILTY. }

Selcouthly he endis the man that is falis,
If he trest ön his frendes, thie begile him als
Begiled is William, taken is & bonden.
R. Brunne, p. 329.

Ryght as the gylour thorw gyle, by gylede man for mest
So shal grace that al by gan, make a good ende
And by gyle the gylour. Piers Ploughman, p. 348.

And that wicked folk wymmen betraieth,
And begileth hem of her good with glauerynge wordes.
Id. Crede.

This miller smiled at his nicetee,
And thought, all this n' is don but for a wile.
They wenen that no man may hem begile.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4044.

Wherfore I say, that swiche wicked delites ben subtil begilers of hem that shul be dampned.
Id. The Persones Tale

For often he that will begile,
Is guiled with the same guile.
And thus the guiler is beguiled.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

When we escape from a little wile, and know the beguiler, we thinke that we are beguiled alreadie with other greate wiles.—Golden Boke, c. 24.

The knight was wroth to see his stroke beguil'd,
And smote againe with more outrageous might;
But back againe the sparkling steele recoil'd,
And left not any mark where it did light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 't were, encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

By easy commutations of publick penance for a private pecuniary mulct [thou] dost at once beguilty thine own science with sordid bribery and embolden the adulterer to commit that sin again without fear, from which he hath once escaped without shame, or so much as valuable loss.
Bp. Sanderson. Sermons, p. 273

Whilst we smile to see how easily you beguile these silly fishes that you catch so fast with this false bait, possibly we are not much less unwary ourselves, and the world's treacherous pleasures do little less delude me and you
Boyle. Occas. Reflections, Dis. 3

While o'er his lips her lovely forehead bow'd,
Won by his grateful eloquence, which sooth'd
With sweet variety the tedious march,
Beguiling time. Glover. Leonidas, b. viii

BE-HALF. For the part or share, or sake of any one.

And therfore I conseille, that ye sende youre messageres, swiche as ben discrete and wise, unto youre adversaries, telling hem on youre behalf, that if they wol trete of pees, and of accord, that they shape hem, without delay or taryinge, to come unto us.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Yet this I say in his behalfe
If Helen were his leeke,
Sir Paris needs not to disdaine
Her through the seas to seeke
Turbervile. In praise of Lady P.

Sir, quod Sir Willyam Helman, we are sent hyder fro the to thentēt that we shulde shewe you on their behalfe, that sythe they come into this countre they haue had nother preest nor wages of you, ye whiche they desyre generally to haue.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 393.

Now for that he sheweth this spight of his against the Bœotians and Corinthians especially, although he sparyth not any others whatsoever, I thought it my part and duty to defend herein the honour of our ancestors in the behalf of truth, against this only part of his writings and no more.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1000.

To do in another's name matters doing (chiefly) for the interest or advantage of another, upon another's behalf or account, as the servants or factours of another.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

Such evil sin hath wrought, and such a flame
Kindled in heaven, that it burns down to earth,
And, in a furious inquest that it makes
On God's behalf, lays waste his fairest works.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BE-HANG. To append, to suspend, to place in a dependent position.

Harke in your eare, my bedde fresh and gaie
I haue behanged with tapettes new brought
From Egypt. Chaucer. Remedie of Loue.

With freashe thynges, and with glade
The noble towne was all behonged,
And euery wight was sore alonged
To see this lustie ladie ride.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And so [the citizens] conueyed through the cytie, which then was garnyshed and behanged with tapettes and arras and other clothes of sylke and of richesse in moost goodly wyse, vnto Westmynster.—Fabyan. Edw. I. an. 1300.

BE-HAPPEN. To fall to the lot of; to befall, to bechance.

But why haue yee, said Arthegall, forborne
Your owne good shield in daungerous dismay;
That is the greatest shame and foulest scorne,
Which vnto any knight behappen may,
To lose the badge, that should his deeds display.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

BE-HA'TED. The A. S. Hatian, means to heat, to be hot; whence, Junius thinks, is deduced the metaphorical application to hatred, rancour, malice; and observes, that of similar origin are the verbs, to be incensed, incendi; to be inflamed, inflammari.

Algates yet therof he hatefull to all folke, that is to say that all was he behated of all folken, yet this wicked Nero had great lordship.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Your vncle of Gloucestre, to thentent to make you to be behated with your people, hath sowen dyuers sclandorous wordes vpon you throughout London and in other places, saying howe ye be not worthy to beare ye crowne nor to holde so noble an herytage as is ye realme of Englande, sythe ye haue taken to your wyfe the doughter of the Frenche kyng your aduersary
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 222.

BE-HAVE. } To have, to hold, to bear, to BEHA'VING. } conduct or manage. See
BEHA'VIOUR. } HAVE and HAVIOUR.

Therefore wol I shewe you how ye shuln behave you in gadering of youre richesses, and in what manere ye shuln usen hem.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

After that he describeth the outward conuersation of Christen men, how they ought to behaue themselues in spirituall thinges, how to teach, preach and rule in the congregation of Christ, to serue one another, to suffer all things patiently, and to commit wreake and vengeaunce to God, in conclusion how a Christen mā ought to behaue himselfe vnto all men to frend, foe, or whatsoeuer he be
Tyndall. Workes, p. 49.

John taught vs this lessō, that a preacher of Goddes word shoulde not get himselfe estimacion and auctoritie, by gorgeous apparell, or pōpouse liuing, but by honest behauiour, and Godly conuersacīō.—Udal. Mark, c. 1.

Then he [Henry VIII.] put of his bonnet & came forward to her, & with most louely countenaunce and princely behauyour saluted, welcomed & embraced her to the great reioysyng of the beholders.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 31.

Than they put in wrytynge all the dedis of the kyng who was in prison, and all that he hadde done by euyll counsell, and all his vsages, and euyll behauynges, and how euyll he had gouerned his realme, that which was redde openly in playn audience.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 14.

I persuadeid myself, that chiefly & immediatly you do it, to thintent to vnderstande the better, howe that you shall behaue yourselfe, in rulyng & gouernaunce of your realme.
Nichols. Thucydides, p. 7.

Whoso in pompe of proud estate (quoth shee)
Does swime, and bathes himselfe in courtly blisse,
Does waste his dales in darke obscuritiee,
And in obliuion euer buried is:
Where ease abounds, it's eath to doe amiss;
But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaues with cares, cannot so easie miss.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

And with such sober and vnmoued passion
He did behaue his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prou'd an argument.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iii. sc. 5.

My lord through London was drawne on a slide,
To Tower hill, where with an axe he dide.
Clad in his armour painted all on paper,
Torne and reuers'd in spite of his behauer.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 475.

As one all civil courtesy that could:
Who full of bounty, hospitably meek,
Of his behauiour greatly pleas'd to hear,
Forthwith commands his servants him to seek,
To honour him by whom his honour'd were.
Drayton. Moses. Birth and Miracles, b. i.

How gravely, how modestly, how reverently would ye behave yourselves before him all the while you are in his house, and especially at his holy table, where you see him coming to you, and offering you his most blessed body and blood, to preserve your souls and bodies to everlasting life
Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 52.

She often expressed her dissatisfaction at that indecency of carriage which universally prevails in our churches; and wondered that they should be most careless of their behaviour towards God, who are most scrupulously nice in exacting and paying all the little decencies that are in use among men.—Atterbury. Upon the Death of the Lady Cutts.

The concluding clause, this is the law and the prophets, has by some been interpreted to mean, this is the sum and substance of all religion; as if religion consisted solely in behaving justly and kindly to our fellow-creatures, and beyond this no other duty was required at our hands.
Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 7.

We are not, perhaps, at liberty to take for granted that the lives of the preachers of Christianity were as perfect as their lessons but we are entitled to contend, that the observable part of their behaviour must have agreed in a great measure with the duties which they taught.
Paley. Evidences, c. 1. p. 1.

BE-HEAD. } To head or behead, is to take
BEHE'ADING. } off, cut off, strike off, the head.

And Eroude seide, I haue biheedid Jon, and who is this of whom I here siche thingis? and he soughte to se him.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 9.

And Herode sayde: John haue I beheaded; who thē is this of whom I heare such thynges? And he desyred to see him!—Bible, 1551. Ib.

So that there lyeth before the high altar, in St Peters Church, two dukes, betweene two queenes, to wit, the D. of Somerset, and the D. of Northumberland, betweene Q. Anne, and Q. Katherine, all foure beheaded.
Stowe. Queen Mary, an. 1553.

Thus you see what be in manner all the principall points of his fable, setting aside and excepting those which are most execrable to wit, the dismembering of horns and the beheading of Isis.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1054.

I think it was Caligula who wished the whole city of Rome had but one neck, that he might behead them at a blow.—Spectator, No. 16.

Lord Clarendon relates that he [M. of Argyle] was condemned to be hanged, which was performed the same day; on the contrary, Burnet, Woodrow, Heath, Echard, concur in stating that he was beheaded, and that he was condemned upon the Saturday and executed on the Monday.
Paley. Evidences, pt. iii. c. 1.

BE-HEARD. Be and Heard; past part. of the verb to hear. — Not uncommon in our old ballads.

Robin Hood sett Guyes horne to his mouth,
And a loud blast it did blow,
That beheard the sheriffe of Nottingham
As he leaned under a lowe.—Robin Hood. Percy, vol i.

All this beheard her owne damselle,
In her bed whereas shee ley.
Quoth she, My lord shall knowe of this,
Soe I shall have golde and fee
The Curlde of Elle. Percy, vol. i.

All that beheard his little footepage,
As he watered his master's steed;
And for his master's sad perilie
His verry heart did bleed.
Old Robin of Portingale. Ib. vol. iii.

All this beheard a little foot page,
By his ladyes coach as he ranne:
Quoth he, thoughe I am my ladyes page,
Yet I'me my lord Burnardes manne
Little Musgrave. Ib.

BE-HEST. That which is named, said, ordered (to be done); the declared will,—in order, mandate, promise. See BEHET, HEST.

As Harald made hys wey byuore, as myd suykedom,
Myd gyftys & myd vayre byheste, & auong the kynedom.
R. Gloucester, p. 354.

After this bihuste, that Thomas to tham said,
Sone alle the tempest in a throwe was laid.
R. Brunne, p. 149.

Thenne was fortune my foo, for al here fayre byheste
And poverte pursuwede me, and putte me to be lowe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 201.

To breken forword is not min entente,
Behest is dette, and I wold hold it fayn
All my behest, I can no better sayn.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4468.

For I dare make this behest,
That I to you haue nothing hid,
But tolde right as it is betide.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And that they might be assured, that he would performe all these behests and promises: he held with his left hand a lambe, and in the right a flint stone, and praied solemnely, That if hee failed herein, Jupiter and the rest of the Gods, would so kill him, as hee slew that lambe: and presently after his praier done, he smote the lambe on the head, and dasht out the brunes.—Holland. Livie, p. 419.

But as he sends upon his high behests
For state, as sovran King, and to enure
Our prompt obedience.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. viii.

—— The plain, by slow degrees shall rise
Higher than erst had stood the summit hill;
For time must nature's great behest fulfil.
Prior. Solomon, b. i.

But soon he calls the vision to his mind,
And ponders on the glorious charge assigned;
Fresh to his soul the high behest returns,
And with redoubled zeal his bosom burns.
Brooke. Jerusalem Delivered, b. i.

BE-HEW, v. From the application of Hew, (qv.) to form, figure, shape, it seems to have been extended to—

The general aspect or appearance, to complexion and colour.

But lord so faire it was to shewe
For it was all with golde behewe.
Chaucer. The House of Fame.

BE-HET. } See BEHEST, and the quota-
BEHI'GHT. } tion from R. of Gloucester.
BEHO'TE. } Behete, to declare the will, in
BEHO'TEN. } promise rather than command;
BEHI'TEER. } to promise. Be or bi-hete, be or be-hight are constantly used in Wiclif, where the modern version uses, to promise. Mark xiv. 11, A. S. "And beheton him feoh to syllanne." Wiclif, "And bihighten to give him money." Behest still remains in common use.

Theruor he gaf yt hym, as he byhet hym byuore,
And sende to hym myd the gyfte to Normandye theruor.
R. Gloucester, p. 346.

Theruor yeh byhote God, that yne seal kynge's crowne,
Neuere bere anerthe. Id. p. 322.

Longe was her hue loked up, and lord mercy criede
And by highte to hym, that ous alle made
Hue sholde unaywe hure smok, and sette ther an heire
To afaiten hure flesch that fers was to synne.
Piers Ploukman, p. 87.

Also wymmen in conenable abite with schamefastnesse and sobrenesse aralynge hemsilf, not in writhun heeris, eithir in gold, eithir in peerlis, eithir precious clooth but that that bicometh wymmen biheetynge pitee, bi good werkis.
Wiclif. Tyme. c. 2.

In so myche Iesu is maad biheeter of the better testament.
Id. Ebrewis, c. 7.

Thus shal man hope, that for his werkes of penance God shal yeve him his regne, as he behight him in the gospel.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And this behete I you withouten faille
Upon my trouth, and as I am a knight,
That whether of you bothe hath that might,
This is to sayn, that whether he or thou
May with his hundred, as I spake of now,
Slee his contrary, or out of listes drive,
Him shall I yeven Emelie to wive,
To whom that fortune yeveth so fayr a grace.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1856.

He spake and saide; if I the saue,
What sikernes shall I haue
Of couenant, that afterwarde
Thou wolt ne gyue suche rewarde,
As thou behightest nowe before?—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And hath bihote him by his feith,
That who the best reason seyth,
He shalle receiue a worthy mede. Id. Ib. b. vii.

To you my father I confesse,
Suche will my witte hath ouersette,
That what so hope me behete,
Full many a time I wene it sooth. Id. Ib. b. i.

Astonnied some the scathefull gift beheld,
Behight by vow vnto the chast Minerve.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneas, b. ii.

Vppon which occasion his father at the warnynge of the southsayers, which tolde him that the childe should be a king, toke the childe to him, and brought him vp wythall diligence in hoope of the state that was behighte him.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 106.

The authors meaning should of right be heard,
He knoweth best to what end he enditeth:
Words sometime beare more then heart behiteth.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 461.

Now I a wailefull widow behight,
Of my old age haue this one delight,
To see thee succeede in thy fathers stead,
And flourish, in flowers of lustiehead.
Spenser. The Shepherd's Calendar.

Unto you would I be my live's space
As true, as any woman on earth is Unto a man, doubteth nothing of this
Smal may she doe, that cannot well byheet,
Though not performed be such a promesse
Browne. Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. i.

BE-HIND. } The imper. Be and the noun
BIHI'NDHAND. } Hind.
After; posterior in time or space.

Com the erl of Kent mid ys ost thorg vs tricherie
Al fresch bi hynde the Britones.—R. Gloucester, p. 56.

Chalenge and imgienge, that was hus chef lyflode
And lasse man byhynde hure back.
Piers Ploughman, p. 90.

Though I be ontre telle not thise thinges,
Be it of popes, emperoures, or kinges,
After hir ages, as men written finde,
But telle hem som before and som behinde,
As it now cometh to my remembrance,
Have me excused of min ignorance.
Chaucer. The Monkes Prologue, v. 13,991.

So that to fore ne behynde
He seeth no thing, but as the blynde
Without insight of his courage,
He doth meruailes in his rage.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

My curiosity to see a solemn procession on St. John Baptist's day might have drawn me into danger, through my willing unreverence had not the bulk of a tall Brabanter, behind whom I stood in a corner of the street, shadowed me from notice.—Bp. Hall. Account of Himself.

Leo. Oh my brother,
(Good gentleman) the wrongs I haue done thee stirre
Afresh within me and these thy offices
(So rarely kind) are as interpreters
Of my behind hand slacknesse.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 1.

But they were so disappointed, through the vigilance and valour of Raleigh's company, and that of captain Denny, that such as were not left dead behind, were forced to retreat with more haste than good speed.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

As two points of good-breeding, which I have hitherto insisted upon, regard behaviour and conversation, there is a third which turns upon dress. In this too the country are very much behind-hand.—Spectator, No. 119.

In the journey of life some are left behind, because they are naturally feeble and slow; some because they miss the way, and many because they leave it by choice, and, instead of pressing onward with a steady pace, delight themselves with momentary deviations, turn aside to pluck every flower, and repose in every shade.—Johnson. Rambler, No. 89.

BE-HOLD.
BEHO'LDEN.
BEHO'LDER.
BEHO'LDING.
BEHO'LDINGNESS.

A. S. Be-healdan, Behaldan, Healdan; Dut. Behouden, tenere, servare, observare.

To keep or hold, (sc. the eyes fixed upon any object,) to look at it, to observe, to consider.

Beholden, holden, kept, bound, obliged. Holde or holden is thus used by Gower:

I finde a tale written also
How that a worthie prince is holde
The laws of his land to holde.—Con. A. b. vii.

——— To hym in speciall
Above all other I am most holde.—Ib. b. viii.

that is, bound, obliged; under bond, or obligation.

In the schip as other prynces in gret pruyde he is holde,
And he nadde mid hym bute twet men, hym thogte yaherte
feld.—R. Gloucester, p. 34.

Eateward ich behulde, after the sonne
And sawe a tour as ich trowede, truthe was ther ynne.
Piers Ploughman, pt. ii.

Maistere we witen that thou art soth fast and thou techist in treuthe the wey of God, and thou chargist not of ony man, for thou biholdist not the persone of men, therfore seye to us, what it semeth to thee.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 22.

And Jhesus biheld him and seyde anentis men, it is impossible but not anentis God for alle thingis ben possible anentis God.—Id. Mark, c. 10.

Herbeten, if a man be occupied in ony gilt, ghe that ben spirituel enforme ghe such oon in spyryt of softnesse biholdynge thanne leest that thou be tempted.—Id. Gal. c. 6.

Ther is right at the west side of Italie
Doun at the rote of Vesulus the cold,
A lusty playn, habundant of vitaille,
Ther many a toun and tour thou maist behold.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7933.

The third good of great comfort
That yeueth to louers most disport,
Cometh of sight and beholding.
The cleped is swete loking.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

A kynge is holden ouer all
To pitee, but in speciall
To him, where he is moste beholde,
They shulde his pitee most beholde,
That ben the lieges of the londe,
For thei ben ever vnder his honde.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Yet maye it signifye Cryste euer to be sought and to be beholden in faith of men in exyle.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 6.

Whose blessed and sacred body and soule vnited and knytte in one with the holy goshed, is a perfite and a cleare glasse, wherein lyes moste pleasaunte glorified manhode maye be beholden.—Udal. Resurrection, c. 21.

They should consider howe deepely they wer bounden and beholden to hym therfore, and with deuout thankes, inwardlye remember his inestimable bounty therin.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1324.

His pleasure was, that for our saluacion we should to him be beholdyng and not to the kepyng of the lawe.
Udal. Galathies, c. 2.

And in the wynter folowynge were royall lustes holden in Smythfelde of London, and many goodly and knyghtly feates of armys doon to the great honoure of the kynge, and all his realme and gladdynge of al beholdours.
Fabyan. Edw. III. an. 1356.

Moreouer when they had throwen there into all theyr richesse, they caste them selues also hedlong after them, to the entent their enemy hauing gotten the victory, shoulde enioy nothing of theirs, more then the beholdyng of ye fire.
Goldyng. Justine, p. 70.

And as she did to Philoclea, so did she to her, with the tribute of gifts seek to bring her mind into servitude and all other means, that might either establish a beholdingness, or at least awake a kindness.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Leonatus, the young king of Pontus, (who had been there to acknowledge his beholdenness to them, whom he was deservingly bound to) took the field.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. and Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man.—John, xix. 5.

Thus vntill such time as I may in some more larger measure, make knowne my loue to the happie and generous familie of the Gooderes, (to which I confesse myselfe to be beholding, for the most part of my education) I wish you all happiness.—Drayton, Ded.

When as the sun their thickness doth oppose
In his descending, stunning wond'rous clear,
To the beholder, far off standing, shows
Like some besieged town that were on fire.
Id. Battle of Agincourt.

Thanks, lovely virgins: now might we but know
To whom we have been beholding for this love,
We shall acknowledge it.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act iv. sc. 1.

We must not be ashamed to acknowledge that we can do nothing of ourselves whereby to obtain the favour of God, but that we are beholden wholly to our Saviour for it.
Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 83.

I frequently offer'd to turn my sight another way, but was still detained by the fascination of the peeper's eyes, who had long practised a skill in them, to recall the parting glances of her beholders.—Spectator, No. 53.

If our constitution, I say, with so great advantages, does not, in fact, provide any such remedy (against mal administration) we are rather beholden to any minister who undermines it, and affords us an opportunity of erecting a better in its place.—Hume. Politics a Science, Ess. 3.

BE-HOOVE, or
BEHO'VE, v.
BEHO'VE, n.
BEHO'OF.
BEHO'VEFUL.
BEHO'VEFULLY.
BEHO'VABLE.
BEHO'VEDLY.
BEHO'VELY.

A. S. Behefe; Ger. Behuf; Dut. Behoef; Sw. Behof; A. S. Behofan; Ger. Behafen. Dut. Behoeven. To need, to have need of. A. S. Behofath, oportet, interest, necesse est; it behooveth, it is needful or necessary, (Somner.) Perhaps a consequential usage of the verb To Behave. It behoveth, (q. d.) it behaveth; it hareth, have. It behoveth, (See Owe.) A kynge behoveth, holdeth, oweth, (q. d.) it behaveth; it hareth, have. It behoveth, (See Owe.) A kynge behoveth, holdeth, oweth, (See Owe.) A kynge behoveth, oweth, ought. It behoft, or behoved, (oportebat) Christ; Christ, oweth, ought; it was needful or necessary. And hence generally—

To be needful, necessary, useful, serviceable, convenient, meet, fit.

In tyme of gere an erne's nest, that hii bredeth in ywys,
Feh ys in a rocke hym self, vor hii ne mowe nogt ne be,
Vor hem byhoueth muche mete.—R. Gloucester, p. 177.

I haf mad a vowe to leue for wele ne wo,
At my nede now with me behoues gow go.
R. Brunne, p. 291.

This wit wot witerly, as the world techeth
What other by hoveth, that hath meny children
And hath no catel bote hus crafte, to clothy hem and to fede.—Piers Ploughman, p. 151.

And thus it bihofte Crist to suffre; and rise agen fro deeth in the thridde day: and penaunce and remissioun of synnes, to be prechid in his name into alle folkis bigynnynge at Jarusalem.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 24.

Thus it behoued Christe to suffer, and to ryse agayne from deathe the thyrde daye, and that repentaunce and remission of synnes shoulde be preached in his name amonge all nacions, and muste begyune at Jerusalem.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And worke not alway in every nede by on conseillour allone: for sometime behoueth it to be counselled by many.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

But it were through the God of Loue,
I knew nat ele to my behoue
That might me ease or comfort gette,
But if he would him entermette.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Now shalt thou understond what is behoveful and necessary to every parfit penance!—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And sith thend is euery tales strength,
And this matter is so behovely,
What should I paint or drawen it on length
To you, that ben my frend so faithfully!
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

Now it is behovely to tellen whiche ben dedly sinnes, that is to say, chefetaines of sinnes.—Id. The Persones Tale

The kynge vpon his tale answerde
And said, If this thing, whiche he herde
Be sooth, and maie be brought to proue;
It shall not be to his behoue.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

A kynge behoueth eke to flee
The vice of prodigalitee,
That he measure in his expence
So kepe, that of indigence
He maie be saufe, for who that nedeth,
In all his werke he wetes he spedeth.—Id. Ib. b. viii.
For trouthe, (whiche to mannes nede)
Is most behoueliche ouer all.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

All these things it behoueth your Majestie to send in time for I can assure your Majestie that you shall not haue vpon the sea such good shippes as these are.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol iii. p. 558.

For a citie and a prouince be not the faire houses, and the strong walles, nor the defence of any engine, but the lyuing bodies of men, being able in number and strength, to maintaine themselues by good order of iustice, and to serue for all necessary, and behouefable vses in the common welth.
Sir John Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

It is behouable to take counsayle eche of other howe we maye entre into the hauen, and to take lade.
Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 171.

But yet in that point in which it had been chefely of all expedient and behouable to gene eare vnto Johns sayinges, he did not onely doe after his counsayle, but also caste hym into pryson for geuing hym good admertisement.
Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Thā kyng Stephan prepayred to set forwarde his people, and erle Baudewyne had wordes of comforte to the kynges people, and sayd: "men yt shall fyght, to them is behouefull three thynges: ye firste is ryght of ye cause," &c. &c.
Fabyan, c. 232.

King Henry [3] being sicke, called before him Gilbert de Clare, Earle of Gloucester, and caused him to be sworne to keepe the peace of the land, to the behoofe of Edward his sonne, & then died the sixteenth of Nouember, in the yeere 1272.—Stowe. Hen. III. an. 1272.

Whence it was, that his said late Majestie (of happy memory) gaue publicke order for bestowing the later parte of God's day in familiar catechising, then which, nothing could be deuised more necessary and behoofefull to the soules of men.—Bp. Hall. Old Religion. Epist. Dedicatorie.

But tell us of some more weighty dislikes in the Statutes then these, and that may more behouefully import the reformation of them.—Spenser. Of Ireland.

If therefore we mean to be good or to be happy, it behoveth us to lose no time, to be presently at our own great task, to snatch all occasions to embrace all means prudent of reforming our hearts and lives.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

It behoves you, therefore, (and I cannot repeat it too often,) it behoves you well to consider the end of your office, and to represent to yourself how great and important is the administration of governing a free state.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. viii. Let. 26.

BE-HOWL. In the old folio it is Beholds. Warburton and Farmer have established the reading, Behowls, in the modern editions. See To Howl.

Puck. Now the hungry lyons rores,
And the wolfe beholds the moone:
Whilest the heauy ploughman snores,
All with weary taske fore-done.
Shakespeare. Mid. Night's Dreame, Act v. sc. 2.

BE-JADE. To weary, to tire; to dishearten.

But if you have no mercy upon them, yet spare yourself, lest you bejade the good galloway, your own opiniaster wit, and make the very conceit itself blush with spur galling.
Milton. Anim. upon the Rem. Defence.

BE-JAPE. To joke, mock, deride, delude.

They ben but iugulers, and iapers of kynde,
And bejapeth the folk, with gestes of Rome.
It is but a faynt folke, yfounded vp on iapes.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Thou hast bejaped here duk Theseus,
And falsely changed hast thy name thus.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1587.

Now was his hart dull, now was it light
And thus beraped stoden for to stare
About naught, this Troilus and Pandare.
Id. Troil. & Cres.

Tho was there flatterie none,
The worthy prince to berape,
The kynge was otherwise shape
With good counsaill. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

BEILD. Beild, shelter. (North. Grose.) A.S. Be-hlidan; to cover, to protect, to shelter.

This is our harbour, soft from dangers floods;
This is our beild, the blustering winds to shunne.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. ii. c. 84.

This breast, this bosome soft, shall be thy beild
'Gainst storms of arrowes, darts and weapons throwne.
Id. Ib. b. xvi. s. 49.

BE-KISS. See the quotation.

Mar. Come, Amie, you'll go with us?
Am. I am not well.
Lio. Shee's sick o' the yong shep'ard that bekist her.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 6.

BE-KNIT. A. S. Becnytte, nexus, knit, bound, tied, (Somner.)

Here stood the fiend, [Tisiphone,] and stopt their passage out;
And splaying foorth her filthy armes beknit with snakes about,
Did tosse and waue her hatefull head.
Arth. Golding. Ovid. Metamorphoses, b. iv.

BE-KNOW. To ken, to see; to recognize, to acknowledge.

That ys soth Ich seide, and so Ich by knowe
That Ich have tynt tyme.—Piers Ploughman, p. 80.

For I dare not beknowe min owen name,
But ther as I was wont to highte Arcite,
Now highte I Philostrat, not worth a mite
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1558.

And whan they had told all her distresse
And all her tempest and all her hard cass
Unto the Queene appeared Eneas
And openly beknewe that it was he
Who had foy than, but his meine
That hadden found her lord, her gouernour.
Id. The Legend of Dido.

So sir Jaques of Helley entred into the court boted and spurred, as than he was not beknowen, for he had of long tyme hanted farre countries.—Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 219.

So we deepe wounded with the bloodie thought,
And gnawing worme that grieu'd our conscience so,
Neuer tooke ease, but as our heart outbrought
The stayned sighes in witness of our woe,
Such restlesse cares our fault did well beknow.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 440.

BE-LABOUR. To work hard, to work, to ply diligently, carefully, actively.

Violins strike up aloud,
Ply the gittern, scour the crowd,
Let the nimble hand belabour
The whistling pipe, and dumbling tabor.
Drayton. Nymphal 8.

And because the legions had committed certain insolencies, whereupon they fell together by the ears, and the enemies had the better hand, after he had sharply reproved them, he took the tenth man of the two first bands, and belaboured Jubellius with a cudgel.
North. Plutarch, p. 964.

If the earth is belaboured with culture, it yieldeth corn: but lying neglected, it will be overgrown with brakes and thistles.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

Homer illustrates one of his heroes encompassed with the enemy, by an ass in a field of corn, that hath his sides belaboured by all the boys of the village, without stirring a foot for it.—Spectator, No. 161.

What groan was that I heard? Deep groan indeed
With anguish heavy laden. Let me trace it.
From yonder bed it comes, where the strong man,
By stronger arm belaboured, gasps for breath,
Like a hard-hunted beast.—Blair. The Grave.

BE-LA'CED. Belace, to cover with lace.

The lace of a shoe is that by which the shoe is laced, caught, or held. Lace:—made by catching and holding the threads together.

With proud delight, and with no less success
I turn'd my heart to those soul-conquering charms
Which flourish in smooth numbers: how to dress
In fierce aray war's thundering alarms,
How to belace and fringe soft love, I knew,
For all my ink was now Castalian dew.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 2. s. 18.

BE'LAMY. } Fr. Bel amy; Bel amour,
BE'LAMOUR. } Bellus amicus. Fair friend.

Thou bel amy, thou pardonere, he said,
Tel us som mirth of japes right anon.
Chaucer. Pardoneres Prol. v. 12,252.

Wise Socrates,———
Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,
To the faire Critias, his dearest belamie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Lo, lo, how braue she decks her bounteous boure,
With silken curtens and gold couerlets,
Therein to shrowd her sumptuous belamour.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 6.

BE-LATE. } To defer, to delay, to
BELA'TEDNESS. } linger, to tarry, to come behind or too late.

To thee sage Hermegild myself I leave,
My fame and pow'r thee action cannot waste;
Caution retard, nor promptitude deceive;
Slowness belate, nor hope drive on too faste.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 2.

———Faerie elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forrest side
Or fountain some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Yet that you may see that I am something suspicious of myselfe, and doe take notice of a certaine belatednesse in me, I am the bolder to send you some of my nightward thoughts some while since, because they come in not altogether unfitly, made up in a Petrarchian stanza, which I told you of.—Id. Letter. Birch's Life.

A watch-tow'r to the wand'rers of mankind;
Forlorn, belated, and with passions blind,
Who tread the foolish round their fathers trod,
And 'midst life's errours, hit on death's by-road.
Harte. Macarius.

This day, for the first time, we heare of the proofs. But when were those proofs offered? In what cause? Who were the parties? Who inspected? Who contested this belated account?—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

BE-LAW-GIVE. Be, law, and give. A compound of Milton's. To give law to.

Did not the distemper of their own stomache affect them with a dizzy megrim, they would soon tie up their tongues, and discern themselves, like that Assyrian blasphemer, all this while reproaching not man, but the Almighty, the Holy One of Israel, whom they do not deny to have belawgiv'n his own sacred people with this very allowance.
Milton. On Divorce. To the Parliament.

BE-LAY. Dut. Be-laeghen, Belegghen. Somner says, Belæwan, prodere, to belay, to bewray, betray. Skinner adds, insidiari. But he farther suggests, be, and lay, q.d. insidias objicere. Similar to this is waylay. See BELEAGUER.

To lay, sc. in wait, upon the watch, in ambush, in blockade, for an opportunity to assault or attack.

Thys fole besette Kanterbury, and vaste bylay,
And gret raymson of hem wythinne easte to be out of wo.
R. Gloucester, p. 298.

———The Grekes sought
Unto the towne, and it belaie,
And wolden neuer parte awaie,
Till what by sleight, and what by strength,
They had it wonne in brede and length.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Anone this citee was without
Beleine, and seged all about.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

They had belayed all the coast along for ve, and being dispersed so, were not well to be number'd.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 73.

Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might
Then those small forces, ye were wont belay;
Such haughty minds enur'd to hardy fight
Disdaine to yeeld vnto the first assay.—Spenser, Son. 14.

Silent they scud away, and haste their flight,
To neighb'ring woods, and trust themselves to night,
The speedy horse all passages belay,
And spur their smoaking steeds to cross their way;
And watch each entrance of the winding wood.
Dryden. Æneis, b. ix.

BE-LA'YED. Inlaid or overlaid; covered.

All in a woodman's iacket he was clad
Of Lincolne greene, belayd with siluer lace.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

BELCH, v. } A. S. Bealcan, Bealcettan,
BELCH, n. } eructare, effundere, to blow
BE'LCHING. } forth, to pour forth. G. Douglas, in the passage cited from Phaer and Addison, uses "Bokkis forth." Piers Plouhman writes, "Bolke." Bishop Hall and Dr. Beaumont, "Belking." Phaer uses both Belch, and Bolke. Erigit eructans. It belch and bolketh out: perhaps to belly (qv.) to swell out, as a bag full of wind, and, consequentially—

To blow forth, to eject; to throw or drive forth; to expel.

Belch also appears to have been the name of some heavy windy liquor: swelling the body.

Benedicite he bygan wit a bolke, and hus brest knoked.
Piers Ploughman, p. 110.

For when he gorged had himselfe, with meats and drinking drownd,
He bowed his neck to sleepe, and there he lay along the ground;
An hideous thing to sight: and belching out the gubs of blood,
And lumps of flesh, with wine, he gulped forth.
Phaer. Æneidos, b. iii.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine and blood,
Lay stretcht at length and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.
Addison. Æneid, b. iii.

As burning Ætna, from his boyling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coleblack clouds and filthy smoke,
That all the land with stench, and heauen with horror choke. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

All radishes breed wind wonderfully much, and provoke a man that eateth them, to belch.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 5.

Still, still I burn; my fire but changed is;
And though my lust be cool'd, my guilt is hot,
And belks and boils.—Beaumont. Psyche, c. 2. s. 146.

Their belking bosoms heaved high, and fain
They would have belched out their working load
Of blasphemy, which held their soule in pain.
Id. Ib. c. 15. s. 47.

For our bodily grievances, what varieties doe we here meet withall? What aches of the bones, what belkin of the joynts, what convulsions of sinews!
Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead.

Nor Ætna vomiting sulphureous fire
Will ever belch; for sulphur will expire,
(The veins exhausted of the liquid store;)
Time was she cast no flames; in time will cast no more.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

'Tis notorious from the instance under consideration, that it must be owing to the use of brown Jugga, muddy belch, and the fumes of a certain memorable place of rendezvous with us at meals, known by the name of Stalncoat Hole.
Spectator, No. 396.

———The cloud,
Belch'd from the brazen throat of war, would hide,
Industrious, the ruin which it spreads,
As if asham'd of massacre.—Thompson. Sickness, b. v.

BE-LE'AGUE. } Dut. Be-laeghen, Belegghen; Sw. Belägra; A. S.
BELE'AGUER. } Belic-jan. See BELAY.

To lay, place or dispose; to lay wait for, (sc. to assault, to attack.) To beset or besiege.

For even the very expeditions and voyages in warre, have not alwaies battels aranged, nor fields fought and bloody skirmishes, ne yet besieging and beleaguring of cities.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 319.

And that if the great princes of the north
Will with an army royal set him forth,
Before the year expir'd that is to come,
He will with Bourbon new beleaguer Rome.
Drayton. The Owl.

See, ev'ry way's a trap, each path's a train:
Hell's troops my sole beleaguer; bow thine ears,
And hear my cries pierce through my groans and fears.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

BELEE'. I have been informed, (says Mr. Steevens,) that one vessel is said to be in the lee of another, when it is so placed that the wind is intercepted from it. Iago's meaning therefore is, that Cassio had got the wind of him, and becalm'd him from going on. Lee is a place secure from the injuries of wind and weather. A. S. Hleow, (Lye.) And Hleow is the past part. of Hliwan, Hleowan, tepere, fovere. (See Lee.) To belee, here then, is applied, consequentially—

To shelter (sc. from the wind; and thus, to have no wind to enable me to sail).

——But he (Sir) had th' election;
And I (of whom his eies had seene the proofe
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds
Christen'd, and Heathen) must be be-leed, and calm'd
By debitor, and creditor.—Shakes. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

BE-LEAVE. A.S. Leof-an, Luf-an, Be-luf-an. (See Believe.) Quoque (nefas) omnes nefanda in morte reliqui. "Quhom now, schame to say the harme, so wikkitly reddy to myschevus deith beleft have I," (G. Douglas.) "Whom all (alas) I now have left unto their death and grave," (Phaer.) See Leave.

To go away from; to relinquish; to stay, or cause to stay or remain; to stay, or remain.

For the kyng Edward and ys men hamward ywend were,
That fole of Kent, agen ys wylle, bylefede by hynde there.
R. Gloucester, p. 269.

For that fole of thys lond to synne her wylle al gene,
And gut nolle herto her synnes bileue
Thoru me and other halewen.—Id. p. 265.

And euer amonge the holy tales,
Like as that weren fisshes scales
That fellen from hym nowe and ofte,
Til that there was nothynge belefte
Of al this great maladie.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

BE-LE'PER. Lat. Lepra, that which breaks the skin into scales, (Vossius.)

Cas. You have a law, Lords, that without remorse
Dooms such as are belepred with the curse
Of foul ingratitude, unto death.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act v. sc. 1.

Eternal mischief! I must urge no more
Lest were I not beleper'd in my soul.
Here were enough to quench the flames of hell.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act ii. sc. 2.

Ser. Thus will I pull thy hair, and thus I'll drag
Thy lust be-leaper'd body through the dust.
Yet tell his name.
Id. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act iv. sc. 3.

Under which two primitive nurses, (the purity and poverty of ministers, for such they were indeed, the Church of God never truly flourished then ever after, since the time that impurity and church-revenue rushing in, corrupted and beleper'd all the clergy with a worse infection than Gehazi's.
Milton. Reconciliation, c. 14.

BELGA'RDES. Fr. Belles regardes. Beautiful looks, amorous glances.

The whiles, vnawares away her wandring eye
And greedy eares, her weake hart from her bore:
Which he perceiuing, euer prilly
In speaking, many false belgards at her let fly.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

And on thine eylids, waiting thee beside,
Ten thousand graces sit, and when they move
To earth their amorous belgards from above,
They fly from heav'n, and on their wings convey thy love.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph and Victory.

BE-LI'BEL. To assail with libels; defamatory speeches or writings.

See the laziness of posterity: so far from imitating the industry of their ancestors, that they belibell the pure effects of their pains as hellish achievements.
Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

BE-LIE. A.S. Be-leogan; Ger. Be-liegen; Dut. Be-lieghen; to lie or lye.

To give the lie to; to contradict; to calumniate; to represent falsely; to falsify.

If [which whosoever readeth it] shall easly perceaue, not the [illegible] and that they lye; but also the very cause of such blasphemy, and what stirreth thé so furiously to rage and to belye the truth?—Tyndall. Workes, p. 105.

And if he hadde died therin, had he not died for the truth? For knowing in himself that all they belied him, he was not bound to belye himself with them, and confesse against himself an vntruth, but had been in great sinne if he so should haue done.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 215.

And when thy glass shall it present
Without these graces which once were there,
Showing, like some stale monument,
A scalp departed from its hair;
And thyself frighted, wilt thou start, and swear
That I belied thee when I called the fair?
Thomas Beedome. Ellis, vol. iii.

A painted face, belied with vermeyl store
Which light Eneipa every day did trim,
That in one hand a gilded anchor wore,
Not fixed on the rock, but on the brim
Of the wide air, she let it loosely swim.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

In's body too no critique eye could find
The smallest blemish to belye his mind;
He was all pureness, and his outward part
But represents the picture of his heart.
Cowley. Elegy on John Littleton, Esq.

Th' incensed powers beheld with scorn from high,
And heaven so far distant from the sky,
Which durst, with horses' hoofs that beat the ground,
And martial brass, bely the thunder's sound.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

—— While the fond soul
Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form; the kindling grace;
Th' inticing smile; the modest seeming eye,
Beneath whose beauteous beams, belying heaven,
Lurk searchless cunning, cruelty, and death.
Thomson. Spring.

I have little to recommend my opinions but long observation and much impartiality. They come from one who has been no tool of power, no flatterer of greatness, and who in his last acts does not wish to belie the tenour of his life.
Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

BELI'EVE, v.
Belie'ver, n.
Belief.
Beli'efful.
Beli'efulness.
Beli'ever.
Beli'eving, n.

Dut. Be-looven, Ghe-looven; Ger. Lauben, Ge-lauben; A.S. Luf-an, Ge-lyfan; Goth. Laub-jan, Ge-laub-jan, credere, fidem dare sive habere; to credit, to give or have faith.

The etymologists do not attempt to account for this important word:—it is, undoubtedly, formed upon the Dut. Leven; Ger. Leben; A. S. Lif-ian, Be-lif-ian; Goth. Liban, vivere, to live or be-live, to dwell. Live or leve, be- or bi-live or leve, are used indifferently by old writers, whether to denote vivere or credere. (See Leve.) In the three first examples from Robert of Gloucester, Bi-leve, is to live or continue to live, to dwell. In the fourth—"Right by-leve him taught," is—taught him to live rightly, taught him a rule by which to by-leve, or to live; and gave him Christendom, i. e. Christianity; made known to him the life of Christ, how he bylered or lived,—as told in the gospels of Christ. In Piers Ploughman, "to bring forth your bi-leue," is to bring forth that by which you may live. In Lord Berners—"His own by-leue," is his own living or dwelling-place; his dwelling, his domain. See Belrave.

To believe, then, is—to live by or according to, to abide by; to guide, conduct, regulate, govern or direct the life by; to take, accept, assume or adopt as rule of life; and, consequentially—

To think, deem, or judge right; to be firmly persuaded of, to give credit to; to trust, or think trustworthy; to have or give faith or confidence; to confide, to think or deem faithful.

Y geue here the to thi wyf, &. gef thou wolt by leue here,
The thridde del of my kyndom y geue the to be my fere.
R. Gloucester, p. 12.

He bi-leuede without the town, & in wel gret fere.
Id. p. 35

And bi leuede al the wynter to gedere in this lond.
Id. p. 59.

Tho pope here of was glad, & twei holi men hym sende,
Fagan and Dimian, hys soule for to amende
That tygt bi leue hym tagte, and gef hym Cristendom.
Id. p. 73.

Oure bi leue (quoth this other) in the hye Godes ys y do,
Saturnus and Jupiter, and al the other al so.
* * * * * *
Sori ich am (quoth Vortiger) tho he herde thes.
For goure bi leue, that ge segget, for no bileue yt nys.
Id. p. 112, 113.

Werfore he het the elemens. to helpe gow alle tymes
And bryng forth goure bylyue, bothe lynnen and wollen.
Piers Ploughman, p. 14.

And gut were best to bee aboute, and brynge hit to kepe
That all londes lyueden, an in on lawe bylaued.
Id. p. 175.

And as his liresman lereth hym, he by leyreth and troweth.
Id. p. 277.

And bote yf thei reverencen hus resurrexun, and the rode henoure
And by leyne on a new lawe, (thei shall) beo ylost, lyf and soul.—Id. p. 853.

For it bihoueth that a man comynge to God bileue that he be is, and that he is rewardere to men that seken hym.
Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 9.

For he that commeth to God must beleue that God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seke hym.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Custance answer'd; Sire, it is Cristes might,
That helpeth folk out of the fendes snare
And so forforth she gan our lay declare,
That she the constable, or that it were eve,
Converted, and on Crist made him beleve.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4990

And thoug that I, unworthy sone of Eve
Be sinful, yet accepteth my beleve.
Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,531.

And this beleue is so certayne,
So full of grace and of vertue,
That what man clepeth to Jesu,
In cleane life, forth with good dede,
He maie not failen of heuen mede,
So that it stont upon beleue,
That euery man maie well acheue,
Whiche taken hath the right feith.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Blessed art thou (saveth Elizabeth) for thy beleues sake
Bale. Image of Both Churches, pt. iii.

For when he hath wonne a countrey, towne, or sygnory, he desyreth nothynge but truage, and leueth styll euery man in his owne byleue, and he putteth neuer no mā frō his herytage.—Berners. Froissart. Chron. vol. ii. c. 40.

Whanne the flemmynges sawe that, they sayd howe their lorde was to moche french, and yuell counsayled, and also sayd howe they wolde do no good to hym, syth he wolde nat beleue their counsayls: than they toke and putte hym in Cortoyse prisen, and sayd howe he shulde neuer depart, without he wolde folowe and beleue their counsayls also they sayd, that the erle his father, beleued and loued to moche the frenchemen, for if he wolde a beleued thē, he shuld haue ben the greattest lorde in all christendome, and recouered agayn Lyssle, Douay, and Bethwyn, and yet alyve.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 140.

It is for thee sufficient, to shewe a mynde beliefull and readie to obeie. All the residue shall be accomplishe and bryng to effecte, who is of power to do whatsoeuer his wyll is.
Udal. Luke, c. 1.

Thei disdeyne to haue the godly beliefulnesse of the heathē to be praised, and yet do they not all the while emende their owne wicked vnbelief.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

Let no man dispise thy youth, but be thou an example of the beleeuers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.—Id. 1 Tim. c. 4.

For if they do not believe these things, where is their faith! If they do believe them and sin on, and do as if there were no such thing to come to pass, where is their prudence, and what is their hopes, and where their charity!
Bp. Taylor, vol. i Ser. 1.

The first great instrument of changing our whole nature into the state of grace, flesh into the spirit, is a firm belief, and a perfect assent to, and hearty entertainment of the promises of the gospel.—Id. Ib. Ser. 11.

Then shall they seek to avail themselves of names,
Places and titles, and with these to joyn
Secular power, though feigning still to act
By spiritual, to themselves appropriating
The Spirit of God, promis'd alike and giv'n
To all beleevers.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

The thought that there are such riches of mercy in his heart and nature wonderfully addeth to the credibility and believablenesse (as I call it) of those promises and particular mercies.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. i. p. 88.

For the scripture-faith, is not a meere believing of historicall things, and upon inartificiall arguments, or testimonies only, but a certain higher and diviner power in the soul, that peculiarly correspondeth with the Deity
Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref.

If others in the same glass better see,
'Tis for themselves they look, but not for me:
For my salvation must its doom receive
Not from what others, but what I believe.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

But is there no way then whereby it is possible to perceive him? Yes surely: we may and ought to perceive him by that spiritual sense as I may call it, which he hath implanted in us, suitable to his own nature, even by a firm and steadfast belief in him, whereby we are as fully persuaded that he is, as that we are; and that he is wheresoever we are, as that we ourselves are there.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 105.

By tales like these is the envy raised by superior abilities every day gratified: when they are attacked, every one hopes to see them humbled; what is hoped is readily believed, and what is believed is confidently told.
Johnson. Life of Prior.

That there is satisfactory evidence that many professing to be original witnesses of the Christian miracles, passed their lives in labours, dangers, and sufferings, voluntarily undergone in attestation of the accounts which they delivered, and solely in consequence of their belief of those accounts; and that they also submitted, from the same motives, to new rules of conduct.—Paley. Evidences, Prop. I.

The true believer, on the contrary, has the most perfect conviction that he is constantly under the protection of an almighty and merciful God, in whom he lives, and moves, and has his being.—Porteus, vol i. Lect. 9.

BE-LIKE. } Belike in our older writers, and BELIKELY. } in vulgar speech at the present day, is used to denote—

It is likely, it is probable, it is credible; it may be; probably, perhaps.

In this season, the Bohemians (whiche belike had espied the vsurped auethoritie of the bishop of Rome) began to rebell againste hys see, which were falle into certain sectes of heresie.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 7.

Moreover he received fourscore milch kine to the pail, and neatheards to keep them, having need of cowes milke belike, to heal a disease that fell upon him.

North Plutarch, p 252.

I haue spoken before, and declared why I do vse it rather than any other; I haue laboured it, noted it, I am acquainted with it, and belike, I red it, before you knew whether there was any such booke or no.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 508.

That good earl [earl of Huntingdon] who well esteemed my father's service, having belikely heard some better words of me than I could deserve, made earnest enquiry after me, what were my courses, what my hopes.

Bp. Hall. Account of Himself.

Be that as it may, we find him, upon his return into England, employed in an expedition or two, by authority belike from the court; they being upon occasions of state.

Oldys. Life of Ralegh, p 19.

Being very poor, and belike wanting to buy fairer colours, [I. Bossam] wrought therefore for the most part in white and black.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 6.

BELIMED. Glued, fastened together, entangled, as with lime.

Seeing then that truth consisteth in the right ordering of names in our affirmations a man that seeketh precise truth, hath need to remember what every name he uses stands for, and to place it accordingly; or else he will find himself entangled in words, as a bird in lime-twigs, the more he struggles, the more belimed.—Hobbes. Leviathan, pt. i. c. 4.

BELIVE. } The imper. Be and the noun Life.
BLIVE. } Be there life, or liveliness: with life or liveliness; with activity, with spirit; quickly, instantly.

This noble erl with the Britones ageyn ys fou wente bilive,
And fagt, and slow faste.—R. Gloucester, p. 163.

And to and fro eke ride and gone as blive,
All day as thick as been flen from an hiue,
And euery wight haue liberty to bleue
Where as him list, the bet withouten leue.

Chaucer. Troil & Cres. b. iv.

They were ful glad to excusen hem ful blive
Of thing, the which they never agilt hir live.

Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5981.

——— Now let us riden blive
Fer I wol holden compagnie with thee.

Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7013.

Hob. God shield man, he should so ill haue thriue,
All for he did his devoire belive.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calender, p. 40.

Perdy, sir knight, saide then th' enchaunter blive,
That shall I shortly purchase to your hond;
For now the best and noblest knight alive
Prince Arthur is, that wonnes in faerie lond.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

My lorde, whan I came fyrst into this lande
To be your wedded wyfe,
The fyrst boone that I wolde aske,
Ye would graunt it me belyfe.—Adam Bell. Percy, vol. i.

BELL, v. } A. S. Bellan, to bellow; Ger.
BELL, n. } & Dut. Bellen, to bellow, and to BELFRY. } sound a bell. Spelman says, Pelvis, unde nostrum vernaculum bel.

To bell is to form the shape of, to grow in or into the form or shape of a bell.

To bear the bell, Mr. Nares explains, to win the prize at a race, where a bell was the usual prize, and he quotes the examples from Saltonstall, and Camden. Mr. Todd produces the quotation rom Riche, which, he thinks, countenances the opinion, that the expression is deduced from the sheep bearing the bell.

A belle to byggen of bras, other of brygt selver
And knytte it on a coler. for oure comune profit
And honge aboute the cattys haise.—Piers Ploughman, p. 9.

This Eolus anon vp stert,
And with his blacke clarioun,
He han to blasen out a soun
As loud as belleth wind in hell.

Chaucer. The House of Fame, b. iii.

Thise riotoures three, of which I tell,
Long erst or prime rong of any bell,
Were set hem in a taverne for to drinke:
And as they sat, they herd a belle clinke
Before a corpe, was carried to his grave.

Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,395.

There maie nothinge his tonge daunt,
That he ne clappeth as a belle,
Wherof if thou wolt that I telle
It is behouely for to here.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

But when in stogle fight he lost the bell,
How through his troupes he fled, there might you marke.

Fairfax. Tasso, b. xvii. § 69.

My prickear'd ewe, since thou dost beare the bell,
And all thy mates do follow at thy call.
Keepe still this launes.

R. Riche. Adventures of Simonides, (1584.)

But M. Hardinge for ease and expedition, hath diuised a shorter way, to teach the people by a beltrope. He turneth his backe vnto his bretheren, and speaketh but twoo woordes alowde Pater noster: and causeth the sanctus bel to play the parte of a deacon, to put the people in remembrance, that now they must pray.

Jewel. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 178.

Among the Romans it [a horse race] was an Olympick exercise, and the prize was a garland, but now they beare the bell away.—Saltonstall, Char. 23.

Here lyes the man whose horse did gaine,
The bell in race on balsbury Plaine.

Camden. Rem. Epitaphes.

The Italians are they, who in this art [fortification] have shewed themselves most skilful, as well in the precepts as practise thereof, and have carried away the bell from all other nations.—Hakewill. Apologie, p 258.

If the prayer be good, the commoner the better,
Prayer in the churches words, as well
As sense, of all prayers beare the bell.

Ch. Harvie. Walton's Angler, pt. I. c. 5.

While the Englishmen (he said) drank only ale, they were strong brawny able men, and could draw an arrow an ell long; but when they fell to wine and beer, they are found to be much impair'd in their strength and age:—so the ale bore away the bell among the doctors.

Howell. b. I. s. 2, Let. 21.

He [B. Jonson] was buried three days after in St Peter's church within the city of Westminster, commonly called the Abbey church, not among the poets, but at the west end near to the belfry, under the escutcheon of Rob de Ros.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

For my own part, when I am in town, for want of these opportunities, I exercise myself an hour every morning upon a dumb-bell that is placed in the corner of my room, and pleases me the more because it does every thing I require of it in the most profound silence.—Spectator, No. 115.

Lo! as the surplic'd train draw near
To this last mansion of mankind,
The slow sad bell, the sable bier,
In holy musings wrap the mind!

Mallet. Funeral Hymn.

With pride of heart the churchwarden surveys
High o'er the belfry, girt with birds and flow'rs,
His story wrote in capitals: "Twas I
That bought the fount; and I repaired the pews."

Smart. The Hop Garden, b. ii.

BELLE. } Fr. Belle, from the Lat. Bellus,
BELDAM. } is applied to the female, as beau
BELSIRE. } to the male. See BEAU.
BELLIBONE. } Beldam, Mr. Nares observes, is used in Spenser as belle dame, fair lady. It seems, then, to have been used as good dame, goody, grandam: then applied to any old woman; to an old witch or hag.

Bellibone, i. e. bonny belle, bonny lass. See BONNY.

Rygt so meny preestes. prechours and prelates
That ben entlaunched with bele pāroles. and whith bele clothes
And as lambes thei loken. and lyven as wolves.

Piers Ploughman, p. 278.

Than I munte me forth, the mynstre to knowen,
And awaytede a woon, wonderly well ybild.
With arches on euerich half, and belliche ycoruen
With crochetes on corneres, with knottes of gold.

Id. Crede.

Saw. ——— Why then on me,
Or any lean old beldam! Reverence once
Had wont to wait on age.

Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act iv. sc. 1.

——— The teeming earth
Is with a kinde of colick pincht and vext,
By the imprisoning of vnruly winde
Within her wombe which for enlargement striuing,
Shakes the old beldame earth, and tombles downe
Steeples, and mosse-growne towers

Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

——— Who this land in such estate maintain'd,
As his great belsire Brute from Albion's heirs it won.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

Per. I saw the bouncing Bellibone:
Will. Hey ho Hanibell,
Per. Tripping ouer the dale alone,
Will. She can trip it very well.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. August.

Say what strange motive, goddess! could compel
A well bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?
O say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?

Pope. The Rape of the Lock.

Skill'd in no other arts was she,
But dressing, patching, repartee;
And, just as humour rose or fell,
By turns a slattern or a belle.

Goldsmith. The Double Transformation.

But when to horrour his amazement rose,
A gentler strain the beldame wound to rehearse,
A tale of rural life, a tale of woes,
The orphan-babes, and guardian uncle fierce

Beattie The Minstrel, b. i.

BELLICOUS. } Lat. Bellum, Bellicum; It.
BELLIQUE. } Bellicoso, warlike. Of Bel-
BELLIGERENT. } lum, Vossius says, Ut a duis, (Gr. δις) venit bis; sic a duellum est bellum. Duellum vero dictum a duobus.

Bellicall is used by G. Douglas, and other Scottish writers.

Belligerent, bellum, gerens, carrying on, waging war.

Riot had the beginning, because that our men being much accustomed either in forraign wars in France, Scotland, or Ireland, or being overmuch exercised with civil wars, within the realme, (which is the fault that falleth ordinarily among bellicous nations,) whereby men of warre, captaines and souldiers become plent full.

Sir T. Smith. Commonwealth of England.

The bellique Cæsar, as Swetonius tells us, was noted for singularity in his apparrel, and did not content himself without adding something to his senators purple robe.

Peltham. Resolves, ii. 52.

Never mind, brother Toby, he would say, by God's blessing, we shall have another war break out again some of these days; and when it does, the belligerent powers, if they would hang themselves, cannot keep us out of play.

Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. vi. c. 31.

It was, therefore, an essential preliminary to the whole proceeding to fix whether the balance of power, the liberties and laws of the empire, and the treaties of different belligerent powers in past times, when they put an end to hostilities, were to be considered as the basis of our present negociation.—Burke. Letter on Regicide Peace.

BE'LLOW. } See BELL. To low, to be-
BE'LLOWER. } low. A. S. Hlow-an, hlowe-an.
BE'LLOWING, n. } To low, to make a lowed,
BE'LLOWS. } low'd or loud noise.

And after that cometh suggestion of the divel, this is to say, the divels bellows, with which he bloweth in man the fire of concupiscence.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The bull of bras, which gapeth wide,
It shulde seme, as though it were
A belowinge in a mans ere,
And not the crienge of a man.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

About the pile of faggots, sticks and hay,
The bellowes rais'd the newly kindled flame.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. ii.

They made such a noyse, that the walles of Poyters sounded with the ecchо thereof like a wood, in such sort that a man would haue thought that the hils had bellowed out to the valleis, and that the cloudes hade giuen foorth a most terrible thunder.—Stowe. Edw. III. an. 1357.

The Ambrons that had fled and escaped from the overthrow, did howl out all night with loud cries, which were nothing like mens lamentations and sighs, but rather like wild beasts bellowing and roaring. So that the bellowing of such a great multitude of beastly people, mingled together with threats and wailings, made the mountains thereabouts and the running river to rebound again of the sound, and ecchо of their cries marvellously.

North. Plutarch, p. 358.

Sruering from all the rest, and setting gone
Full fiftie of the violent bellowers,
Which, driuing through the sands, he did reuerse
(His births-craft strait remembring) all their houes.

Chapman. Hymn to Hermes.

Within the fethers they put a cole or sparke of fire, and then with a payre of smithes bellowes the nose whereof went through a payre of tongs, they blowed the cole and set it on a rekin, the fyre aforesaid then blessed the cole and set it on a smouldering fire within the fethers.—Holland. Livius, p 987.

This gentleman you must know, is always very exact and zealous in his devotion, which I believe nobody blames; but then he is accustom'd to roar and bellow so terribly loud in the responses, that he frightens even us of the congregation, who are daily us'd to him.—Tatler, No. 54.

This ingenious gentleman, out of compassion to those of a bad utterance, has plac'd his whole study in the new modelling the organs of voice; which art he has so far advanced as to be able even to make a good orator of a pair of bellows.—Id. No. 70.

To feign a real hot zeal for freedom's cause,
To bawl aloud for liberties and laws,
For patriot good to bellow all abroad,
Serves well the purposes of private fraud.
Churchill. The Conference.

[The tattern heron] has two kinds of notes: the one resembles, when it is disturbed; the other bellowing, which it commences in the spring and ends in autumn.
Pennant. Brit. Zoology.

BELLY, v. } Goth. Balgs; A. S. Balg,
BELLY, n. } Balg; Ger. and Dut. Balg;
BELLYFUL. } Lat. Bulga. See Balgeis in Junius (Gloss. Goth.) and Bulga in Vossius.

To belly out, is to bulge, to swell out, to be or make tumid; to puff out, to inflate, to stretch, to distend.

Belly is frequent in composition, prefixed to cheer, fare, timber, &c., among our elder writers.

Ruffelers & beggers faste aboute goden
Tyl hure bagge & hure bely. were bred ful yerammyd.
Piers Ploughman, p 3.

A great bellied monke wyth a scarlet face, whose paunche is well pampered and stuffed vp to the throte wyth all maner of delycates.—Bale. Apology, fol. 120.

What was excessive riotous bankettyng potte-companyon wise, and beastly surfeting more outragiously vsed, and the more shamefully, than now?
Udal. Prologue to Luke.

When thou comnest into thy neighbours vyneyarde, ye maist eate grapes thy belyful at thine owne pleasure but thou shalt put none in thy bagge.—Bible, 1551. Deut. c 23.

Yet take they falsely vpon them the honor of an apostles name, and make as though they were hyred into the vynearde of the lorde and that they are hys workemen, when they hinder his businesse, and vnder the pretence of the gospel seeke theyr belly fare.—Udal. 2 Corinth. c. 11.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all.—Shakes. K. Lear, Act III. sc. 1.

Those filthy gods, whose food is Sathan's hate,
Their lord in wrath shall cut away your meate,
And for your honey, furnish you with gall.
Sterling. Doomes-day, 2d houre.

O race of Cyprianitans, senseless of divine doctrine, and conversant only of loaves and belly-cheer!
Martin. Animadversions upon the Rem. Defen.

What will be due to these beastly belly-slaves, which, void of all fear, grace or vertuous behaviour, not once, but continually day and night, give themselues wholy to bibbing, and swilling!
Homily against Gluttonie and Drunkennesse

——A friendly wind,
Blew the fair, of human race divine,
Pandion sent—to ply the struggling oar
Till Athens' coast remained, the fresh'ning gale sniffed
Each bellying canvas.—Fenton. Hom. Odys. b xi.

And though knights-errant, as some think,
Of old did neither eat nor drink,
Because when thorough deserts vast,
And regions desolate, they past
Where belly timber above ground,
Or under was not to be found,
Unless they gnaw'd, there's no one word
Of their provision on record.—Hudibras, pt i c 1.

With pride like this the emulating mob
Strove for the mastery—who, last may fill
The belly tun, and clean'st cull the hogs.
Smart. The Hop Garden, b ii.

Such who like true churchwardens eat,
Because the parish pays the treat,
Mind of their Actual service,
Because or over-pack the pew?
Lloyd. Charity. A Fragment

BE-LOCK. A. S. Be-lucan; Dut. Be-luycken. See BE-.
To shut, to close; to shut up, to block up.

And vnder that thei maden lowe
A table riche for the nones
Of marbie and eke of Jaspre stones
Wherin that Iphis was beloken.—Gower. Con. A. b iv

And after of his owne choys
He toke his death vpon the crovs,
And howe in grave he was beloke,
And howe that he hath hethe broke,
And toke hem out, that were hym lefe.—Id. Ib. b ii.

Mar. My husband buls me, now I will vnmaske
This is that face, thou cruell Angelo
Which once thou swor'st, was worth the looking on
This is the hand, which with a vow'd contract
Was fast belocke in thine
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

BE-LONG. } Be and Long, to lengthen, to
BELONGING, n. } stretch out, to extend, to reach, to attain to. A. S. Langian; Ger. Langen, Belangen, prolongare, pervenire, attingere; Dut. Langhen.

To reach, to attain, to pertain, to appertain; to be in, or become within, the reach, the grasp; into the power, or possession; to be or become the property of.

Muse not to muche ther on quath Faith tyl thow more knowe
Ac loke thow leyve hit leelly, al thy lyf tyme
That thre by longeth to on lorde.—Piers Ploughman, p 315.

Thus hath this robbour, and this homicide,
That many a man made to wepe and pleine,
Swiche guerdon, as belongeth unto Pride.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 11 547

As yf a iudge would swere me generally in a courte to make trewe answwer to suche thynges as shoulde be asked of me, and after mine othe geuen, he would ask me certaine questions of maters nothing belonging to him.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 218.

The meeter for his purpose seemed Tyssaphernes, a man bothe of more experience and actiuity then the other, and also better furnished with the souldioures that belonged sometime to king Cyrus.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 34.

There is a kinde of character in thy life,
That to th' observer, doth thy history
Fully vnfold. thy selfe, and thy belongings
Are not thine owne so proper, as to waste
Thy selfe vpon thy vertues; they on thee.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 1.

These I cannot liken better than to the Borderers between two countries, who live in the marches and confines of two powerful kingdoms, both which have a great influence upon them, so that it is hard to say whose subjects they are, and to which Prince they belong.—Tillotson, vol. I. Ser. 15.

The Roman law adjudged, that if one man wrote any thing, on the paper or parchment of another, the writing should belong to the owner of the blank material.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b ii c 26.

BE-LOVED. To love, is—
To lift or take, to choose, to select, to prefer; to favour, to cherish, to make much of.

Thus in debt he liveth, and hath don vore,
Beloved and drad, thurgh favour of fortune,
Both of his lordes, and of his commune
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v 7544

And netheles by daies olde,
Whan that the bokes weren leuer,
Wryting was beloued euer
Of them, that, weren vertuous.—Gower. Con. A. Prologue.

We are more sottish than the Trojans, if we retain our Helena, any one beloved lust, a painted devil, any sugar'd temptation, with (not the hazard, but) the certainty of having such horrid miseries, such invaluable losses.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

Dare then, thou much belov'd by smiling fate,
For Anna's sake, and in her name be great:
Go forth, and be to distant nations known
My future favourite, and my darling son.
Prior. A Letter to M. B. Drapercau.

Were kingship as true treasure as it seems,
Sterling, and worthy of a wise man's wish,
I would not be a king to be belov'd
Causeless, and daub'd with undiscerning praise.
Cowper. Task, b v

BE-LOW. } Low, or inferior, under, nether,
BE-LOWT. } beneath.
Lowt is lowed, low'd, low't. To belowt; to treat as a lowt.

For who can brook, to see a painted crowe
Singing aloft, when turtles mourn belowe.
Gascoigne. A Remembraunce, &c.

Againe there is not that so ill
Bylowe the lampe of Phœbus light.
But man may better if he will
Applie his wit to make it right.
Turbervile. All Things as they are used.

For as he is not moderate nor tolerable, who calleth the upper superfices onely and cope of the heaven, aow, that is to say, aoft, or superior; and all the rest, aorw, that is to say, beneath; so he who termeth the earth, or rather the centre of it onely aorw, that is to say, below or inferior, is not to be endured.—Holland. Plutarch, p 950.

Sieur Gaurlard, who when he heard a gentleman report that he was at a supper, where they had not onely good company and good cheare, but also sundry epigrammes, and fine anagrammes, he returning home, rated and berayled his cooke as an ignorant scullion that never dressed or scrued vp to him, either epigrammes or anagrammes.
Camden. Remains. Anagrams

All expressions, did I say? yea, and conceptions too, for his nature is so pure, his goodness so great, his knowledge so transcendent, his power so boundless, his wisdom, justice and mercy so mysterious, his glory so incomprehensive, and all his perfections so high, so infinitely high, that our biggest conceptions of him are still infinitely below him.
Beveridge, vol i. Ser 13

All truth is from the sempiternal source
Of light divine. But Egypt, Greece, and Rome,
Drew from the stream below. More favour'd, we Drink, when we choose it, at the fountain head
Cowper. Task, b ii

BEL-SWAGGER. Perhaps, no more than a fine, a brave, a ruggerer, a braggart, a bully.

Let Mims be angry at their S*bel swagger*, and we pass on the heat on't and be beaten, beaten abominably
Beaum & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act iii sc 1

Gom. Indeed you are a charitable belswagger: my wife cry'd out, fire, fire, and you brought out your chaldron buckets, and cared for engines to play against it.
Dryden. The Spanish Fryar, Act v

BELT, v. } A. S. Belt; Ger. and Sw. Belt,
BELT, n. } It. and Sp. Balteo; Lat. Balteus, "Balteum, quod cingulum e corio habebant bullatum, bulteum dictum," (Varro.) A girdle of leather studded with bosses was called a belt.
To gird; to surround, to inclose.

Ay by his belt he bare a long pavade,
And of a sword ful trenchant was the blade
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v 3

That goodly belt was Cestus hight by name,
And as her life by her esteemed deare
No wonder then, if that to winne the same
So many ladies sought, as shall appeare,
For, peerelesse she was thought, that did it beare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iv c

These ramparts seem intended to have had some effect even on the eye. Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and belting the hills far and wide with white, naire expectation, if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facing, they must have been visible at a vast distance
Warton. History of Kidlington, p 7

On an enormous shield, which is belted to his body, is a rude figure of a lion passant guardant, and crowned. He is supposed to be one of the Gilbert de Gants, the antient owners.—Pennant. Journey from Chester.

——What need of these
For gamesters, jockeys, brothelers impure,
Spendthrifts, and booted sportsmen, oft'ner seen,
With belted waist and pointers at their heels
Than in the bounds of duty?—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BE-LUTED. Covered with mud (lutum).

When he [Obadiah] did stop his beast, 'twas done with such an explosion of mud, that Obadiah had better have been a league off: never was a lord's coach so beluted.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. ii c 9

BEL-WEATHER. Belled weather. A weather, or wether, with a bell to his neck. See WETHER.

Much like a well grown bel-weather, or felt'red ram he shewes,
That walkes before a wealthy flocke of faire white-fleeced ewes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

He was begot when the sign was in Taurus, for a' roars like a bull, but is indeed a bell-weather.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act. v. sc. 1.

So that he [Lenthall] that had been so long the bel-weather in the House of Commons, was thought fit for his compliance and money to be one of the other House.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

BE-MAD. To make mad, to madden; to deprive of reason or sound sense.

If on my credit you dare build so far
To make you speed to Dover, you shall find
Some that will thank you, making just report,
Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow
The king had cause to plain.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii sc 1

BE-MA'NGLE. To hack or maim; to hew, to mutilate, to tear, to lacerate.

For those bemangled limbs which scatter'd be
About the picture's verge, the ruins are
Of seav'n unloved lovely babes, which she
Fear'd not with her remorseless claws to tear.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 2. s. 71

But when they had opened Cæsar's testament, and found a liberall legacy of money bequeathed unto every citizen of Rome, and that they saw his body (which was brought into the market place) all bemangled with gashes of swords, then there was no order to keep the multitude, and common people quiet, but they plucked up forms, tables, and stools, and laid them all about the body, and setting them afire, burnt the corps.—North. Plutarch, p. 615.

BE-MA'RTYR. To slay, to murther, as martyrs, as witnesses of the truth;—of their own faith or belief.

See here how he bemartyreth such who as yet did survive; but in so servile a condition (condemned to the mines) that they were almost hopelesse, without miracle, to be released.
Fuller. General Worthies, vol. i.

BE-MASK. To put on, to wear a mask, a something to disguise, cover or conceal.

To all those compliments, the doleful lady answered nothing; and although Dorotea made her again larger offers of her service, yet stood she ever silent until the bemasked gentleman (whom the lackey said, the rest did obey) came over.—Shelton. Don Quixote, b. i. c. 9.

BE-MAUL. To mill, to grind, to bruise, to beat heavily.

So the poor soul [Sancho] was sore bruised and bemauled, and scarce imagined what had happened to him.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 22.

Others, who knew nothing of musical expression, and merely lent their ears to the plain import of the word, imagined that Phutatorius, who was somewhat of a choleric spirit, was just going to snatch the cudgels out of Didius's hands, in order to bemaul Yorick to some purpose.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iv. c. 27.

BE-MAZE. To be or put out of the right way; to confuse, to perplex, to stupify. See AMAZE.

——— Thy lamp, mysterious word!
Which whoso sees, no longer wanders lost,
With intellects bemaz'd in endless doubt,
But runs the road of wisdom.—Cowper. Task, b. v.

BE-ME'RCIED. A word formed for the occasion, and explained in the quotation.

And when he [Paul] enters upon this narrative of conversion, he at first useth a word somewhat uncouth, whereby to express the mercy of it; a word whereof in the English tongue we cannot give the full and proper force in one word (which the Greek it self is), I was bemercied (if we may so speak), misericordia donatus, endowed with mercy, encompassed with mercy.
Goodwin. Of Justifying Faith, pt. i. b. iii. c. 2.

BE-METE. To mete, to measure.

Away thou ragge, thou quantitie, thou remnant,
Or I shall so be-mete thee with thy yard,
As thou shalt thinke on prating whilst thou liu'st:
I tell thee I, that thou hast marr'd her gowne.
Shakespeare. Tam. of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 3.

BE-MI'NGLE. To mingle, to mix.

This blade in bloodie hand, which I do beare,
And all this gore bemingled with this slew,
In witnesse I the dreadfull monster slew.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 106.

BE-MIRE. To cover with mire, mud, or dirt.

Those few which remained, laid his body (basely God wot, but as necessity suffered) into a collier's cart, which drawne with one silly leane beast, through a very foule and filthy way, the cart broke, and there lay the spectacle of worldly glory, both pitifully goared, and filthy bemired.
Speed. W. Rufus. an. 1096.

Fair maidens all, attend the muse,
Who now the wandering pair pursues:
Away they rode in homely sort,
Their journey long, their money short;
The loving couple well bemir'd:
The horse and both the riders tir'd.
Swift. The Progress of Love.

His active will-o'the-wisp may be gone nobody can guess where, whilst he leaves us bemired and benighted in the bog.
Burke. On Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

BE-MIST. To overcloud, to darken, to dim.

Admitting Christianity had not by our Saviour and his apostles been confirmed by miracles, yet it would in time have been taken up, and entertained and rooted in men's hearts for the very honesty and integrity of it: yet, by the but meanly wise and common ductions of bemisted nature, it would have been no very powerful oratory, to persuade the taking up of our cross to follow him.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 66.

BE-MOAN. } To bewail, to lament, to de-
BEMO'ANING. } plore; to utter grief or lamentation.

Verst the castel of Notingham vpe is brother he nom,
& suththe is other londes, deseritede him al clene,
& alle that with him hulde, (hii nere nogt to bi mene.)
R. Gloucester, p. 490.

Then shalt thou stoupe, and lay to ere
If they within aslepe be
I mean all saue thy lady fre
Whome waking if thou maist aspie
Go put thy selfe in ieopardie
To aske grace, and the bimene
That she may wete without wene
That thou night no rest hast had
So sore for herr thou were bestad.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And he his hors head aside
The torned, and to hir he rode,
And there he houed, and abode,
To wit what she wolde mene
And she began him to bemene.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

So it fortuned that in this mean season one of the duke of Lancaster's great barons died, a right valyant man, called the lorde Fitzwater; he was greatly bemoaned but against dethe none may striue.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 105.

Whereby I dare with humble bemonynge,
By thy goodnesa, this thynge of thee requyre;
Chastyce me not for my deseruing
According to thy iuste conceaued yre.—Wyatt. Psalme 6.

When a poor spirited creature that dyed at the same time for his crimes bemoaned himself unmanfully, he rebuked him with this question, Is it no consolation to such a man as thou art to dye with Phocion?—Spectator, No. 133.

BE-MOCK. To deride, to scoff at; to jeer or gibe, to ape or imitate, scoffingly, jestingly, in derison or contempt.

——— You fooles, I and my fellowes
Are ministers of fate, the elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud windes, or with bemockt-at-stabs
Kill the still closing waters, as diminish
One dowle that's in my plumbe.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 3.

Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.
Sicin. Nay, but his taunts.
Bru. Being mou'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.
Sicin. Bemocke the modest moone.
Id. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 1

BE-MOIL. Fr. "Mouiller, to wet, moisten, soak or steep in moisture," (Cotgrave.)

Thou shouldst have heard in how miery a place, how she was bemoil'd, how hee left her with the horse vpon her.
Shakespeare. Tam. of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 1.

BE-MO'NSTER. Monster—any thing enormous, prodigious, frightful.

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd thing, for shame,
Be-monster not thy feature.
Shakespeare. King Lear, Act iv. sc. 2.

BE-MOURN. To mourn, to grieve for, to lament.

And there suede him myche puple: and wymmen that weliden and bemorneden him.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 23.

BE-MU'FFLED. Wrapt; covered, as with a muff, or muffler.

See, I beseech you, how he is cloaked up with sermons, prayers, and sacraments: and so bemuffled with the externals of religion, that he has not a hand to spare for a worldly purpose.—Sterne, Ser. 17.

BE-MUSE. To bemuse, in wine, or beer; to indulge the musings; the thoughts or meditations, which wine or beer produces. See AMUSE.

Wine's generous spirit makes the coward brave,
Gives ease to kings, and freedom to the slave.
Bemused in wine the bard his duns forgets,
And drinks serene oblivion to his debts.
Fawkes. Imitation of Horace, b. i. Ep. 5.

BE-NA'MED. Called, denominated.

And therefore he a courtier was be-named,
And as a courtier was with chear received,
(For they have tongues to make a poor man blamed,
If he to them his duty misconceived.)
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

BENCH, v. } See BANK. Wachter says
BENCH, n. } Bunc—
BE'NCHER. }

A hill, mound, heap, and any eminent or rising place. It is transferred, he adds, to—

All eminent or rising places for sitting or lying; (for any purpose.)

So that the erl of Wareine slou, atte verste touche,
Biuore the justises atte benche, sir Alein de la Souche.
R. Gloucester, p. 570.

For giftes som justise lete the lowe go doun,
& som ōn other wise did wrong to the croun.
The first justise in benk Sir Thomas of Weland,
For falshed & for wrenk he forsuore the land.
R. Brunne, p. 246.

An halle for an hygh kynge an houshold to holden,
With brode bordes abouten, ybenched wel clene.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Thomas, quod he, God yelde it you, ful oft
Have I upon this benche faren ful wele,
Here have I eten many a mery mele,
And fro the benche he drove away the cat.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7354.

I found a delectable place,
That was beset with trees young and olde,
Whose names here for me shall not be tolde,
Amidde of which stoode an herber grene,
That benched was with coloure new and clean.
Id. The Blacke Knight.

Upon the benche sittende on high
With Auarice Vsure I sighe.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

If the pillers be of siluer, and the benches of gold, and though the benchers be kings & continue a thousand yeares, and rule into the entrailes of the earth, yet they can finde no steadfast rocke nor mountaine, wherein to close goods of their predecessors, and their estates perpetuall.
Golden Boke, Let. 7.

Fast at her side clung naked Loue,
A louely boy in deede,
And Vulcan, benched with the gods,
His wife did thus proceede.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi.

He [Lucineus Mutianus] and eighteen more persons of his companie, used to dine and sup within the hollownesse of that tree where the very leaves yeelded of their own sufficient bed and bench roume to rest and repose themselves.—Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 1.

He [Selden] seldom or never appeared publicly at the bar, (tho' a bencher) but gave sometimes chamber-counsel, and was good at conveyance.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

BEND, v. } A.S. Bendan; Fr. Bender or BEND, n. } Bander.
BE'NDER. }
BE'NDING, n. }
BENT. }

To move out of a right or straight line, to bow, to crook, to curve; to turn, (sc. out of a direct course, to a particular end,) to incline. And thus the noun is applied to—

The inclination, the disposition of the mind; the course, direction, determination of the thoughts, studies, pursuits, passions.

For bent, as applied by Chaucer and Dryden, to the bending, curvature, declination, declivity of land, see ARMIPOTENT.

The maister of the messageres (Imbred was ye name)
Bend ye bowe & schette a non to Corineus to gronde.
R. Gloucester, p. 16.

Stonde he nevere so styfliche, thorgh sterynge of the bote
He bendeth and boweth, the body is vnstable
Ac gut he is saf and sounde.—Piers Ploukman, p. 167.

The heuen lyche vnto a bowe,
She bende, and she cam downe lowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But much more prayse to Gascoign's penne is due,
Whose learned hande doth here to thee present,
A posie full of hearbes, and flowers newe,
To please all braynes, to wit or learning bent.
T. B. In Prayse of Gascoigne's Posies.

Under the bent of her brows lustly pight,
As diamondes or saphires at the least
Her glistring lights the darkness of the night.
Vncertaine Auctors. Description. &c. of his Loue.

Ye noble princes, that protect and saue,
The pilgrime Muses, and their ships defend
From rocke of ignorance, and errors waue,
Your gracious eies vpon this labour bend:
To you these tales of loue and conquests braue
I dedicate.—Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. i. s. 4.

With that she rose, like nimble roe,
The tender grass scarce bending,
And left me there perplex'd with fear
At this her sonnets ending.
Dabridgecourt Belchier. Ellis, vol. iii.

O thou, who sweetly bendst my stubborne will,
Who sendst thy stripes to teach, and not to kill:
Thy chearefull face from me no longer hide,
Withdraw these clouds, the scourges of my pride.
Beaumont. On Desolation.

Round stones driven otherwhiles from out of the bulwarkes, brake the joynts of their turrets, and overthrew both the baliists and their benders so headlong, that some without wound-hurts; others, crushed with huge and heavie weights, perished.—Holland Ammianus, p. 132.

There with they gan both furious and fell,
To thunder blowes, and fiercely to assaile;
Each other bent his enemy to quell,
That with their force they peare't both plate and maile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

His speare a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near two inches long
The pile was of a horsefly's tongue,
Whose sharpness naught revers'd.
Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

With Flamoke I and other of our bent,
As traytours of Tiburne our iudgement did obay.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 457.

Barclay affirms that he was an eye-witness, how one of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick And yet these bows being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others.
Wilkins. On Mechanical Powers, c. 18.

Her horrid front deep-trenching wrinkles trace,
Lean sharpening looks deform her livid face,
Bent lie the brows, and at the bend below,
With fire and blood two wandring eye balls glow.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry. Jonah.

She had also contrived another puppet, which by the help of several little springs to be wound up within it, could move all its limbs, and that she had sent over to her correspondent in Paris, to be taught the various leanings and bendings of the head, the risings of the bosome
Spectator, No. 277.

But these plain characters we rarely find:
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. i.

The duty takes the farther and surer hold of us, by the means of our will, and that strong bent towards gratitude which the author of our nature hath implanted in it.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

With fourscore years grey Natho bends,
A burden to himself and friends;
And with impatience seems to wait
The friendly hand of ling'ring fate.
Cotton. Visions on Death.

Where'er a flat vacuity is seen,
There let some shadowing bending intervene,
Above, below, to lead its varied line,
As best may teach the distant folds to join.
Mason. Tr. Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting

Wherever it [the lawn] winds, and freely must it wind,
Shelt'ring, at ev'ry bend, thick-blossom'd tufts
Crown their interwoven tendrils.
Id. The English Garden, b. ii.

It is his [the legislator's] best policy to comply with the common bent of mankind, and give it all the improvements of which it is susceptible.—Hume. Essays. Of Commerce

BENDE. Band, (qv.)

One day on a playne there met with hym Sir William Stanley, Sir Thomas of Borough, and dyuers other of his frendes, with such a great bend of men, that neither his keepers would, nor once durst moue him to retorne to prysou again.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 8.

BE-NEATH. A. S. Beneoth, Beneothan; Dut. Beneden. The same as Below, (qv.) It is the imperative be compounded with the noun neath. (See Tooke.) Nether and nethermost, i. e. lower and lowermost, still continue in common use. See Nether.

Doth out this water, quoth Merlyn, & wen it is a weye,
Ye schal be neothe get y fynd holwe stones tweye,
And in eyther a dragon ther inne slepe faste.
R. Gloucester, p 131.

Ther an batayle at Elendone hil smyte myd her ost.
The kyng Iormulf was there bynethe, & bynome al ys host
Id. p. 258.

Wha groweth this frut in thre degrees, for a good skyle he seide,
Her by neothe ich may nyme.—Piers Ploukman, p 308.

And he seide to hem, ye ben of beneethe, I am of aboue: ye ben of this world, I am not of this world
Wiclif. Jon, c. 8.

And he saide vnto them: ye are from beneth, I am from aboue. Ye are of this worlde, I am not of this worlde
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Alein answered: John, and wolt thou swa?
Then wol I be beneithe by my croun.
And see how that the mele falles adoun
In til the trogh that shall be my disport.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v 4058.

This aier in periferis three
Deuided is of such degree:
Beneth is one, and one a midde,
To whiche aboue is the thridde.—Gower Con. A b vii

Beneath his feete pale Enuie bites her chaine,
And snaky Discord whets her sting in vaine.
Sir J. Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair urn we trust,
And, sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust:
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.
Pope. Epitaph on Mr. Rowe.

Beneath no high, historic stone,
Tho' nobly born, is Owen laid,
Stretch'd on the green wood's lap alone,
He sleeps beneath the waving shade.
Langhorn. Owen of Carron.

BE'NEDICT.
Benedi'ction.
Benedi'ctionary.
} Lat. Bene-dicere, Benedictum. To speak well of. Fr. Bénédiction; It. Benedittione; Sp. Benedicion. As now applied, Benediction is—

A blessing, a wishing of all good to; an utterance or expression of good wishes, grace or favour.

Then shall they for good skil be called right Israelit'is, when with the light of fayth they shal begyn to see that Christ is both God and the sonne of God, and through theyr strength in fayth, more then vpon confidence in werkes, wrest out with strong hande the benediction of God.
Udal. St. Paul to the Romaines, c. 11.

The xiiii. day of January began the procession on the Sundayes about the churche, with the mair and the aldermen in their clokes, and the prechour takinge his benediction in the middes of the churche, according to olde custome
Fabyan. Marie, an 1554

And it is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make rubarb, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purgers as those that are not, without some malignity.—Bacon. Natural History, s. 10

How vaine are all outward helps without the influence of God's spirit? and that spirit breathes where he listeth good education raiseth great hopes, but the proofe of them is in the divine benediction.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Manasseh.

Dr. Ridley observes, there is not the least mention of any saint whose name corresponds with this, either in the Roman Calendar, the service in Usum Sarum, or in the benedictionary of Bishop Athelwold.
Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act iv. sc 1 Note.

I have heard say, the present Pope never passes through the people, who always kneel in crowds and ask his benediction, but the tears are seen to flow from his eyes.
Tatler, No. 68.

When Lord and Lady Valentia came to see his Lordship, he gave them this solemn benediction, and said, 'Be good, be virtuous, my Lord; you must come to this.'
Johnson. Life of Littleton.

BENEFA'CTION.
Benefa'ctor.
Benefa'ctress.
} Lat. Bene-facere, Benefactum; to do well, to do good, to do a service. See Benefice.

A doing of a service, a favour, a good office; a bestowing of a charitable donation. Also applied, to the service, favour, good office done; the charitable donation bestowed.

Nay it is not inough for thee to loue thy benefactours onely, as monkes and friers do. But lift up thine eyes vnto thy heauely father, and as thy father doth, so doe thou loue all thy father's children.—Tyndall. Workes, p 216.

Polidore sayth, that when he had quieted the realme, and vanquished his enemies, he became a great benefactor vnto religious houses, but specially vnto the Abbey of Abindon.
Grafton. Eldred, an. 1.

We are taught by the law of nature that he which receiveth a benefit oweth to his benefactor, honour, faith, and service according to the proportion of the benefit received.
Spelman. On Tythes, Introd.

After the proclamation made, all the common people straight threw down their weapons and targets at their feet, to clap their hands with great shouts of joy; praying him [Demetrius] to land; and calling him aloud their saviour and benefactor.—North. Plutarch, p. 735.

Here idle and useless, (and therefore necessitous) persons are taught the best lessons, labour; inured to it, and made acquainted with it; and then sent out with such a stock of industry, as will do them more real service than any other kind of benefaction, if they will but make use of it, and improve it.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 2

A benefactor is not bound to comply with the demands of such as ask unmerited favours, though conscious that he himself might be apt to make as extravagant requests, were it his turn to be the object of another man's beneficence
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 9.

A man of true generosity will study in what manner to render his benefaction most advantageous, rather than how he may bestow it with least expense.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vii. Let. 18

In the parable of the good Samaritan, the very point of the story is, that the person relieved by him, was the national and religious enemy of his benefactor
Paley. Evidences, pt. ii. c. 2

But if thy sorrows are thy own, unmix'd
With my misfortunes, let assiduous zeal,
Let tenderest service of my grateful hand,
Strive to relieve the burthens which oppress
My benefactress. Glover. The Athenaid, b. viii.

BENE'FICENCE.
Bene'ficent.
Bene'ficently.
Be'neffice.
Be'nefficed.
Be'nefficeless.
Benefi'cial, n.
Benefi'cial, adj.
Benefi'cially.
Benefi'cialness.
Benefi'ciary, adj. & n.
Benefi'ciency.
} Fr. Bénéficence; It. Beneficenza; Sp. Beneficencia; Lat. Bene facere, Beneficus, Benefacientia, Beneficentia. Benefice, Beneficium. Fr. Bénéfice; It. Beneficio; Sp. Beneficio; as in Wiclif, (see Benefit.)

Any benefit or service.

Benefice, in feudal times, was applied to the gratuitous donations of estates (in beneficium, id est, usufructum); to things given for the benefit of the church (in beneficium ecclesiæ). The applications of Benevolence, Beneficence, and Benefit, are not badly distinguished by Sir T. Elyot. See Benevolence.

Beneficence is benevolence (i. e. good will, kind wishes) "in operation or endeavour." It is the doing of, or the endeavour to do, an act of goodness, of kindness; to do a favour, an advantage, a service.

And perchase gow provenders, wile goure pans lasteth
And bigge gow benefices. Piers Ploukman, p. 39.

Pul thredbare was his overest courtepy,
For he hadde geten him yet no benefice,
Ne was nought worldly to have an office.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale. Prol v 202

The strong Coffre hath all deuored
Under the kepe of auerice
The tresour of the benefice,
Whereof the poure shulden clothe.
Gower. Con. A. Prologue

All maner persons of holy churche obedient to vs and benefited in the realme of Fraunce and places subiect to our father that shall swere to keep this presēte accord, shall enjoye peaceably their benefices of holy churche in places next abouesaid.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 8.

For like as the lodestone draweth vnto it yron, so dothe benefycence & well doing allure all men vnto her.
Udal. Mark, c. 5.

And that vertue [benevolence] if it be in operation, or (as I mought saye) endeuour, is called than beneficence: and the dede (vulgarly named a good tourne) maye be called a benefytte.—Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

Some olde men fynde nature so beneficiall vnto theym, that their stomakes and liuers are more stronge to dygeste, than the sayde yonge men.—Id. Castle of Health, b. ii. c. 26.

And of the priest eftsoones gan to enquire,
How to a benefice he might aspire.
Marie there (said the Priest) is art indeede.
Much good deepe learning one therout may reed,
For, that the ground-worke is, and end of all,
How to obtaine a beneficiall.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

The mayre called ye cōmons to the Guyldhalle, and shewed to them the beneuolence of the lordes, and wylled them ye euery officer for his office, to deuise suche thynges as might be benyfycyall for the cytie.
Fabyan. Hen. III. an. 1262.

Deliuer it with suche a mynde, that in case he repaye it not, thou canst bee contente he haue it of thy free gyfte, and not of loue. Let as well your loue as your beneficialnesse be bothe franke & free.—Udal. Luke, c. 6.

That competency of means which our beneficeless prelatians prate of.—Selden. Mir. of Antichrist, p. 190.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable unto us upon an account of their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness.
Hale. Origination of Mankind, p. 8.

Beneficiary services were those, which were done by the middling or lesser Thanes to the King, and the greater Thanes either militarily in war, or ministerially in peace.

Spelman. On Feudes & Tenures, c. 25.

The fathers and children, the benefactors and the beneficiary shall knit the wreath, and bind each other in the eternal inclosures and circlings of immortality.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 13.

We long'd for the assembling of this parliament, as gladly as your benefactures the priests came up to answer the complaints and out-cries of all the shires.

Milton. Animad. upon Remon. Defence.

In 1524 he [Richard Croke] commenced D. of D. at Cambridge, being then, or about that time, tutor to the King's natural son the Duke of Richmond then with him at King's College, and benefic'ed, if not dignified in the church.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. Church, vol. i. p. 105.

They [the ungrateful] discourage the inclinations of noble minds, and make beneficency cool unto acts of obligation, whereby the grateful world should subsist and have their consolation.—Brown. Chr. Mor. vol. ii. p. 17.

Contrary to common account he esteemed every advantage of being useful and serviceable to God and men a rich benefice, and those his best patrons and benefactors, not who did him good, but who gave him the opportunity and means of doing it.—Tillotson. Ded. to Ser. 23.

All mortals once beneficently great,
(As fame reports) and raised in heavenly state;
Yet, sharing labours, still they shunn'd repose,
To shed the blessings down by which they rose.

Parnell. On Queen Anne's Peace.

God also by his order of things designs, that a charitable entercourse should be maintained among men, mutually pleasant and beneficial; the rich kindly obliging the poor, and the poor gratefully serving the rich.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

Where the church benefices are all nearly equal, none of them can be very great, and this mediocrity of benefice, though it may no doubt be carried too far, has, however, some very agreeable effects.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

You displease all the clergy of England now actually in office for the chance of obliging a score or two, perhaps, of gentlemen, who are, or want to be, benefic'ed ecclesiasticks.

Burke. Speech on the Acts of Uniformity.

Whose work is without labour; whose designs
No flaw deforms, no difficulty thwarts;
And whose beneficence no charge exhausts.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

The number of indigent persons being also greatly increased, by withdrawing the alms of the monasteries, a plan was formed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, more humane and beneficial than even feeding and clothing of millions, by affording them the means (with proper industry) to feed and clothe themselves.—Blackstone. Com. b. iv. c. 33.

The true weakness and opprobrium of our best general constitutions is, that they cannot provide beneficently for every particular case, and thus fill, adequately to their intentions, the circle of universal justice.

Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

BE'NEFIT, v. } See BENEFICENCE, and the BE'NEFIT, n. } citation there from Sir Thomas Elyot. To Benefit is—

To do well for, good to; to serve, to advantage; to do a service, or advantage; to do any thing useful, profitable.

If eny man doth me a bynfet, oth' helpeth me at nede
Ich am unkynde ageyns courteseye.

Piers Ploughman, p. 112.

And they that han feithful lordis dispise hem not for thei ben britheren, but more serue thei for thei ben feithful and loued which ben partneris of benefice.—Wiclif. Tymo. c. 6.

So that they whyche haue beleuynge masters, dispise thē not because they are bretheren: but so muche the rather do seruice, for as much as they are beleuing and beloued, and partakers of the benefite.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whan Jupiter this hurt hath seue,
Another benefite there agene
He yafe. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Ye haue marueylously and worthily hurt your selues, and graciously prouided except the Kings goodnesse be more vnto you, than your owne desertes can claime that ye be not so much worthie as to be benefited in anye kinde, as ye be worthie to lose that ye haue on euerie side.

Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The Norman was so farre as yet from benefiting eyther the Englishe nation, or such as bordred on them, that he nowe played the open tyraunt, and was hated of them all.

Grafton. William Conquerour, an. 4.

This noble King Cyrus was wont to say, that they who would not do good unto themselves, were constrained to benefit others.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 332.

'Tis, perhaps, somewhat dangerous to affix a determinate value upon any of God's benefits; (for to value them seems to undervalue them, they being really inestimable;) what then is it to extenuate, to vilifie, to despise the greatest!

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

He now therefore found that such friends as benefits had gathered round him, were little estimable: he now found that a man's own heart must be ever given to gain that of another.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield.

BE-NE'GROE. To blacken. See NEGROE.

And if at the coming and appearance of the humanity of Christ, the sun shall be benegroed in darkness, as a petty light at the coming of a greater; how if you cast an eye upon the life of God!—Hewyt. Sermons, (1658,) p. 79.

BE-NEMPT, a word of Spenser's; also used by Thomson in imitation of Spenser. Renamed. Chaucer uses Nempne. See BENAMED, and NEMPNE.

If thy rymes be round and rufull been
As those that did thy Rosamunde complaine,
Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gaine.
Then kid or cosset, which I thee benempt.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. November.

"I will," he cry'd, "so help me God! destroy
That villain, Archimage."—His page then straight
He to him called, a fiery-footed boy,
Benempt dispatch.—Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

BE-NET. To catch, inclose, cover, as with a net; to entangle, to ensnare.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villaines,
Ere I could make a prologue to my brawles,
They had begun the play.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

BENE'VOLENCE. } Fr. Bénévole, Bénévolence; It. Bene-volo, Bene-volencia; Sp. Benevolére, Benevoglicnte, Benevoglienza; Lat. Benevolentia, from Bene and volo, volens, volentia; Gr. Βουλεύ, to will. See the quotation from Cogan. Puller writes benevolous for benevolent.
BENE'VOLENT.
BENE'VOLENTLY.
BENE'VOLOUS.

Good will; a will or wish for good, for the good, or happiness of others; of our kin or kind: kind will, wish, or desire.

O leude booke with thy foule rudenesse
Sith thou hast neither beautie ne eloquence
Who hath thee caused or yeue thee hardinesse
For to appere in my ladies presence
I am full sikerlich knowest her benevolence.

Chaucer. The Cuckow and the Nightingale

And after that he rode about the more parte of the lande, and vsed the people in suche fayre maner, that he rewsed therby notable summes of money, the whiche way of the leuynge of his money was after named a benevolence.

Fabyan. Edw. IV. an 1475.

The kyng willing to shew that this benefit was to hym much acceptable, and not worthy to be put in oblyuion called thus graunt of many a benevolence, notwithstanding that many with grudge & malevolence gaue great summes toward that new founde benevolence.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 14.

He hathe made to the thys reasonable offers and this Godly mocion, puttyng his hole affiance in God most puissant accordynge to right and reason, trustyng in his quarel to be ayded and supported by his benevolente subiectes and fauourable well willers.—Id. Hen. V. an. 2.

To whome hys maiestie shall euer after beare so muche the more tender fauour, in howe much he shall perceiue you the more prone & benevolently minded toward his election.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 61.

When I remembre, what incomparable goodnes hath euer proceded of this vertue benevolence, mercyfulle God what swete flavour fele I, percyng my spryres.

Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 9.

If the chylde be of nature inclyned (as many haue ben) to peynte with a pen, or to fourme images in stoone or tree, he shulde not be therfrom withdrawen, or nature be rebuked, whiche is to hym benevolent.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 8.

A benevolous inclination is implanted into the very frame and temper of our church's constitution.

Puller. Moderation of the Church of England, p. 509.

For my own part, amongst a thousand other obligations which I owe to my parents, I must particularly acknowledge that of instilling an early benevolence to mankind, in general, and a desire of fixing myself in the affections of one or more who should appear best qualified for so near an alliance.—Tatler, No. 314.

It is the benevolent passions only which can exert themselves without any regard or attention to propriety, and yet retain something about them which is engaging.

Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. vii. s. 2. c. 3.

Proper benevolence is the most graceful and agreeable of all the affections. It is recommended to us by a double sympathy, as its tendency is necessarily beneficent. It is the proper object of gratitude and reward, and upon all these accounts it appears to our natural sentiments to possess a merit superior to any other.

Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. vii. s. 2. c. 3.

When our love or desire of good goes forth to others, it is termed good-will or benevolence. Benevolence embraces all beings capable of enjoying any portion of good; and thus it becomes universal benevolence, which manifests itself by being pleased with the share of good every creature enjoys in a disposition to increase it; in feeling an uneasiness at their sufferings; and in the abhorrence of cruelty, under every disguise, or pretext. When these dispositions are acting powerfully towards every being capable of enjoyment, they are called the benevolent affections; and as they become, in those who indulge them, operative rules of conduct, or principles of action, we speak of the benevolent principle.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

BE-NIGHT. To go down (sc. in darkness, gloom,) to overtake, to overshadow, to shrowd, to overwhelm, (sc. in darkness, in gloom, in ignorance.)

So, go break off this last lamenting kiss,
Which sucks two soules, and vapours both away,
Turn thou, ghost, that way, and let me turn this,
And let ourselves benight our happiest day.

Donne. The Exstasie.

Now jealousie no more benights her face,
Her courage beauteous grows, and grief decayes,
And with such joy as shipwrack'd men embrace
The shore, she hastens to the house of praise.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 5.

But oh! alas! what sudden cloud is spread
About this glorious king's eclipsed head!
It all his fame benights, and all his store,
Wrapping him round, and now he's seen no more.

Cowley. Davideis, b. i.

Beneath her roof he might be pleas'd to stay,
Or some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings, and, seeing heaven appear
In its best work of mercy, thank it there.

Dryden. Eneid.

Where art thou, poor benighted traveller!
The stars will light thee, though the moon should fail.
Where art thou, more benighted! more astray!
In ways immortal! the stars call thee back;
And, if obey'd their counsel, set thee right.

Young. The Complaint, No. 9.

BENI'GN. } Vossius rejects both the etymologies of Festus; sc. benignus
BENI'GNANT. } dicitur propris, qui bonis, et dignis largitur; or benenignus from BENI'GNITY. } bene gignendo. He prefers benus, addito gnus,
BENI'GNLY. } but what gnus is he says not. Fr. Bénigne, Bénignité; It. & Sp. Benigno, Benignita, Benignidad.

The application of the word is to—

Those qualities or dispositions which are productive of good, with a kind intent. To that which is—

Gentle, courteous, gracious, kind, liberal, bountiful. See the quotation from Elyot.

Mercy hihte that maydo. a mylde thyng with alle
And a ful benygne burde. and buxom of speche.

Piers Ploughman, p. 345.

To geve mercy for mysdedes. yf men wolde hit aske,
Buxumliche and benygneliche. and bydden hit of grace.

Id. p. 232.

Youre mede schal be myche, and ye schulen be the sones of the higheste: for he is benygne on unkynd men and yvele men.—Wiclif. Luk. c. 6.

The prynce of the yle pupplius bi name which resseyuyde us bi three daies benygnely and foond us.—Id. Dedis, c. 28.

Knowist thou not that the benygnyti of God ledith thee to forthinkyng.—Id. Romayns, c. 2.

For whan they came from any strange place
He wolde of his benigne curtesie
Make hem good cheere, and busily espie
Tidings of sundry regnes, for to lere
The wonders that they mighte seen or here.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4068.

For which sayth Seint John Chrisostome, penance destreineth a man to accept benignely every peine, that him is enjoined, with contrition of herte.—Id. The Persones Tale.

That ye so longe of your benignitee
Han holden me in honour and nobley,
Where I was not worthy for to be,
That thank I God and you.—Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8703.

And for he was to loue strange,
He wolde not his herte change
To be benigne and fauourable
To loue. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And than the Prince of Wales (the Black Prince) opened his eyen and regarded towarde heuen, and loyned his handes togider and sayd, very God Jesu Christ, who hath formed and created me, cosent by your benygne grace, that I may haue this day victory of myne enemyes, as that I do is in a rightful quarrel.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 237.

Ye be there thre principall, by whom humanitie is chiefly compact, benevolence, benificence, and liberalitie, which maketh vp the sayd principall vertue called benignitie or gentylnesse.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 8.

Ulysses loved, to heare that one man yet
Vnle him benignly, and would truth abet
In these contentions.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b viii.

The ancient heroes were illustrious
For being benign and not blustrous
Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words.
Hudibras. pt. i. c. 3.

In a thermometer 'tis only the purest and most sublimated spirit, that is either contracted or dilated by the benignity or inclemency of the season.—Spectator, No 238.

"Fair dame, united to the bravest chief,"
In smiles he answers, "fortune more benign
Preserv'd those husbands for the happiest lot,
Society with you." Glover. Athenaid, b. vii.

The king whom he (Monk) gave us was indeed the very reverse of your benignant sovereign, who in reward for his attempt to bestow liberty on his subjects, languishes himself in prison
Burke. A Letter to a Member of the National Assembly

Yet by immense benignity inclin'd
To spread around him that primeval joy
Which fill'd himself, he rais'd his plastic arm,
And sounded through the hollow depth of space
The strong, creative mandate.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii.

The hero full of dignity and years,
Once bold in action, placed now at ease,
Even by his look benignly cast around,
Gives lassitude relief. Glover. Leonidas, b. ii.

BE'NISON. Fr. Benison, from the Lat. Benedictio; a benediction, (qv.)

Richard said than his wille, mariners if ge moun,
Aryues in to Marsilie, with Gode's benisoun.
R. Brunne, p. 147.

Alle that persecution in pure liif suffren
They han the benesoun of God, blissed in erthe.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And certes but if they dyn amendement, right as God yave his benison to Isakon by the seruise of Jacob, and to Pharao by the seruise of Joseph, right so God wel yeve his malison to swiche lordeshipes as susteine the wickednesse of hir servants, but they come to amendement.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale

Thenne on hys knees he sat adoun
Before Clement.
And seyde "Fader thy benesoun
With good intent"—Octouian Imperator. Weber, vol. iii

And I when of me his leave he tuk,
The tears they wat mine ee,
I gave toll him a parting luk,
"My benison gang wi' thee"
Gruerroy. Percy's Reliques, vol. i

Old Man. God's benyson go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 4.

Eld Br. Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,
That wont'st to love the traveller's benison,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud.
Milton. Comus.

Twelve noble virgins, blooming, young and fair,
With hyacinthine wreaths adorn'd their hair,
And pleas'd the vocal benison to shower,
To the soft cithern danc'd before the bower
To the soft cithern danc'd before the bower
Fawkes. Theocritus, Idyl 17.

BE-NUM. } To nim or take away, to
BE-NU'MMING, n. } deprive of (sc. sensation,
BE-NU'MMEDNESS. } thought, &c.) It is not unusual to write benumb.

He make neither go, ne come,
Fast al together he is benome.
The power both of hande and fete.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi

The present fits of feare
Of afterclaps to cum
Awhile my louing tender breast
And senses doe benum.—Turberville. Pyndara's Answere.

Into my bosom did I take,
This frozen and benumbed snake,
Not fearing from it any harm.
But now it stings that breast that made it warm
Cowley. Love's Ingratitude.

As for the Aspides, looke whomever they have stung, they lie upon it with a kind of deadly sleepiness and benumbedness in all their limbs.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxix. c. 4.

But when the said heat is altogether vanquished, there must needs ensue a benumming and congelation of the body, but if heat get the victory, it bringeth a certain warmth, and dilatation, with pleasure.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 814.

Scarce had she finish'd when her feet she found
Benumb'd with cold, and fasten'd to the ground.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Some on a broken crag were struggling cast,
And there by oozy tangles grappled fast;
Awhile they bore th' o'erwhelming billows' rage,
Unequal combat with their fate to wage;
Till all benumb'd, and feeble, they forego
Their slippery hold, and sunk to shades below.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. i.

BE-PAINT. To paint; to cover, to colour with paint.

And with that word she spy'd the hunted boar;
Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

Jul. Thou knowest the maske of night is on my face,
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheeke,
For that which thou hast heard me speake to night.
Id. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 2.

BE-PALE. To make white, to whiten. See APPAL.

When first those perjur'd lips of thine,
Bepal'd with blasting sighs, did seal
Their violated faith on mine,
From the soft bosom that did heal
Thee, thou my melting heart didst steal
Carew. To an Inconstant Servant.

BE-PE'ARLED. Covered with shining, bright, spots, like pearls.

Ask me why I send to you
This primrose all bepearl'd with dew,
I straight will whisper in your ears
The sweets of love are wash'd with tears.
Carew. The Primrose.

BE-PE'PPER. } To throw at, pelt as with
BE-PO'WDER. } pepper-corns, or with the grains of pepper from a pepper-box.

O ye water-drinkers! it is then by the delusive fountain, that ye have so often governed and turn'd this world about like a mill-wheel,—grinding the faces of the impotent,—bepeppering their ribs,—bepowdering their noses, and changing sometimes even the very frame and face of nature.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. viii. c. 5.

BE-PINCH. To press or nip, closely, sharply.

——So crakt their back bones wrincht
With horrid twiches In their sides, armes, shoulders (al bepincht,)
Ran thicke the wals, red with the bloud, ready to start out.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

BE-PLA'STER. To cover, to spread over with (plaster). See EMPLASTER.

Yet, with talents like these, and an excellent heart,
The man had his failings, a dupe to his art.
Like an ill judging beauty, his colours he spread,
And beplaster'd with rouge his own natural red
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

BE-PLUME. Plume is applied to feathers worn as an ornament, as a mark of honour, &c

The young, in armour bright, which shone like gold, beplumed with each gay feather of the east,—all—all—tilting at it like fascinated knights in tournaments of yore for fame and love.—Sterne. Sentimental Journey.

BE-POWDER. To cover, to sprinkle, with powder, with dust. See BEPEPPER, and an example from Search, in v. BECURL; from Goldsmith, in v. BETAILED.

BE-PRAISE. We praise those things only which we hold in price, (Junius.) See APPRAISE.

I have lived to see generals who once had crowds hallooing after them wherever they went, who were bepraised by newspapers and magazines, those echoes of the voice of the vulgar, and yet they have long sunk into merited obscurity, with scarce even an epitaph left to flatter.—Goldsmith, Ess. 8.

BE-PROSE. To write or speak, to reduce to, prose; as distinguished from verse.

Such was his doom impos'd by heaven's decree,
With ears that hear not, eyes that shall not see,
The low to swell, to level the sublime,
To blast all beauty, and beprose all rhyme.
Mallet. Of Verbal Criticism.

BE-PUDDLED. Muddled, clouded.

This also is very evident, and of great consideration in the first ages while their tradition was clear and evident, and not so be-puddled as it since hath been with the mixture of hereticks, striving to spoil that which did so much mischief to their causes.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, s. 18.

BE-PURPLE. To have or cause to have the colour, the bloom of purple.

Like to beauty, when the lawn,
With rosy cheeks bepurpled o'er, is drawn
To boast the loveliness it seems to hide.
Dudley Diggs. Verses prefixed to Sandys's Psalms

BE-QUA'LIFY. To bestow, to give, qualities or qualifications.

Amo. I doe vaile to both your thanks and kisse them but primarily to yours, most ingenious, acute, and polite ladie.
Phi Gods my life, how he doe's all to bequalifie her! in genious, acute, and polite! as if there were not others in place as ingenious, acute, and polite, as shee.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act iv. sc 3

BE-QU'EATH. } A. S. Becwethan. Be and
BEQUE'ST, n. } cwethan. See QUOTH.
BEQU'EATHER. } To say, to announce, to declare, (sc.) the will or determination;—the manner in which the bequeather wills or determines that his property should be disposed of.

Atte laste, tho he ysey, that toward hys ende be drou.
Hys bequide in hys manere he made bvuore hys deth
Wyllam, the rede kyng, hys sone al Engelond he bequeth
The gongere al hys porclias, ac, as lawe was & wone.
Normandye hys erytage he gef hys eldeste sone
Roberd the Courtese and Henry hys gongeste tho
He bequeth hys tresour, vor he nadde sonres nanmo
R. Gloucester, p 381

Fare wel quath the frere for I mot hethen fonden
And hyen to an housewif that hath us bequethen
Ten pound in hir testament.—Piers Ploughman. Crede

To penaunces and to pilgrimages ich wol passe with othere
For thi ich wolle er ich wende, do wryten my by qwyte
Id. Vision, p 133

For though they yeve us all hir heritage,
For which we claime to ben of high parage,
Yet may they not bequethen, for no thing,
To non of us, hir vertuous living.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v 6761

He dyed, luing after hym iii. sonnes, to the which he bequethid his possessions and goodis, but for ye yongest, named Gryffon, held hym not contentyd with such bequeste as his fader to hym gaue he therefore made warre vpon his other ii. bretherne.—Fabyan, vol i. c. 48

And as good men, in charitie should live,
I crave my faults may no mans mind offend,
So hur is all, I have to bequest,
And this is all, I of the world request.
Gascoigne. A Remembraunce

If the bequether or maker of any will be on line, the will taketh no place, and may be voyde.
Wilson. Arte of Logike, p 48

——With cruell spots
Out of his will his doublesse heires he blots
And all his goods to Phiale bequeathes
Sir J. Beaumont. Juvenal Sat 10

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beautys legacy?
Natures bequest gives nothing but doth lend,
And being frank, she lends to those are free.
Shakespeare, Son. 4

I have often read with a great deal of pleasure a legacy of the famous Lord Bacon, one of the greatest genius's that our own or any country has produced after having bequeathed his soul, body, and estate, in the usual form, he adds, "My name and memory I leave to foreign nations, and to my countrymen, after some time be passed over."
Tatler, No. 133.

But haste to thy illustrious task: prepare
The noble work well trusted to thy care,
The gift bequeath'd by Addison's command,
To Craggs made sacred by his dying hand.
Young. Ld. to Tickell.

Saint John instantly saw the meaning, and felt the force of this moving bequest. He considered our Lord's mother as his own, and from that hour (as he himself with his usual modesty and simplicity tells us,) "he took her to his own home."—Portens, vol. I. Ser. 16.

BE-RAIN. To run, to flow down, to bedew, to bewet, to moisten.

So after that he long had hir complained
His honds wrong, and sand that was to sey
And with his teires salt her brest berained
He gan the teires wipen all of ful drey.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

And Polimite, of whome I speak late
With the tempest bete, and all berained,
By grace only the citie hath atteined.
Lydgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

The monthe vnto this signe ordeigned
Is Februar, which is bereaued,
And with loudflodes in his rage
At fordes letteth the passage —Gower. Con. A. b. viI.

And with this thought, the blood forsakes the face,
The teares berayne my cheekes of deadly hewe,
The whyche as sone as sobbing sighes, alas,
Upsupped have, thus I my plaint renewe.
Surrey. Complaint of a dying Louer.

Till at the last recouering his voice,
Supping the teares that all his brest berain'd,
On cruell fortune weeping thus he plain'd.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 271.

Ye sighes make true report of teares,
that so beraine my brest.
As Helens husbands neuer were for treason of his guest.
Turberville. Complaint of Absence.

BE-RATE. We use to tax, and to rate, metaphorically, in a similar manner. To tax a man with a crime, is to lay it to his charge, to charge him with it, to accuse him of it. To rate a man for his offences, to tax, to charge him with them, to repeat the charge, to reproach him with, scold him for them. See RATE.

So is the veritie of the Gospell berated and laughed to skorne of the miscreantes.—Udal. Marke, c. 15.

But when Antonie afterwards came to the knowledge thereof, and that this fraud and cousenage was bewrated and detected by the language and speech of the boies, he fell into a furious fit of choler, and all to berated the foresaid Toranius.—Holland. Plinie, b. vII. c. 12.

BE-RA'TTLE. Rattle is the dim. of Rate. See BRRATE.

To scold vociferously; to make the noise or clamour of a scold.

As thus: He did all berattle him. Wherin appeareth that a sillable is added to this word (rattle.)
Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 180.

But there is, Sir, an ayrie of children • • • • those are now the fashion, and so be-ratled the common stages (so they call them,) that many wearing rapiers, are affraide of goose quills, and dare scarse come thither.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act II. sc. 2.

BE-REAVE. } To take away, to deprive
BERE'AVER, n. } of, to plunder, to despoil, to BERE'FT. } rob, or be-rob, (qv.)

& socoure the that are git in Gascoyn left,
Ne late thaim not misfare, ne ther powere be reft.
R. Brunne, p. 289.

Now whether have I a siker hond or non?
Quod he, is all my might and minde agon?
Hath win bereved me mine eyen sight?
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7651.

But age, alas! that all wol envenime,
Hath me bereft my beautee and my pith.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6066.

The patrimonie, and the richesse,
Whiche to Siluester in pure almesse,
The first Constantinus lefte,
Fro holy churche thei berefte.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

The duke beynge thereof aduertised sent woorde to the Frenche kynge, declarynge to him that in the time of truce in the which, he as his allye and vassal was cõprehendyd he was spoyled and beraued of his towne of Fongiers: beseechynge the Frenche kynge, in that cause to see a recompense and amendemente.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 26.

Pleasure is felt, opinion but conceiv'd,
Honour, a thing without us, not our own:
Whereof we see how many are bereav'd,
Which should have reap'd the glory they had sown:
And many have it, yet unworthy known.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

Thou trait'rous bed, when first thou didst receive me,
Not single to thy rest I then ascended.
Double I came, why should I single leave thee?
Why of my better part dost thou bereave me?
P. Fletcher. Eliza. An Elegy.

Yet hast thou lost at once all these, and he thine only bereaver.—Speed. Hist. of Gt. Britaine. The Danes, an. 787.

Still one was left, in whom was all my hope,
My age's comfort, and his country's prop;
Hector, my darling, and my last defence,
Whose life alone their deaths could recompense;
And, to complete my store of countless woe,
Him you have slain—of him bereav'd me too.
Congreve. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

His hair grew stiff with dust and mingled gore,
While streams of sweat distil from every pore;
His eyes, bereft of wonted sleep, display
A sanguine hue, and sicken at the day.
Lewis. The Theband of Statius, b. III.

Let us here leave him to the conviction he will one day find,—that there is no end to his labour,—that his eyes will never be satisfied with riches, or will say,—For whom do I labour and bereave myself of rest?—Sterne, Ser. 1.

BE-RHYME. To write rhymes about, to praise, to flatter in rhyme or song.

Ros. I was seuen of the nine daies out of the wonder, before you came for looke heere what I found on a palme tree; I was neuer so be rimd since Pythagoras time.
Shakespeare. As you Like It, Act III. sc. 2.

I sought no homage from the race that write;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight.
Poems I heeded, now berhym'd so long,
No more than thou, great George! a birthday song.
Pope. Prologue to Satires.

BE-RO'BBED. To take away, to deprive of, to plunder, to despoil, to bereave.

Tho when her well of teares she wasted had,
Shee said, Ah dearest Lord! what euil starre
On you hath frownd, and pourd his influence bad,
That of your selfe ye thus be robbed arre,
And thus misseeming hew your manly lookes doth marre?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 8.

BE'RRY, v. } A. S. Beria, Berga; Ger. Ber;
BE'RRY, n. } Sw. Bær. From the A. S. Beran, to bear, to bring forth. Winberrian, which occurs in Matt. vii. 16, is rendered by Somner, vine-berries, grapes.

Applied to such small fruits, as those of the laurel, myrtle, thorn, the goose-berry, currant-berry, &c.

Gaillard he was, as goldfinch in the shawe,
Broune as a bery, a propre short feawe.
Chaucer. The Cokes Tale, v. 4365.

One of hem was a tre
That beareth a fruit of sauour wicke
Full croked was that foule stocke,
And knottie here and there also
And blacke as berry, or any sloo.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

I mean the louer loued now
By thy pretenced folye,
Which will proue like, thou shalt find how,
Vnto a tree of holly,
That barke and berry beare alwaies,
The one, birdes fedes, the other slayes.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer Accusing, &c.

Was not I planted of thine owne hand,
To be the primrose of all thy land,
With flowring blossoms, to furnish the prime,
And skarlet berries in sommer time?
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. Februarie.

Yet that's the proper time, to thrash the wood,
For mast of oak, your father's homely food,
To gather laurel berries and the spoil
Of bloody myrtles, and to press your oil.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. b. I.

——— And berry bearing thorns,
That feed the thrush, (whatever some suppose)
Afford the smaller minstrels no supply.
Cowper. Task, b v.

BE'RYL. Lat. Beryllus; Gr. Βηρυλλος, a precious stone; which, says Vossius, we have received from the East. See the quotation from Holland.

And I amused a long while
Upon this wall of berile
That shone lighter than a glas
And made well more then it was.
Chaucer. The House of Fame, b. III.

The topaz we'll stick here and there,
And sea-green colour'd beryl,
And turkesse, which who hape to bear
Is often kept from peril.—Drayton. Nymphal 9.

Many are of opinion that beryls are of the same nature that the emeraud, or least-wise verie like: from India they come as from their native place, for seldome are they to be found else-where.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvII. c. 5.

What rings of eastern price his fingers hold!
Gold decks the fingers, beryl decks the gold!
Parnell. Gift of Poetry. Solomon.

BE-SAINT. To besaint, as in the instances below, is used contemptuously of the Catholic custom of conferring the title of "Saint."

And as absurd, no doubt, is many men's canonizing, securing and besainting themselves in this life, upon every slight premature perwasion that they are in Christ
Hammond. Works, vol. IV. Ser 8

And so as Tertullian objects to the heathen, expostulating with them why they did not deifie Themistocles and Cato, as well as Jove and Hercules, Quot potiores viros apud inferos reliquistis? they leave many an honester man in hell, than some of those whom their favour or faction hath besainted.—Hammond. Works, vol. IV. Ser. 9.

BE-SCA'TTER. To separate, to sever or put apart, to shed or spread abroad, to disperse.

Her goodly locks adowne her back did flowe
Vnto her waste, with flowres bescattered,
The which ambrosiall odours forth did throwe
To all about, and all her shoulders spred
As a new spring.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. IV. c. 11.

BE-SCORN. To treat with scorn, derision contempt.

Than was he bescorned, that only shuld have been honoured in alle thinges and of alle thinges.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

BE-SCRATCH. In some editions of Chaucer, only Scrachin.

To tear asunder the surface with sharp points; thorns, nails, &c.

Nor she had nothing slow ybe
For to bescrachin of his face
And for to rent in many place
His clothes. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Of whom he asked, whence he lately came,
And whither now he trauelled so fast,
For, sore he swat, and running through that same
Thick forest, was bescratcht, and both his feet nigh lame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. III. c. 5.

BE-SCRAWL. To make bad letters, to write carelessly, foolishly. See BESCRIBBLE.

So far is it from the ken of these wretched projectors of ours, that bescrawl their pamphlets every day with new forms of government for our church.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. I. c. 1.

BE-SCREEN. To cover, to hide, to conceal, to protect.

Jul. What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumblest on my counsell?
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act II. sc. 2.

BE-SCRI'BBLE. To bescrawl, (qv.)

And that power which Christ never took from the master of the family, but rectified only to a right and wary use at home; that power the undiscerning canonist hath improperly usurpt in his court-leet, and bescribbled with a thousand trifling impertinencies, which yet have fill'd the life of man with serious trouble and calamity.
Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. II. c. 13.

BE-SCU'MBER. To do any dirty act; to dirty; to scatter dirt or filth.

Our muse is in mind for th' untrussing a poet;
I slip by his name; for most men doe know it:
A critick, that all the world bescumbers
With sat'rycall humours, and lyrical numbers.
B. Jonson. Poetaster.

Whose kirtle was't, you gnaw'd too? Mistresse Bands?
And Waxe's stockings? Who? Did Blocke bescumber
Statutes white suite, wi' the parchment lace there?
Id. The Staple of Newes.

BE-SCU'TCHEON. From the Gr. Σκυτος, a hide, or skin, i. e. the material of which shields were first made.

To deck or array with a scutcheon.

The last grave fop of the last age,
In a superb feather'd hearse,
Bescutcheon'd and betagged with verse.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. IV.

BE-SEE. } To see, to look at. The past
BESE'EN. } part. Beseye or Beseen, seems to have been used as the Lat. Spectatus, observed, examined, chosen; decked or adorned for sight; to be looked at.

& muche of is owe folc bigan vor to fle.
Sire, quoth the knigt, thou most the bi se.
R. Gloucester, p. 525.

And seide, I have synned bitraiynge rightful blood: and thei seiden what to us, besee thee.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 27.

A good sister yet I preie,
Tell me why ye be so beseye,
And with these halters thus begone.—Gower. Con. A b. IV.

But Arrous was so wo besein
With thoughtes, which vpon him rounne,
That he all by the brode sounne
To bedde goth, not for rest,
But for to thinke vpon the beste.—Id. Ib. b. VII

On the 3d day of May she made her entry into Lôdô riding on a white palfreye (which ye Quene of Englande had sent for her, behynde Syr Thomas Par richly besene, & wt great compay of lordes & ladyes.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 8.

All ladyes and damoselles were freshely besene accordyng to their degrees, except Alys, Countesse of Salisbury, for she went as simply as she myght, to the intent that the Kyng shulde not sette his regarde on her.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 89.

BE-SEECH, v.
BESE'ECH, n.
BESE'ECHING, n.
BESE'ECHER.
BESE'ECHMENT.
} To seek (be-seek) or search after, to inquire, to require, to ask, to sue, to petition for, to beg, to solicit.

Ther vor yeh byseche the, haue half my lond myd me,
And yeh, as thy partyner, half Engelond myd the.
R. Gloucester, p. 309.

Whan kyng R. herde, the Cristen had suilk pyn,
Fuste soft he him answerd, wepand with his ine,
"To Crist for me biseke, that he gyue me that grace,
The Cristendom to eke, the Saracins to chace."
R. Brunne, p. 176.

Edmunde sent his messengers, of pes tham bisouht,
Inguar sent bode ageyn, that pes wild he nouht.—Id. p. 22.

For while fortune is thy frend, freres wollen the lovye
And fastne the in here fraternite, and for the by seche
To here pout provincial.—Piers Ploukman, p. 201.

And yut wolde he hem no wo, that wroght hym al that tenne
Bote myldeliche wt mouthe, mercy he by soughte
To have pyte on that puple, that paynede hym to dethe.
Id. p. 31.

Therefore britheren I biseche ghou bi the merci of God, that ghe ghyue ghoure bodies a lyuyng sacrafice booli pleynge to God and ghoure seruyse resonable.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 12.

I beseche you therefore bretheren, by the mercifulness of God, that ye make your bodys a quycke sacrytice, holy and acceptable vnto God.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Bi al preier and biseching preie ghe al tyme in spyryt.
Wiclif. Effesies, c. 6.

Thou art so wise, it nedeth thee nought teche,
Go, save our lives, and that I thee beseche.
Chaucer. The Millers Tale, v 3599.

She sayde; lord, to whom fortune hath yeven,
Victorie, and as a conquerour to liven.
Nought greveth us your glorie and your honour
But we beseke you of mercie and socour
Have mercie on our woe and our distresse.
Id. The Knyghtes Tale, v 917.

But tell me, if I wist what she were
For whom that the al mishauenture alleth
Durst thou that I told it in her eere
Thy wo, sith thou darst not thyselfe for feere
And her besought, on the to han some routh.
Id. Troilus, b. i.

I wote not fadre what ye meane.
But this I wolde you beseche,
That ye me by some wey teche
What is to ben an hypocrite.—Gower. Con. A. b i.

How thei for euery membre hadden
A sondry god, to whom thei spradden
Her armes, and of helpe besoughten.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Then made I my prayer to the God of heauē, & sayd vnto the kyng, yf it please the kyng, and if thy seruaunt be fauored in thy sighte. I beseke the sende me into Juda vnto the cyte of my fathers buriall, that I may buyld it.
Bible, 1551. Nehemiah, c. 2.

He knoweth well ynoughe, what is profytable for you although ye aske nothinge. But yet he loueth to be called vpon with suche manner of intercessions, he loueth to be entreated, and (as it wer) enforced, with godly besechinges.
Udal. Philippians, c. 4.

The very sonne of God a priest for euermore, ready at all times and mete to make intercession for vs for that neyther death can take hym away, neither any infirmitie let hym, to be a conuenyente and perfite busecher for vs.—Id. Heb. c. 8.

Demosthenes' and Tully's fame and speech,
Each one that studies thet'ricke, will beseech
At Pallas' hands. Beaumont. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

Ma. Good madam, hear the suit that Edith urges,
With such submiss beseeches; nor remain
So strictly bound to sorrow for your son.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act iv. sc. 2.

They who were within besieged, seeing no other hope of succour, sent their embassadours to the consull, beseeching his helpe, and making pittifull mone, how they with their wives and children were shut up within the fortresse, and looked every hour for death, either by famin or the sword.
Holland. Livie, p. 991.

As though God did beseech by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconcyled to God. Which besechment denotes, not only their gracious condescention, or meer desire to us, but lively speaks the absolute necessity of our being reconciled by God's appointment.
Goodwin. Work of the Holy Ghost, b. iii. c. 1.

Let me now beseech you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, whose servants ye are now to be, that from this day forward ye look upon him as your great master; and lay out yourselves wholly in the service he calls you to.
Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 3.

At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train
Echo'd her grief, and groveling on the plain,
With groans, and hands upheld, to move his mind,
Besought his pity to their helpless kind!
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Thou art the Prince of Peace, breathe upon us brotherly love. Thou art the God, have pity on thy humble beseechers.
The Whole Duty of Man. Private Devotions.

Whence this unwonted patience? this weak doubt?
This tame beseeching of rejected peace?
This meek forbearance? this unnative fear,
To generous Britons never known before?
Thomson. Britannia.

Observe now I beseech you, the implacable spirit of this fellow, who was not ashamed thus to confess himself capable of insulting the unfortunate.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 5.

"The servant therefore fell down and worshipped him," prostrated himself at his master's feet, and in the most moving terms besought him, saying, "have patience with me, and I will pay thee all."—Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 16.

BE-SEEM.
BESE'EMING, n.
BESE'EMLY.
} To look, to appear; (sc.) like itself, as it ought to appear; i. e. apt, fit, becoming, convenient, suitable, proper, decent.

So faire with his respons, so faithfulle thei besemed
Bothe erles & barons, his wordes al thei queimed.
R. Brunne, p. 307.

& if he wille thorgh batalle, ther to wille I stand,
& batalle bituene vs wille not be semand.—Id. p. 51.

A bachelor other a beaupere, best hym by semeth
And for the cloth that kevereth hym, calid his here a frere.
Piers Ploukman, p. 160.

Besemeth it a womman, not hilid on the head to preie to God?—Wiclif. Corynth. c. 2.

Of right be present must pain & eke torment
The pale death besemeth not to be absent.
Chaucer. Romaunt of Love.

That other was nothing to seke
But vnderneath suche a tape
He hath so for hym selfe shape,
That howe as euer it hym beseme,
The miter, with the diademe
He hath through supplantation.—Gower. Con. A. b ii.

So said, her richest snake, which to her wrist
For a beseeming bracelet she had ty'd,
(A special worm it was as ever kiss'd
The foamy lips of Cerberus) she apply'd
To the king's heart.—Crashaw. Steps to the Temple.

A worthy matter, sayth one, Syr Thomas Elyot is become a phisition, and wryteth in phisik, which beseemeth not a knyght, he mought haue ben moch better occupyed.
Elyot. Castel of Health. The Proheme.

The dales and lower grounds have some little banks lying to the sunne, and rivers withall, neere unto the woods, yea and places more meet and beseeming for men to inhabit.
Holland. Livie, p. 414.

What thoughts he had, beseems not me to say,
Though some surmise he went to fast and pray.
Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

——— There, where the field
Was deepest stain'd with gore, on Hochstet's plain,
The theatre of thy glory, once was rais'd
A meaner trophy, by the imperial hand;
Extorted gratitude! which now the rage
Of malice impotent, beseeming ill
A regal breast, has levell'd to the ground.
Lyttelton. Blenheim.

See to their seats they hye with merry glee,
And in beseemly order sitten there.
Shenstone. Schoolmistress.

She gave him but a tear; his manly form,
His virtues, ev'n the courage that preserv'd
Her life, beseem'd no sentiment to wake
Warmer than gratitude.—Mason. English Garden, b. xiv.

BE-SET. Dut. Besetten; Ger. Besetzen; Sw. Besætta.

To put, to place, to station, to fix; to put in order, to arrange; to place or station in order, on all sides; to surround; and thus to stop, or block up, to blockade, to besiege.

For ich am myd my fon on ech half by set,
And gef ich hem may ouer come thoru gou the bet.
R. Gloucester, p. 113.

He bysette hem vaste ynou, so that atte laste there
The bysopes and other prelats, that of londe were,
R. Gloucester, p. 177

Bere hit to the bishop and bide hym of hus grace
To by setten hit hym selve, as best be for thy soule.
Piers Ploukman, p. 105.

For the roote of alle yuelis is couetise whiche summen couetynge erriden fro the feith and bisetteden hem with manie sorewis.—Wiclif. Tymo. c. 6.

Therefore the love of every thing that is not beset in God, ne don principally for Goddes sake, although that a man love it lesse than God, yet is it venial sinne.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale

He was glad, and saied, "Friend so deere
Now fare a right, for Jove's name in heaven,
Love hath beset thee well, be of good cheere."
Id. Troilus, b i

Tho was the great merualle on honde,
That he, which was so wise a knight,
His lyfe vpon so yonge a wight
Besette wolde in iopardie:
And many it holden for folie.—Gower. Con. A. b i.

Fyrst the features of her face,
In whiche nature had all grace
Of womanlie beutee besette,
So that it might not be bette.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

The Greeks towards the palace rushed fast,
And couered with engines the gates beset.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b ii.

And if the besetting of one house to robbe it, be iustly deemed worthy death, what shall we thinke of them that besiege whole cities for desire of spoile?
Sir John Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The rest, that saw with fear the ill success
Of single fight, durst not like fortune try;
But round beset her with their numerous press:
Before, beside, behind, they on her fly.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c 2

And kill him [L. Siccius] they did, but to their own cost: for whiles he fought in his owne defence, some of those that laid for his mischiefe, died for it, and lay along about him for companie, for being a right stout and strong man of his hands, he stood it courageously: and notwithstanding he was beset round about, he defended himselfe very manfully
Holland. Livie, p 116

———The hare
Though timorous of heart, and hard beset
By death in various forms, dark snares, and dogs,
And more unpitying men, the garden seeks,
Urg'd on by fearless want. Thomson. Winter

The one was Aurora with fingers of roses, and her feet dewy, attir'd in grey: the other was Vesper in a robe of azure beset with drops of gold.—Spectator, No. 425.

No man lives too long, who lives to do with spirit, and suffer with resignation, what Providence pleases to command or inflict; but indeed they are sharp incommodities which beset old age.—Burke. A Letter to a Noble Lord.

BE-SEW. To join together by the intersertion of string, thread, &c.

And whan he sawe, and redie fonde
This coffre made, and well englued,
The dead bodie was besewed
In cloth of golde, and leide therin.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

BE-SHADE. To distinguish, to disjoin, to divide or sever.

A shade, is (something, any thing,) secluded, separated, retired; that by which we are separated from weather, sun, &c.

For he is with the grounde beshaded,
So that the moone is somdele faded,
And maie not fully shine clere.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

BE-SHINE. To give light or brightness to, to enlighten.

——— He had a wyf,
That he lovid as hertlich as his own lyf:
[She] was as faire a creature as sun might beshine.
Chaucer. History of Beryn.

When the sun is set, it beshineth not the world.
Golden Boke, c. 36.

BE-SHREW. A.S. Syrwan, Syrewan, Syrecian, to sorrow, to vex, to molest, to cause mischief to. Beshrew thee! Besyrew, the imperative of Besyrewian; i. e. be thou, syrwe, syrewe; i. e. sorrowed: sorrow be with thee; vexed, or mayest thou be sorrowed, vexed, molested, mischieved, aggrieved in some manner. (See Tooke): and hence—

To imprecate sorrow, &c.; to curse.

Now elles frere, I wol beshrewe thy face
(Quod this Somnour) and I beshrewe me,
But if I telle tales two or three
Of freres, or I come to Sidenborne,
That I shal make thin herte for to morne.
For wel I wot thy pat ence is gon
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6116

That false traitouresse untrewe
Was like that salowe horse of hewe,
That in the Apocalyps is shewed,
That signifieth to folke beshrewed,
That been all full of treacherie,
And pride, through hypocrisie.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

So that the privie treacherie,
Hid vnder the false hypocrisie
Was then all openly shewed,
That many a man them hath beshrewed
Gower. Con A. b i.

For then were I all beshrewed,
And worthy to be put abacke,
With all the sorrowe vpon my backe,
That any man ordeine couthe. Id Ib. b iii.

Upon this birde he took his wreche
That there he was snowe white tofore,
Euer afterwarde cole blake therefore
He was transformed, as it sheweth
And many a man yet him beshreweth.—Id. Ib.

Moreouer whē we say, God helpe you, I haue done my charitie for this day, do we not take it for almes? And the man is euer chiding and out of charitie, and I beschrew him saying my charitie, that we take it for patience
Tyndall. Workes, p. 253.

I have not much to give, the paine are easy,—
Heav'n will reward your piety, and thank it,
When I am dead, for sure I must not live:
I hope I cannot.
Cal. —— Now, beshrew thy sadness,
Thou turn'st me to much woman.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 4.

Descend: so help me Jove as you shall find
That Reynard comes of no dissembling kind.
"Nay," quoth the cock, "but I beshrew us both,
If I believe a saint upon his oath"
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Beshrew the sombre pencil! said I, vauntingly,—for I envy not its power, which paints the evil of life with so hard and deadly a colouring.—Sterne. Sentimental Journey.

BE-SHUT. } To throw, to cast forth, to
BE-SHET. } shoot. To shut or shet the door,
BE-SHIT. } means to throw or cast the door to. There he beshet; i. e. there he shut up; with the doors, &c. shut, or thrown, or cast to.

To shut in, to include, or inclose; to shut out, to exclude.

But who was glad now, who as trow ye?
But Troilus, that stode and might it se
Throughout a litel window in a stewe
Ther he beshet, aith midnight was in mewe
Unwist of euery wight, but of Pandare.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Truly I wene, that all gladnesse, all ioye & all merthe is beshet vnder locks, and the kele throwe in soche place that it maie not be founde.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. i.

BE-SIDE. } By the side; distinguished from
BESI'DES. } behind and before; and thus, not directly opposite or contrary to, but declining, bending, deviating from, to the right hand or the left, from the straightforward course.—Placed or added to the side; and thus—in addition to.—Put or placed to the side, out of the direct straightforward course; out of the right line. "Talketh like a man besides himself," (sc.) out of the right course of himself, of his mind; out of his mind.

Fyftene thousant hors y wrye ther were ageyn hym, & mo,
Of the lond of France, and of other londes bi syde.
R. Gloucester, p. 92.

And mette hem after mydsomer, the feste of Seyn Jon,
And a gret batayle smyte bysyde the toun of Seerston.
Id. p. 302.

Of werkes that ich wel dude, witnesse ich take
And syggen to such, that sytten me by syde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 89.

In that day Jhesus ghede out of the hous and sant bisidis the see.—Wiclif. Matth. c. 13.

The same daye went Jesus out of the house and satte by the sea side.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Of Norfolk was this reve, of which I tell
Beside a town, men clepen Baldeswell.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 621

There bene also somme (as men saie)
That followen Simon at heles,
Whose cart goth vpon wheles
Of couetise and worldes pride,
And holy churche goth beside.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But this Varro, even before he stood for the consulship, and all the whiles he was a suiter therefore, and now likewise, that he is consull, before that he seeth campe or enemie in the field, is horsemad, and talketh like a man besides himselfe.—Holland. Livie, p. 456.

We ought not to suffer any of those many days (vouchsafed by his goodnesse to flow beside us, void of the signal expressions of our dutiful thankfulness to him.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 19.

That man that doth not know those things which are of use and necessity for him to know is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 1.

These, and a thousand things beside,
Did we consult a poet's pride,
Some gay, some serious, might be said,
But ten to one they'd not be read.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iii

Where full in view Augusta's spires are seen
With flow'ry lawns, and waving woods between,
An humble habitation rose, beside
Where Thames meandering rolls his ample tide
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1

Our example may induce many others to exert a similar generosity, and besides this there are persons in certain situations who are expected to be charitable, and who should give proofs to the world that they are so.
Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 7.

BE-SIEGE, v.
BESI'EGER, n.
BESI'EGEMENT.
BESI'EGER.
BESI'EGING, n.

Fr. Siéger, Assiéger; It. Assediare, Sp. Sitiar. To sit down; (sc.) before a town, a fortress, or any thing we wish to take, or capture; to beset; to set, place, or station, (sc.) an armed force before, around; to surround with an armed force.

The ost withoute of France bi segede hem a non,
And bi lai hem so faste, that neg to grounde hem brogte.
R. Gloucester, p. 19.

How that she was besieged, and ytake
Let him unto my maister Petrark go,
That writeth ynough of this, I undertake.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,330.

Where hee tooke a pray of inestimable riches and cattle, which might have stuffed him for the besiege of Sagitta, whereof he ment to impart liberally to the king, and his companie.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 15.

Eche person setting before their eies besiegement, hunger, and the arrogant enemy hauing them in his had to worke hys plesure vpon thē.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 31.

The Frenchmen, their approaches that espy,
By countermines do meet with them below,
And as opposed in the works they lie,
Up the besieged the besiegers blow.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

They within had broken through the east wall, and made a plaine passage by an iron gate to the sea, which greatly relieved the besieged, and abased the besiegers; for then they saw that they could not stop them of victuals.
Knox. History of Reformation, p. 73.

Those of the Castle I brideled with an hard besieging, and forced the periured earle to exile, neither yet permitted I him in all this life to returne to that which hee hadde lost.
Stowe. William the Conqueror, an. 1087.

But there is one gentleman who besieges me as close as the French did Bouchain. His gravity makes him work cautious, and his regular approaches denote a good engineer.—Spectator, No. 534.

The moment a nobleman returns from his travels, a Creolian arrives from Jamaica, or a dowager from her country seat, I strike for a subscription. I first besiege their hearts with flattery, and then pour in my proposals at the breach.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield.

BE-SILVER. To cover, dress, array; as with silver.

Not lovely Ida might with this compare,
Though many streams his banks besilvered,
Though Xanthus with his golden sands he bare.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

BE-SIT. "Me ill besits," "it sits ill upon me;" does not become me; does not suit.

Me ill besits that in der-dooing armes,
And honours suit my vowed days doe spend,
Vnto thy bountious baytes, and pleasing charmes,
With which weake men thou witchest, to attend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

BE-SLAVE. To subject, or as we now say, enslave himself—to a bewitching beauty.

He that hath once fixed his heart upon the face of an harlot, and hath beslaved himself to a bewitching beauty, casts off at once, all feare of God, respect to lawes, shame of the world, regard of his estate, care of wife, children, friends, reputation, patrimony, body, soul.
Bp. Hall. Cont. John Baptist beheaded.

BE-SLA'VER. To cover, to defile, with slabber or slaver.

Ing. 40 shillings! a fit reward for one of your rentmatick poets, that beslavers all the paper he comes by, and furnishes the chaundlers with wast papers to wrap candles in.
The Returne from Pernassus, Act i. sc. 2.

BE-SLIME. To cover with slime: to daub, to dirty.

You would not argue him to arrogance:
How ere that common spawne of ignorance,
Our fric of writers, may beslime his fame,
And give his action that adulterate name.
B. Jonson. Poetaster.

BE-SLU'BBER. See BESLAVER.

The cam Sleuthe al by slobered, wit to slymed eyen.
Piers Ploughman, p. 110.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with speargrasse, to make them bleed, and then to beslubber our garments with it, and sweare that it was the blood of true men.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

BE-SLU'RRY. To smear, to soil, to defile.

And being in this piteous case,
And all beslurried head and face,
On runs he in this wildgoose chase,
As here and there he rambles.—Drayton. Nymphidia.

BE-SMEAR. To cover with any greasy, slimy, dirty matter.
To soil, to daub.

If torments rise and pleasure rare,
If face besmear with often streames
Turbervile. The Louer confesseth &c

They also brought of misaduenture sad
Tokens and signes, seem'd too apparent true,
Rinaldoes armour frusht and hackt they had,
Oft pierced through, with bloud besmeared new.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. viii. s. 48.

The diuelish hag by changes of my cheare
Perceiu'd my thought; and drown'd in sleepy night,
With wicked herbes and ointments did besmeare
My body all, through charmes and magick might,
That all my senses were bereaued quight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

Not marble, nor gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme:
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone, besmear'd with sluttish time.
Shakespeare, Son. 55.

—— Before them stalk'd,
Far seen, the demon of devouring flame;
Rapine, and murther, all with blood besmear'd,
Without or ear, or eye, or feeling heart.
Thomson. Liberty, pt v.

Came superstition, fierce and fell,
An imp detested, e'en in hell:
Her eye inflam'd, her face all o'er
Foully besmear'd with human gore,
O'er heaps of mingled saints she rode.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

BE-SMIRCH. To Smirch, Mr. Steevens says, is to soil, to obscure.

And as fair Helen's face,
Did Grecian dames besmirche,
So did my dear exceed in sight,
All virgins in the church.
The Bride's Burial. Percy, vol. iii.

—— Perhaps he loues you now,
And now no soyle nor cautell doth besmerch
The vertue of his feare.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

—— Tell the constable,
We are but warriors for the working day:
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmyrcht
With rainie marching in a painfulle field.
Id. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 3.

BE-SMOOTHE. To make smooth, plain or even.

—— And hath
An altar there, at which the graces bathe,
And with immortal balms besmooth her skin:
Fit for the blisse, immortals solace in.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

BE-SMUT. To smear or stain with dirt or filth.

Of fustian he wered a gipon,
Alle besmotred with his habergeon,
For he was late ycome fro his vyage;
And wente for to don his pilgrimage.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 75.

BE-SNOW. To cover, sprinkle with snow, or any thing white as snow: to give the whiteness of snow.

Ypocrisie is a braunche of pruyde, and most among clerkes
And ylikned in Latyn to lothliche doung hep
That were by snowe al whit snow, and snakes whit ynne.
Piers Ploughman, p. 378.

That weren pale and fade hewed
And as a busshe, whiche is besnewed,
There bestes werein hore and white.—Gower. Con. A. b. 1.

So mochell loye of hym thei made.
The presentes euery daie bene newed,
He was with yeftes all besnewed. Id. Ib. b. vi.

Virgins of equal birth, of equal years,
Whose virtues hold with thine an emulous strife,
Shall draw thy picture, and record thy life:
One shall enaphere thine eyes, another shall
Impearl thy teeth, a third thy white and small
Hand shall besnow, a fourth incarnadine
Thy rosy cheek. Carew. To the Lady Anne Hay.

BE-SNUFFED. To cover with snuff; i. e. something sniffed, or snuffed.

She drawe her wordes, and waddles in her pace;
Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face.
Young, Sat. 6.

BE'SOM. "Geclænsod mid besmum," (Matt. xii. 44.) Ger. & Dut. Besem. Perhaps, says Wachter, from Ger. Butzen, mundare, to cleanse, as Martinius conjectures.

Any thing to cleanse or sweep clean.

Thenne he saith I schal turne agen into myn hous fro whennes I went out, and he comith and fyndith it void and clensid out with besymes and maad fair.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 12.

And I wyll swepe them out with the besome of distruction, sayeth the Lorde of Hostes.—Bible, 1551. Isaiah, c. 14.

Amongst the rest the tamarlake there stood,
For huswive's besomes onely knowne most good.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

Against that time, or not much before, the very besomes wherewith the noblemen's curia used to be swept, were seene to bloome and beare blossomes: and this portended, that some persons of most contemptible and base condition, were to be raised unto high degrees of rule and authoritie.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 332.

He [a minister] might be permitted to brandish his besom without remorse, and brush down every part of the furniture, without sparing a single cobweb, however sacred by long prescription.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 109.

BE-SORE. Sorrowed, aggrieved, afflicted.

So him they led into the courts of day,
Where never war, nor wounds abide him more,
But in that house eternal peace doth play,
Arquieting the souls, that new besore
Their way to heav'n through their own blood did score.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

BE-SORT, v. } To arrange, and dispose
BE-SORT, s. } into distinct classes or kinds. Besort seems to be used by Shakespeare as we now use consort, or assort.

——— Be then desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begges,
A little to disquantity your traine,
And the remainders that shall still depend,
To be such men as may besort your age,
Which know themselues and you.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

——— [I] do vndertake
This present warres against the Ottamites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place, and exibition,
With such accommodation and besort
As leuens with her breeding.—Id. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

BE-SOT. } From sodden, sod, sot; one
BESO'TTEDLY. } who soddens himself, (sc.) with BESO'TTEDNESS. } drinking. Such a man we also call a soaker. Thersites calls Ajax "a soddenwitted lord." See SODDEN, SOT.

What forste the foole to loue
His beastly vile lyfe?
Was cause that he besotted was
Of Agamemnons wyfe.
Turberville. The Louer to Cupid, &c.

They sought to apprehend Jesus: Why, who did hinder them? Was he not there among them? Was there not enough of them to do it? Yes, there was: but yet they only stand gazing at him, like men besotted, till he escaped away from them.—Hopkins, Ser. 9.

After ten or twelve years prosperous war and contestation with tyranny [they] basely and besottedly run their necks again into the yoke which they have broken, and prostrate all the fruits of their victory for naught at the feet of the vanquished.—Milton. Free Commonwealth.

For God, when men sin outragiously, and will not be admonish'd, gives over chastizing them, perhaps by pestilence, fire, sword, or famine, which may all turn out to their good, and takes up his severest punishments, hardness, besottedness of heart, and idolatry, to their final perdition.
Id. Of True Religion, &c.

Or fools besotted with their crimes,
That know not how to shift betimes,
That neither have the hearts to stay
Nor wit enough to run away.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

Pyrrho, as he affected not to believe his senses, affected also to be free from all passions and emotions. for when Anaxarchus, his master and fellow-traveller, happened to fall into a ditch, that worthy sceptic passed on without once looking behind him: for which indifference his besotted master is said to have held him in great admiration.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 2.

BE-SOUR. To cause sourness, or acidity; to destroy the sweet taste or flavour.

How should we abhor, and loath, and detest this old leaven that so besoures all our actions; this heathenism of unregenerate carnal nature, which makes our best works so unchristian.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 15.

BE-SPA'NGLE. To cover, to array, with spangles, with any thing shining.

For now the last day's evening dew
Even to the full itself doth shew,
Each bough with pearl bespangling.
Drayton, Nymphal 8.

Thou ever glorious, most excellent,
God, various in names, in essence one,
High art installed on a golden throne,
Out-stretching heaven's wide bespangled vault,
Transcending all the circles of our thought.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

A sudden star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair,
Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
The heaven bespangling with dishevell'd light.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 5.

Its [the Opah Dorée] general color was a vivid transparent scarlet varnish over burnished gold, bespangled with oval silver spots of various sizes.—Pennant. British Zoology.

BE-SPA'TTER. To spit, to spatter or sputter.

We may keep our consciences clear both from crimes and from faults also, while we labour to clense them from their defilements, and to rub out and wash away those spots with which at any time we are occasionally bespatter'd.
Hopkins, Ser. 26.

BE-SPA'TTLE. } To spit; to spattle; to
BE-SPAWL. } spaul.

They bespatled hym and byspitted him.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Old Proteus hath been known to leave his finny herd,
And in their sight to spunge his foam-bespawled beard.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

See how this remonstrant would invest himself conditionally with all the rheum of the town, that he might have sufficient to bespaul his brethren.
Milton. Animad. upon Remonst. Defence.

Well! (then) thou wilt bespawle, (and) bedribble the ashes of unhappy Rochell.—Bp. Hall. To Pope Urban.

BE-SPEAK. }
BESPE'AKER. }
BESPE'AKING, s. } To speak; to utter, or give utterance to words; to emit, to tell, to announce; to make known; to pronounce; to declare.

To speak, (sc.) a wish, an order; as to bespeak any thing of a tradesman. In this application Skinner calls it a most elegant word; and without parallel in any language known to him.

So that ther com out of an wode, as yt was byspeke,
An syx thousend of Brutons, her felawes vor to awreke.
R. Gloucester, p. 211.

And suththe he nom the thridde, best of ech on,
As it was er bespeke, to wuch he scolde truste.—Id. p. 554.

And whan that they have y etin
And washin have their hondes,
Tho thou shalt bespeken them all,
To bring the out of bondes.—Chaucer. The Cokes Tale.

This answer giuen, Argantes wilde drew nar,
Trembling for ire, and waxing pale for rage,
Nor could he hold, his wrathen creast so far,
But thus (inflam'd) bespake the captain sage:
Who scorneth peace, shall haue his fill of war
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. ii. s. 88

Bid yonder man come home to me and dine
(Quoth I) bespeake him reuerently (you see)
Scorne not his habit, little canst thou tell
How rich a mind in those meane rags doth dwell.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 536.

They mean not with love to the bespeaker of the work, but with a love and delight in the work itself
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 51.

What will you say to him in a dying hour, who scarce ever had one serious thought of him all your life? Can you have the face at that time to bespeak him in this manner? Lord, now the world and my lusts have left me, and I feel myself ready to sink into eternal perdition, I lay hold upon thy mercy to deliver my soul from going down into the pit.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 34.

It has been my misfortune, Sir, very innocently to rejoice in a plentiful fortune, of which I am master, to bespeak a fine chariot, to give direction for two or three handsome snuff boxes, and as many suits of fine cloathes.
Spectator, No. 320

A preface, therefore, which is but a bespeaking of favour, is altogether useless.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, Pref

——— Ah, answer not the strain!
Thy wasted wealth, thy widow's sighs,
Thy half-repentant embassies
Bespeak thy cause unblest, thy councils vain.
Mason, Ode 9.

There dwelt a sage call'd Discipline. His head,
Not yet by time completely silver'd o'er,
Bespoke him past the bounds of freakish youth,
But strong for service still, and unimpair'd.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BE-SPE'CKLE. Dut. Spickelen; from Spicken, to spit. Spot is the matter spitten, spate or spitted. So Speckle, from the Dutch.

Her chaste and modest vail, surrounded with celestial beams, they over-laid with wanton tresses, and in a flaring tire bespeckl'd her with all the gaudy allurements of a whore
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i. c. 9.

BE-SPENT. Spend; past part. spent. From the Lat. Pendere, to weigh, (Wachter.)

To weigh out; to give out; to distribute; to bestow.

———No man nor God
Could let his eie on it: a sleight so odde
His art shewd in it. All his craft bespent
About the bed: he faind, as if he went
To well-built Lemnos.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii

BE-SPET. } To spit. See BESPATTLE, and
BESPI'T. } the example from Bale.

Than was his visage, that ought to be desired to be seen of all mankind (in which visage angels desiren to loke) vilainsly bespet.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And they smyten his heed with a reed, and bispatten him and thei knelidon and worschipden him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 15.

And they smote him on ye heade with a rede, and spate vpon him, and kneled downe and worshypped hym.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And so therwith Jesus (at Pilates cõmaundement) cummeth furth as he was apparcled, bounde, scourged and beate, bespitted, crowned with a crowne of thorne, and wearyng the purple garment. And Pilate presented hym, saying. Beholde the man is here.—Udal. John, c. 19.

BE-SPICE. Spices are, says Wachter, various species (sc.) of aromatics. Junius and Skinner are to the same purport.

To scatter, to season, to flavour, with spice.

Sibylla out of her furious and enraged mouth, as Heraclitus saith, uttering forth and resounding words without mirth, and provoking no laughter, not gloriously painted and set out, nor pleasantly perfumed and bespiced, hath continued with her voice a thousand years, by the means of Apollo, speaking by her.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 969.

———And thou
His cup-bearer, whom I from meaner forme
Haue bench'd, and rear'd to worship, who mayst see
Plainely, as heauen sees earth, and earth sees heauen,
How I am gall'd, might'st bespice a cup,
To giue mine enemy a lasting winke.
Shakespeare. Winter Tale, Act i. sc. 2

BE-SPOT. Spot; i. e. the matter spitten, spate, spitted, is the past part. of spit; and upon it the verb, to spot, to bespot, is formed.

To cover, to sprinkle, to mark with spots, any thing small as, foul as, spots, or matter spitten. See Bespet.

Bespotted all with shields of red and black,
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,
And of three furlongs does but little lack.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Thy blameful lines, bespotted so with sin,
Mine eye would cleanse, ere they to read begin:
But I to wash an Indian go about,
For ill so hard set on is hard got out.
Drayton. Matilda to K. John.

BE-SPREAD. To extend or stretch out, to expand or lay open, to expose, to diffuse.

There came of armed knights such a rout
That they bespread the large field about Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

For he hir kirtell fonde also,
And eke her mantell both two
Bespred vpon the bed aloft.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

At peep of day, when, in her crimson pride,
The morn bespreads with roses all the way,
Where Phœbus' couch, with radiant course must glide,
The hermit bends his humble knees to pray
Thomas Lodge. Ellis, vol. ii.

But oh! what terrors must distract the soul
Convicted of that mortal crime, a hole;
Or should one pound of powder less bespread
Those monkey-tails that wag behind their head!
Pope. Imit. of Donne, Sat. 4.

——The chief
In perturbation of indignant wrath
Was striding o'er the carpet, which bespread
His rich pavilion's floor. Glover. Athenaid, b. xxi.

BE-SPRENT. To besprinkle, (qv.)

The enchanteres seide, that me a childe sogte,
That were y gete with oute fader, & that me y^{t} thider brogte,
And slow y^{t}, and mid the blode bisprenge wel here ston.
R. Gloucester, p. 128.

[He] bispreynde bothe thilke book and al the peple & seide this is the blood of the testament that God commaundide to ghou. Also he spreynde with blood the tabernacle and alle the veasels of the seruyse in lyk maner.—Wiclif. Ebrew. c 9.

To pity ran I all bespreint with teares,
To prayen her on cruelty me awreake,
But or I might with any word out breake,
Or tell her any of my pains smart,
I found her dead, and buried in an herte
Chaucer. The Floure of Courtesie.

His eyes were red, and all forwacht;
His face besprent with teares:
It seemed unhap had him long hatcht,
In middes of his dispaires.
Uncertaine Auctors. Complaint of Phylida.

And first within the porch and lawes of hell
Sate deep remorse of conscience, all besprent
With teares. Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 26.

So fairest Phosphor, the bright morning star,
But newly wash'd in the green element,
Before the drowsey night is half aware,
Shooting his flaming locks with dew besprent,
Springs lively up into the orient.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

But who is he, in closet close y pent,
Of sober face, with learned dust besprent?
Right well mine eyes arede the myster wight,
On parchment scraps y-fed, and Wormius hight.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

They ceas'd: when on the tuneful stage
Advanc'd a bard, of aspect sage;
His silver tresses, thin besprent,
To age a graceful reverence lent
Warton. The Grave of King Arthur.

BE-SPRINKLE. To scatter, to asperse.

He with his handes strane to vnloose the knottes,
Whose sacred fillettes all besprinkled were
With filth of gory blod, and venim rank.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

This victorious horse man hath vpon his white vesture besprinckled with bloud, which is his innocent mãhood crucified.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

Besides them both, vpon the soiled grass
The dead corse of an armed knight was spred,
Whose armour all with blood besprinkled was.
Spenser Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

And hauing cast herselfe about his necke embrued with blood, kept still the blood, and her apparell besprinkled with it, remaining a widow, drown'd in continuall griefe.
Greneway. Tacites, p. 242.

But in her temple's last recess enclos'd
On Duiness' lap th' anointed head repos'd,
Him close she curtains round with vapours blue,
And soft besprinkles with Cimmerian dew.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

And thou, sweet moon! canst tell a softer tale;
To thee the maid, thy likeness, fair and pale,
In pensive contemplation oft applies,
When parted from her lov'd and loving swain,
And looks on you with tear-besprinkled eyes.—Jenyns. Ode.

BE-SPURT. To spurt or sprout; to shoot or cast forth.

Now haply he had a fling at the Lacedæmonians and gave them a blur with his pen, because in the train and consequence of the story, they came so just under it, but the city of the Corinthians, which was clean out of his way, he hath notwithstanding taken it with him and besparted and dashed as he passed by, with a most grievous slander and heavy imputation.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1004.

I suppose, and more than suppose, it will be nothing disagreeing from Christian meekness, to handle such a one in a rougher accent and to send home his haughtiness wel bespurted with his own holy water.
Milton. Animad. upon Remonst. Defence.

BEST, adj. Best, ad. Be'stness. } Goth. Batista; A. S. Bet-est, Best, the best, the choicest, the chiefest. From A. S. Beterian, Betrian, to excel, to surpass; and Beterian, from Betan, to beat, to make better, to correct, repair, amend. Dut. Beste; Ger. Best; Sw. Betste. Used as the superlative of good.

Most good; having the greatest, the highest degree of goodness; that has nothing better; exceeding or excelling all.

And he nom with hym tuelue men the beste that with hym were.—R. Gloucester, p. 14.

He byhet hem the best lawes, that euere were yfounde.
Id. p. 386.

——To gider gan thei mete,
A kyng & a soudan of alle the world the beste.
R. Brunne, p. 190.

Have here my trouth, to-morwe I will not faille,
Withouten wetting of any wight,
That here I wol be founden as a knight,
And bringen harneis right ynough for thee;
And chese the beste, and leve the werste for me.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1612.

Gret chere made oure hoste us everich on,
And to the souper sette he us anon;
And served us with vitaille of the beste.
Strong was the win, and wel to drinke us leste.
Id. Prologue to the Knightes Tale, v. 749.

Either he shall blind the eyes of your enemies and diminish theyr tyrannous power, or else when he hath suffred them to do their best, he shall cause euen the very earth to open her mouth, and swalow them up.—Frith. Workes, p. 82.

We tell thẽ also that al the best that the best man may do, is yet no more thã his duety, for euerye man is of his duetye bounden to labour for heauen, and to serue & please God as muche as he maye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 363.

Many from Harfleur carry'd sick and lame,
Fitter for spitals and the surgeons care,
Than with their swords on us to win them fame.
Unshod and without stockings are the best,
And those by winter miserably oppress.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt

Generally the bestness of a thing (that we may so call it) is best discerned by the necessary use.
Bp. Morton. Episcopacy Asserted, c. 4.

I argue thus the world agrees
That he writes well, who writes with ease
Then he, by sequel logical,
Writes best, who never thinks at all.
Prior. Epist. to F. Shepherd, Esq.

Eucrates is the best natur'd of all men; but that natural softness has effects quite contrary to itself; and for want of due bounds to his benevolence, while he has a will to be a friend to all, he has the power of being such to none.
Tatler, No. 176.

The lingering disorder of a friend of mine gave me occasion lately to reflect, that we are always in the best moral disposition, when afflicted with sickness.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vii. Let. 26.

Now goes the nightly thief prowling abroad
For plunder, much solicitous how best
He may compensate for a day of sloth
By works of darkness and nocturnal wrong.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BE-STAIN. To tinge, to dye; to sully. See Distain.

And what maner of men were the Romans? in good faith no better but a sort of ragged shepherdes, which being not able to get thẽ wiues for the dishonesty of theyr beginning, were fain to rauish them by open force, and, to be short, which builded their city with most cruel and vnaturall murder, and bestained the foundations of theyr walles with brothers bloud.—Golding. Justine, p. 117.

The cause why thus I lead him in my hand,
His skin with blood and teares so sore bestain'd,
Is that thou maist the better vnderstand,
How hardly fortune hath for vs ordain'd,
In whom her loue and hate be whole contain'd.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 300.

Which made him rend his milk-white locks,
And tresses from his head,
And all with blood bestain his cheeks,
With age and honour spread.
King Lear, &c. Percy, vol. i.

BE-STEAD. To be in stead; to be in place; to be placed, disposed, situated, circumstanced; well or ill. To put or stand in stead, good or bad; to support, to assist, to serve.

The thrid eschele [division] fulle hard was bistad,
The templers lik a dele fained & thuen fled.
R. Brunne, p. 100

For were a manne for her bestadde
She would ben right sore adradde.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose

Have ye not seen somtime a pale face
(Among a prees) of him that hath ben lad
Toward his deth, wher as he geteth no grace,
And swiche a colour in his face hath had,
Then mighten know him that was so bestad.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5065.

She saith, that she shall not be glad,
Till that she se hym so bestad,
That he no more make auaunt.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For though I be my seluen strange,
Enuie maketh myn hert change,
That I am sorrowfully bestadde
Of that I see another gladde.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Rowland, for shame, awake thy drowsy Muse,
Time plays the hunt's-up to thy sleepy head;
Why ly'st thou here, whilst we are ill bested,
Foul idle swain? Drayton, Ecl. 3.

In this ship was great store of dry Newland fish, commonly called with us Poore John, whereof afterwards (being thus found a lawfull prize) there was distribution made unto all the ships of the fleet, the same being so new and good as it did very greatly bestead us in the whole course of our voyage.—Sir Francis Drake. West India Voyage.

He who looks so deformedly and dismally, who to outward sight is so ill bestead, and so pitifully accoutred, hath latent in him much of admirable beauty and glory.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31

BE'STIALIZE. Be'stial, adj. Be'stial, n. Be'stiality. Bestia'lity. } To bring or reduce to the state or condition of a beast. See Brast.

Lo here the case especiall
If a man be so bestiall
That he of no craft hath science
And nought desireth ignorence
Than may he go a begging yerne.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

And eke of that thou herdest saie
To take a mans herte awele
And set there a bestiall,
So that he like an oxe shall Pasture. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Or art thou like an asse to the harpe
That hereth soun, whan men ye strings plye?
But in his minde, of that no melodie
May sinke him to gladen, for that he
So dull is, in his bestialite.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

These liues bẽ thorow names departed in three maner of kinds as bestialliche, manlyche and reasonablliche, of which two beene vsed by fleshly body, and the thirde by his soul. Bestial among reasonables is forboden in euery lawe and euery sect, both in Christen and other.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

This kinde of folk is so far fallẽ not only frõ all Christẽ charitye, but also frõ all humanitie & feling of any good affeccio natural, and so chãged into a wild fierce cruel appetite more thã brutish & bestial, that they first wtout groud or cause take theyr frendes for their foes I atig ye church deadly, because it willeth their weale & laboureth to amẽd thẽ.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 314.

Eyeing well the beastiality of the Flemynges his neighbours, how litle they understood the great weakning of their countrye by the losse of Calice, and that there was no new prouision made for the defence thereof more than was before.
Grafton. Queen Mary, an. 5.

For what did he who with his ten-tongu'd lute
Gave beasts and blocks an understanding ear?
Or rather into bestial minds and brute
Shed and infus'd the beams of reason clear.
Davies. On Dancing.

In all the true pleasures which ever fell to my lot, they [reason and reflection] had a considerable share; and where they are wanting, there is no such thing as pleasure of any kind for me, and humanity is debased and bestialized where it is otherwise.—Phil. Letters on Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 87.

On the other side, the sages figur'd lust in the form of a SATYR, of shape, part human, part bestial; to signify, that the followers of it prostitute the reason of a man to pursue the appetites of a beast.—Tatler, No. 49.

He that is the husband of a woman of honour, and comes home overloaded with wine, is still more contemptible, in proportion to the regard we have to the unhappy consort of his beastiality.—Id No. 241.

And what the joy this lore bestows?
Alas! no joy, no hope it knows
Above what bestiale claim:
To quench our noblest native fire,
That bids to nobler worlds aspire,
Is all its hope, its aim.—Mickle, Ode I.

Thus fornication, incest, rape, and even bestiality, were sanctified by the amours of Jupiter, Pan, Mars, Venus, and Apollo.—Goldsmith, Ess. II.

BE-STICK. To stick, pierce, or thrust through.

——— Truth shall retire
Bestuck with slandrous darts, and works of faith
Rarely be found: so shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benigne.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

BE-STILLED. To make quiet, or still; to calm; to tranquillize.

The choral Muses droop! their harps unstrung,
The lutes and laurel wreaths neglected fall!
Commerce bestill'd her many-nation'd tongue,
Whilom so busy in her bustling hall.
Cunningham. An Elegiac Ode.

BE-STIR. To stir, to move.

Besturrith the, gode Adam, and
Ne letteth none yfle,
And we shall telle largily
How many here there be.
Chaucer. The Cokes Tale of Gamelyn.

So left he both sheilde and spere,
As he that might hym not bestere,
And heilde hym his chamber close.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The first precedents of evil must be carefully avoided, if we care to keepe a constant order in good. Prudence cannot better besture it selfe, than in keeping mischiefe from home.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Ahasuerus Feasting.

A stupid butt is only fit for the conversation of ordinary people: men of wit require one that will give them play, and bestir himself in the absurd part of his behaviour.
Spectator, No. 47.

BE-STORM. Dut. Bestormen; Ger. Besturmen, Sw. Bestorma.
To toss or drive about; to agitate, to rage, to rave.

Yield not in storms of state to that dislike
Which from the people does to rulers grow;
Pow'r (fortune's sail) should not for threatnings strike,
In boats bestorm'd all check at those that row.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 6.

Religion! providence! an after-state!
Here is firm footing! here is solid rock!
This can support us; all is sea besides;
Sinks under us; bestorms, and then devours.
Young. Complaint, Night 4.

BE-STOW. } Dut. Stouwen; Sw. Stufwa;
BESTO'WING. } A. S. Stow, locus; "Whence,"
BESTO'WED. } says Lye, "to stow, or bestow; collocare, sive in loco ponere." To the same purport, Somner.
To put, lay, or place; to confer, to give, to grant, to apply, to employ.

For by my trouth, I have on min array,
And not in waste, bestowed it every del,
And for I have bestowed it so wel
For your honour, for Goddes sake I say,
As beth not wrothe, but let us laugh and play
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,348.

The leed after Saturne groweth,
And Jupiter the brasse bestoweth.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

I will therefore bestow my labour & diligence, throw this little preface or prologue, to prepare a way in thereunto, so farre forth as God shall geue me grace.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 39.

If thou aske me what his commaûdementes are touching the bestowing of thy goodes? I answer his commaundements are that thou bestowe them in workes of mercye, and that shall he laye to thy charge at the daye of iudgement.
Frith. Workes, p. 89.

Ye ought not to esteme menne, that supply the Apostles office, but as reason would that stewardes and bestowars of other mennes goodes, should be regarded.
Udal Coriu. c. 4.

And then to when there be no mo poore men lefte that ye maye bestow your money vpon, go to then good Christians in Gods name and bestowe the remanaunt whereon ye will.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 673.

Britons, you stay too long,
Quickly aboard bestow you,
And with a merry gale
Swell your stretch'd sail.
Drayton. Ode to the Virginian Voyage.

The several names of God, which the writer De Mundo instanceth in, to prove him Polyonymous, are first of all such as these; the Thunderer and Lightner, the Giver of Rain, the Bestower of Fruits.—Cudworth. Intel. Syst. p. 482.

Bell. Good Euphanes,
Where benefits
Are ill conferr'd, as to unworthy men,
That turn them to bad uses, the bestower
For wanting judgement how, and on whom to place them
Is partly guilty.
Beaum. & Fletch. Queen of Corinth, Act I. sc. 2.

Almighty God, though he really doth, and cannot otherwise doe, yet will not seem to bestow his favours altogether gratis, but to expect some competent return, some small use and income from them.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 8.

Nor frigid caution checks thy free design,
Nor stops thy stream of eloquence divine.
For thine the privilege, on few bestow'd,
To feel, to think, to speak, for public good.
Warton. On the Death of George II.

BE-STRAUGHT. Minshew has Bestract, from the Latin; distracted in mind. See DISTRACT and DISTRAUGHT.

In joy yt maks our mirthe abounde
In woe yt cheres our hevy sprites;
Be straughted hedes relyfe hath founde,
By musickes pleasaunte swete delightes
Song to the Lute. Percy, vol. I.

O Goddesse sonne, in such case canst thou slepe?
Ne yet, bestraught, the daungers doest foresee
That compasse thee? or hearst the faire windes blowe?
Surrey. Virgile. Æneas, b. iv.

Now teares had drowned further speech,
'Till she, as one bestraught,
Did crie that with a knife the babe
Should to her bed be brought.
Warner. Albion's England, b. I. c. 2.

Some among them, of the baser sort, having their wits and senses dulled by continuall drunkennesse (which Cato by his sentence hath defined to be a voluntarie kind of furie) are ravished and bestraught with wild and wandering cogitations.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 51.

The ordinary custome and behaviour of such foolish and bestraught persons sufficiently convinceth, that they are past themselves, and have lost the discourse of reason.
Id. Plutarch, p 783.

BE-STREAK. "Strice," says Somner, "a line, a stroke or streke with a pen or the like." Wachter, from the Ger. Streichen; (A. S. Stican, to stretch) because a line is the production of a point into length.
To strike, or draw, to mark with lines of various colour.

Besides, as presents for my soul's delight
Two beauteous kids I keep bestreak'd with white,
Nourish'd with care, nor purchased without pain,
An ewe's full udder twice a day they drain.
Beattie. Virgil, Past. 3.

BE-STREW. To stray, to scatter, to spread, to disperse.

——— There men of the toune
Slowe hom al to grounde, that there hii leie ther doun
So thicke bestrete, that reuthe it was to se.
R. Gloucester, p. 461.

Good-morning to this primrose too!
Good morrow to each maid,
That will with flowers the tomb bestrew
Wherein my love is laid.
Herrick. The Mad Maid's Song. Ellis, vol. iii.

It is not long, the way's bestrew'd with flow'rs,
With shouts to echoing heav'ns and mountains roll'd,
Since, as in triumph, I thee did behold
In royal pomp approach proud Sion's tow'rs.
Drummond. On the Virgin Mary.

——— The water odorous,
In which they washt, what to the rites was vow'd,
Aretus (in a caldron, all bestrowd
With herbes and flowres) seru'd in form th' holy roome
Where all were drest.—Chapman, Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

When twice twelve times the reaper's sweeping hand,
With level'd harvests has bestrown the land;
On fam'd St Hubert's feast, his winding horn
Shall cheer the joyful hound, and wake the morn.
Gay. The Birth of the Squire.

Pale pansies o'er his corpse were plac'd,
Which pluck'd before their time,
Bestrew'd the boy, like him to waste
And wither in their prime. Collins, Son. 8.

BE-STRIDE. To spread abroad; to separate, to stretch asunder. Generally applied to the legs.

——— And lyarde he by strydeth
And rapede hym to ryde, the righte way to Jerim
Piers Ploughman, p. 325.

His goode stede he al bestrode.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,831.

If sound of harp thyne ear delighted so
And causer was that he bestrid thy back,
Then doubtlesse thou moughst well on Brooke bestow
As good a tune to saue him from the wrack.
Turbervile. An Epitaph on Maistre Brooke.

Manhod I am—therefore I me delyght,
To hunt and hawke, to nourishe up and fede,
The grayhounde to the course, the hawke to the flyght,
And to bestryde a good and lusty stede.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 3.

Bass. My birth is noble, though the popular blast
Of vanity, as giddy as thy youth,
Hath rear'd thy name up to bestride a cloud,
Or progress in the chariot of thy sun.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 2

Mean time refracted from yon eastern cloud,
Bestriding earth, the grand ethereal bow
Shoots up immense; and every hew unfolds,
In fair proportion running from the red,
To where the violet fades into the sky.—Thomson. Spring

Bring me the bells, the rattle bring,
And bring the hobby I bestrode;
When, pleas'd in many a sportive ring,
Around the room I jovial rode.
Shenstone. Ode to Memory

BE-STRUT. See ASTRUT.
Swelled out, distended; (sc.) so as to stand apart.

It chanced that a bitch wolfe having newly whelped her litter, and feeling her paps bestrut with milk, and so stiffe, by reason that her young ones were dead, that they aked again, and were ready to burst, seeking to be eased and to discharge her selfe thereof came gently to the babes, stooped down, and seemed to wind about them, put unto them her teats, desirous and labouring to be delivered of her milk, as if it had been a second litter.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 519

BE-STUD. A stud appears to be any thing fixed; from Stod, stud; the past part. of the verb To stand: applied to denote—
To cover with (e. g.) nails, or heads of nails, or similar ornament;—similar in form;—to bespot.

And when the golden glorious sun goes down,
Would she put on her star-bestudded crown
Drayton. John to Matilda

Then they decreed certaine presents, that the embassadours should carry unto the king: to wit, two purple souldiers cassocks, each of them with a claspe of golde; and as many rich coates embrodered and bestudded with purple.
Holland. Livie, p. 752.

BE-SWA'DDLED. Fastened together (with swathes, or ligatures.)

Hence cradles, see! with lisping statesmen spawn,
And infant limbs beswaddled in the lawn.
Whitehead. Epistle to Dr. Thomson.

BE-SWIKE. A. S. Swican, Beswican.
To betray, to deceive, to seduce, to offend. (Somner.)

Syre, he seyde, yeh was ysworе to hym ar to the,
And gyf yeh adde hym byswyke, the worе thou wost leue me
R. Gloucester, p. 272

Now is Edward left Berwik for to dike,
The Scottis er risen eft, Inglond to biswike.
R. Brunne, p. 273

In womens voice thei singe,
With notes of so great likyng,
Of suche measure, of such musike,
Whereof the shippes thei beswike
That passen by the costes there.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

BE-SWYNKE. A. S. Swincan, to labour, to travell, to take paines. Hence with Chaucer, Swinker, for a labourer, (Somner.)

But loke whou this lorels laboren the erthe
But freten the fruyt that the folke ful lollich beswynketh.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

That ilk voice, whiche men call
Of robbery, he taketh no honde
Of thyng, whiche other men beswynke,
He getteth hym clothe, mete, and drinke.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

BET, v.
BET, n.
BE'TTING.
BE'TTOR.

Perhaps from the A. S. Betan, to better, to support, (sc.) to support an opinion by risking, staking, any thing upon it.

Shal. Dead? See, see: hee drew a good bow: and dead? hee shot a fine shoote. John of Gaunt loued him well, and betted much money on his head.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc 2.

——— Thou play'st, he bets upon thy part,
Altho' thou lose, yet he will gain by thee.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act v. sc. 1.

Nym. You'l pay me the eight shillings
I won of you at betting.—Shakes. Hen. V. Act ii. sc 1.

Cle. Why what should a man doe?
Tru. Why, nothing: or that, which when 'tis done, is as idle. Harken after the next horse-race, or hunting match, lay wagers, &c.—visit my ladyes at night, and be able to give 'hem the character of every bowler or bettor o' the green.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act i. sc. 1.

The hoary fool, who many days
Has struggled with continued sorrow,
Renews his hope, and blindly lays
The desperate bett upon to morrow.
Prior. Ode to the Hon. C. Montague.

The god, unhappily engag'd,
By nature rash, by play enrag'd,
Complain'd, and sigh'd, and cried and fretted;
Lost every earthly thing he betted.
Id. Cupid & Ganymede.

Tho' age thy witherd front with wrinkles plough,
And blanch the hoary honours of thy brow;
Tho' sanguine gamesters bett, against thy life,
Thou unconcern'd shalt hear the wagering strife.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. v.

The gamester too, whose wits all high or low
Oft risks his fortune on one desperate throw,
Comes here to saunter, having made his bets,
Finds his lost senses out, and pays his debts.
Goldsmith. Epilogue to the Gamester.

BE-TAG. To tack or tag. Fr. Attacher, to knit, bind, connect. For an example, see BESCUTCHEON.

BE-T'AILED. Tail is the part attached, appended to the end, the lower end of an animal; the lower or latter part or end; (to the head of a man.)

Thus betailed and bepowdered, the man of taste fancies he improves in beauty, dresses up his hard-featured face in smiles, and attempts to look hideously tender.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 3.

BE-TAKE.
BETA'UGHT.
BETO'KE.

Wiclif constantly renders the Latin Trado, bitake. "A. S. Betæcan, to impart, to deliver to, to commit upon trust, to put in trust with." See BETECHE.

To take to, commit to, deliver to, convert to; to take, resort, or recur to.

Alas! alas! of Engelond ne con ych none rede.
Vor gyf ych ym [it] bytake my soster sone Steuene de Bleya,
Vor he nys nogt rygt eyr, he ne worth neuere peys.
And gyf ych ym bytake the rygt eyr Henry, my dogter sone,
That nys nogt gut thre ger oud, yt worth hym sone by nom.
R. Gloucester, p. 443.

Of holy kirke's frute he gaf the kyng the tende
Gadrid with clerkis hand, and kept to that vnge,
Wendand to Scotland, betechet it the baronage,
The lond for to saue. R. Brunne, p. 299.

In his sextend gere Stuen that the lond auht,
Maid echo died here, hir soule to God betauht.—Id. p. 126.

Judas Scarioth wente forth to the princis of prestis, and seide to him what wolen ye give to me and I schal bitake him to you.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 26.

Now swiche a rime the devil I betache.
Chaucer. Prol. to Melibœus, v. 13,852.

And hem she yaf hire mebles and hire thing,
And to the Pope Urban betoke hem tho.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 16,009.

I hope I woll comforted be,
For loue, when he betaught her me,
Saied, that hope where I go,
Should aye be release to my wo.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

The kynge assenteth well thereto,
With great honour and knight him maketh,
And great power to hym betaketh
And gan his iourney for to cast.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

I finde a tale written also,
Howe that a worthie prince is holde
The lawes of his londe to holde
Fyrst for the high goddes sake,
And eke for that him is betake
The people for to guide and lede.
Whiche is the charge of his kinge hede.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

And whenne the sayde Constantyne had all preparyd for his voyage, he betoke ye lande of Britayne vnto the sayd Octauius, and after sped hym vpon his journey.
Fabyan, c. 68.

Forsooth, mother, my ring is a goe,
My paramour to keepe I betooke it,
And it is lost, for which I am full woe,
Sorrow fully unto mine heart it sit.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

I observed to the windward of me a black cloud falling to the earth in long trails of rain, which made me betake myself for shelter to a house which I saw at a little distance from the place where I was walking.—Tatler, No. 218.

On the slightest loss they [the Britains] betook themselves to treaty and submission.
Burke. Abridg. of Eng. Hist. b. i. c. 1.

BE-TALK. To tell, to count, to give an account.

For their so valiant fight, that every free mans song,
Can tell you of the same, quoth she, be-talk'd on long.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

BE-TA'LLOW. To cover with the mixture of fat greasy substances called tallow, (qv.)

I will slice out thy towels with thine own razor, betallow thy tweezes.
Ford. The Fancies, Chaste & Noble, Act i. sc. 2.

BE-TEAR. Junius thinks from the A. S. Tæran, to tear; because they tear or rush from the eyes, or rather, because they tear or lacerate the heart.

Alas, madam, answered Philoclea, I know not whether my tears become my eyes, but I am sure my eyes thus beteared, become my fortune.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

BE-TECHE.
BETAU'GHT.

Be-take and Be-teche are the same word differently applied. (See TAKE and TEACH.) "Betecheth the lore," i. e. "delivereth, conveyeth, imparteth the lore," "wisdom, which was him betaught," i. e. to him delivered, imparted. See BETAKE.

So as the philosophre techeth
To Alisander, and him betecheth
The lore, howe that he shall measure
His bodie, so that no measure
Of fleshly lust he shulde excede.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

So as the philosopher taught
To Alisander and it betaught
Whereof that he was fully taught
Of wisdom, which was him betaught.—Id. Ib.

BE-TEEM. Mr. Steevens produces in a note upon the passage from Hamlet quoted below, an usage of this word in Golding's Ovid's Metamorphoses, where from the corresponding Latin (sc. dignetur) he says it must necessarily signify, to vouchsafe, deign, permit or suffer. It is formed of the common prefix, Be, and the A. S. Tamian, Temian.

To tame, to subject, to submit or cause to submit, to suffer.

——— Yet could he not beteeme
The shape of anie other bird than egle for to seeme.
Golding. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

So excellent a king; this was, to this,
Hiperion to a satyre: so louing to my mother.
That he might not beteene [beteem] the windes of heaven
Visit her face too roughly.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

Although he could have well beteem'd to have thank'd him of the ease he profer'd, yet loving his own handy-work, modestly refus'd him.
Milton. Animad. upon Remonst. Defence.

BE-TEEM. A. S. Tym-an, to teem, to pour forth; to produce, to bear or bring forth abundantly; to yield, to bestow.

So would I, said th' enchaunter, glad and faine,
Beteeme to you this sword, you to defend,
Or ought that els your honour might maintaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c 8.

Her. Belike for want of raine, which I could well
Beteeme them from the tempest of mine eyes.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. sc. 1.

BE-THINK. To Think is to have, or cause to have, sensations or ideas; to feel, to perceive, to observe, to consider, to reflect.

Tho the emperour herde this, he by gan hym by thencke.
And hys wraththe toward the kyng, for drede of the erl, quenche.—R. Gloucester, p. 58.

And some bythogte, and tolde wat the bytokne was,
That the dragon of by Weste bytokned th kyng Arture,
And the beore som foul geant; that me saolde of yhure
Id. p. 203

———Siehtes ich by thenke
Thauh ich sytte thys seven ger. ich sholde nat wol telle
The harme that ich have idon.—Piers Ploughman, p. 93.

But at the last his maister him bethought
Upon a day, whan he his paper sought,
Of a proverbe, that saith this same word;
Wel bet is roten appel out of hord,
Than that it rote alle the remenant.
Chaucer. The Cokes Tale, v. 4391.

But at the last as I bethought
Wheder I should passe or nought,
I sawe come with a gladde chere
To me, a lusty bachelere.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

The iewe, whiche all vntrouth had,
And went vpon his fete beside
Bethought hym howe he might ride.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Of which when as they had debated long,
Of Berkeley castle they themselves bethought,
A place by nature that was wond'rous strong,
And yet far stronger eas'ly might be wrought.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. v.

Bethink yourselves beforehand what mercies you want, for which you should pray unto him; and what you have, for which you must praise God, as also how unworthy you are, either to retain what you have, or to receive what you want.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 145.

Ah! bethink how through thy regions
Midnight horrour fearful howl'd.
When, like wolves, the Danish legions
Through thy trembling forest prowl'd.—Mickle, Bal. 2.

BE-THRAL. To enslave; we now commonly use to enthral, (qv.)

For, shee it is that did my lord bethrall,
My dearest lord, and deep in dungeon lay,
Where he his better daies hath wasted all.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

BE-THROW. To throw, to cast, to cast down, to deject, to lay prostrate.

A holy fader all his trouthe
That ye may tell, I am be knowe,
That I with loue am so bethrowe,
And all my herte is so through sonke
That I am veriliche dronke.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

BE-THUMP. To beat, to strike; with heavy blows.

Zounds, I was neuer so bethump't with words,
Since I first called my brother's father dad.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 2.

BE-TIDE. To come, to come to pass, to happen, to bechance, to fall to the lot of.—Spenser writes the past part. betight.

Ac after mete, tho he adde yete & ydronke wel,
He nom on of hys priues, that het Water Tyrel,
And a uewe othere of hys men, & nolde non lenger abyde,
That he nolde to hys game, tyde wat so bytyde.
R. Gloucester, p. 418.

& suore him in leaute, how so euer betid,
Norwyche he suld be Erabishop sacrid.
R. Brunne, p. 208.

Quath Conscience to the kynge. Crist to me for bade
Er ich wedde suche a wif. wo me by tide.
Piers Ploughman, p. 46.

I blame him thus, that he considered nought,
In time coming what might him betide,
But on his lust present was all his thought,
And for to hauke and hunt on every side.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7954.

Lo this my sonne it maie the stere
Of sweuens for to take kepe.
For oft tyme a man aslepe
Maie se, what after shall betide.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Wyllyam was throwen from his horse, and in great ieopardy of his lyfe, wherof his sone Robert beynge ware, was so moued with pytie that he rescowed his fader, and delyured him fre from all danger of his enemyes: but how so it betyde of the kynge, trouth it is that many of his men were slayne, and his seconde sonne, Wyllyam the rede, sore hurte.—Fabyan, c. 222.

Why waile we then? why wearie we the gods with plaints,
As if some euill were to her befight?
Shee raignes a goddesse now among the saints,
That whilome was the saint of shepheard's light,
And is installed now in heauens hight.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar, November.

Ah hapleese boy, the fisher's joy and pride!
Ah, wo is us, we cannot help thy wo!
Our pity vain: ill may that swain betide
Whose undeserved spite hath wrong'd thee so.
P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 3.

Fair morning yet betides the Son of God,
After a dismal night: I heard the rack
As earth and sky would mingle.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

——What should then betide
But that our charity be not too nice?
Come, let us those we can to real bliss entice.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

Another lesson seek ye, other proof
Of vanity, and lamentable woe
Betiding man! Jago. Edge-Hill, b. iv.

BE-TIME. } By time; (sc.) good time, early
BETI'MES. } time.

Yebylle make the heymon, by tyme ychabbe ythogte,
That thou ne saalt vor thy lyflode neuere carye nogt.
R. Gloucester, p. 312.

If he bi tyme had gon thorh help of his Gascons,
Ther suld haf standen non, Philip no Charlons.
R. Brunne, p. 264.

This Pandare tooke the letter and betime
A morrow to his neecis pallaice stert,
And fast he swore, that it was passed prime.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

If thou wouldest nowe resorte vnto God betymes & make thine huble praier to the Almyghtye: yf thou wouldest lyue a pure and godlye life, shoulde he not wake vp vnto the immediately, & geue the, the bewtie of righteousness ageyne.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 8.

If thou wouldest seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty. If thou were pure and upright, surely now he would awake for thee and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.
Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

He that goes out betimes in the morning, is more like to dispatch his journey, than he that lingers till the day bee spent.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ among the Doctors.

When the first rays their cheering crimson shed,
We'll rise betimes to see the vineyard spread.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry. Solomon.

"I own, young woman," said I, "that there are some virtues upon that mind of your's; but there is still one which I do not see represented; I mean that of rising betimes in the morning."
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 45.

BE-TOKEN. } To mark, to signify, to de-
BETO'KENING, s. } signate, to notify, to denote, to show, to declare; to betake or beteach, (qqv.)

See an example from R. Gloucester under BETHINK.

Such was the morthre of Elnesham (uor batalle non it nas)
& ther with Jesu Crist wel vuele ipaied was,
As he seewede bitokninge grisliche & gode.
R. Gloucester, p. 560.

For whilt In trowthe bytokeneth, clennes in soule.
Piers Ploukman. Crede.

This sacrament [matrimony] betokeneth the knitting together of Christ and holy chirche.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

How that this world shall torne and wende
To, it be fal vnto his ende:
Wherof the tale teil I shall,
In which is betokened all.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

The angel which with both his handis lyfted vp into heaven swore by the lyuyng God was Cryst himself clothed in whight lynen which betokened that he shoulde in tyme to come be borne of the pure virgin Marie.
Joye. Expos. Daniel, c. 12.

For he maketh here as though he founde no fault, but in that the ministeractions of the sacraments be not opened and declared unto the people as though yf that were done he were content, and that he mocketh not the sacraments, but the mynysters openeth not the betokeninges thereof.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 374.

And also set about my herse
Two lamps to burne and not to queint
Whom shal betoken and reherse,
That my goodwil was neuer spent.
Incertaine Auctors. The Testament of the Hawthorne.

We are agreed vpon this, that the woordes we speake be tokens. But a token, onlesse it betoken some thinge, is no token.—Jewel. A Reply to M. Hardinge, p. 172.

Also to tollerate those thinges, whiche doo seeme bytter or greuous (whereof there be many in the lyfe of man, and in fortune) in such wyse as thou depart not from the astate of nature, neyther from the worshyp perteyninge vnto a wyse man, betokeneth a good courage, and also moche constaunce.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 14.

This rising fear betokeneth well thy mind,
Those arms are folded for thy Blouzelind,
Gay. The Shepherd's Week, Past. 1.

This, I say, being a current opinion, the wise men would be apt enough to conclude, that the present star betokened the birth of that prince, of whom (as they might easily have heard) it had been so very long foretold, "There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel."
Portens, Lect. 2.

BE-TORN. Pulled or rent asunder.

Or if nought els but death and bloud of man
Mought please thy lust, could none in Brittaine land,
Whose hart beforne out of his panting brest
With thine owne hand, or worke what death thou wouldst,
Suffice to make a sacrifice to peaze
That deadly minde and murderous thought in thee,
But he who in the selfesame wombe was wrapped,
Where thou in dismall bower receivedst life.
Sackville. Ferrex & Porrex, Act iv. sc. 1.

Dic. By my father's soule, Hodge, if I shulde now be sworne,
I cannot chuse but say thy breech is foule betorne.
Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act v. sc. 2.

BE-TOSS. Though the etymology is not ascertained, the meaning is plain.

To throw, to heave, to agitate See Toss.

Mercutius kinsman, noble Countie Paris,
What said my man, when my betossed soule
Did not attend him as he rode? I thinke
He tolde me Paris should haue married Juliet.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

Sancho being laid in the midst of the blanket, they began to toss him aloft, and sport themselves with him, in the manner they were wont to use dogs at Shrove-tide. The outcries of the miserably betossed Squire were so many and so loud, as they arrived at last to his Lord's hearing, who standing awhile to listen attentively what it was, believed that some new adventure did approach, until he perceived at last that he which cried was his Squire.
Shelton. Don Quixote, b. iii. c. 3.

BE-TRAP. Ger. and Dut. Betrappen. See ATTRAP.

To catch, to apprehend, to over-reach.

So excellent a clarke as was he
And other mo that couden ful well preache
Betraped wer, for aught that they coud teach.
Chaucer. The Letter of Cupide.

And that was loue, as it is happed,
Whiche hath her hertes so betrapped,
That thei by all weies seche,
How that thei might winne a speche.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And therefore Baldwine warne all states take heed,
How they conspire another to betrap,
Lest mischiefement, light in the miners lap.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 307.

When this was once noysed among the barons they were in great heauinesse, for they sawe themselues betrapped euery way, and to be in exceeding great daunger.
Grafton. King John, an. 15.

BE-TRAP. See ATTRAP.

To trap, to deck, to clothe.

After them followed two other chariots couered with red sattin, and the horses betrapped with the same.
Stowe. Queen Mary, an. 1553.

BE-TRA'SHED. Skinner says, deceptus, prodítus, deceived, betrayed; or, as R. Brunne writes, betraist, from the Ger. Betriegen; Dut. Bedrieghen. See BETRAY, and the quotation from R. Brunne.

And in the water anon was sene
His nose, his mouth, his eyen shene
And he thereof was all abashed
His owne shadow had him betrashed.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

BE-TRAY. } Ger. Triegen, Betriegen; Dut.
BETRA'YER. } Driegen, Bedriegen; Sw. Be-
BETRA'YING, s. } draga, decipere, fallere. Wach-
BETRA'YMENT. } ter considers the Ger. Trug, dolus, to be the root. Spelman (see in Junius) derives the word betray from the Fr. Trahir; Lat. Tradere. In the Vulgate, we find, Væ autem homini illi per quem filius hominis tradetur. (See the passage from Wiclif.) Trado is the word constantly used in such instances. See TRAITOR.

To deliver up, (sc.) any person or thing in our power upon trust; treacherously; to disclose (sc.) any thing trusted to us; to disclose, to discover; also to deceive, to delude.

For my fader Constantyn first he bi trayde amys,
That sauede hym & al that lond from the Pictes y wys.
Beththe my brother Constance he brogete hym to kynge
For he wolde hym bi traise, and to dethe brynge.
R. Gloucester, p. 135.

Listen me, Lord Knoute, if it be thi will,
How he betraied my lord, and my sonne fulle ille,
Whilom I lifred my lord he him bitraist to gew,
& my sonne Edmunde thorgh treson he slouh.
R. Brunne, p. 49.

And sothli mannes sone goith as it is writen of him, but wo to that man by whom mannis sone schal be bitrayed it were good to him if thilk man hadde not be borun.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 14.

The sonne of man goeth, as it is wrytten of him: but wo be to that mā by whome the sonne of man is betraied. Good were it for hym yf that man had never bene borne.
Bible, 1551. Ib

For who so doth, a traytour is certain:
And taketh kepe of that I shal you sain;
Of alle treson, soverayne pestilence
Is, whan a wight betrayeth innocence.
Chaucer. The Doctours Tale, v. 12 023.

Ye haue well heard of Theseus the gise,
In the betrayinge of faire Adriane,
That of her pite kept him fro his bane.
Chaucer. The Legend of Phillis.

And thus vpon her acquaintaunce
He tolde her plainly as it stode,
Of Rome howe that the gentill blode
In Barbarie was betrased.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Whiche of the prophetes haue not your fathers persecuted? and they haue slayne thē, which shewed before of the coming of that Just, of whome ye are nowe the betrayers and murtherers.—Geneva Bible. Acts, vii. 52

A singular example of wickednesse, a kyng to be a forsaker of his own army, and a father to be a betrayer of his owne children.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 103.

And in the meane season, they disclose theyr vngracious conscience, confessing him to be innocent, whose betrayment they had bought.—Udal. Mat. c. 27.

Then loue is death, and driues the soule to dwell
In this betraying harbour, which like hell
Glose never backe her bootie, and containes
A thousand firebrands, whips, and restlesse paines
Beaumont. Against Abused Love.

Valerius Messella writeth, that hee never intertained any of his libertines at supper except Meanys, and him naturalized first, even after the betraying of Sex. Pompeius fleete.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 72.

There is nothing that more betrays a base, ungenerous spirit, than the giving of secret stabs to a man's reputation
Spectator, No. 23

Silence ensu'd: and Edwin raised his eyes
In tears, for grief lay heavy at his heart.
"And is it thus in courtly life," he cries,
"That man to man acts a betrayer's part?"
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii

BE-TRIM. To set in order, to arrange, to dispose, to deck.

Thy bankes with pioned, and twilled brims
Which spungie April, at thy best betrims.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

BE-TROTH. } A.S. Treowan; Dut. Trou-
BETRO'THMENT. } wen, Betrouwen; Ger. Trauen, Betrauen, to trow.

To affiance, to pledge the troth or truth; to promise or vow to keep the truth, or to be true and faithful; to pledge or bind to the true and faithful performance of. Particularly applied to—

The promise to enter into the marriage contract.

And the betrouthed damsel cryed: but there was no man to succoure her.—Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 22.

There might I se how Ver had euery blossome hent:
And eke the new betrothed birdis ycoupled how they went.
And in their songes me-thought they thanked nature much.
Surrey. The Fruitfie, &c. of Beautie.

The day that David great Goliah slew,
Not great Goliah's sword was more his due
Than Merab, by Saul's public promise she
Was sold then and betroth'd to victory
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iii.

Sometimes setting out the speeches that pass between them, making as it were thereby the betrothment, otherwhiles declareing the mutual duties, one of them towards another, but especially that same great love of the bridegroom to his spouse.—Exposition of the Canticles, p. 5. (1585.)

'Tis better than their own betrothing,
Who often do't for worse than nothing.
Butler. The Lady's Answer to the Knight.

——— I leave
My Ariphilia, this my dear betroth'd,
To fight my country's battles; but return,
I trust in Mars, more worthy of her love.
Glover. Athenaid, b. ii.

BE-TRUST. In the example from Hall, betrusted appears to be used as we now use betroth; and no doubt they are from the same source. In the other examples, as we now use entrust.

To believe firmly, to rely thoroughly upon, to confide in, to have no fears, no suspicions of.

Thus poets, painters, and astronomers,
Haue giuen their gesse this subject to define,
Yet are those three, and with them trauellers
Not best betrust among the worthies nine,
Their woordes and workes are deemed not diuine.
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

The kyng by great aduice, refused and reuoked all thynges to bee doen for the more forwardnes of the sayde matrimony, and elected and chose the repayment all suche summes of money, as for the occasion of the sayde betrusted mariage was payd, and before hande contented & deliuered.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 22.

As for learning was alike in both of them. The father was a man of more craft and policye, but the sonne was more to be betrusted.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 49.

This burges was put in feare of his lyfe; he desyred to be let passe for his ransome; how be it he was so handled one wayes and other, that he fell in a bargayn to betray the towne of Jugone, and to leaue opyn a certayn gate: for he was so well betrusted in the towne, that he kept the kayes whan he was ther.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. I. c. 88.

BE'TTER, v.
BE'TTER, n.
BE'TTER, adj.
BE'TTER, ad.
BE'TTERING, n.
BE'TTERNESS.
} A. S. Beterian, Betrian; Dut. Beteren; Ger. Bessern, to excel, to surpass; and Beterian, from Betan, to beat, to make better.

To ameliorate; to excel or surpass, or cause to exceed, excel or surpass; to benefit, to correct, to repair, to amend, to improve.

The adjective is used as the irregular comparative of good. See BEST.

The adverb,—of well.

He niste to wether dogter beter truste tho,
And notheles he wende ageyn to the other with muche wo
And hopede for to fynde of here beter meuske and grace.
R. Gloucester, p. 33.

Better vs is to giue, and saue vs fro disceite,
Than with our fo men lyue in seruage so streite.
R. Brunne, vol. ii. p. 262.

Ys nauht a betere bande, by hym that me made
By twyne hevene and helle.—Piers Ploughman, p. 46.

And whoever schal sclaundre oon of these litel that bileven in me it were betere to him that a mylne stoon were doen about his necke and he were caste into the see.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

A better preist I trowe that nowher non is,
He waited after no pompe ne reverence,
Ne maked him no spiced conscience,
But Cristes lore, and his apostles twelve,
He taught, but first he followed it himselve.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 526.

Yet for as moch as ye, my lord so dere,
Han alway shewed me favour and grace,
I dare the better aske of you a space
Of audience, to shewen our request.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7977.

Fyrst the fetures of her face,
In which nature had all grace
Of womanlie beautee besette,
So that it might not be bette.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Besides that thou shalt here at length see many come to the right way and helpe with thee, and many things that cannot be altogether mended, yet somewhat bettered and more tolerable, so that all righteousness shall not be quenched.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 192.

Christ on euery side fensing those that are his, turneth the deiuelishe attemptates of the others, to the profityng and betteryng of the porcion that is vncorupted.
Udal. Luke, c. 5.

O most truly beloved lady, to whom I desire for both our goods, that these may be my last words, give me your consent even out of that wisdom which must needs see, that, besides your unmatched betterness, which perchance you will not see, it is fitter one die than both.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

But blush not thou therefore, thy betters haue done so,
Who thought they had retainde a doue, when they but cought a crow.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer forsaketh, &c.

Thy brooch anon right wool I to thee fet
She brought it him, and charged him full deepe,
When he it tooke, and on his breast it set,
Bet than his ring he should it keepe
Lest he the losse bewaile should and weepe.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

But Jonathan, to whom both hearts were known,
With a concernment equal to their own
(Joyful that Heaven with his sworn love complyd
To draw that knot more fast which he had ty'd,)
With well tun'd zeal, and with an artful care,
Restor'd, and better'd soon, the nice affair.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iii.

But you must know, that Grace is the improvement and bettering of nature; and Christian graces are the perfections of moral habits, and are but new circumstances, formalities, and degrees.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 7.

For either if they esteem their fellows and companions in government to be their equals, they begin themselves first to grow into terms of dissentions; or if they take them to be their betters, they fall to be envious; or else in case they hold them to be inferiour unto them in good parts, they dispise and contemne them.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 305.

Now compare this with Homers, but in my translation; and judge if to both their ends, there be any such betterness in Virgils.—Chapman. Hom. Commentary on Iliad, b. ii.

So that God by his commandments doth teach men wisdom, and makes them that keep them wiser than other people. Yea, the commandments themselves, by the grace of God, help towards the refining of our knowledge, and the bettering our understandings.—Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 99.

Then why should you, whose miracle of art
Can life at pleasure to the dead impart,
Trouble in vain your better-buried head
T' observe what time they liv'd in, or were dead?
Butler. To the Hon. Edward Howard.

Truth! why, shall ev'ry wretch of letters
Dare to speak truth against his betters.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iii.

The better hand, more busy, gives the nose
Its bergamot, or aids the indebted eye
With op'ra glass, to watch the moving scene,
And recognise the slow-retiring fair.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BE-TU'MBLED. To roll, turn about, toss about; throw into disorder, into confusion.

This said, from her betumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this no slaughter house no tool imparteth,
To make more vent for passage of her breath.
Shakespeare. The Rape of Lucrece.

BE-TWE'EN.
BETWI'XT.
} Between (formerly written twene, atweene, betweene) is a dual preposition, to which the Greek, Latin, Italian, French, &c. have no word correspondent. It is the A. S. imper. Be, and Twegen or Twain. Betwixt is the imper. Be, and the Goth. Twos, or two, (Tooke, i. 405.) See ATWEENE.

Separating, dividing, into two; shared by two; two persons, two parties.

The yle of Man that me cleputh, by twene vs and Yrlonde.
R. Gloucester, p. 2.

Fulle oft biforhand bituex them was distance
For wynning of the land, that R. wan thorgh chance,
R. Brunne, p. 186.

A fair feld fol of folke, fonde ich thr byturyne
All maner of men, the mene & the ryche
Worchynge and wandrynge.—Piers Ploughman, p. 2.

The wiche is the holy gost, that out of hevene descendede
To make a ꝑpetuel pees by twyne the prince of hevene,
And alle manere men.—Id. p. 209.

And in alle these thingis a great derk place is establischid bituixe us and you, that thei that wolen fro henne passe to you moun not, neither fro thenne passe ouer hidur.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 16.

Beyond all thys, betweene you & vs there is a great space set, so that they which would goo from hence to you cannot: nether maye come from thence to vs.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And though that chiding be a vilains thing betwix all maner folk, yet it is certes most uncovenable betwene a man and his wif, for ther is never rest.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

After his mother queene Eleyne
He sende, and so betwene hem tweyne
They treaten that the cites all
Was christned, and she foorth with all.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And now it seemes, that shee suborned hath
This crafty messenger with letters vaine,
To worke new woe and improuided scath,
By breaking off the band betwixt vs twaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Never two warriors such a battle struck,
That when the bloody dismal fight was done,
Here in one heap, there in another ruck,
Princes and peasants lay together mixt,
The English swords no difference knew betwixt.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

But this new Jehu spurs the hot-mouth'd horse;
Instructs the beast to know his native force;
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly,
To the next headlong steep of anarchy.
Dryden. The Medal.

What I speak, my fair Cloe, and what I write, shows
The difference there is betwixt nature and art:
I court others in verse; but I love thee in prose:
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart.
Prior. Answer to Chloe Jealous.

In all governments, there is a perpetual intestine struggle, open or secret, between authority and liberty; and neither of them can ever absolutely prevail in the contest.
Hume, Ess. 5.

BE'VEL, n.
BE'VEL, v.
BE'VEL, adj.
} Ger. Bugel, dim. of Bug, from Bugen, to bow, flectere in angulum.

That which forms or shapes angles, or by which angles are formed or made.

——— They that level
At my abuses, reckon up their own:
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad and in their badness reign.
Shakespeare, Sonnet 121

The same rings are also bevelled off at the upper and lower edges, the better to close upon one another, when the trachea is compressed or shortened.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10

BE'VER, v.
BE'VER, n.
BE'VERAGE.
} Fr. Beuvrage, Breuvage; It. Beveraggio, from the verb Bevere; Lat. Bibere. The afternoon and evening compotations (says Spelman) in Academiarum jurisque collegiis, are called bevers. Beverage is applied to—

Any drink; usually a pleasant liquid mixture: formerly to a drink given as a reward for labour; and even to the expected reward itself.

And there the quene folk the kyng Locryn alowe,
And muche of his folk eke bute hem that flowe.
So that a luther beuerage to here bi hof the thei browe.
R. Gloucester, p. 26.

The Saturday, in the Ester wouke, thys holy man hii slowe.
Ac vewe that were atte dede the beuerege bylowe.
Id. p. 299

Bargeynes and bevereges, by gunne to aryse.
Piers Ploughman, p. 107

The weather also continued so close, that our master sometimes in foure dayes together could see neither sunne nor starre, and all the beuerage we could make, with stinking water, dregs of beere, and lees of wine which remayned, was but three gallons, and therefore now we expected nothing but famine to perish at sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 286.

Thou bring'st me on my bare knees, wench, twice in every four and twenty hours, besides half turns instead of bevers.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act I. sc. 2.

Your gallants never sup, breakfast or beaver without me.
Brewer. Lingua, Act ii. sc. 1.

Henceforth those fruitless studies spare,
Let's rather drink until we stare
Of this immortal juice of ours,
Which does in excellence precede
The beverage which Ganimede
Into the immortals' goblet pours.
Cotton. Ode Bacchique.

——— Which when fill'd
With the sweet liquor the clear spring distill'd,
He gently lifts it to his head, then sips,
Both bath and beverage to his looks and lips.
Sherburne. Salmacis

A pleasant beverage he prepared before
Of wine and honey, mix't with added store
Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unaware the sleepy draught.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

——— Thine Pomona's choicest gift,
The tasteful apple, rich with racy juice,
Theme of thy envied song, Silurian bard:
Affording to the swains, in sparkling cups,
Delicious bev'rage. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

BE'VY. A word of unknown etymology. Skinner says, It. Beva ; Perdicum turnix, perhaps because they are accustomed to drink together, from the It. Bevere ; Lat. Bibere, to drink. In the gloss upon the passage quoted from Spenser, it is said, "A beuie of ladies, is spoken figuratively for a companie or a troup; the term is taken of larkes. For they say a beuie of larks, euen as a couey of partridges, or an eye of pheasants." Can it be from the verb To Vie?

Bevy, in the language of sportsmen, is now confined to quails.

And whither rennes this beuie of ladies bright,
raunged in a rowe?
They been all ladies of the lake behight,
that unto her goe.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. April.

Come bright girls, come all together,
And bring all your off'rings hither,
Ye most brave and buxom bevy,
All your goodly graces levy. Drayton, Nymphal 8.

Fool, to whose care dost thou thy grief impart?
What dost thou talk, or know'st thou where thou art?
She, 'midst a dancing bevy of fair lights,
Trips it away, and thy misfortune slights.
Sherburne. Forsaken Lydia.

Rais'd altars shone with holy fires; the bride,
Lovely herself (and lovely by her side
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,)
Came glittering like a star, and took her place.
Dryden. Ovid's Metam. b. xii.

——— A meadow fresh in green,
Between the sea-beat margin and the walls,
Which bore the island's celebrated name,
Extended large; there oft the Attic fair
In bevies met. Glover. The Athenaid b. v.

BE-WA'IL, v. } To utter the yell of dis-
BEWA'ILING, n. } tress: to utter loudly, (sc.) grief, sorrow;
To complain, to lament, to moan, to deplore.

And whanne he came to the hous, he suffride no man to entre with him, but Petre, Jon, and James; and the fadir and modir of the damysel. And alle wepten and bywaylden her: and he seide, nyle ye wepe, for the damysel is not deed but slepeth.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 8.

Wel can Senek and many a philosophre
Bewailen tyme, more than goldin coffre.
For losse of catel may recovered be,
But losse of time shendeth us, quod he.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4445.

And thus in all the haste he maie
He toke his leue, and forth he sailleth.
Wepend and she herself bewailleth,
And torneth home there she cum fro.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Sith that the way to welth is wo,
And after paine is pleasure prest
Why should I then despaire so,
Ay bewailing mine vnrest.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer thinks no Paine, &c.

He also made a treatyse about the same tyme, called planctus ammose virginitatis, a bewaylyng of maydenhede lost.—Bale Votaries, pt. ii.

Nor without reason is't (alas!) that I
To stars and sands bewail my misery;
For with my state they some proportion bear,
And numberless as are my woes appear.
Sherburne. Forsaken Lydia.

But afterwards one of his familiar friends who had seen and knowne Veturia there, mourning and bewailing exceedingly above the rest, as she stood betwixt her daughter in law and her little nephewes: If mine eies be matches (quoth hee) and deceive me not, here is your mother, your wife, and children.—Holland. Livius, p. 70.

Sir Richard [Grenvill] linger'd two or three days, and then died aboard the General, who greatly bewailed his loss.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

And, if I must bewail the blessing lost,
For which our Hampdens and our Sydneys bled,
I would at least bewail it under skies
Milder among a people less austere;
In scenes which, having never known me free,
Would not reproach me with the loss I felt.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

BE-WAKE. To wake or watch, to put upon the watch. See AWAKE.

I wote that night was well bewaked.
Gower. Con A. b. v.

Bi his rede hit was i-take,
To vii wise men to biwake.—The Seuyn Sages. Weber, vol. iii.

BE-WARE. To look at or after, to take heed, to be cautious, to be upon the guard, to guard against, to avoid, to shun.

Junius suggests that ware and beware, as used in the examples from the seventh book of Gower, and in the first from the Ancient Popular Poetry of Ritson, may be from waeren, to guard or ward with care, because wares (mercimonia) are anxiously warded or guarded. Ritson explains it, to expend, to lay out.

Git wild he not be war ther bi, so proude he was in herte,
Tille he was wonded the thrid tyme, and died also smerte.
R. Brunne, p. 8.

Holy writ bit men be war, and wisliche hem kepe
That no fals frere, thorw flatrynge hem bygyle.
Piers Ploughman, p. 246.

Whi undirstonden ye not for I seide not to you of breed: be ye war of the sour dough of Farisees and Saducels.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 16.

Why perceaue ye not then, that I spake not vnto you of breade, when I sayde, beware of the leuen of the Pharisee and of the Saduces.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Beware from ire that in thy bosom slepeth,
Ware fro the serpent, that so sly crepeth
Under the gras, and stingeth subtilly.
Beware, my sone, and herken patiently.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7575.

I finde a great experience,
Whereof to take an euidence
Good is, and to beware also
Of the perill or him be wo.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

I shal the telle a redy tale,
Now herken, and be ware thereby,
For I will tell it openly. Id. Ib. b. v.

For who that hath his wit bewared
Upon a flatour to beleue,
Whan that he weneth best achieue
His good worlde, it is moste fro. Id. Ib. b. vii.

Dame, he seyde, be goddys are,
Hast any money thou woldyst ware.
How a Merchande, &c. Ritson, p. 70.

Dame, he seyde, be goddys are,
Here is thy penyworth of ware
If thou thynke hyt not wele besett,
Gyf hyt another can be ware hytt bett. Id. Ib p. 78.

For thi I rede, uch mon be ware,
And lete ur werk ur wordes preue,
So that no sinne ur soul forfare,
Whon that ur lyf hath taken his leue.
Ancient Songs. Id. p. 46.

As Charlys, not withstädynge this message of the duke, held on his iourney commynge nere vnto a woode, he was soleynly met of a man lyke vnto a beggar, which sayde vnto hym, "Whyther goest thou sir kynge? be ware thou goest no farther, for thou arte betrayed, and into the handys of thyne enemyes thyne owne meynye shall delyuer the."
Fabyan. Charles VII. an. 14.

Plato told to Dion that of all things in the world he should beware of that folly, by which men please themselves, and dispise a better judgment. Because that folly hath in it singularity, and is directly contrary to all capacities of a friendship, or the entertainments of necessary reproof.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 25.

An honest man may take a knave's advice,
But idiots only may be cosen'd twice:
Once warn'd is well bewar'd, not flattering lies
Shall sooth me more to sing with winking eyes
And open mouth for fear of catching flies.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

He that negotiates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BE-WEEP. A. S. Wepan, Bewepan.
To weep, to weep for, to bewail, to lament, to bemoan, to deplore. (Sommer.)
To shed tears.

A voice was herd, an high weepyng, and myche wailyng. Rachel by weepyng her sonnes and sche wolde not be comforted for thei ben not.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 2.

On the hylles was a voice hearde, mournynge, wepynge, and greate lamētation; Rachel wepynge for her children and would not be comforted, because they were not.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And therefore saith Job to God, suffer, Lord, that I may awhile bewaile and bewepe, er I go without returning to the derke londe, ycovered with the derkenesse of deth.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

So that all Rome his dethe bewepte.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Robert Losaūge yt some tyme had ben abbot of Ramsey, and then byshop of Thetforde, by gyfte of a M h to the kynge, repented hym after, and bewepte yt vnskylfull dede, and toke his way to Rome, and dyd for it his enioyned penaunce.
Fabyan, c. 225

Mony he clevyd unto the sadel;
He it byweop that lay in cradel!
Kyng Alisaundre. Weber, vol. i.

That I alas in this calamitie
Alone was left, and to my selfe might plaine
This treason, and this wretched cowardie,
And eke with teares beweepen and complaine
My hatefull hap, still looking to be slaine.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 447.

Where prayers shall continually be made
By pilgrim lovers passing by that way,
With nymphs' and shepherds' early moan,
His timeless death beweeping.—Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 2

BE-WET. To wet, water, or moisten.

The beames brenende in loue, of their elen arn so bewet
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. i.

His napkin with her true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheekes.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iii. sc. 1.

The sun was set; the night came on apace,
And falling dews bewet around the place.
Gay. The Shepherd's Week, Past. 3.

While waddling on the margin of the main,
The crow bewets her, and prevents the rain.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

BE-WHA'PED. To amaze or astonish. See AWHAPE.

And thus bewhaped in my thought,
Whan all was tourned into nought,
I stood amased for a while.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

BE-WHORE. "Hoor. I find this anciently written hure, and I find hure to be also used and written for the word hyre, and because that such incontinent women do commonly let their bodies to hire, this name was therefore aptly applied unto them." (Verstegan, c. 10.)

Emil. Alas (Iago) my lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispight, and heauy termes vpon her,
That true hearts cannot bear it.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iv. sc. 2.

——— You are not quick to grief.
Your hearing's a dead sense. Were yours the loss,
Had you a daughter, perhaps bewhor'd,
(For to what other end should come the thief?)
You'ld play the miller then, be loud and high.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act iii. sc. 1.

BE-WI'VED. The Goth. Bi-waibyan, (Luke, xix. 43,) is rendered by Junius—Coarctare: and he observes, that as our clothes constrain and confine us all around, Biwaibyan began to be used for Amicti, to throw round. A. S. Wefan, Weofan; Dut. Weeven; Ger. Weben.
To clothe, to involve, to infold, to inwrap: and as it should seem from Fabyan, to entangle, to ensnare.

Hyre ryche clothes were of ydo, bote that heo was bywened
Hyre body wyth a mantel, a wympel aboute her heued.
R. Gloucester, p. 538

Biweued hii were bothe mid Welase mantles tuele.
Id. p. 539

The croune, of gold bywoued,
His fader praised his prowesse,
Of the croune and of the richesse.
Kyng Alisaunder. Weber, vol. i.

It is also rad of hym, that a colner bare a scroule wryten in Englysshe, thā vayd, and let it fall from hyr vpon the auter of seynt Petyr, in Rome, whereof the wordys were these; "At Clent i. Cowhaceh Kenelme Kenebern lyeth vnder thorne, hewyd, bewound:" which is to meane, in Englysshe, nowe vayd, at Clent in Cow vale, vnder a thorne, lyeth Kinelme, kedlen, slayne by fraude.—Fabyan, c. 158.

BE-WIELD. To manage, to sway; to bear or move with full command.

I could speak of Gerards staffe or lance, yet to be seene in Gerard's Hall at London, in Basing Lane, which is so great and long that no man can bewield it.
Harrison. Description of Britaine, c. 5

BE-WILDER. To be bewildered is to be in the state of one, who finds himself in a wild or wilderness; at a loss which way to go; puzzled, perplexed.

Much more sweet thy labouring steps to guide
To virtue's heights, with wisdom wed supply'd,
And all the magazines of learning fortify'd.
From thence to look below on human-kind,
Bewilder'd in the maze of life, and blind.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. ii.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate;
Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errours,
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search.
Addison. Cato, Act i. sc. 1.

First fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.
Collins. Ode. The Passions.

They were bewildered by their passions, and by their want of knowledge, or want of consideration of the subject.
Burke. Observations on a late State of the Nation.

BE-WY'MPLED. Dut. Wimpelen, to veil, to cover with a veil, to infold, to involve. (Kilian.)

And sought about with his hondo
That other beddo tyll that he fonde,
Where lave bewympled a visage:
That was he glad in his courage.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

BE-WI'NTER. To cause, to produce, the effects of winter.

Yet how do tears but from such vapours rise
Tears that bewinter all my year?
The fate of Egypt I sustain,
And never feel the dew of rain,
From clouds which in the head appear.—Cowley. Sleep.

BE-WITCH.
BEWI'TCHER.
BEWI'TCHERY.
BEWI'TCHFULL.
BEWI'TCHING, s.
BEWI'TCHINGLY.
BEWI'TCHMENT.
} To enchant; to use sorcery; to charm, to overpower by charms, to fascinate; to overpower, to prevail, by allurement or enticement.

When I record within my musing mind,
The noble names of wights bewicht in loue;
Such solace for myselfe therein I find
As nothing maye my fired fansie moue.
Gascoigne. The Louer encouraged.

There were ye triūphe the great feast and glory of Tindalles deuelishe prowde disputuous hearte, to delite and reioice in the effusion of auch peoples blood as hys poysoned bookes had miserably bywitched, and from trewe christen forke, turned into false wicked wretches.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 354.

But to forsake the causes wherefore we liue her for the desier and loue to prolōg our life as it wer for thre dales in this deceatful world, and to be separated from God the author of lyfe, is such a bewitching and furiouse madnesa, that I know not with what wordes we ought to expresse and shew it.—Calvin. Four Godlye Sermons, Ser 2.

O folyshe Galathyans: who hathe bewitched you that ye shounde not beleue the truth, to whome Jesus Christ was discribed before the eyes, and among you crucifyed.
Bible, 1551. Galathians, c. 3.

O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you!
Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

I will not here with an allegory applyed to oure tyme touche oure spirituall Magos and subtyle sorcerers (enchaunters) and bewitchers.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 5.

And honour, glory, praise, renowme and fame,
That men's proud hearts bewitch with tickling pleasure,
An eccho is, a shade, a dream, a flower
With each wind blasted, spoil'd with euery shower.
Fairefax Godfrey of Bullogne, b. xiv. s. 63.

Come, come away, fraile, silly, fleshly wight,
Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
Ne diuelish thoughts dismay thy constant spright,
In heauenly mercies hast thou not a part!
Spenser. Faery Queene, b. i. c. 9.

I will counterfet the bewitchment of some popular man, and glue it bountifull to the desirers: Therefore beseech you, I may be consull.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

There is on the other side both ill more bewitchfull to entice away, and natural yeares more swaying, and good more availeable to withdraw to that which you wish me.
Milton. Letter to a Friend.

All that time that his braine are turgid and full of this humour, he is wonderful eloquent, and bewitchingly taken.
Hollywell. Account of Familism, p. 106.

Do not suffer yourselves to be cheated and bewitched by sensual satisfactions, and to be destroyed by ease and prosperity.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 54.

Beauty rests not in one fix'd place,
But seems to reign in every face;
'Tis nothing sure but fancy then,
In various forms, bewitching men.
Parnell. On the Number Three.

The truth is, he who shall duly consider these matters, will find that there is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 9. p. 337.

Let me observe, that oblique vision, when natural, was anciently the mark of bewitchery and magical fascination, and to this day 'tis a malignant ill look.—Spectator, No. 250.

Death was his dread; nor was it in the pow'r
Of love's bewitchment, or in money'd show'r,
Of Venus, Jupiter, or all the fry
Of Homer's heav'n to hire the man to die.
Byrom. Critical Remarks on Horace.

BE-WO'NDER. To be surprised into a state of stupefaction.

And there we beheld one of the cruellest fights between two knights, that ever hath adorned the most martial story. So as I must confess, a while we stood bewondered, another while delighted with the rare beauty thereof; till seeing such streams of blood, as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

The other seeing his astonishment
How he bewondered was and how he fared,
And suddenly by name the prince gan call
By which awaked thus he spoke withall.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. x. s. 17.

BE-WRAP. To involve, to infold; to enrap, (qv.)

This Miles, Forest and John Dighton aboute mydnight, the sely children lyinge in their beddes, came into ye chaubre and sodenli lapped them up amongest the cloathes and so bewrapped them and entangled them keping downe by force the fetherbed and pillowes harde vnto their mouthes that within a while thei smored & stifled them.
Hall. King Rich. III. an. 1.

There is no man of so lowe estate, that he careth not to couerre hys persone wyth some sorte of clothynge. And the nombre of them is infynyte, that for to gene it more grace & deckynge, be not contented or take it to be suffycyent to bewrappe it in golde, pourple & delicate silkes, except they travayle strange countres of the worlde, for to get stoanes, most rare and precyous, and employ them to the curiosite of theyr nyce trymmynge.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 5.

His sword that many a Pagan stout had shent,
Bewrapt with flowers, hung idle by his side,
So nicely decked, that it seem'd the knight
Wore it for fashion sake, but not to fight.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. xvi. s. 36.

O wretched wight bewrapt in webs of woe,
That still in dread wast tost from place to place,
And neuer foundest meane to end thy race.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 32.

BE-WRAY, or BERAY. Serenius thinks from Isl. Hrá, cadaver, a corpse. Skinner says, perhaps, from the verb array, vestire, i. e. concacare, conforiare. It is probably from the A. S. Wrigan, to cover, (sc. with dirt, with filth.) And thus to signify—

To dirty, to befoul; to bespatter with dirt.

Let them that do so, vnderstand, that they beray & file their hands more, when they lay them on any other man than their owne husbandes than though they backed them in soote.—Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. i. c. 3.

But the event will shew that with many sluggish and ignoble vices he [Ethelred] quickly shamed his out-side; born and prolong'd a fatal mischief of the people, and the ruin of his country; whereof he gave early signs from his first infancy, bewraying the font and water while the bishop was baptizing him. Wherat Dunstan much troubled, for he stood by and saw it, to them next him broke into these words, "by God and God's mother, this boy will prove a sluggard."—Milton. History of England, b. vi.

Tentes they had none to couer them: nor medicaments to heale the wounded; and diuiding their meate partly stained with bloud or berayed with dirt, they bewailed that vnfortunate darknes, and that onely date left for so many thousands to liue.—Grenewey. Tacitus, Annales, p 27.

Being, as it were, in a small puddle of mire, she [the moon] is but a little sullied or berayed therewith, and so quickly getteth forth of it.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 956.

BE-WRAY.
BEWRA'YER.
BEWRA'YING, s.
} A. S. Wregan; Dut. Wroeghen, accusare, prodere, deferre, to accuse, to discover, to bewray, (Somner.) Wreg-an may be wrig-an, to act covertly.

To accuse; i. e. to inform or be an informer; a betrayer. Ritson supplies an example of the use of the simple word wray.

O messager, fulfilled of dronkenesse
Strong is thy breth, thy limmes faltren ay,
And thou bewrayest all secrenesse;
Thy mind is lorne, thou janglest as a jay.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5181.

Now cometh bewreying of conseil, thorgh which a man is defamed; certis unnethe may he restore damage.
Id. The Persones Tale.

And thus whan loue is cuill wonne
Full oft it cometh to repentaile.
My fader that is no meruaile
Whan that the counseil is bewrayed.—Gower. Con. A. b. v

Nay mastres, as mote I thee,
Ye schall newyr be wrayed for me,
I had leu her dede to be
As here of to be knowe,
Good gosyp. Ancient Songs. Ritson, p. 78

Then I of force no longer may
In couert keepe my piersing flame,
Which euer doth itselfe bewray
But yeelde myself to fancies frame.
Turbervile. The Louer confesseth himselfe, &c

For when in sighs I spent the day,
And could not cloke my grief with game,
The boyling smoke did still bewray
The present heate of secret flame.
Surrey. The Restless State of a Louer.

I do not say yt thou shouldest bewray thyself publickly, neither that thou shouldest accuse thyselfe to others, but I would haue thee obey the prophet, saying: reuele thy waye vnto the Lord.—Barnes. An Epitome of his Workes, p. 307.

For the darkenes of this worlde doeth cōtinually striue against the lyght, wiche the worlde hateth as the bewrayer of his works, and that darkenes doth eyther quench or darken the beams of many, but against this lively and eternal lyghte it could nothing preuaile.—Udal. John, c. 1.

But know, Grimaldi, tho' (may be) thou art
My equal in thy blood, yet this bewrays
A lowness in thy mind
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 2.

If you could mayntayne euery place, or manie of the places, I dare say you would, but surely I commende youre rhetorike. Those places that you would seeme to giue some countenaunce vnto, bewray your lacke of abilitie to defend eyther them, or the reste.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 61.

Besides, that when a friend is turned into an enemy, and (as the son of Sirach calls him) a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend, rather than the indiscretion of the person who confided in him.—Spectator, No. 225.

BE-WREKE. To pursue, to persecute, to punish, to avenge, to revenge.

The strokes thou strook'st, hurt me not at all,
For why, thy strength was nothing in respect,
But thou hadst bath'd thy sword in poyson all,
Which did my wound, so deadly else infect.
Yet was I or I parted thence bewreckt,
I gate my sword from thee, for all thy fame:
And made thee flie, for fear to eate the same.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 120.

I wole me off hym so bewreke,
That al the world theroff schal speke.
Richard Coer de Lion. Weber, vol. ii.

He was ryght sore displeased, and had many a harde ymaginacyon agaynst the hostages of France, that were styll with him at Lodon. Howebeit he thought it shulde be a great cruelte, if he shulde bewreke his displeasur on them.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 247.

BE-WROUGHT. A. S. Wyrcan, to work: past part. Worht, and by transposition Wroht.

Where their maides, and their makes,
At dancings, and wakes,
Had their napkins, and posies,
And the wipers for their noses,
And their smocks all be-wrought
With his thred which they bought.
B. Jonson. The Masque of Owles.

BE-YETTE. Skinner says, "No bit, no whit." The meaning is probably this, the beget, the get, the gain, the possession, the advantage.

So that thei lost the beyete
Of worship, and of worldes pees.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

The proude vice of vainglorie
Remembreth nought of purgatorie,
His worldes ioyes ben so great
Him thinketh of heuen no beyete.—Id. Ib. b. i.

BE-YOND. Beyond (in the A. S. With-geondan, Bigeond, Begeond) means be passed. It is the imper. be, compounded with the past part. geond, geoned, or goned, of the verb gan, gangan, or gongan. To go, to pass. So that "beyond any place," means "be passed that place," or "be that place passed." (Tooke, i. 408.)

Beyond expectation; be expectation passed, surpassed, exceeded.

The kyng of Northumbarlonde kyng was ich vnderstonde
Of al the londe bigonde Homber anon in to Scotlonde.
R. Gloucester, p. 6.

Ion Mauncelle the clerke, & an erle Richere,
And other knyghtes inowe of bigond the se,
To the kyng drowe, auanced wild thei be.
R. Brunne, p. 214.

Yborne he was in fer contree,
In Flandres, al beyonde the see.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,648.

[He] beyonde Athians the highe hille
These monsters sought.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

There is a place beyond that flaming hill
From whence the stars their thin appearance shed,
A place beyond all place, where never ill,
Nor impure thought was ever harboured.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory and Triumph.

If we can find in our hearts to take our leave of sin, if we can disengage our selves from the witcheries of present amusement, if we can but get over the threshold of vertuous conversation, we shall find the rest beyond expectation smooth and expedite.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

And be it so. let those deplore their doom,
Whose hope still grovels in this dark sojourn:
But lofty souls, who look beyond the tomb,
Can smile at fate, and wonder how they mourn.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

BE'ZZLE, n. }
BE'ZZLE, v. }
BE'ZZLER. }
Skinner suggests, among other things, that it may be Beastle, to act the beast. Mr. Todd thinks it is the old Norman French, Bezler, Besele, Besleez, embezzled, (Kelham, Norman Dict.); and that thus Bezler is the parent of our modern word Embezzle. (See EMBEZZLE, and the quotations from Dryden and Sharpe.) But neither the Nor. Fr. nor the English are yet accounted for. To bezzle, seems generally to be applied to —guzzling—

To waste or squander in guzzling, or drinking; in riot or prodigality; (perhaps, money embezzled or purloined from others, or from better purposes.)

This walkes hee up and downe in his Majestie, taking a yard of ground at every step, and stampes on the earth so terrible, as if he ment to knock up a spirite, when (double-drunken bezzles) if an English-man set his little finger to him, he falls like a hogs-trough that is set on one end.
Pierce Pennilesse His Supplication to the Deuil, 1592.

Math. Yes, a foot, I wonder how the inside of a tavern looks now. Oh! when shall I bezzle bezzle?

Bel. Nay, see thou art thirsty still for poison; come, I will not have thee swagger.
Dekkar. The Honest Whore, Act i. sc. 1.

Mist. Mer. Thou art a wast thrift, and art run away from thy master, that lov'd thee well, and art come to me, and I have laid up a little for my younger son Michael, and thou thinkest to bezle that, but thou shalt never be able to do it.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burn. Pestle, Act i. sc. 1.

O mee! what odds there seemeth 'twixt their chere
And the swolne bezell at an ale house fyre,
That tonnes in gamons to his bursten paunch
Whose stumy droughts his draught can never stanch.
Bp. Hall. Satires, b. v. Sat. 2.

Our great clerks think that these men, because they have a trade, (as Christ himself, and St. Paul had) cannot therefore attain to some good measure of knowledge, and to a censure of their actions, as well as they that spend their wealth in loitering, bezzling, and harlotting, their studies in unprofitable questions, and barbarous sophistry, their middle age in ambition and idleness, their old age in avarice, dotage, and diseases.—Milton. Animad. upon Remonst. Def.

——'Tis now become
The shewing horne bezeler's discourse.
Jack Drum's Entertainment, (1616,) Sig. A 3.

BIAS, v. }
BI'AS, n. }
BI'AS, adj. }
BI'AS, ad. }
BI'AS-DRAWING. }
Fr. Biais or Bihay, Biaiser or Bi-hayser. To crook, stand aslope, to fetch a compass, go away, make about, (Cotgrave.) Menage says from the It. Bieco, and the It. Bieco from Biscoculus. The editor of Menage, "that the old Gallic Bihay resembles the English Bmay." Hayser is probably Hauser, to haust, or raise (sc.) out of an horizontal position; turn out of a straight or right angle. It is used met. for—

To turn away, from a right, fair, impartial judgment.

Aloe is an hearbe which hath the resemblance of a sea onion, but that it is bigger and the leaves be more grosse and fat, chandfered or channelled bias all along.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 4.

Plato, Pythagoras, and Aristotle hold that this is occasioned by the obliquity of the zodiack circle thorow which the sun passes biase.—Id. Plutarch, p. 674.

We cannot allege her oblique and byass declination.
Id. Ib. p. 953.

In this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing
Bids thee with most divine integrite,
From heart of very heart, great Hector welcome.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

Rhynsault, with no other real quality than courage, had dissimulation enough to pass upon his generous and unsuspicious master for a person of blunt honesty and fidelity, without any vice that could bias him from the execution of justice.—Spectator, No. 491.

When we determine amiss concerning the obligations incumbent upon us in respect of other men; 'tis by reason of that strong weight of self love, which like a bias, inclines, and secretly sways our minds towards that side on which our own interest lies.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I am of opinion, there has not, for these many years, appeared any thing more finished of the kind: if, indeed, my great affection for him, and the praises he bestowed upon me, do not bias my judgment.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. iv. Let. 27.

If you suppose a dye to have any bias, however small, to a particular side, this bias, though, perhaps, it may not appear in a few throws, will certainly prevail in a great number, and will cast the balance entirely to that side.
Hume. The Rise of Arts, Ess. 14.

BIB, n. }
BIB, v. }
BI'BBER. }
BI'BBING, n. }
BI'BULOUS. }
From Lat. Bibere, to drink. A Bib, Skinner says, "is a cloth stretched over the breast of an infant, that it may imbibe, the overflowing liquid."

A man who drinks much, frequently, is called a Bibber, a tipler, a sot,

Bibulous, drinking, soaking, absorbing.

This miller hath so wisly bibbed ale,
That as an hors he snorteth in his slepe.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4160.

And other abhoreth his brother because he is a great bibber, whereas he himself hath in his harte a number of murders and sorceries.—Udal. Matt. c. 7.

The Son of Man is come eating and drinking, and ye say, behold, a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend to publicans and sinners.—Bible. Luke, vii. 34.

Demosthenes made his complaint unto him, that where he had taken more pains than all the orators besides, and had almost even worn himself to the bones with study, yet he could by no means devise to please the people: whereas other orators that did nothing but bib all the day long, and mariners that understood nothing, were quietly heard, and continually occupied the pulpit with orations.
North. Plutarch, p. 701.

Six legions he left in garrison among the Gauls, under the charge of one Varus, a companion of his that would drink lustily with him, and therefore in mockery was surnamed Cotylon, to wit, a bibber.—Id. Ib. p. 760.

We'll have a bib, for spoiling of thy doublet,
And a fring'd muckender hang at thy girdle,
I'll be thy nurse, and get a coral for thee,
And a fine ring of bells.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 5.

This person [J. Wagstaffe] died in a manner distracted, occasioned by a deep conceit of his own parts, and by a continual bibbing of strong and high tasted liquors.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

But only fools, and they of vast estate,
The extremity of modes will imitate,
The dangling knee fringe and the bib cravat.
Dryden. Prol. on Opening the New House.

Strow'd bibulous above I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, the layers then
Of mingled moulds, of more retentive earths.
Thomson. Autumn.

Ev'n misses, at whose age their mothers wore
The backstring and the bib, assume the dress
Of womanhood, fit pupils in the school
Of card-devoted time, and night by night
Plac'd at some vacant corner of the board,
Learn every trick, and soon play all the game.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BI'BBLE-BA'BBLE. Merely Babble-babble. See an instance from Sir Thomas More in BABBLE.

The errours committed in this kind have been the cause why there is found so little wit and understanding, and contrariwise so much tongue and bibble-babble, such vaine chattering about words in young men throughout the schooles.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 47.

Maluolio, Maluolio, thy wittes the heauens restore: endeauour thy selfe to sleepe, and leaue thy vaine bibble-babble.—Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iv. sc. 2.

BI'BLE. }
BI'BLICAL. }
BIBLIOTHE'KE. }
BIBLIOTHE'CAL. }
BIBLIO'THECARY. }
BIBLIO'LATRY. }
Βυβλος sive Βιβλος, is an Egyptian plant, of which a material for writing upon was made. Bible is applied by pre-eminence to the holy scriptures. Chaucer furnishes usages of the word as applied to any book.

Bibliothecary. Fr. Bibliotheque; It. Bibliotica; Sp. Bibliotheca; Lat. Bibliotheca, from Gr. Βιβλιον, a Book, and Θηκη, a Depository: the store room or depository for books; now commonly called the library.

It sais in a storie, the Bible may not lie,
That God gaf the maistrie to the childre of Mathatie.
R. Brunne, p. 290.

Of his diete mesurable was he,
For it was of no superfluitee,
But of gret nourishing, and digestible.
His studie was but litel on the Bible.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 437.

But nought will I so mote I thriue
Be about to disserue
All these armes that they weren
That they thus on her coates weren
For to me were impossible
Men might make of hem a Bible.
Id. The House of Fame, b. iii.

Yet forgate I to maken rehersaile
Of waters corosif, &c.
* * * * *
To tell all, wold passen any Bible,
That o wher is.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,322.

But what is this I see, Satan himselfe with a bible under his arme, with a text in his mouth, it is written, he shall give his angels charge over thee?
Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ Tempted.

What I said in my epistle to my reverend and worthy friend master Doctor James, the incomparably industrious and learned Bibliothecary of Oxford, I professe still, that I hold those Canons of the Apostles uncanonicall.
Id. Honour of the Maried Clergie, b. i. a. 28.

This invention of erecting libraries, especially here at Rome, came from Asinius Pollio, who by dedicating his bibliotheque, containing all the books that ever were written, was the first that made the wits and workes of learned men, a publicke matter and a benefit to a commonweale.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 1.

In every town where he came, [he] explained to them the contents of the Bible; declaring, that therein was set forth the true and only God, and his mighty works; that therein was contain'd the true doctrine of salvation through Christ, with many particulars of miracles and chief points of religion.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

I trust that the natural patrons of biblical learning, I mean, societies founded for the advancement of religious knowledge, and the higher ecclesiastics, will soon enable every scholar to command this inestimable treasure [the Syriac Milan MSS.].—Newcombe. Minor Prophets, Pref.

These, and a world of controversies more
Serve to enlarge the bibliothecal store,
While champions make antiquity their boast,
And all pretend to imitate it most.
Byrom. On Church Communion, pt. vi.

If to adore an image be idolatry,
To deify a book is bibliolatry.
Id. Upon the Bp. of Gloucester's Doctrine of Grace.

BICI'PITAL. }
BICI'PITOUS. }
Lat. Biceps (Bis-ceps), from Bis, Binus, two, and Caput; Gr. Κεφαλη, the head.

Two headed.

If by the art of Taliacotius, a permutation of flesh, or transmutation be made from one man's body into another, as if a piece of flesh be exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either parties arm, and about them both, an alphabet circumscribed, upon a time appointed as some conceptions affirm, they may communicate at what distance soever.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

It is not denied there have been bicipitous serpents with the head at each extream, for an example hereof we finde in Aristotle.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 15.

BI'CKER. }
BI'CKERING. }
BI'CKERMENT. }
Skinner mentions the Welsh, Bicre, conflictus; but he is strongly inclined to believe it of Anglo Saxon origin. He suggests the verb pickeer, to fight with pikes. In the A. S. Pycan; Dut. Pichen or Bichen, pickeren; Ger. Bichen, is to peck at: and bicker (p into b) may be—

To be always perking at, attacking, skirmishing; squabbling, or quarrelling with; also, to move unsteadily, to quiver.

Bituene the castel of Gloucestre and Brinefeld al so
Ther was ofte biker gut, and muche harm ido.
R. Gloucester, p. 538.

Tho the barons adde the toun, and the castel tho king,
Ther was ofte bituene hom gret bikering.—Id. p. 540.

Whan thou of thise ert sikere to the thorgh aliance,
Than is tyme to bikere with the kyng of France.
R. Brunne, p. 256.

And crye we on al the comune. that thei come to unite
Ther to abyde and bykere ageyns Bellales children.
Piers Ploughmen, p. 396.

Thus the Prenshemen lyinge before the towne, many frayes and bykerynges were made atwene the Flemynges and theym, to theyr both paynes.—Fabyan, an. 1307.

And at the field fought before Bebriacum, ere the battailes joyned, two eagles had a conflict, and bickered together in all their sights.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 243.

In this so terrible a bickering, the Prince of Wales being then but sixteenth yeeres old, shewed his wonderful towardnesse, laying on very hotely with speare and shielde.
Stowe. Edw. III. an. 1346.

Such bickerings to recount, met often in these our writers, what more worth is it then to chronicle the wars of kites or crows, flocking or fighting in the air?
Milton. History of England, b. iv.

So stood they both in readinesse thereby,
To ioyne the combate with cruell intent;
When Arthegall, arriuing happily,
Did stay awhile their greedy bickerment,
Till he had questioned the cause of their dissent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

Meantime unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
And hurled every where their waters about,
That, as they bicker'd through the sunny shade,
Though restless still themselves, a lulling murmur made.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

And indeed several histories of these times make no secret of it, where they shew the bickerings between prince Henry and the aforesaid favourite Car, in regard to the countess of Essex, not to mention other motives.
Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

From which, meanwhile, disputes of ev'ry size,
That is to say, misunderstandings rise;
The springs of ill, from bick'ring, up to battle,
From wars and tumults, down to tittle tattle.
Byrom. The Three Black Crows.

BICO'RNED. } Lat. Bis, Binus, two, and BICO'RNOUS. } Cornu, a horn.
Having two horns.

Your body being revers'd did represent
(Being forked) our bicorned government.
Brome. To a Potting Priest.

We should be too critical to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras, that is, the making of the horns equal.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 19.

BID. } Goth. Biudan; A. S. Biddan;
BI'DDER. } Ger. Bieten; Dut. Bidden; Sw.
BI'DDEN. } Bedja. See BEAD, and the quo-
BI'DDING, n. } tation from Burnett. To bid, is—

To invite, to solicit, to request, to pray, to require, to demand, to command.

To require, or demand, (&c.) for a certain price; to offer, or propose to give.

To the eldest he seide first, "Dogter ich bidde the
"Sey me al clene thin herte, how muche thou louest me."
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

The fader was tho glad y now, and bad hire vnderstonde,
To whom heo wolde y maried be with the thride del ys londe.—Id. p. 30.

"Ther fore ich bidde, that ich mowe my stat holde thorg the,
"And that thou of hym Bretagne mowe wynne thorg me.
Id. p. 54.

And gut vor al ys sarewede, as yt ywryte ys.
Thatu byddynge of Seyn Dunston, ys soule com to blys.
Id. p. 280.

So ageyn Edward thei held it half a gere,
Thei sauh the sege so hard, thei sent a messengere,
Thei ilde forto gelde at his owen biddyng,
If he tham saue wilde ageyn Henry our kyng.
R. Brunne, p. 228.

Ac ich praye the quath Hunger er thow wende
Of beggers and of bydares, what best be to done
For ich wot wel be thow went, worche thei wolle ful ylle.
Piers Ploughman, p. 139.

And he sente hise servauntis for to clepe men that weren bede to the weddingis and thei wolden no come. Eftsoone he sende othere servauntis, and seide seye ye to the men that ben beden to the feeste, Lo, I have maad redy my mete, my bolis and my volatilis ben slayne, and alle thingis ben redy, come ye to the weddingis.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 22.

And [he] sent forth his servauntes, to call them that were byd to the weddynge, and they wouldo not come. Agayne he sent forth other servauntes, sayinge, tell them whiche are bydden: beholde, I haue prepared my dynner, myne oxen and my fatlinges are killed, and al thynges are redy, come vnto the mariage.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This carpenter said his devotion,
And still he sit, and biddeth his praiere,
Awaiting on the rain, if he it here.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3641.

Or if you list to bid him thennes gon,
Trill this pin, and he wol vanish anon
Out of sight of every maner wight.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,611.

The sculle is fette, and whe therein,
Wherof he badde his wife beginne,
Drinke with thy father, dame he saide,
And she to his byddyng obeide,
And toke the sculle, and what hir liste
She drinketh, as she, whiche nothyng wist
What cup it was. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Now nothyng lacketh but cunnning of the geastes, that the preparacion be not made in vaine. But they againe neglected the bidder. And whan the bidders called vpon them, euery man made his excuse.—Udal. Matt. c. 22.

The world is wondrous fearful nowe, for danger bids men doubt.
And aske how chanceth this? or what meanes all this meedu? Gascoigne. A Glose, &c.

A princess being born, and abbess, with those maids,
All noble like herself, in bidding of their beads
Their holiness bequeath'd upon her to descend
Which there should after live.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Adhelwolfe king of the Danes came vpon him with a great power, and bade him battell, wherein Cochricus and Adelwolfe, kings of the Pagans were slaine.
Stowe. The West Saxons, an. 860.

——— For myselfe, I was not injur'd so,
By any Troian, that my powers, should bid them any blowes;
In nothing beare they blame of me.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Ye Prēshe kyng and his counsayle wrote agayne to ye kynge of Castel, buddyng hym to take no thought nor doubte, for within ye month of January he wolde gyne Englande so moche ado.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 50.

Lep. Heere's more newes.
Mes. Thy buddings haue been done, and euerie houre
Most noble Cæsar, shalt thou haue report
How 'tis abroad.—Shakes. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 4.

Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Milton. Lycidas.

Having performed that with great dexterity, he [South] lays by the text for the present, and according to the ancient and laudable custom he addressed himself to the Bid prayer.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Sir Roger, who is very well acquainted with my humour, lets me rise and go to bed when I please, dine at his own table or in my chamber as I think fit, sit still and say nothing without bidding me be merry.—Spectator, No. 106.

In the thirty sixth year of his age he repaired to Long-Lane, and looked upon several dresses which hung there deserted by their first masters and exposed to the purchase of the best bidder.—Id. No. 264.

Have I not said, not what I ought,
But what by earthly master taught?
Did I e'er weigh, through duty strong,
In thy great biddings, right and wrong?
Churchil. The Ghost, b. iv.

BIDE. } Dut. Beyden; A. S. Bidan, Abi-
BI'DING, n. } dan. To stay or remain. See ABIDE.

To tarry, to dwell, to continue, to wait, to expect; to stay under or support, to endure.

The next Letenes tide Sir Lowys went his way,
No langere wild he bide, for thing that men mot say.
R. Brunne, p. 227.

That of long time here haue I bene,
Within this yle biding as quene,
Liuing at ease, that neuer wight
More perfit joy haue ne might.—Chaucer. Dream.

Shame shall make him bide by his promise though he were such a man, that I could not compell him, if he would deny it.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 412.

We haue bene but yuell counsayled to take this way: yet it had bene better to haue gone by Saynt Omers than to bide in this danger.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 413.

They are in maruellous awe of the Spaniards, and very simple people, and liue maruellous sauagely: for they brought us to their bidings about two miles from the harborough, where wee saw their women and lodging, which is nothing but the skin of some beast layd vpon the ground.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 809.

Westm. Farwell faint-hearted and degenerate King,
In whose cold blood no sparke of honor bides.
Shakespeare. 3 Part K. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 1.

No cruel guard of diligent cares, that keep
Crown'd woes awake, as things too wise for sleep:
But reverend discipline, and religious fear,
And soft obedience, find sweet biding here.
Crashaw. A Religious House.

And now too soon for us the circling hours
This dreaded time have compassed, wherein we
Must bide the stroak of that long threatn'd wound;
At least if so we can.—Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

For thou art not a God that takes
In wickedness delight;
Evil with thee no biding makes
Fools or mad men stand not within thy sight.
Id. Psalm 5

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,
And durst not bide it on the English coast.
Behind their treach'rous shallows they withdraw,
And lay their snares to catch the British hoast.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 179.

BIDE'NTAL. } Bis, binus, two; and dens,
BIDE'NTATE. } a tooth.
Having two teeth, two prongs.

I desire you will tell her Grace, that ill management of forks is not to be helped when they are only bidental, which happens in all poor houses.
Swift to Gay, March 19, 1729.

[Oniscus.] With seven scales, the last bidentate.
Pennant. British Zoology.

BIDE'T. Fr. Bidet, of unknown etymology.
A little nag or curtall, (Cotgrave.)

I will returne to my selfe, mount my bidet, in a dance; and corvet upon my curtall.—B. Jonson. Masque. Chloridia.

BIE'NNIAL. Bis, and annus, a year.
Living, lasting or enduring, two years.

You can by no culture or art extend a fennel stalk to the stature and bigness of an oak: then, why should some be very long lived, others only annual or biennial?
Ray. On the Creation, pt i.

It [the Eastern Mullein] flourished in the physick garden very well two years, and flowerd extremely, but did not perfect seeds, and being a biennial plant, is since entirely decay'd.—Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

BIER. } A. S. Baran, to bear; that
BIER-BALKS. } which bears. Usually applied to—

That which bears a corps to burial; by R. Gloucester.

That which bears a sick person; a litter.

Uter, the gode kynge, (of wham we speke by vore)
Was feble after that he was in horse bere y bore.
R. Gloucester, p. 165.

And he cam nygh and touchide the beere, and thei that baren, stoden. and he seyde yonge man Y seye to thee rise up.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 7.

Womā, saith he, make no more weping. And when he had so said, he came unto the biere whereon the dead mā was carried, and put his hand to it. And immediatly they whiche carryed the corpse stayed.—Udal. Ib.

It is a shame to behold the insatiablenesse of some covetous persons in their donges: that where their ancestours left of their land a broad and sufficient beerebaik, to carry the corps to the Christian sepulture, how men pinch at such beerebalkis, which by long use and custome ought to be inviolably kept for that purpose.
Homily for Rogation Weeke, pt. iv.

Truly so long as he [Strabo] lived, they feared his greatness obtained by arms, for indeed he was a noble captain: but being stricken with a thunderbolt, and dead, they took him from the bier whereon his body lay as they carried him to burial, and did thereto great villany.
North. Plutarch, p. 526.

But when Heliodorus, I wot not whether by sickneese or by some devised violence, was dead (both I am to say so much, would God the thing itselfe could not speak it!) when his corps was carryed forth to be buried by the biere bearers, many honourable personages went before it, as mourners in blacke.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 360.

———I know not why
I loue this youth, and I haue heard you say,
Loue's reason's without reason. The beere at doore,
And a demand who is't shall dye, I'd say
My father, not this youth.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

——A bier is next prepared,
On which the lifeless body should be rear'd,
Covered with cloth of gold, on which was laid
The corps of Arcite, in like robes array'd.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Hung'rio Grad, the fun'ral bell
Cal'd every friend to bid farewell.
I join'd the melancholy bier,
And dropp'd the unavailing tear.
Cotton. Fusion. The last Death.

BI-FID. Bis and findo. To cleave in two. Cleft in two: common in works on Natural History.

[Lobster.] With jointed body; legs eleven on each side; tail bifid, &c.—Pennant. British Zoology.

The characters [of the hemlock] are: the leaves cut into minute segments, the petals of the flowers bifid, &c.
Miller, in v. Cicuta.

BI-FOLD. Twofold. Thus, the quarto Shakespeare. The first folio reads by foule.

——O madnesse of discourse!
That cause sets vp, with, and against thyselfe—
Bi-fold authorities; where reason can reuolt
Without perdition, and loose assume all reason,
Without reuolt.—Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 2.

BI-FORM. } Bis and forma; form or frame.
BIFO'RMITY. } Having two forms or shapes; double formed.

And, from whose monster teeming womb, the earth
Renew'd, what much it mourn'd, a biform birth.
Crowall. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

Strange things he spake of the biformity
Of the Dæmons, what mongrel sort
Of living wights; how monstrous-shap'd they be;
And how that man and beast in one consort.
More. Song of the Soul, pt. i. c. 3. s. 70.

BI-FRONTED. Bis and frons; the front or forehead.
Having two fronts; doubled fronted.

——Tutors, pray him: doe.
And put a case of wizards o're his head,
That he may look bi-fronted, as he speake
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 3.

——The condition
Of our affairs exacts a double care.
And, like bifronted Janus, we must look
Backward as forward.
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act ii. sc. 3.

BI-FURCATED. } Bis, two, and furca, a
BIFURCA'TION. } fork.
Separated, divided, cleft asunder, like a fork; bifurked.

The disciples of Antychriste with their bifurked ordinaries must violently pucke from the trewe Christen Church (whose kyngdome is not of this world) the eternal worde of the Lorde.
Bale. Image, pt. ii.

The first a Catechrestical and far derived similitude, it [the mandrake] hath with man, that is, in a bifurcation or division of the root into two parts, which some are content to call thighs.—Browne. Vul. gar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

The mouth [of the lesser lamprey] is formed like that of the preceding, on the upper part is a large bifurcated tooth.
Pennant. British Zoology.

BIG, v. }
BI'GGEN, adj. }
BI'GGIN, n. }
BI'GGED. }
BI'GGEST. } Perhaps from the A. S. Byegan, Biegan; Sw. Bygga; Eng. to big, to build. Ædificare, struere, adstruere, to build, to pile or heap up; and thus to increase the bulk or size, to enlarge, to form into a large size, to magnify.

Dr. Jamieson says, "that a biggin is a house properly of a larger size, as opposed to a cottage." He also produces, from Ritson, some instances of the use of bygly, signifying habitable, commodious; and others where it may signify big, i. e. large. Ritson gives no explanation, but evidently considers them the same word differently applied.

Large, enlarged, great, ample; magnified, of great size, magnitude or extent; extended, distended; expanded; filled out in bulk, swoln, tumid.

Big is much used as a prefix.

A of Gryme a fissbere men redes git in rome,
That he bigged Grymesby Gryme that nix tome
R. Brunne, p. 26.

Kirkes & houses brent, nouht than wild be spare.
Ther the Inghs had bigged, he mad it wast & bare.
R. Brunne, p. 62.

But they can doublin their rentall
To bigge hem castles, and bigge hem hold.
Chaucer. The Ploukman's Tale.

But on a day well armed bright and shene
Hector and many a worthy knight out went
With speare in hond, & bigge bowes bent.
Id. Troilus, b. iv.

I beseech you lay no bigger burthen vpō vs then those faytheful fathers dyd which thought that sufficient.
Frith. Workes, p. 145.

He wyll dystroye thy bygly landys,
And slee all that before hym standys
And lose full many a lyfe
Le Bone Florence. Ritson, vol. iii.

Sche seyde, God, of myghtys moost,
Fadur and sone, and holy goost,
As y dud nevyr thys dede,
Yf y gyltles be of thys,
Brynge me to thy bygly blys,
For thy grete godhede.—Id. Ib.

The holy armyte brent he thare,
And lefte that bygly hows full bare,
That semely was to see.—Id. Ib.

Then came eon hyght Awdromoche,
The furste bigger of Anteoche,
And enhabyted euntreys elene.—Id. Ib.

And surely sauing that in that chapyter he brawleth bigly, and scoldeth strongelye and raileth ryallye, and lyeth pussauntlye els is all hys matter besyde maruelouse feable and weake.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 701.

In the somer folowynge, about Mary Magdaleyne tyde fell hayle of suche bygnesse that it slewe both men and beestys.
Fabyan, vol. i. c. 238.

The elephantes of that countrey bee stronger then those that be made tame in Aphrike & their bignes do nunswer vnto their strēgth.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, p. 238.

[William Rufus] was of person a square man, red coloured, &c. . . . . not of any great stature, though somewhat big bellied.—Stowe. William Rufus, an. 1087.

And those which erewhile were so warie and wise, waxt forward enough after the euent, and grew to speake bigly.
Savile. Tacitus, p. 194.

Hence oftentimes authoritie
Lookes bigger than a bull,
With sutters poore too sternely quicke,
In heaping them too dull.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix.

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair;
Imbon'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
Broad shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Mar. O Lucia, Lucia, might my big-swoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marcia could answer thee in sighs, keep pace
With all thy woes, and count out tear for tear.
Addison. Cato, Act iv. sc. 1.

Now driven before him, through the arching rock,
Came tumbling, heaps on heaps, th' unnumber'd flock;
Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind.
Pope. Odyssey, b. ix.

BI'GAM. } Gr. Δισγαμος, δις or bis, twice,
BI'GAMOUS. } and γαμ-εω, to unite in marriage.
BI'GAMIST. } A bigame is one twice married,
BI'GAMY. } whether the first spouse be living or not. A divorced woman who married again was also called a bigame.

——It is the kind of man,
Sith Lameth was, that is so long gone,
To be in loue as false as euer he can,
He was the first father that began
To louen two and was in bigame.
Chaucer. Of Queen Annelida, &c.

And therefore was it alleged against this goldsmyth that he was bigamus; this good woman perceyuing that her former marriages shoulde shorten her husbands dayes, came into the open courte before the judges and affyrmed by her othe contrarye to the truthe, that she was neuer maryed to no man other then to the sayde goldsmyth
Hall. Hen VIII. an. 35.

Which is a plain proofe yt eūcemig ye p̄hibiciō of any mā wiues then one & the forbiddig of bigamy by ye weddig of one wife after another, was the special ordināce of God & not of Sait Poule.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 279.

Saint Chrysostome saithe, that S. Paule suffereth not them, that haue twise married, to atteine suiche a roume, By these woordes, saithe M. Hardinge, Chrysostome condemneth the impure bigamie of our holy gospellers.
Jewel. A Defence of the Apologie, p. 173.

Greater is the wonder of your strickt chastitie, than it would be a nouell to see you a bigama.
Warner. Albion's England, Addition to, b. ii.

Their false god Vulcan is not very hard to unmask, he was a mortal man, and one of the sons of the other Lamech, the prime bigamist and corrupter of marriage.
Donne. Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 202.

Bigamy, according to the canonists, consisted in marrying two virgins successively, one after the other, or once marrying a widow.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 13. note b.

BI'GGIN. A kind of cap, Mr. Steevens says, at present worn only by children, but so called from the cap worn by the Beguins, an order of Nuns. "From the biggen to the nightcap;" Mr. Gifford interprets, "from infancy to age."

A biggin he had got about his brane,
For in his headpeece he felt a sore paine.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. May.

——Sleepe with it now,
Yet not so sound, and half so deepely sweete,
As hee whose brow (with homely biggen bound)
Snores out the watch of night.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 4.

Here is nothing but a little fresh straw,
A petticoat for a coverlet, and that torn too,
An old woman's biggen for a night cap.
Massinger. The Picture, Act iv. sc. 2.

You that have suck'd the milk of the court, and from thence have been brought up to the very strong meats and wine of it; been a courtier from the biggen to the night cap: (as we may say) and you, to offend in such a high point of ceremony, as this! and let your nuptials want all marks of solemnity!—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act iii. sc. 6.

BI'GOT, adj. }
BI'GOT, n. }
BI'GOTED. }
BIGO'TICK. }
BIGO'TICAL. }
BIGO'TICALLY. }
BI'GOTRY. } The French at this day apply the word bigot, to one superstitiously religious, not certainly from the oath be-got, as Menage thinks; but rather from the A. S. Bigan, colere; and hence also begine, a religious woman, (Wachter in v. Bein-Gott.) Cotgrave says, bigot, an old Norman word, (signifying as much as de par Dieu, or our—for God's sake) made good French, and signifying—

An hypocrite, or one that seemeth much more holy than he is: also a scrupulous, or superstitious fellow.

Speight says, "Bigin, bigot, superstitious hypocrite." Upon which Thynne remarks, "whiche sence I knowe yt maye somewhat beare, because yt sauorethe of the dispositione of those Begins or Beguines, for that ys the true wrytinge."

Wher findest thou a swinker of labour
Haue me to his confessour?
But Empresses, and Duchesses,
These Queenes, and eke Countesses,
These Abbesses, and eke begins.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

There came to him an English gentleman, who having run himself out of breath in the inns of court, had forsaken his country, and therewith his religion; and was turned both bigot and physitian, residing now in Bruxels.
Bp. Hall. Some Specialties in his Life.

The same fortune once happened to Mollere, on the occasion of his Tartuffe: which notwithstanding afterwards has seen the light, in a country more bigot than ours, and is accounted among the best pieces of that poet.
Dryden. Limberham, Epist. Ded.

This Proclus, though he were a superstitious Pagan, much addicted to the multiplying of gods, (subordinate to one supreme) or a bigotick polytheist, who had a humour of deifying almost every thing, and therefore would have this nature forsooth to be called a goddess too: yet does he declare it not to be properly such, but abusively only.
Cudworth. Intel. Syst. p. 686.

It hath been indeed of late confidently asserted by some, that never any of the ancient philosophers dream'd of any such thing as incorporeal substance, and therefore they would beat men in hand, that it was nothing but an upstart and new fangled invention of some bigotical religionists.
Id. Ib p. 18.

Because he [Julian] was an emperour, and had so great an animosity against Christianity, and was so superstitiously or bigotically zealous for the worship of the gods.
Id. Ib. p. 274.

It may be doubted, with good reason, whether there ever was in nature a more abject, slavish, and bigotted generation than the tribe of Beaux Esprits, at present so prevailing in this island.—Spectator. No. 234.

To take up half on trust, and half to try,
Name it not faith, but bungling bigotry.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. i.

They are terribly afraid of being called bigots and enthusiasts; but think there is no danger of falling into the opposite extreme of lukewarmness and want of piety.

Portens, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Nor think the Muse, whose sober voice ye hear,
Contracts with bigot frown her sullen brow;
Casts round religion's orb the mists of fear,
Or shades with horrours, what with smiles should glow.

Mason. Elegy on the Death of a Lady.

A rich chain of great pearls and small vases, red and gold, are other ornaments to our bigotted sovereign.

Pennant. Journey from Chester.

I shall only in one word mention the horrid effects of bigotry and avarice, in the conquest of Spanish America; a conquest on a low estimation effected by the murder of ten millions of the species.—Burke. Vindication of Nat. Society.

BI'LANDER. Dut. Be-landen, to land; Fr. Belandre, a boat or vessel, fit only to keep close to land.

Why chuse we then like bilanders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep,
When safely we may launch into the deep.

Dryden. The Hind & Panther, pt. i.

BI'LBO. } A kind of sword or rapier,
BI'LBOES. } and also of stocks for the feet;
BI'LBOESMITH. } so called because made at Bilboa.

Hauing once attempted to run away, I laid him in the bylboes, threatening to cut off his head.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 262.

I was also conueyed to their lodgings, which gathered tribute for the King of Denmarke, where I saw a pair of bilbowes; and I asked whether they were for the Lapptans, (if needs were) and they said no, but onely for their owne company if they should chance to be vnruly.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 295.

——— Tell that brave man of hope,
He shall the Mountford's find in th' head of all their troops,
To answer his proud braves; our bilbows be as good
As his, our arms as strong.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

It was not so of old: men took up trades,
That knew the craft they had been bred in right,
An honest bilbo-smith would make good blades.

B. Jonson. To my faithful Servant.

BILE. A. S. Bile, ulcus; Dut. Buyle; Ger. Buhel; Sw. Bald. Junius says, "Buyle vel puyle est tuber, a puylen; protuberare, prominere." Wachter, that Beul is a stroke, a blow; the mark made by a blow; a tumour; from the A. S. Bluan, to give a blow, to strike; yet he doubts whether the signification can be transferred from a tumour (a tuberculis) to an ulcer (ad ulcera). See BOIL. Applied to—

An ulcerous tumour.

And there was a beggar Lazarus by name, that lay at hise gate ful of bilis, and coueytide to be fulfilid of the crummys that fellen doun fro the riche mannes boord, and no man gaf to him, but houndis camen and likkiden his bylis.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 16.

When there is a byle in the skynne of any mans flesh, and it is healed and after in the place of the byle there appeare a whyte rysing, either a shynynge white somewhat redysh, let him be sene of the preast.—Bible, 1551. Lev. c. 13.

BILE. } Fr. Bile; Lat. Bilis; from the BI'LIOUS. } Gr. χολη, (Vossius). See the quotation from Arbuthnot. Used met. see the quotation from Prior.

But when once settled in the stomach, it excited vomitings, in which was thrown up all that matter which physicians call discharges of bile, attended with excessive torture.—Smith. Thucydides, b. ii.

The bile is of two sorts, the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, which is a sort of repository for the gall; and the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver.

Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. i.

The liver minds his own affair;
Kindly supplies our public uses,
And parts and strains the vital juices;
Still lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide;
Else we should want both gibe and satire;
And all be burst with pure good-nature.—Prior. Alma, c. i.

Some of them [voracious animals] have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. i.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run.

Garth. Dispensary, c. i.

BILK. Mr. Gifford says, "Bilk seems to have become a cant word about this (Ben Jonson's) time, for the use of it is ridiculed by others, as well as Jonson. It is thus explained in Cole's English Dictionary, 'Bilk, nothing; also to deceive.'" Lye, from the Goth. Bilaikan, which properly signifies insultando illudere.

To cheat, to defraud, to elude.

Tub. Hee will ha' the last word, though he take bilke for't.
Hugh. Bilke! what's that?
Tub. Why nothing, a word signifying nothing; and borrow'd here to express nothing.

B. Jonson. Tale of a Tub, Act i. sc. 1.

[He] was then ordered to get into the coach, or behind it, for that he wanted no instructors; but be sure you dog you, says he, don't you bilk me.—Spectator, No. 498.

Patrons in days of yore, like patrons now,
Expected that the bard should make his bow
At coming in, and ev'ry now and then
Hint to the world that they were more than men;
But, like the patrons of the present day,
They never bilk'd the poet of his pay.

Churchill. Independence.

BI-LITERAL. Consisting of, formed by, two letters, (literæ.)

It is the genius of the Sanscrit, and other languages of the same stock, that the roots of the verbs be almost universally biliteral.—Sir W. Jones. Fourth Anniversary Discourse.

BILL, v. } A. S. Bile. Perhaps from the A. S.
BILL, n. } Pullian, to pull. The beak, that which pecketh; the bill, that which pulleth. So in Lat. Vellicare, (from vellere, to pull,) is to pull, as a bird does.

The bill, beak, or nib of a bird, the nose or snout of a beast or fish, the snout or beak of a ship, (Somner.)

To bill (met.), to fondle, to play the part of fond lovers.

And of a rauen, which was tolde,
Of nyne houdred wynter olde,
She toke the head, with all the bille.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

No sooner had the bird the maiden eyde,
But, leaping on the rocke, downe from a bough
He takes a cherry up, (which he but now
Had hither brought, and in that place had laid
Till to the cleft his song had drawne the maid)
And flying with the small stem in his bill,
(A choicer fruit, than hangs on Bacchus' hill)
In fair Marina's bosom tooke his rest,
A heavenly seat fit for so sweet a guest:
Where Cytherea's doves might billing sit,
And gods and men with envy look on it.

Browne. British Pastorals, s. 3.

On whose [the cup's] swelling sides, four handles fixed were
And upon every handle sate, a pair of doves of gold;
Some billing and some pecking meat.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies
And after him, a surer messenger,
A dove sent forth once and again to spie
Green tree or ground whereon his foot may light.
The second time returning, in his bill
An olive leafe he brings, pacific signe.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

On the other side, Tom Faddle and his pretty spouse, wherever they come, are billing at such a rate, as they think must do our hearts good who behold 'em.

Spectator, No. 300.

His eyes with milder beauties beam,
Than billing doves beside the stream.

Moore. Solomon, pt. iii.

O let them ne'er, with artificial note,
To please a tyrant, strain their little bill,
But sing what heaven inspires, and wander where they will.—Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

BILL. } A. S. Bill; Dut. Byl; Ger. Beil;
BI'LLETS. } which Skinner thinks is Securis
BI'LLMAN. } rostrata, a beaked axe, so called from its great resemblance to the bill of a bird. Junius thinks billets are pieces of wood cut with a bill.

A hooked tool or weapon, to cut, mow, hew.

Agayne loke how vncomely a thyng it were if a philosophier would with his cloke & long beard scip about the stage, & play a parte in an interlude: or els holde a bill & a net in his hande in the place where the swordplayers are wont to fyght at vtterraunce, and syng theyr accustomed song.

Udal. Mark, Pref.

For where before tymes there were sent ouer, for the ayde and tuicyon of the tounes, and citees, brought vnder the obeysaunce of the English nacion thousands of men, apte and mete for the warre, and defence: now were sent into Fraunce, hundreds, yea scores, some rascall, and some not able to drawe a bow or carry a bill.

Hall. Hen. VI. an. 14.

When that the stak of wood was reared vp
Under the ayre within the inward court
With clouen oke and billets made of fyrre,
With garlandes she doth all beset the place.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

He in the mornynge caused the Mayre of the citie to apparell in armure the beste and most coragious persones of the citie: whiche brought to him iii. m. archers and iii. m. bilmen besyde them that were deputed to defend the citie.

Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

The souldiers Englishmen were all asleep except the watch, the which was slender; and yet the shout arises, bowes and bils, bows and bils; which is a signification of extreme defence, to avoide the present danger in all towns of war.—Knox. History of Reformation, p. 91.

Coccelus Proculus a bilman of the garde had a suite with his neighbour about a small parcell of ground, which lay doubtfull betweene them, Otho with his owne money bought his neighbours whole ground, and freely bestowed it vpon him.—Sacile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 18.

Enuy, when it is once conceiued in a malicious heart, is like fire in billets of juniper, which (they say) continues more yeares than one.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Anna & Peninna.

Firing the wood cut in length like our billets, at the ends, and joyning them together so close, that though no flame or fire did appeare, yet the heat continued without intermission.

Sir F. Drake. Revived, p. 50.

Come, pierce your old hogsheads, ne'er stint us in sherry,
For this is the season to drink and be merry;
That, reviv'd by good liquor and billets together,
We may brave the loud storms, and defy the cold weather.

Fenton. Imit. of Horace, b. i. Ode 9.

The ranks of bill-men in order to battle are always environ'd with pike men; for the bill-men serve specially for execution if the enemy be overthrown.

Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

Though winter reigns, our labours never fail:
Then all day long we hear the sounding flail;
And oft the beetle's strenuous stroke descends,
That knotty block wood into billets rends.

Scott. Amœbean, Ecl. 2.

BILL, v. } Spelman, *Schedula, libellus, syn-
BILL, n. } graphus; A. S. Bille unde Græco
BI'LLET, v. } Barb. Βιλλος; Gal. and Bel. Billet.
BI'LLET, n. } The verb occurs in our old translators; Conquirere milites, in modern usage, to enlist, to enroll, to put or write upon the muster-roll; is rendered—to bill by Sir Henry Savile.

To billet a soldier or other person is by note, bill, or particular in writing, to appoint his quarters or lodgings.

A bill seems to be applied to a statement in writing of certain particular things, as a bill of indictment, a bill of costs, a bill of exchange; the first setting forth the particular offences charged; the second, the particular sums claimed; and the last, the particular sum to be paid, the time when, the place where, &c.

This salfe cherl came forth a ful gret pas,
And saide; lord, if that it be your will,
As doth me right upon this pitous bill,
In which I plaine upon Virginius,
And if that he wol sayn it is not thus,
I wol it prove, and finden good witnesse,
That soth is that my bille wol expresse.

Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,078

He desyred to haue a bill drawen of the sayde resygnacion, that he myght be perfyght in the rehersall thereof.

Fabyan, an. 1389.

This bil putteth he fourth in ye pore beggers name. But we verely thinke if them self haue as much wit as their proctour lacketh, they had leuer see their bylmaker burned, then their supplicacion spedde.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 302.

Again, whereas divers of their neighbours, and of the Hotes themselves, (whom they had billed in their bands of soulders) stole away and ran to their enemies.

North. Plutarch, p. 522.

Pelopidas seeing every man afraid of this eclipse above, he would not compell the people to depart with this fear, nor with so ill hope to hazard the loss of seven thousand Thebans, being all billed to go this journey.—Id. Ib. p. 252.

Which being of itselfe a burdensome thing, was made much more insupportable, by the auarice and lewd disposition of the officers, who billed chiefly such as were old or impotent persons, and then for money released them.

Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 144.

The father of Alenas denied, and said that he had cast in no lot for him; and it seemd unto every man that there was some error in writing of those billes or names for the lottery.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 157.

Item, you haue caused the sixt of October last past, at Hampton Court for the defence of your owne cause, diuers seditious bils to bee written in counterfeited hands, and secretly to be throwne abroad in diuers partes of this realme.

Stowe. Edw. VI. an. 1540.

Thinkest thou that they be coblers, tapsters, or such like base mechanicall people, that write these bils and scrolls which are found daily in thy prætor's chair, and not the noblest men and best citizens that do it?

North. Plutarch, p. 820.

The peeres and captaines of Israel are driven manicled through the Assyrian streets, and billeted to the severall places of their perpetuall servitude.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Utter Destruction of Israel.

Scilicet ever hath extremity of mischief seized, where easier billets have not been billeted before.

Id. Cont. Haman Disrespected.

Robin, you must know, is the best man in town for carrying a billet: the fellow has a thin body, swift step, demure look, prudent sense, and knows the town.

Spectator, No 498.

Our countrymen could not forbear laughing when they heard a lover chanting out a billet-doux, and even the superscription of a letter set to a tune.—Id. No. 29.

As he never said—no—to any request in his life, he has given them a bill, drawn by a friend of his upon a merchant in the city, which I am to get changed.

Goldsmith. The Good-natur'd Man, Act iii. sc. 1.

I write this, Eliza, at Mr. James's whilst he is dressing, and the dear girl, his wife, is writing beside me, to thee.—I got your melancholy billet before we sat down to dinner.

Sterne, Let. 84.

BI'LLOW, v. } Sw. Goth. Bulg-ia, to bulge, to belly out, to swell.
BI'LLOW, n. } To swell or heave; usually
BI'LLOWY. } applied to the swelling or heaving of the waves.

The mariner amidde the swelling seas,
Who seeth his barke with many a billowe beaten,
Now here, now there, as winds and waues best please,
When thundring Ioue with tempest list to threaten,
And greedines in deepest gulfe for to be eaten,
Yet learnes a meane by mere necessitie
To saue himselfe in such extremitie.

Gascoigne. Chorus to Jocasta, Act ii.

Within two dayes after, there arose another great storme, at the northeast, and we lay a trie, being driven far into the sea, and had much ado to keepe our barke from sinking, the billowe was so great.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 334.

—— O, doe but thinke
You stand upon the riuage, and behold
A citie on th' inconstant billowes dauncing:
For so appeares the fleet maiesticall,
Holding due course to Harflew.

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Chorus 3.

But as a ship that vnder saile doth passe
The roaring billowes and the raging streames,
And drawing nigh the wished port assures,
Breaks on some hidden rocke her ribs and beames.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. ii. s. 84.

The beaten bark, her rudder lost,
Is on the rolling billows tost;
Her keel now ploughs the ooze, and soon
Her top-mast tilts against the moon.—Cotton. Winter.

—— No sleepe could seise
His eye-lids, he beheld the Pleiades;
The Beare, surnam'd the Waine, that round doth moue
About Orion, and keeps still aboue
The billowie ocean.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. v

The billowing snow, and violence of the showre,
That from the lims disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour.

Prior. Solomon, b. iii.

—— Their legions roam without a guide,
Like vessels tost on ocean's billowy tide,
Whose course unsteer'd the winds and tempests sway,
And chance conducts them o'er the watry way.

Lewis. Statius, b. x.

Without this last [judgment] the vessel is tossed by every billow, and will find shipwreck in every breeze.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World.

When first the kingdom to thy virtues due
Rose from the billowy deep in distant view;
When A[illegible] isle, o'ercame pe[illegible] pride,
Towered in imperial state above the tide.

Warton. On the Marriage of the King.

BIN. Skinner, and after him, Tooke, derive from the A. S. Pindan, to enclose, to pen, or pin; to bin, differing merely in the application, from to pen or pin.

Any thing that encloses, that confines; as a corn-bin, a wine-bin.

Wel coude he kepe a garner and a binne
Ther was non auditour coude on him winne.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 595.

You might haue seene them throng out of the town,
Like ants, when they do spoile the bing of corne,
For winters dread, which they beare to their den

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

—— Oft I've seen,
Ev'n at her frown the bost'rous uproar cease,
And the mad pickers, tam'd to diligence,
Cull from the bin the sprawling sprigs, and leaves
That stain the sample, and its worth debase.

Smart. The Hop Garden, b. ii.

O'er twice three pickers, and no more, extend
The binman's sway. Id. Ib.

BI'NAL. } Bis, Binus, two.
BI'NARY. } Twofold, double.

Thor. I have 'em already, Somerton.
Somerton. Binal reverence and this.

Ford. Witch of Edmonton, Act iii. sc. 2.

Pythagorus affirmeth, that of the two first principles, unity was God, and the soveraign good, which is the very nature of one, and is understanding it selfe: but the infinite binary, is the devill and evill, about which is the multitude materiall, and the visible world.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 665.

So that this matter was rightly called heaven: and the union of the passive and active principle in the creation of this material heaven is the second day's work, and the binarie denotes the nature thereof.

More. The Philosophick Cabbala, c. l.

BIND, v. } Goth. and A. S. Bindan: Dut.
BIND, n. } and Ger. Binden; Sw. Binda. See
BI'NDER. } Bond.
BI'NDING. } To tie, to fasten, to knit, to connect, to confine, to put into confinement, under constraint or obligation; to constrain, to oblige.

—— Sir mercy, my life thou saue it me,
Do not that villany, lettred that I be,
In prison thou me do, but nought in bondes bynde,
I pray yow it be so, for schame of my kynde.

R. Brunne, p. 167.

And I pursuyde this wise tel to the deeth, byndynge and bytakyng into holdes men and wymmen.

Wiclif. Dedis, c. 23.

& I persecuted this way vnto the deathe byndinge and deliueryng into prison both men and women.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

Eroude had holden Jon, and bounden him, and puttide him into prisoun.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 14.

Now sith it may nat goodly be withstound
And is a thing so vertuous in kind
Refuseth nought to loue for to ben bound
Sith as him seluen list he may not bind.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

And vnto thys your fathers set their hãdes & seales, binding them seluen to compell the king to keepe thys contracte.

Barnes. Works, p. 89.

The hunter seelynge both his eyen, and byndinge his [the lyon's] legges strongly together, fynally daunteth his fiercenesse, and maketh hym obediente to his ensygnes and tokens.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governor, b. ii. c. 14.

And likewyse they did calculate that whiche might transcende and be ouer the ioynters or byndinge togiders of the sayd briques.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 76.

—— Well Jessica goe in,
Perhaps I will returne immediately;
Doe as I bid you, shut doores after you, fast binde fast finde,
A prouerbe neuer stale in thriftie minde.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 5.

Euen in those actions whereby an offence may bee occasioned (though not giuen) charity binder us to cleare both our owne name, and the conscience of others.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Altar of the Reubenites.

For he knows, that we have no strength but what he gives us; and therefore, as he binds burdens upon our shoulders, so he gives us strength to bear them.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 11.

There grew by this a field of corne, high, ripe; where reapers wrought,
And let thicke handfuls fall to earth; for which, some other brought Bands, and made sheaves. Three binders stood, and took the handfuls reapt
From boyes that gatherd quickly up; and by them armefuls heapt. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

There too he form'd the likeness of a field
Crowded with corn, in which the reapers toil'd
Each with a sharp toothed sickle in his hand
Along the furrow here, the harvest fell
In frequent handfuls: there, they bound the sheaves.
Three binders of the sheaves their sultry task
All plied industrious, and behind them boys
Attended, filling with the corn their arms,
And off rang still their bunches to be bound.—Cowper. Ib.

We both are bound to follow heavens behests,
And tend our charges with obeisaunce meeke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

There goes through the whole length of it a spacious walk of the finest gravel, made to bind and unite so firmly, that it seems one contained stone.—Tatler, No. 179.

The law, by which all creatures else are bound,
Binds man the lord of all. Cowper. Task, b. i.

Where in the croft the russet hay rick stands,
The dext'rous binder twists the sedgy bands,
Across the stack his sharp-edg'd engine guides,
And the hard mass in many a truss divides.

Scott. Amaburan, Ecl 2.

BI-NO'MINOUS. Bis, Binus, two, and Nomen, a name.
Having two names.

Expect not I should reckon up their several names, because daily increasing, and many of them are binominous, or which, when they began to tire in sale, are quickned with a new name.—Fuller. Worthies. Norwich.

BIN-O'CULAR. Bis, Binus, two, and Oculus, an eye. See Ocular.
Having two eyes. When applied to a telescope;—allowing or requiring the use of both eyes.

So that as most animals are binocular, spiders for the most part octonocular, and some senocular; so flies, &c. are multocular, having as many eyes as there are perforations in their cornea.—Derham. Phys. Theol. b. viii. c. 3. note a.

As in certain circumstances we have only see one object appear double, so in others we as invariably see two objects unite into one, and, in appearance, lose their duplicity. This is evident in the appearance of the binocular telescope.

Reid. Inquiry, c. 6. s. 14.

BIO'GRAPHER. } From Βιος, life, and γραφω, to grave, to write.
BIO'GRAPHY. } A writer of the lives of BIOGRA'PHICAL. } individuals.

The character of the author, that industrious and exact antiquary and biographer, Mr. Anthony Wood, is well known to the learned world.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. Booksellers to the Reader.

But in that he came so late thither as this author mentions, and stayed so long there as three years, which he afterwards mentions, and as the biographical fry who follow have noted out of him,—they are all mistaken, for he will presently appear two years before that time amounts to, in the wars abroad.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

His biographical writings teach philosophy, at once by precept and by example. His morals and his characters mutually explain and give force to each other. His sentiments of the duty of a biographer were peculiarly just and delicate.—Langhorne. Life of Plutarch.

Those parallel circumstances and kindred images, to which we readily conform our minds, are, above all other writings, to be found in narratives of the lives of particular persons; and therefore, no species of writing seems more worthy of cultivation than biography, since none can be more delightful or more useful, none can more certainly enchain the heart by irresistible interest, or more widely diffuse instruction to every diversity of condition.

Johnson. Rambler, No. 60.

You cannot compare the history of the same events as delivered by any two historians, but you will meet with many circumstances which, though mentioned by one, are either wholly omitted, or differently related by the other; and this observation is peculiarly applicable to biographical writings.—Watson. Apology for Christianity.

BI-PA'RTITE. } Bis, two, and Partiri, partitus, to part.
BI'PARTED. } Shared, separated, divided, into two parts.

By our by-parted crowne, of which
The moyetie is mine,
By God, to whome my soule must passe,
And so in time may thine,
I pray thee. Warner. Albion's England, b. iv.

The divine fate is also bipartite; some theists supposing God, both to decree and to doe all things in us (evil as well as good) or by his immediate influence to determine all actions, and so make them alike necessary to us.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref. p. 1.

BI-PED. Gr. Δικους; Lat. Bipes. Bis, two, and pes, a foot: in natural history as distinguished from quadruped.
Having two feet.

By which the man, when heav'nly life was ceas'd,
Became an helpless, naked, biped beast,
Fore'd, on a cursed earth, to fret and toil;
To brutes a native, him a foreign soil.

Byrom. An Epistle.

BI-PE'NNATED. Bis, two, and Penna, a wing.
Having two wings.

For the keeping the body steady, and upright in flight, it generaly holds true (if I mistake not) that a l bipennated insects have poises under the hinder parts of their wings, but such as have four wings or wings with elytra, none.
Derham. Phys. Theol. b. viii. c. 4.

BIRCH. } A. S. Bire, Birce; Dut. Berke;
Bi'rchen. } Ger. Birke, which Wachter thinks is from the verb Brechen, splendere, to be bright; so called from the brilliant whiteness of the bark. Pliny (xvi. 18,) speaks of the mirabilis candor of the birch. It showeth wonderful white, says Holland.

But how the fire was maked up on highte,
And eke the names how the trees highte,
As oke, fir, birch.—Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2921.

An allegory is as much as to say as straūge speakyng or borrowed speach. As whē we say of a wanton child, this sheepe hath magottes in his tayle, he must be annoynted with byrchan salue, which speach I borow of the shepheardes.
Tindall. Works, p. 166.

The eugh, obedient to the benders will,
The birch for shafts, the sallow for the mill.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

—— Now, as fond fathers,
Having bound vp the threatning twigs of birch,
Onely to sticke it in their children's sight,
For terror, not to vse, in time the rod
More mock'd, then fear'd.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act i. sc. 4.

For though no more his brow severe, nor dread
Of birchen sceptre awes my riper age,
A sterner tyrant rises to my view,
With deadlier weapon arm'd.—Jago. Edge-hill, b. iii.

BIRD, n. } Anciently Bridde; from Bird, v. } the A.S. Brædan to broaden,
Bi'rder. } to spread abroad. So called
Bi'rding, adj. } from the increased breadth,
Bi'rdlime. } when the wings are expanded or spread abroad.

Augurandi studium, is rendered by Goldyng, Bird spelling. See Spell, and Burbolts.

Ich wente forth wyde where, walkynge myn one
In a wylde wyldernesse, by a wone sydo
Bitaso of briddes, abyde me made.
Piers Ploughman, p 169.

The birds that han left her song
While they han suffred cold full strong
In wethers grille, and derke to sight
Ben in May for sunne bright
So glad, that they shew in singing
That in her hert is such liking
That they mote singen and ben light.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

These louers know well inough, the vaineglorious mindes of many, which haue a great delight in their owne prayses wherewith they be caught like as the byrder beguyleth the byrdes.—Vives. Instruct. of Christian Women, b. i. c. 11.

The yonger sorte, come pyping on apace,
In whistles made of fine entycing wood,
Til they haue caught the birds, for whom they brydel
Gascoigne. Epit. to Steele Glas.

Thei should haue lacked leisure to haue separate the oyntmentes and swete spices from the bodye, seeyng they cleaued as fast thereto as byrdelime.—Udal. John, c. 20.

Another parte followynge the flighte of byrdes (for the Frenchmen are above all other nations cunninge in bird spellinge,) with muche slaughter of the barbarous nations pearsed vnto the coste of Sclavonie, and rested in Pannonie.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 108.

No tree, whose branches did not brauely spring;
No branch, whereon a fine bird did not sit:
No bird, but did her shrill notes sweetly sing:
No song but did containe a louely dit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would haue thee gone,
And yet no further then a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore prisoner in his twisted gyues,
And with a silken thred plucks it back againe,
So louing jealous of his liberty.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 2.

I do inuite you to morrow morning to my house to breakfast after we'll a birding together, I haue a fine hawke for the bush.—Id. Merry Wives, Act iii. sc. 3.

—— O that this young fellow,
Who, on my knowledge, is able to beat a man,
Should be baffled by this blind imagined boy,
Or fear his bird-bolts.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act iii. sc. 1.

As Cupid took his bow and bolt,
Some birding sport to find,
He chanced on a country swain,
Which was some yeoman's hind.
Cupid and the Clown. Uncertaine Auctors.

Now as touching birdlime, it is made of the berries of misselto, gathered in harvest time before they are ripe; for if they should tarie still to take showers of raine, well might they thrive and encrease in bignesse, but their strength and vertue would be gone cleane, for ever making any such glew or birdlime aforesaid.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 4.

As there is a preparedness to good works, so there is a preparedness to evil; when the heart is thus bird-limed, then it cleaves to every thing it meets with.
Goodwin. A Christian's Growth, pt. ii. c. 3.

Sweet fellow-prisoners, 'twas a cruel art,
The first invention to restrain the wing,
To keep the inhabitants o' the air close captive,
That were created to sky freedom: surely
The merciless creditor took his first light,
And prisons their first models, from such bird-loops.
Shirley. The Bird in a Cage, Act iv. sc. 1.

Of birds, how each, according to her kind,
Proper materials for her nest can find,
And build a frame, which deepest thought in man
Would or amend or imitate in vain?—Prior. Solomon, b. i.

How oft your birds have undeserving bled,
Linnet, or warbling thrush, or moaning dove,
Pheasant with gaily-glistening wings,
Or early-mounting lark!—Warton. Ode on Shooting.

That government being so situated, as to have a large range of prospect, and as it were a bird's eye view of every thing, they might see distant dangers, and distant advantages, which were not so visible to those, who stood on the common level.—Burke. Letter to Thomas Burgh, Esq.

BIRTH. } The third person of the verb
Bi'rthday. } to bear; A.S. Beorthe; Ger.
Bi'rthnight. } Burt, from the verb Bæren,
Bi'rthplace. } That which beareth; any
Bi'rthright. } manner of action which beareth; that which any person or Bi'rthtide. } thing beareth; (sc.) into life, into existence. Noble by birth; English by birth; i. e. by family, parentage, &c.

Birth is too established by usage, in composition with day, night, right, &c. to allow a separation.

And Jhesus passinge, sawgh a man blynd fro his birthe; and hise disciplis axiden hym, maister, what synnede this man, or hise eldris, that he schulde be bowrn blynd.
Wiclif. John, c. 9.

And as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blynd from his byrth. And hys dyscyples asked him, saying: master, who dyd sinne: this man, or his father and mother, yᵗ he was borne blind.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And whanne a conuenable day was fallen Eroude in his birth-day made a soper to the princes and tribunes and to the grettist of Galilee.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 6.

But when a cõuenient day was come: Herode on his birth-day made a supper to ye lordes, captains & chief estates of Galile.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

On of the gretest adversitees of this world, is whan a free man by kinde, or of birthe, is constreined by poverte to eten the almesse of his enemie.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And Jacob sayd: sell me thys daye thy byrthright. And Esau answered: lo I am at the poynt to dye, and what profite shall this byrthright do me: and Jacob sayd: swere to me then this daye. And he swore to hī, and solde his byrthright vnto Jacob.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 25.

Though we were exempted from the common condition of our birth, yet he would not deliver himselfe from those ordinary rites, that implied the weaknesse, and blemishes of humanity.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Purification.

And so those od dayes the Egyptians do call at this present, the dayes of the Epact, celebrating and solemnizing them as the birth-dayes of their gods.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1051.

Macd. Let vs rather
Hold fast the mortall sword: and like good men,
Bestride our downfall birthdeme.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

But howsoever it was, he [Polymnis] descended from one of the most noble and ancient houses of the Thebans, of whom they report this notable thing: that the most part of this noble lineage carried upon their body even for a naturall birth-mark from their mothers womb, a snake.
North. Plutarch, p. 917.

No ominous star did at thy birthtide shine,
That might of thy sad destiny divine.
Drayton. Dudley to Lady Jane Gray.

It is in effect therefore the birth-day of the world; the beginning of a new, better, eternal life to men, (offered to all, and effectually bestowed on those, who will embrace it,) which we now do celebrate.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

However it comes about, that now they celebrate Queen Elizabeth's birthnight, as that of their saint and patroness; yet then they were for doing the work of the Lord by arms against her.—Dryden. Religio Laici, Pref.

But why your wonder should I vainly raise?
My birthplace tell, and Ariadne's praise.
Fawkes. Argon. of Apollonius, b. iii.

An eminent person of later times, was reproached by one of better birth, though of meaner parts, for having formerly been a carrier. His answer, for his temper and excellent judgement in it, is not to be forgotten, which was, "that if he who reproached him had once been a carrier, he would have been a carrier still."—Tatler, No. 294.

Useful discoveries are sometimes indeed the effect of superior genius, but more frequently they are the birth of time and of accidents.—Reid. Inquiry, c. 1. s. 8.

Those barb'rous ages past, succeeded next
The birthday of invention; weak at first,
Dull in design, and clumsy to perform.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

The protection of the liberty of Britain is a duty which they owe to themselves, who enjoy it; to their ancestors, who transmitted it down; and to their posterity who will claim at their hands this, the best birthright, and noblest inheritance of mankind.—Blackstone. Comment. b. iv. c. 33.

BIS-CUIT. Bis, and Coquere, Coctum, twice baked.

The article of food, so called, is not uncommonly more than twice baked.

The Turke doth not amend his galeis, nor rigge out mō then fiftie. In Greece there is no biscoct in making, no preparacon of vitales, or other thing.
Lodge. Illustrat. of British History, vol. i. p. 169.

Besides this, these ioly gallauntes lefte behynd theim for haste, all their tentes, xiiii. greate gonnes and xl. barrelles of pouder, ccc. pipes of wyne, cc. pipes of basket and flour, cc. frayles of figges and resones, and v. c. barrelles of herrings.—Holl. Hen. VI. an. 4.

In this march a pair of shoos was sold for thirty shillings, and a basket cake for ten shillings; so great was our want both of cloathing and victuals.
Sir F. Drake. West Indian Voyage, p. 57.

Mr. Boreel told me, that the curious merchant used no other art, than the stowing of his basket, well baked, in casks exactly caulked.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 108.

The prattling about the rights of men will not be accepted in payment of a biscuit or a pound of gun powder.
Burke. Reflect. on the French Revolution.

BI-SECT. } Bis, twice; and Secare, Sec-
Bisections. } tum, to cut:—
To cut into two.

Any assigned arch or angle may be bisected by plain common Geometry.—Barrow. Math. Lect. 15.

BI'SHOP, n. } This word, upon the introBi'shop, v. } duction of Christianity, found
Bi'shopdom. } its way into all the European Bi'shoping. } languages. A. S. Biscop;
Bi'shophood. } Dut. Bischop; Ger. Bischof;
Bi'shoply. } Sw. Biskop; Fr. Evesque;
Bi'shoprick. } It. Vescovo; Sp. Obispo, from the Gr. Επισκοπος, from Επι, and Σκοπ-εω, to look into. A bishop is literally—
An over-looker, an over-seer.

Milk, in Yorkshire, is said to be bishoped, when it is burnt. "Formerly, in days of superstition, whenever a Bishop passed through a town or village, all the inhabitants ran out in order to receive his blessing; this frequently caused the milk on the fire to be left till burnt to the vessel, and gave origin to the above allusion." (Grose, Prov. Gloss.) Tindale seems to point to a more specious origin of this expression, in the rancour of the reformers, which ascribed every ill that might betide them to the popish bishops.

To bishop—to perform the church ceremony of confirmation. See the example from Sir Thomas More.

For that lond that bitwene Homber, & the water of Temese y wis
Ich wene in the bischop riche of Lyncolne ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 5.

The bishop of Canterbirie in comon alle o liche,
Schewed it in ilk schire, alle his bisshop riche.
R. Brunne, p. 301.

And by cam a man of a mayde. and metropolitanus,
And baptisede an bisshoppede, whit the blode of us herte
Alle that wilnede other wolde.—Piers Ploughman, p. 200.

Were the bishop blessid eth worth bothe h' eyen.
Hus sele sholde nogt be sent. in deceet of the puple.
Id. p. 4.

Therfore hooly britheren, and parteneris of heuenli clepyng, biholde the apostle and the bischop of oure confessioun, Jesu which is trewe to him that made him, as also moises in al the hous of hym.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 3.

And it is writen in the book of Salmys, the habitacioun of hem be maad desert, and be there noon that dwellie in it, and another take his bish pricke.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 1.

It is wrytten in the boke of Psalmes: hys habytacion be voyde, and noman be dwellynge therein; and hys byshoprycke let another take.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

That they call confirmacion, y^e people call bishopping. Then thinke that if the bishop butter y^e childe in the forhed, that then it is safe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 378.

When a thing spedeth not well, we borow speach and say, the bishop hath blessed it, because that nothing spedeth wel that they medle with all. If the porage be burned to, or the meate over rosted, we say, the bishop hath put his finste in the potte, or the bishop hath played the cooke, because the bishops burn who they lust, and whosoever displeaseth them.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 166.

Now doeth he rente his clothes, prophecying hereby, how it shall cum to passe, that the true bishop raygnynge the carnall and figuratiue bishophode shal be cleane abolished, and set aside.—Udal. Mark, c. 14.

Wherefore the bishop (saith he) reuerently, and accordinge to his bishoply office, after the holy praises of Goddes worthes, he excuseth himselfe, that he taketh vpon him to offer that healthful sacrifice.—M. Hardinge. Jewell, p. 367.

Why sent they it by Felton to be bishoped at Paules?
Why feed they Fitz-Morrice, that
In Ireland marshal'd brawles?
Warner. Albion's England, b. x. c. 54.

In the person of a bishop there be three distinct faculties: his spiritual function, wherein he is a bishop; his legal ability, wherein he is a layman and hath liberty to contract, &c. and his temporal dignity, wherein he is a Baron and Peer of the Realm, and participateth their priviledges.
Spelman. Answer to Apologie, p. 115.

Answ. See the frowardness of this man, he would persuade us that the succession and divine right of bishopdom hath bin unquestionable through all ages.
Milton. Animad. upon Rem. Defence.

Shortly after all the bishops which had been deprived in the time of king Edward the sixt, were restored to their bish-pricks, and the other which were placed in King Edward's times removed.—Stowe. Queene Mary, an. 1553.

So Cymon, since his sire indulg'd his will,
Impetuous lov'd, and would be Cymon still;
Contemn'd he disown'd, and chose to bear
The name of fool contirm'd and bishop'd by the fair.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

BIS-SE'XTILE. Bis and Sextilis, from Sex, six;—so called because the sixth of the calends of March was repeated; occurred twice.

Now, when it was observed by this reckoning, that the sunne had performed his revolution sooner than the year turned about, which before was wont to prevent the course of the sunne, this error was reformed, and after every fourth year expired, came about the bissextile aforesaid, and made all streight.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 25.

The inconvenience attending the form of the year above mentioned was in a great measure remedied by the Romans in the time of Julius Cæsar, who added one day every fourth year, which (from the place of its insertion, viz. after the sixth of the calends of March,) was called bissextile, or leap year.—Priestley. On History, vol. i. Lect. 14.

BI'SSON. Bisson or Beesen, i. e. Blind. A word still in use in some parts of the north of England. Steevens; Bizend, Beezen, or Bison, blind, (Grose.) In A.S. Bisen, cæcus, blind.

Thys manne was not purblynde, or a little appayred, and dasayed in sight, but as bysonne as possible to be.
Udal. Marke, c. 8.

What harme can your beesome (sc. beesen) Conspectuities gleane out of his charracter, if I be knowne well enough too.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 1.

1 Play. But who, O who, had seen the mobled Queen,
Run barefoot vp and downe,
Threatning the flame
With bisson rheume. Id. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

BI-SU'LCOUS. Bis and Sulcus; Gr. Ὄλκος, tractus, from Ἕλκειν, to draw. Applied in natural history to—

Cloven footed animals.

Others there are which make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their dayes, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous, first, in bisulcous or cloven hooft, as camels and beeves, whereof there is above a million annually slain in England.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

BITCH. Of uncertain etymology; applied to the female of the dog, and other animals; and also, opprobriously, to a woman.

He would set down in writing, and openly pronounce, that neither bitches loved their whelpes, nor mares their foles, hens their chickens, and other foules their little birds in respect of any reward, but freely, and by instinct of nature.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 150.

—— From below
By your true names of Stygian bitches you
I will call upp, and to the sunnes light leave.
May. Lucan, b. vi.

BITE, v.
BITE, n.
BI'TER.
BI'TING, n.
BI'TINGLY.
BIT, v.
BIT, n.
BI'TLESS.

A.S. Bitan; Dut. Byten; Ger. Beissen; Sw. Bita.

To pinch, to squeeze, to gripe, to crush; to pierce, to penetrate, to wound, to pain as a bite, or any thing which biteth;—literally and metaphorically.

A bit; a small piece; so much bit or bitten: as a bit of bread; a bit of a bridle.

To bit—to put the bit in the mouth, to cause to bite, gripe, or hold fast.

A Bite, (see the quotations from Swift and the Spectator,) applied met. from the simpleness, silliness, eagerness, with which fish bite or catch the bait,—to that unsuspecting credulity which seizes and swallows whatever is imposed upon it.

And ypyted hym thour out myd an yrene pyte
And rostede in thys grete fure, to abbe the folle byte.
R. Gloucester, p. 207.

Here now the grete dispute, & the vilenie
That to ther bak gan bite of Scotland the clergie.
R. Brunne, p. 335.

And if ghe bite and ete ech othir, se ghe lest ghe be wastid ech fro othir.—Wiclif. Galatians, c. 5.

If ye bite and devoure one another: take hede lest ye be consumed one of another.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Right as a serpent hideth under floures,
Til he may see his time for to bite.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,626.

What thing is than this power that may not done away the bitings of businesse, no eschew the pricks of dread.
Id. Boecius, b. iii.

Understandest thou not, that I am a philosopher. That other man answered again bytingly and said: I had wel vnderstand it, if thou hadst holden thy tongue stil.—Id. Ib.

Spite drane me into Horces raigne,
Where hory frostes the frutes do bite,
When hilles were spred and euery plaine
With stormy winters mantle white.
Surrey. The Constant Lover Lamenteth.

And the Lord sayd vnto Moses: make the a serpent and hang it vp for a sygne, and let as many as are bitten, loke vpon it and they shall liue.—Bible, 1551. Num. c. 21.

Whiche message he dissimulated as litle to regarde as the bytyng of a flee, as thoughe the Englishmen in the battaile, whiche he knewe to be at hande, could do no enterprice (as it happened indeed) either necessary to be feared, or worthy to be remembered.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 3.

For whether the braue gennet be broken with the bitte, or with the snaffle, whether he be brought in awe with a spurre, or with a wand, all is one if hee prove readie and well mouthed.—Gascoigne. Advert. of the Author.

Here hath beene wt mee a poore woman weepyng, and waylyng, and crying out, howe you haue vndone her, her poore husband, and her miserable children, for all they haue not one bitte of bread, towardes their foode, neither is she able to labour.—Barnes. Workes, p. 208.

The pointed steele arriuing rudely theare,
His harder hide would neither pearce nor bight,
But glauncing by forth passed forward right.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

The oration thus framed to bite and to please the soldiers mindes, and the moderate severity vsed withall for onely on two iustice was done, were gratefully accepted.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 49.

They [the Brocke, &c.] will draw in their breath so hard, that their skin being stretched and puffed up withall, they will avoid the biting of the hound's tooth, and checke the wounding of the hunter; so as neither the one nor the other can take hold of them.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 38.

—— Of whose doore, her faire
And halfe transparent hand, receiu'd the key,
Bright, brazen; bitted passing curiously,
And at it hung a knob of ivory.
Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xxi.

Therefore that great Creator, well foreseeing
To what a monster she would soon be changing,
(Though lovely once, perfect and glorious being)
Curb'd with her iron bit, and held from ranging.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 5.

—— All the abject sorts
Of sorrow, I have varied, tumbl'd in dust, and hid;
No bit, no drop of sustenance toucht.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

—— There is an old poore man,
Who after me, hath many a weary steppe
Limpt in pure loue till he be first suffic'd,
Oppress with two weake evils, age, and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. ^.

A scoff and a jeer is many times more provoking than a blow; and nothing will sooner kindle the coals of contention than a biting taunt.—Hopkins. Works, p. 154.

Massylians, that without saddles ride,
And with a wand their bittlesse horses guide.
May. Lucan, b. iv.

You may easily imagine to yourself what appearance I made, who am pretty tall, ride well, and was very well dressed, at the head of a whole county, with musick before me, a feather in my hat, and my horse well bitted.
Spectator, No. 113.

If this doctrine be true, then all men's senses are deceived in a plain sensible matter, wherein tis as hard for them to be deceived as in any thing in the world: for two things can hardly be imagined more different, than a little bit of wafer and the whole body of a man.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 11.

All is owing to the mercenary low humour of the times we live in, who, groveling in the baser methods of getting money by fraud and bite, by deceiving and over-reaching one another, scorn the glorious ways by which our ancestors grew rich, when they pursued, together with their private advantages, the honour and interest of their native country and of their posterity.—Humourist, vol. ii. p. 41.

I'll teach you a way to outwit Mrs. Johnson: it is a new-fashioned way of being witty, and they call it a bite. You must ask a bantering question, or tell some damned lye in a serious manner, and then she will answer or speak as if you were in earnest; then, cry you, Madam, there's a bite! you were in earnest; then, cry you, Madam, there's a bite!
Swift. To a Friend of Mrs. Johnson, 1703

A biter is one who tells you a thing you have no reason to disbelieve in itself; and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and if you give him credit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you.—Spectator, No. 504.

Their field of vision is too contracted to take in the whole of any but minute objects; they view all nature bit by bit; now the proboscis, now the antennæ, now the pinnæ of—a flea.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 68.

When he was yet scarcely seven years old, being at dinner with the queen his mother, intending to give a bit of bread to a great dog he was fond of, this hungry animal snapt too greedily at the morsel, and bit his hand in a terrible manner.—Id. The Bee, No. 2.

All plants, of ev'ry leaf, that can endure
The Winter's frown, if screen'd from his shrewd bite,
Live there, and prosper. Cooper. Task, b. iii.

BI'TTER, adj.
BI'TTER, n.
BI'TTERFULL.
BI'TTERLY.
BI'TTERNESS.

A.S. Ger. Dut. and Sw. Biter; A.S. Biterian, from Bitan, to bite. Applied particularly to the taste.

Biting, piercing, penetrating, as any thing which bites; and thus, painful, hurtful, inflicting pain or distress, of mind or body: calamity, wretchedness.

The whyttlour that eny whight is. bote yf he worcke ther after
The biterour he shall a bygge.—Piers Ploughman, p. 378.

The bitternesse that thow hast browe, now brouk hit thy self.
That ert doctour of deth, drynk that thou madest.
Id. p. 361.

That if ye han biter envie, and stryvyngis ben in youre hertis, nyle ye haue glorie and be lieris agens the treuthe.
Wiclif. James, c. 3.

But if ye haue bytter enuyinge and strife in your hertes, reioyce not: neyther be against the trueth.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And Petre bithoughte on the word of Jhesus, that he had seide, bifore the cok crow, thries thou schalt denye me, and he ghede out and wept bitterly.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

And Peter remembered the woordes of Jesu, whyche sayd vnto hym: before ye cocke crowe ye shalte denye me thryse: and went out at the dores and wept bytterlye.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

The mouth of whiche is full of cursyng and bytternesse, the feet of hem swifte to schedo blood.—Wiclif. Rom. c. 3.

Whose mouthes are full of cursynge and bytternesse, their fete are swifte to sheede bloude.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Alone here I stand, full sorie and full sad,
Which hoped to haue seen my lord and king
Small cause haue I to be merry or glad
Remembring this bitterfull departing.

Chaucer. Lam. of M. Mag.

For all suche tyme of loue is lore,
And like vnto the bitter swete.
For though it thinke a man first swete.
He shall wel felen at laste,
That it is sower, and maie not laste.—Gower. Con. A. b viii.

As cruel waves fall oft be found,
Against the rockes to rore and cry;
So doth my hart full oft rebound,
Against my brest full bitterly

Surrey. The Constant Louer Lamenteth.

I haue sometimes passed the bounds of modestie (wherein I will neyther accuse, nor excuse myselfe) yet are my speaches in bitternesse farre inferiour to those opprobries, slanders, and dishonestfull wordes vttered either in the first or second admonition, or in your replie.

Whitgift. Defence, p. 20.

But wise words taught in numbers for to runne,
Recorded by the Muses, liue for aye,
Ne may with storming showers be washt away,
Ne bitter breathing windes with harmfull blast,
Nor age, nor enuie shall them euer wast.

Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

He that greedily puts his hand to a delicious table, shall weep bitterly when he suffers the convulsions and violence by the divided interests of such contrary juices

By Taylor, vol I. Ser. 16.

One draught of the river that makes glad the city of God above, can sweeten all the bitterness of the world.

Bates The Great Duty of Resignation, Direct. 1.

All men are agreed to call vinegar sour, honey sweet, and aloes bitter; and as they are all agreed in tracing these qualities in those objects, they do not in the least differ concerning their effects with regard to pleasure and pain. They all concur in calling sweetness pleasant, and sourness and bitterness unpleasant

Burke. Sublime and Beautiful. On Taste.

——— My sweets
And she that sweetens all my bitters too,
Nature, enchanting Nature, in whose form
And lineaments divine I trace a hand
That errs not, and finds raptures still renew'd,
Is free to all men—universal prize.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

BI'TTERN. } Dut. Butoor; Fr. Butor; Sp. BI'TTOUR. } Bitor; It. Bittore. Bos taurus, or Boatus taurinus, from the noise it makes, when its head is immersed in the mire. "In the territory about Arelate, there is a bird called Taurus, because it loweth like a bull or cow, for otherwise a small bird it is," (Plin. x. 42.)

And as a bitore bumbleth in the mire,
She laid hire mouth unto the water doun.
Bewrey me not, thou water, with thy soun,
Quod she, to thee I tell it, and no mo,
Min husbond hath long asses eres two.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6514.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
"To thee alone, O Lake," she said, "I tell,
(And as thy queen, command thee to conceal:)
Beneath his locks the king my husband wears
A goodly royal pair of asses ears."—Dryden. Ib.

That a bittor maketh that mugient noyse, or as we term it bumping, by putting its bill into a reed as most beleive, or as Bellonius and Aldrovandus conceive, by putting the same into water or mud, and after a while retaining the ayr by suddenly excluding it again, is not so easily made out.

Browne. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
The hollow sounding bittern guards its nest.

Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

BITU'ME. } Lat. Bitumen; Gr. πίτυς, πίθος, πίθυς, from πιεῖν, premere, premendo, affigere, (Lennep,) to press, to fix, by pressure.
BITU'MED.
BITU'MEN.
BITU'MINATED.
BITU'MINOUS.

See the example from Goldyng.

The common noun is Bitumen; May use is Bitume.

She buylded Babilon and enclosed it with a wall of brieke enterlayed with sand and tytumen, which is a kynd of slimye mortar, yssuing out of the ground, in diuers places of that countrye.—Goodyng. Justine, p 2.

——— Mix with these
Idæan pitch, quick sulphur, silver's spume,
Sea onion, hellebore, and black bitume.—May.

Where is Marcus Scaurus Theater, the bituminated walls of Babylon? And how little rests of the Pyramids of Egypt.

Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 46.

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caulked and bitumed ready.

Per. I thank thee.—Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iii. sc. 1.

Hee with a crew, whom like ambition joyns
With him or under him to tyrannize,
Marching from Eden towards the west, shall finde
The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge
Boiles out from under ground, the mouth of hell.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

A worse knob remains to be planned, how they [the trees] are preserved sound so many ages, seeing moisture is the mother of corruption, and such the ground wherein they are found: except any will say there is clammy bituminous substance about them, which feeneth them from being corrupted.

Fuller. Worthies. Anglesey.

The fabric seem'd a wood of rising green,
With sulphur and bitumen cast between,
To feed the flames.—Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

The Maker! ample in his bounty, spread
The various strata of earth's genial bed,
Temper'd the subject mass with pregnant juice,
And subtile stores of deep and sacred use;
Salts, oils, and bitumen, and unctuous pitch,
With precious, though mysterious, influence rich.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. iii.

——— The light
Wood-nymphs; and those, who o'er the grots preside,
Whose stores bituminous with sparkling fires,
In summer's tedious absence, cheer the swains,
Long sitting at the loom.—Dyer. The Fleece, b. iii.

BI-VALVE, adj. } Bis, twice, and Valvæ, perhaps Volvæ, so called, because they fold inwards, (Vossius.) Applied in Natural History; as the examples sufficiently explain.
BI'VALVE, n.
BI'VALVED.
BIVA'LVULAR.

Bivalvular, or bivalve husk, is one that opens or gapes the whole length, like a door that opens in two parts.

Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

Crabs, either of this kind, or allied to them, the antients believed to have been the concentaneous inmates of the pinnæ, and other bivalves.—Pennant. British Zoology.

With respect to the figure of shells, Aristotle has divided them into three kinds. There are first, the univalve, or turbinated, which consist of one piece, like the box of a snail; secondly, the bivalve, consisting of two pieces, united by a hinge, like an oyster.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, vol. iv.

The muscle and the oyster appear to have but few distinctions, except in their shape and the power of motion in the former. Other bivalved shell-fish, such as the cockle, the scallop, and the razor-shell, have differences equally minute.

Id. Ib.

BI-VIOUS. Bis, twice, and via, a path or way. Having two paths or ways.

In bivious theorems, and Janus-faced doctrines, let virtuous considerations state the determination.

Brown. Christian Morals, vol. ii. p. 3.

BLAB, v. } Junius refers to babbling; in
BLAB, n. } Dut. Labberen (be-labberen);
BLA'BBER, v. } Ger. Blapperen; perhaps from BLA'BBING, n. } Labben; A. S. Lap-ian, to lap or lip (differing indeed in the application). And thus we approach Skinner's explanation: Labiis quicquid occurrit effutire,—

To pour forth from the lips whatever occurs to us; to tell all that we know; to prate or talk thoughtlessly, carelessly, without reserve or discrimination.

——— I could almoste
A thousand olde stories thee aledge
Of women loste, through false & fooles boste:
Prouerbes canst thyself ynow, and woste
Ayenst that vice for to ben a blabbe.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Thus the bishoppe wound hym self frō the duke when he had moste nede of his ayde, for if he had taried still ye duke had not made so many blabbes of his counsaill, nor put so muche confidens in the Welshmen, nor yet so temerariously set forwarde without knowledge of his frendes as he dyd, whiche thinges were his sodaine ouerthrowe as they that knew it dyd reporte.—Hall. Rich. III. an. 2.

But the mother agayne on her part forasmuche as she perceyued and founde a certayne power of the goddeheade to glitter and shewe furthe in hym, was well contente to followe the minde and ordering of her sonne: and being myndfull of her owne wise and discrete sobrenesse, dyd as yet make no blabbyng out abroade of any thing.

Udal. Luke, c. 2.

Whan the tounge lyeth still, if the mynde be not occupyed well, it were less euil saue for worldlye rebuke, to blabber on trifles somewhat sottishlye, than whyle they seeme sage, in kepyng silence, secretely pardiuenture the meane whyle to fantasye wyth themself, fylthy sinful deuises

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 75.

Apel. (alone.) I fear me, Apelles, that thine eyes have blabbed that which thy tongue durst not.

Lyly. Alexander & Campaspe, Act. v. sc. 2.

Such be his chance that to his love doth wrong;
Unworthy he to have so worthy place,
That cannot hold his peace and blabbing tongue;
Light ioyes float on his lips, but rightly grace
Sinckes deepe, and th' heart's low center doth imbrace

Spenser. Britain's Ida, c. 6.

——— To have reveal'd
Secrets of men, the secrets of a friend,
How hainous had the fact been, how deserving
Contempt, and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship and avoided as a blab,
The mark of fool set on his front?

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Loth to betray a husband and a prince,
But she must burst, or blab; and no pretence
Of honour ty'd her tongue from self defence.

Dryden. Wife of Bath's Tale.

Tell us, you dead; will none of you, in pity
To those you left behind, disclose the secret?
Oh! that some courteous ghost would blab it out,
What 'tis you are, and we must shortly be.—Blair. Grave.

BLACK, v. } Dut. & Ger. Black. Lye says, the A. S. Blac, blace, bleek, is tiger, bleak; that Blac-ian, is pallere, nigrescere, and albescere, to be pale, to grow or to become black; and also to grow or become white. That Blac-an, is PALLIDUM colorem inducere; nigrescere, denigrare, to bleach; to put on a pale colour, to grow or become black, to blacken; to bleach. And that Blac-an, ablac-an, is, dealbare, fulgere, corruscare; (Blace, candidatus,) to whiten or be white, to shine, to glitter. Bleak and bleach, are used by our elder writers in correspondence with pale; and they seem to be applied when, by some withering, blighting (blicht-ing), agency (e. g. of weather), a chill and sterile paleness is produced; but we should not and do not hesitate to apply bleak, to a chill, and sterile blackness, effected by a similar withering and blighting agency; when verdure or fruitfulness are withered away, blight-ed (or blicht-ed); where these genial appearances of nature are lacking; and hence it admits of conjecture that Blac-an and Blic-an owe their origin to some northern word still preserved in the Dut. Leycken, and Eng. Lack, to lessen, to decrease, to wane or be wanting, to fade, to decay; to wither, or waste away. The common prefix Be, would form Beleyck-en, bleyck-en, to bleach; Bleyck, bleached or bleaked, pale; and by a mere difference of vowel, Blec, black, — bleaked or blacked, dark; the application of black and bleach being to appearances differing in colour, though effected by the same or similar causes. See BLEACH, BLEAK, BLANCH, BLANK, BLENCH, BLINK.
BLA'CKEN.
BLA'CKING, n.
BLA'CKISH.
BLA'CKLY.
BLA'CKNESS.
BLA'CKGUARD.
BLA'CKMOOR.

To blacken (met.) is to darken, obscure, overcloud, (sc.) the fairness of a character or reputation; to pollute, or soil, or sully its purity, its integrity.

Black is applied to that which has the dismalness, the gloominess, the forbiddingness of darkness; to that which is dark, dismal, gloomy, forbidding, fearful, dreadful.

Blackguard.—"In all great houses, but particularly in the royal residences, there were a number of mean and dirty dependents, whose office it was to attend the wood-yard, scullieries, &c.; of these the most forlorn wretches seem to have been selected to carry coals to the kitchens, halls, &c. To this smutty regiment, who attended the progresses, and rode in the carts with the pots and kettles, the people, in derision, gave the name of blackguards." (B. Jonson's Works, by Gifford, ii. 169, note 5.)

His stede was blak as rauen, thei kald his name Feraunt
He rode vnto the hauen, and said he wold to Graunt.
R. Brunne, p 205.

Withoute the Cristen gan crie, allas! R. is taken,
Tho Normans were sorie, of countenance gan blaken.
Id. p 183.

Fe as may be, I wol hire not arcusen:
But on his bak this sherte he wered al naked,
Til that his flesh was for the venim blaked.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,135.

And than I curse also the night,
With all the wil of my corrage,
And saie, away thou blacke image,
Wrothe of thy darke cloudie face,
Makest all the wordes light deface.—Gower. Con. A. b iv.

Then yf the soore be waxed blackish, and is not growen playne in the skinne, let the preast make him clene for it is but a skurfe.—Bible, 1551. Lev. c. 13.

The man of India that we speke of cã by no lerning know y^e course of the sonne wherby he should joyne the cause of his blacknes, but if it be by astronomy, which coming who can lerne that nothing will beine that semeth to hym selfe impossible.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 126.

They haue their teeth blacked both men and women, for they say a dame hath his teeth white, therefore they will blacke theirs.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 262.

The Brames which be of the kings countrey (for the king is a brame) haue their legs or bodies, or some part of their body, as they thinke good themselues, made black with certaine things which they haue: they vse to pricke the skinne, and to put on it a kinde of anile or blacking, which doth continue alwayes.—Id. Ib.

The Romans vnderstanding of his (Tullus) death, shewed no other honour or manner, saying that they granted the ladies their request they made that they might mourn ten monethes for him, and that was the full time they used to wear blacke for the death of their fathers, brethren, or Husbands, according to Numa Pompilius order.
North. Plutarch, p. 201.

Shrunk neater earth, all blacken'd now and brown,
In mask of weeping clouds appears the moon.
Drummond. The Shadow of the Judgment.

Beyond the river Ganges, in that quarter and climate which lyeth southward, the people are caught with the sunne, and begin to be blackish: but yet not all out so sunburnt and black indeed as the Moores and Ethiopians.
Holland. Pliny, b. vi. c. 19.

Lastly stood warre in glittering armes yelad,
With visage grim, sterne looks, and blackely hewed.
Mirrour for Magistrates. Sackville's Induction.

They're darker now than blackness: none can know
Them by the face as through the streets they go.
For now their skin doth cleave unto their bone,
And withered is like to dry wood grown.
Donne. Lamentations of Jeremy, c. 4. v. 8.

And there was a Grecian woman, who having brought forth a black infant, and being troubled therefore, and iudiciously accused for adultery, as if she had been conceived by a blacke moor: shee pleaded and was found to be her selfe descended from an Aethiopian, in the fourth degree removed.
Holland. Plutarch, p 457.

Which I had no sooner done, but one o'the blackguard had his hand in my vestry, and was groping me as nimbly as the Christmas cut-purse.—B. Jonson. Masque. Love Restored.

A vile encomium doubly ridicules:
There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, Epist. 1.

I have lately got the ingenious authors of blacking for threads, powder for colouring the hair, &c. to be your constant customers.—Spectator, No. 461.

The closet, spread too far, or rais'd too high,
Loses its real image to the eye;
Too little, it climbs the dazzled sight,
Becomes a mixt blackness, or unparted light.
Prior. Solomon, b. i.

Thou art some paltry, blackguard sprite,
Commanded to drudgery in the night;
Thou hast no work to do in th' house,
Not half penny to drop in shoes;
Without the raising of which sum
You dare not be so troublesome
To pinch the slatterns black and blue,
But leaving you their work to do.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

There a deeper darkness prevailed than in the blackest night, which, however, was in some degree dissipated by torches and other lights of various kinds.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vi. Let. 16.

To this system of literary monopoly was joined an unremitting industry to blacken and discredit in every way, and by every means, all those who did not hold to their faction.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

Blackness is but a partial darkness; and therefore it derives some of its powers from being mixed and surrounded with coloured bodies.
Id. On the Sublime and Beautiful, s. 17.

BLA'DDER, v. } A. S. Bladr; Ger. Blatter;
BLA'DDER, n. } Dut. Bladder; Sw. Bladra; from the A. S. Bleed, flatus; the past part. of the A. S. Blaw-an, to blow.

That which is blowed or blown, puffed or inflated; tumid.

For every mortal manner power n' is
But like a bladder ful of wind ywis:
For with a nedles point, whan it is blow,
May all the best of it be laid ful low.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 67,051.

Let neuer man presume on worldly wealth,
Let riches never breede a lofty minde,
Let no man boast too much of pretie health
Let natures gifts make no man ouer blinde
For these are all but bladders ful of winde.
Turbervile. Epitaph on Maister Tufton.

Only a garland of rose buds did play
About her locke, and in her hand she bore
A hollow globe of glass, that long before
She full of emptiness had bladdered,
And all the world therein depictured:
Whose colours, like the rainbow, ever vanished.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

If you see him (a Dutchman) fat, he hath been rooting in a cabbage ground, and that bladdered him
Felltham. Character of the Low Countries.

What are they when they stand upon the highest pinacle of worldly dignities, but bladders swelled up with the breath of popular rout, nothings set a strut.
Hopkins. Works, p 32.

Stumbling from thought to thought it, falls headlong down
Into doubt's boundless sea, where, like to drown,
Books bear him up a while, and make him try
To swim with bladders of philosophy.
Rochester. Sat. against Mankind.

They affect greatness in all they write, but it is a bladdered greatness, like that of the vain man whom Seneca describes; an ill habit of body, full of humours, and swelled with dropsy.
Dryden. Discourse on Epick Poetry.

Thus sportive boys, around some basin's brim,
Behold the pipe-drawn bladders circling swim.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

BLADE. } "Blad, folium, frons. Blat, (says Becanus) is so called from BLA'DING. } Plat; i. e. latus, planus," (Kilian.)
BLA'DED. } It is probably from A. S. Bleed;
BLA'DY. } past part. of the v. Blaw-an, to blow; to bud, to sprout: applied to—

Leaves of grass, to broad cutting leaves; to a weapon, to a bone, of similar shape. See BLADE, infra.

If it be grene, like to icke blades, thyn or blak it is to be fuged yll.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Health, p. 52.

Because it had not earthe ynoughe vnderneath it to gene it moystre to the full rypeneesse, anon after it was shot fourth aboue ground, it dryed vp and withered away as soone as any feruent heate of the sunne came to it, and so euen in the first bladying it perished.—Udal. Luke, c. 8.

That euen fro the schulder-blade
Into the brest the brond gan wade,
Thurchout his hert it ran.
Amis and Amiloun. Weber, vol. ii.

For it is a kinde of grasse with a stalke, as big as a great wheaten reed, which hath a blade, issuing from the top of it, on which, though the cattle feed, yet it groweth every day higher, untill the top be too high for an oxe to reach.
Sir F. Drake herived, p 55.

As sweet a plant, as fair a flower is faded
As ever in the Muses garden bladed.
P. Fletcher. Elisa, an Elegy.

Lys. Helen, to you our mindes we will vnfold,
To morrow night, when Phœbe doth behold
Her siluer visage, in the watry glasse,
Decking with liquid pearle the bladed grasse,
(A time that louers flights doth still conceale)
Through Athen's gates haue we deuis'd to steale.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act I. sc. 1.

Besides, what is she else, but a foul woosy marsh,
And that she calls her grass, so blady is, and harsh,
As cuts the cattel's mouths, constrain'd thereon to feed.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

Blue, through the dusk, the smoking currents shine;
And from the bladed field the fearful hare
Limps, awkward. Thomson. Summer.

Dr. Swift somewhere says, that he who could make two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, was a greater benefactor to the human race than all the politicians that ever existed.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Say, is the Persian carpet, than the field's
Or meadow's mantle gay, more richly wov'n;
Or softer to the votaries of ease
Than bladed grass, perfum'd with dew-dropt flow'rs?
Warton. The Enthusiast.

BLADE, v. } Junius thinks that Chaucer,
BLADE, n. } when he wrote platte for blade (sc.) of a sword (Squieres Tale, v. 176) intimated his opinion of the origin of the word. Plat, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is the Fr. plat, flat; and this Caseneuve deduces from the Gr. πλατος, enlarged, expanded. Skinner prefers the A. S. Blad, folium, because it (the blade of a sword, lamina ensis) lata est instar folii. Blade is applied (met.) to—

Any one who pretends to the sharpness, brightness of a sword blade.

Ay by his belt he bare a long pavade,
And of a sword ful trenchaunt was the blade
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3,928.

As she had said her damsells might perceive,
Her with these wordes ful pearced on a sword:
The blade embrued and hands besprent with gore.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b iv.

Thus speaking, in the midst thereof she left, and there withal
With breast on piercing sword her ladies saw where she did fall:
The brade in fomy blood, and hands abroad with sprawling throwne. Phaer. Aeneis, Ib.

As when an arming sword of proofe is made,
Both steele and iron must be tempred well
(For iron gives the strength unto the blade,
And steele, in edge doth cause it to excell)
As each good blade-smith by his art can tell.
Mir. for Mag. Newton to the Reader.

——— Atrides lance did gore
Pylemen's shoulder, in the bladd.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b v.

——— With dauntless hardihood,
And brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground,
But seize his wand. Milton. Comus.

Oct. 21, 1671. Leaving Euston, I lodged this night at New market, where I found the jolly blades racing, dancing, feasting, and revelling, more resembling a luxurious and abandon'd rout, than a Christian court.
Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

Cecyll, on the other side, play'd a smooth edge upon Raleigh throughout the trial, his blade seemed ever anointed with the balsam of compliment or apology, whereby he gave not such rough and smarting wounds, tho' they were as deep and fatal as the other.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

So fares it with those merry blades,
That frisk it under Pindus' shades.
In noble song, and lofty odes,
They tread on stars, and talk with gods.—Prior. A Simile.

Vanbruin dy'd—his son, we're told,
Succeeded to his father's gold,
Flush'd with his wealth, the thoughtless blade,
Despis'd frugality, and trade.—Cotton. Death & the Rake.

Again our trenchant blades aloft we heave,
Dauntless again the sever'd bodies cleave,
And triumph in the deed.—Cambridge. Scribleriad, b. ii.

BLAIN. A. S. Blegene; Dut. Blayne. Junius and Skinner say, perhaps from the A. S. Blawan, to blow. The latter adds, a blain, is—
A distention, tumor, or inflation of the skin.

For yf his fynger dooe but ake of an hoote blaine, a greate manye mennes mouthes blowyng out his prayse, wyll scantly doe him among them all, half so muche ease, as to haue one bole blow vpon his finger.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1224.

And there brake oute soores with blaines both in mã & beest, so that the sorcerers coulde not stande before Moses, for there were blotches vpon the enchaunters and vpon al the Egipcians.—Bible, 1551. Exod. c. 9.

——— Itches, blaines,
Sowe all th' Athenian bosomes, and their crop
Be generall leprosie.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 1.

But first the lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compelled by signes and judgements dire;
Botches and blaines must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

BLAME, v.
BLAME, n.
BLA'MABLE.
BLA'MABLENESS.
BLA'MABLY.
BLA'MEFULL.
BLA'MELESS.
BLA'MELESSLY.
BLA'MELESSNESS.
BLA'MER.
BLA'MING.

Dut. Blamen; Fr. Blasmer; It. Biasimare. Skinner and Junius coincide with Menage, that these words are, through the Bar. Lat. Blasphemare, from the Gr. Βλασφημειν, παρα το βαλλειν την φημην. Βαλλειν, i. e. petere, impetere; and φημη, fama;—

To attack, or assail, the fame, character, or reputation; to find fault with; to pass an unfavourable judgment upon; to rebuke, to chide, to censure, to reprimand, to reprehend.

The phrase "is to blame," is a remnant of old English idiom. Is to, and is to be, are all we now have to supply the place of the Latin future participles, in rus and dus. Culpaturus and culpandus, would by Chaucer have been translated without distinction, is to blame. Spernendus est, he renders, it is to despise.

Tho ys moder y slaw was, me blamede hym ther fore.
R. Gloucester, p. 68.

Rather I thou wert blame, thou did ageyn resoun,
Certes thou has don schame alle alle that bere coroun.
R. Brunne, p. 173.

"Damascle," he seyde tho, "thy louerd ssal abbe an name
Vor hym, & vor hys eyrs, vayr wythout blame.
R. Gloucester, p. 432.

Ac neyther is al blameles, the bisshop ne the chapeleyn
For ignorantia non excusat. as ich have herd in bookes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 221.

And thei camen nygh and reisiden hym and seiden: comaundour we perischen, and he roos and blamede the wynd and the tempest of the watir, and it ceesside and pesiblete was maad.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 8.

This blamyng that is maad of manye, sufficith to him that is such oon.—Id. 2 Corynth. c. 2.

Men schulen be louynge hemself, coueitouse, high of berynge, proude, blasfemeris; not obedient to fadir and modir, unkynde, cursid withouten affeccioun, withouten pees, false blameris.—Id. Tyte, c. 3.

Immortal God, thou savedst Susanne
Fro false blame, and thou merciful mayde,
Mary I mene, doughter to seint Anne,
My socour be, or elles shall I die.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5059.

He that is frous and wroth, as sayth Senek, he may not spike but blameful thinges, and with his vicious wordes he stirreth other folk to anger and to ire.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

This maie a kynge well vnderstonde,
Knighthode mite betake on honde
Whan that it stont vpon the nede,
He shall no rightfull cause dredo
No more of warre than of pees,
If he wyll stonde blameless.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Now if we should for this matter breake the rule of charitie, and euery man hate his neighbour that would not thinke as he doth, then were we greatly to blame and in ieoperdie of condemnation.—Frith. Workes, p. 150.

If this is to be feared in such as shew thys prepostorous zeale agaynste that whiche is blameworthy, what shall we thinke of those that vnder the pretence of zeale deface the minister, and the word that he preacheth, for doing that which is lawfull, and the whiche of dueti he ought to do.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 200.

For throughout the whole world, in every place, at all times, and in all mens mouths, fortune alone is sought unto and called upon, she only is named and in request; shee alone is blamed, accused, and endited.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 12.

Nathlesse, he shortly shall againe be tryde,
And fairely quite him of th' imputed blame,
Else be ye sure, he dearely shall abide,
Or make you good amendment for the same.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

If he had not freedom of will to determine himself towards good and evil, as he pleased, he must then be under a fatal necessity of doing whatsoever he should happen to do; and then as he could give no proof of his temper and inclination, so there could be no such thing as acceptableness to God when he did well, nor blamableness when he did otherwise.
Goodman. Winter Evening Conference, p. 3.

Neither can I see how it should be blameless, objecting such fancies and imaginations as it doth; which to withstand and resist were not blamable, but rather to give place and follow them.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 886.

For nature hath her sodias also, keeps her great annual circuit over human things, as truly as the sun and planets in the firmament; hath her anomalies, hath her obliquities in assentions and declinations, accesses and recesses, as blamelessly as they in heaven.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

There is another [difficulty] remaining in the thing itself, which is concerning the blamelessness, or being void of offence.—Goodwin. Of Gospel Holiness, b. i. c. 4.

To this we owe much of the innocency, and in some respects blamelessness, of our lives, that we have not been a scandal to the Gospel, a shame to the good, and a scorn to the bad.—Hopkins. Works, p. 292.

This Robert Crosted whose learning [in Hebrew, Greeke, Latine, and other languages,] ioined with vertue, and good life, wan to him perpetuall commendation, was a manifest blamer of the Pope, and king.—Stowe. Hen. III. an. 1253.

It is hard to say how far saints may fall, or how often into offence and blameworthiness.
Goodwin. Gospel of Holiness, b. i. c. 4.

But if we receive the grace of God in vain, and take no care to perform the condition, and do neglect to implore the grace and assistance of God's H. Spirit to that purpose, we have none to blame but ourselves.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 16.

It is the excess, not the thing itself, that is blameable
Prior. Preface to Solomon.

Not simple Nature's unaffected sons,
The blameless Indians, round the forest cheer,
In sunny lawn or shady covert set,
Hold more unspotted converse.
Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

We give to chance, blind chance, ourselves as blind,
The glory of thy work, which yet appears
Perfect and unimpeachable of blame,
Challenging human scrutiny, and prov'd
Then skilful most when most severely judg'd.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

I therefore took occasion to observe, that the world in general began to be blameably indifferent as to doctrinal matters, and followed human speculations too much.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 14.

—— Medon, live
To share that glory. Thee to perish here,
No law, no oracle enjoins. To die,
Uncall'd, is blameful. Glover. Leonidas, b. x.

Thrice happy land! though freezing on the verge
Of arctic skies; yet, blameless still of arts
That polish to deprave, each softer clime.
Mallet. Amyntor & Theodora, c. 1.

The disturbance and fear, which often follow upon a man's having done an injury, arise from a sense of his being blameworthy; otherwise there would, in many cases, be no ground of disturbance, nor any reason to fear resentment or shame.—Butler. Analogy of Religion, pt. i. c. 3.

A wise man may frequently neglect praise, even when he has best deserved it; but, in all matters of serious consequence, he will most carefully endeavour so to regulate his conduct as to avoid, not only blameworthiness, but, as much as possible, every probable imputation of blame.
Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. iii. c. 2.

BLANCH, v. } Fr. Blanc; It. Bianco;
BLA'NCHER. } Sp. Blanco; A. S. Blican; Ger. Blicken, blinken, to shine, to glitter, to twinkle or blink; lucere, coruscare, micare; and by consequence, dealbare, to whiten; quia (album) prae reliquis coloribus copiosissimam lucem reflectit, (Skinner.)

Blanch, blench, and blink, are probably the same word differently written and applied. See also BLEACH.

To blanch; to brighten, to whiten, (lucescere, dealbare,) and thus—To give a fair appearance, a fair face to any thing; and also as, to blench or blink, (qv.)

To avoid or cause to avoid, to evade, escape, or shun, to shrink, or start away from, to startle.

Blancher, cited from Sidney, is used exactly as blencher in Beaum. and Fletch.

Wallnuttes, if they be blanched, are supposed to be good for the stomake.—Sir. T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 14.

And so many days were spent, and so many ways used, while Zelmane was like one that stood in a tree waiting a good occasion to shoot: and Gynecia a blancher, which kept the dearest deer from her.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Ah! now I see the sweetest dawn,
Thrice welcome to my longing sight!
Hail, divine beauty! heavenly light!
I see thee through yon cloud of lawn
Appear; and, as thy star does glide
Blanching with rays the east on every side.
Sherburne. Sun Rise.

To those choice waters, I most fitly may compare,
Wherewith nice women use to blanch their beauties rare
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

—— Hector, you know, applause
Of humour hath beene farre from me, nor fits it, or in warre
Or in affaires of court, a man, imfold in publick care,
To blanch things further than their truth, or flatter any powre. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

The judges of that time thought it was a dangerous thing to admit Ifs and Ands to qualify the words of treason, whereby every man might express his malice and blanch his danger.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 121.

Now, Sir, concerning your [Milton's] travels, wherein I may challenge a little more privilege of discourse with you. I suppose you will not blanch Paris in your way.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 343.

This Spanish Inquisition is
A trappe, so slylie sett;
As into it wise, godly, rich,
By blanchers bace as [are] fett.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix.

Men of wit and confidence will always make a shift to say something for any thing: and some way or other blanch over the blackest and most absurd things in the world.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 30.

Then the sleek brightening lock, from hand to hand,
Renews its circling course: this feels the card;
That, in the comb, admires its growing length;
This, blanch'd, emerges from the oily wave;
And that, the amber tint, or ruby, drinks.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

BLAND, adj. } Lat. Blandus, soothing. Of uncertain etymology. Sir T. More and Hall write blandiment.
BLA'NDIMENT.
BLA'NDISH.
BLA'NDISHING, n.
BLA'NDISHMENT.
Soothing, mild, gentle, lulling, caressing, flattering.

If he flater or blandise more than him ought for any necessitee; (in certain he doth sinne)
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

For thou wert wont to hurtelen and dispisen her with many words, whā she was blandishing and present, and persuadest her with sentences that were drawen out of mine entre, that is to say, of mine information.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

If the worlde frowne vpon the: vnneth it mai be that thy vertue (which all hit vpwarde shounde have God alone to please) shal somewhat vnto the blandishing of the worlde & fauere of ye people reame.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 16.

Womans blandiments he chaūged into the desire of heauenly ioyes and dispising ye blast of vaine glorie which he before desired, now with all his mind he began to seke the glore and profite of Christes churche.—Id. Ib. p. 4.

The Kyng aunswered her [Quene Anne] with fair wordes, and with dissimulynge blandimentes and flatterynge lesynges comforted her, and biddynge her to be of good comforte, for to his knowledge she shoulde haue none other cause.
Hall. Rich. III. an. 3.

—— The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with the exhilirating vapour bland
About their spirits had plaid, and inmost powers
Made erre, was now exhal'd.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. ix.

The rose yeelds her sweete blandishment,
Lost in the fold of lovers' wreathes,
The violet enchants the sent
When earely in the spring she breaths.
Habington. Castara, pt. ii.

Ah! could'st thou here thy humble mind content,
Lowly with me to live in country cell,
And learn suspect the courts' proud blandishment,
Here might we safe, here might we sweetly dwell.
P. Fletcher. To Mr. J. Tomkins.

Array'd in arms, and bland in voice and look,
Besides Hippomedon her stand she took;
Yet, while her artful tale the warrior heard,
He fear'd her looks, and wonder'd why he fear'd.
Lewis. Thebaid of Statius, b. ix.

In former days a country life,
For so time honour'd poets sing,
Free from anxiety and strife,
Was blandish'd by perpetual spring.
Cooper. The Retreat of Aristippus, Ep. 1.

So tranquil Nature's works appear,
It seems the sabbath all the year:
As if, the Summer's labour past, she chose
The season's sober calm for blandishing repose.
Pawke. An Autumnal Ode.

—— O could I steal
From Harmony her softest-warbled strain
Of melting air! or Zephyr's vernal voice!
Or Philomela's song, when love dissolves
To liquid blandishment his evening lay.
Mallet. Amyntor & Theodora, c. 3.

BLANK, v. } Skinner derives the Eng. Blank; Fr. Blanc; It. Bianco; Sp. Blanco, through the Ger. Blinken, from A. S. Blican. It is no doubt the same word as Blanch, (qv.) To blank, is—
BLANK, n.
BLANK, adj.
BLA'NKNESS.

To whiten, to make pale, to appal, or cause to look pale, to strike with the paleness; to have the paleness, (sc.) of disappointment, of astonishment, of dismay: and thus, to disappoint, astonish, or dismay. And more nearly to the usage of blanch;

To avoid, evade, escape, shun, or shrink, or start from, to startle.

A blank, (sc.) paper, is a white paper, with nothing distinguishable upon it, that destroys its entire whiteness: also, a white mark or spot at which to aim: and thus—

The aim, mark, or point aimed at—is so called.

These fellows being right glad that the Saducees were put to a foyle and blanked, and that Jesus had answered to their mindes, did lyke learned men propesne and putte forthe vnto him by one of the scribes, set vp for the nones to play this parte, a notable question out of the moste inward mysteries of the law.—Udal. Mark, c. 12.

Did not I even right nowe see the with mine eyes in the garden with Jesus? Peter beyng with this saying vtterly blanke and sore astonished, wished himselfe accursed yf euer he knew Jesus.—Id. John, c. 18.

These reasons did Sylla alledge against Pompey, and told him plainly, that if he were bent to stand in it, he would resist him. All this blanked not Pompey, who told him frankly again, how men did honour the rising, not the setting of the sun.—North. Plutarch, p. 531.

——— To the blanc moone
Her office they prescribd.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

As many affirme, a dead mans hand was made to subscribe one blanke, that they might write above what it pleased them best.—Aucs. History of Reformation, p. 34.

——— Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters, to kill whom they hate.
Donne, Sat. 3.

[It] betokeneth guilt of conscience, and a blankneme which a pale colour will bewray.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 439, Annotation.

It was the curiosity, delicacy, or niceness of his [Waller's] spirit, which did rather constrain him to blank his mental tables, than to leave there any records, that were not choice and sincere.
Bayle. Works, vol. iv. p. 333. Letter from Mr. Beale.

Now (shame to Fortune!) an ill run at play
Blank'd his bold visage, and a thin third day:
Swearing and supperless the hero sate,
Blasphem'd his gods, the dice, and damn'd his fate.
Pope. Dunciad, b. i.

When he would declare what he is unto us, he only saith, I AM, leaving us to make the application of him to ourselves, according to our several wants, capacities, or desires; he sets as it were his hand to a blank, that we may write underwhatsoever good thing we would have of him
Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 143.

Heart, nightly plung'd amid the sullen waves,
The frequent curse; while, on each other fix'd,
In mad presage, the blank assistants seem'd,
Silent, to ask, whom Fate would next demand.
Thomson. Summer.

That is, like many other thick wits,
He bought a score of lottery tickets,
And saw them rise in dreadful ranks
Converted to a score of blanks.—Cowthorn. Lottery.

There, touch'd by Reynolds, a dull blank becomes
A lucid mirror, in which Nature sees
All her reflected features.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

Proud royalty! how alter'd in thy looks!
How sunk thy features, and how wan thy hue!
Blair. Grave.

The Earl of Surrey is said to have translated one of Virgil's books without rhymes: and beside our tragedies, a few short poems had appeared in blank verse, particularly one seeming to reconcile the nation to Raleigh's wild attempt upon Guiana, and probably written by Raleigh himself.
Johnson. Life of Milton.

BLANKET, v. }
BLANKET, n. } Fr. Blanchet; It. Bianchetta, pannus albidus, (Skinner.) A white covering. (See BLANK.)
BLANKETING, n. }
It is applied (met.) by Shakespeare, from the verb, to blanket, as we might now use blankness.

To blanket; to cover with, to toss in, a blanket.

Your blanket in bus bed, no white bred by fore him.
Peers Ploughman, p. 106.

Wende he not weare that yt wer a sort of freres folowing and shuet of malyce in a christemas game yt wer pricked in blanketes and then should stand vp and preache vppon a stoole and make a mowying sermon.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 358.

——— My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elfe all my hairs in knots,
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds, and persecutions of the sky.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act ii. sc. 3.

——— Come thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoake of hell,
That my keene knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peepe through the blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold.
Id. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 5.

——— But (maids) see
Ye bathe his feete and then with tapistry,
Best sheets, and blanquets, make his bed, and lay
Soft wascotes by him.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xix.

Per. Clarendore! worst of all: for him to know this,
Is a second blanketting to me.
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act iv. sc. 5.

Insomuch that I fancy, had Tully himself pronounced one of his orations with a blanket about his shoulders, more people would have laughed at his dress than have admired his eloquence.—Spectator, No. 150.

Himself among the story'd chiefs he spies,
As from the blanket, high in air he flies,
And oh! (he cry'd) what street, what lane, but knows
Our purgings, pumpings, blanketings, and blows!
Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

Haste! far, O far, your infant throng remove:
Quick from your stables drag your steeds and mules:
With well-wet blankets guard your cypress roofs.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

Let us leave this place, and endeavour to get a night's lodging in some house or other, where God grant there may be neither blankets nor blanketeers, nor phantoms, nor enchanted Moors.—Smollet. Don Quixote, pt. i. b. iii. c. 4.

Thou mayest depend upon it, that affair of the blanketing happened to thee, for the fault thou wast guilty of, in omitting to put me in mind of it, in time.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 5.

BLARE. Dut. Blaeren; Ger. Blarren, mugire. Mr. Grose says, Blare in the north is to roar and cry.

Linguam etiam ab irrisu exerentem, is rendered by Holland, "scornfully lolling and blaring out his tongue."

Being thus armed and set out, they bring him forth against this vainglorious Gaule, set all upon joy full foolishly, and (as the ancient writers have thought it worth the noting and remembrance) scornfully lolling and blaring out his tongue.—Holland. Livie, p. 255.

BLASPHE'ME. }
BLASPHE'MER. }
BLASPHE'MERESS. }
BLASPHE'MING, n. }
BLA'SPHEMY. }
BLA'SPHEMOUS. }
BLA'SPHEMOUSLY. }

Fr. Blasphémer; Sp. Blasphemar; Gr. Βλασφημειν, παρα το βαλλειν την φημην: βαλλειν, i. e. petere, and φημη, fama. To attack or assail, the fame, character, or reputation. See BLAME.

To attack, assail, insult, (the name, the attributes, the ordinances, the revelations, the will or government of God.)

Thanne the prince of prestis to rente hise clothis and seide, he hath blasfemed, what yit han we nede to witnessis? lo now ye han herd blasfemie.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 26.

Then the hye priest rent His clothes saying he hath blasphemed: what nede have we of anye moo wytnesses, behold now we haue heard his blasphemy.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Men schulen be lonynge hemsilf, coueitouse, high of herynge, proude, blasfemeris, not obedient to fadir and modir, unkynde, cursid withouten affeccioun.
Wiclif. Tyte, c. 3.

Now cometh hasardrie with his apertenauntes, as tables and rafles, of which cometh deceit, false oathes, cridings, and all raving, blaspheming, and renoynge of God.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Against whom (the confessions and assercions, maturely and deliberatly considered) the judges, doctors, and all other the parties aforesaid adiudged the same Jone, a superticious sorceresse, and a diabolical blaspheme resse of God, and of his saincte.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 9.

Not long after Mr. Tyndall happened to be in the company of a certain diuine reconnted for a learned man, and in commoning and disputing with him, hee drove hym to that issue that the sayd great doctour burst out into these blasphemous words, and sayd, we were better to bee without God's laws than the Pope's.—The Life of Tyndall, b. i.

And more ouer (whiche is moch to be merualed at) he [Romulus] also prohybyted, that any thinge should be red or spoken, reprochable or blasphemous to God.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 2.

The Romishe Nabugodonoser had by wrestynge and peruertyng the holy scriptures of God, to the establyshing and maintenaunce of his vsurped supremitte clymed so high: that he was not nowe content to sitte in the chair of Moses, but had most blasphemously exalted himselfe aboue all that is called God, that is to say, had made Goddes worde frustrate, that his moste corupte and moste pestilente doctrine myght take place.—Udal. Pref. To the King's Majesty.

Also in Aprill was a nunne called the holy mayde of Kente, twoo monkes, and twoo freres, hanged and beeded, for treason, blasphemie, and hypocracie.
Fabyan. Hen. VIII. an. 1534.

While 'gainst blasphemers' general sight
Our painful author striveth,
And happy spirits which live in heavenly light
On earth reviveth.—Beaumont. On Drayton's Moses.

With that, all mad and furious he grew,
Like a fell mastiffe through enraged heat,
And curst, and band, and blasphemies forth threw
Against the gods.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

Where though it followeth, the accuser neuer shewed signe of shame (the way to repetance) but terribly curseth, & blasphemously sweareth he neuer committed any such act, though the same be registred before the honorable, ye Queenes Maiesties high commissioners.
Stowe. Queene Mary, an. 1557.

How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge thyself on all those who thus continually blaspheme thy great and all glorious name, and use it to palliate their most atrocious crimes and barbarous enormities?
Beveridge, vol. i. Ser 6.

The carnal conceit, that God will graciously receive sinners when the world has left them; that when by calamitous constraint they are at last brought to confess their wickedness, and are only sorrowful for the evil consequences of it, the conceit that they shall find mercy, is atheism of as blasphemous a nature as the denial of a God.
Bates. Danger of Prosperity.

I have not yet instanced in the grossest part of their superstition, not to say downright idolatry, in this kind; I mean in their extravagant worship of the blessed virgin and mother of our Lord; whom they blasphemously call the Queen of Heaven.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 40.

He healed the man that was sick of the palsy, and forgave his sins: a plain proof of his divinity, because none but God has the power and prerogative of forgiving sins; and therefore the Jews accused him of blasphemy for pretending to this power.—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 9.

Sceptics may wrangle, and mockers may blaspheme; but the pious man knows by evidence too sublime for their comprehension, that his affections are not misplaced, and that his hopes shall not be disappointed
Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 2.

Much pains have been taken to poison the minds of all ranks of people, but especially the middling and the lower classes, by the most impious and blasphemous publications that ever disgraced any Christian country.
Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 1.

BLAST, v. }
BLAST, n. }
BLA'STER. }
BLA'STING, n. }
BLA'STMENT. }
BLA'STY. }

A. S. Blæstan; Ger. Blasten, to blow. Formed upon the past part. of Blæsan, to blaze, (qv.)

To strike as with a sudden gust or wind; as with an impetuous and destructive wind: to wither up, to desolate, to destroy, to annihilate.

It is used by Hall and Surrey for—to blow or sound a blast, to sound aloud, to proclaim, to blaze abroad.

But rede that boweth downe for euery blast—
Ful lightly ceese wind, it wol arise
But so nil not an oke, whan it is cast.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

Whan thei were in the sea amid,
Out of the north thei see a cloude,
The storm arose, the wyndes loude:
Thei blewen many a dredefull blaste.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

A myghty tre and of a noble heyght
Whose beaute blasted was with boystuos winde
His leaues loste, the sappe was from the rynde.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Phyllip duke of Burgoyne, abydyng still in his high & warlike enterprise, assembled together of Flemynges Picardes, Hollanders, and Henowiers a greate army, to the nombre of xl. m. so well armed, so well vitailed, so well furnished with ordenaunce, and well garnished in all thynges, that they thoughte in their hartes, and blasted emongest theymselfes, that the Calcians would leaue the town desolate, & die for their sauegarde, hearynge onely the approachyng of the Gauntoys.—Hall. Hen. VI an. 14.

All thy trees and fruit of thy lande shall be marred with blastynge.—Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 28.

Nor blasted may thy name be by the mouth of those Whom death hath shut in svlence, so that they may not disclose.—Surrey. Psalm 88.

After mydnight the trumpettes sounded in king Höryes hoost; than euery man made hym redy; at the seconde blast they drewe out of their lodgynges, and ordered thre batayls.—Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 237.

And now were all the hopes of my future life upon blasting: the indentures were preparing; the time was set; my suites were addrest for the journey What was the issue? O God, thy Providence made and found it.
Bp. Hall. Specialties of his Life

Mich. I am no blaster of a ladies beauty,
Nor bold intruder on her special favours,
I know how tender reputation is,
And with what guards it ought to be preserv'd, lady.
Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife, Act i. sc. 1.

Empe. Hang, ye rascals,
Ye blasters of my youth, if she be gone,
'Twere better ye had been your father's camels.
Id. Valentinian, Act iv. sc. 1.

In the morne and liquid dew of youth,
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc 3.

But it may be noted, that the blossoms do not forthwith discover the blast; an old experienced countryman having once given me notice of a blasty noon, and within a day or two shewing the proof upon the cherry blossoms then flagging, but not much altering their colour till two days more were past.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 154.

He [the debaucher] blasts all the fruit he tastes, and where the brute has been devouring there is nothing left worthy the relish of the man.—Spectator, No. 139.

And see where surly winter passes off,
Far to the north, and calls his ruffian blasts:
His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale.
Thomson. Spring.

And though no gathering clouds the day control,
Through skies serene portentous thunders roll
Fierce blasting bolts from northern regions come,
And aim their vengeance at imperial Rome.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. i.

The secrets of th' abyss to spy,
He passed the flaming bounds of place and time:
The living throne, the sapphire blaze,
Where angels tremble, while they gaze,
He saw: but, blasted with excess of light,
Clos'd his eyes in endless night.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

Such is the disposition of mankind, if they cannot blast the action, they will censure the vanity.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 8.

Thus oft, reclin'd at ease, I lose an hour
At ev'ning, till at length the freezing blast,
That sweeps the hollow shutter, summons home
The recollected pow'rs. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

These armonious blasters maintained their delectable music, while the queen (Elizabeth) rode through the tilt yard, to the grand entrance of the castle, which was washed by the lake.
Langham. Gilpin. Tour to the Lakes, vol. i. p. 51.

BLA'TANT, adj. "I know not," says Skinner, "whether or not from the Lat. Balatus; (q. d.) Balans vel balatans." See BLATTER.

But now I come vnto my course againe,
To his atchiuement of the blatant beast;
Who all this while at will did range and raine,
Whil'st none was him to stop, nor none him to restraine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

Our voyage is to the Ile of Dogges, there where the blatant beast doth rule and raigne rending the credit of whom it please.—The Returne from Parnassus, Act v. sc. 4.

Hind. The Panther's breath was ever fam'd for sweet;
But from the Wolf such wishes oft I meet
You learn'd this language from the blatant beast,
Or rather did not speak, but were possess'd.
Dryden. The Hind & Panther, pt. ii.

Led by the blatant voice along the skies,
He comes, where faction over cities flies,
A talking fiend, whom snaky locks disgrace,
And numerous mouths deform her dusky face.
Parnell. Queen Anne's Peace.

BLA'TTER. } Lat. Blaterare, from Blatire,
BLA'TTEROON. } which Vossius says you may derive from the Gr. Βλαστον, for βλητον, cast, thrown forth; απο του βαλλειν, to throw.

To throw out, (sc.) idle words, to speak foolishly, to babble, to blab.

For before it [the tongue] she hath set a pallisado of sharp teeth, to the end that if peradventure it will not obey reason, which within holdeth it back as if with a strong bridle, but it will blatter out and not tarry within, we might bite it until it bleed again, and so restrain the intemperance thereof.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 159.

She [a ship] roade at peace, through his onely paines and excellent indurance, how ever envy list to blatter against him.—Spenser. On Ireland.

I will endeavour to lose the memory of him, and that my thoughts may never run more upon the fashion of his face, which you know he hath no cause to brag of: I hate such blateroons.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 75.

BLAZE, v. } A. S. Blæsan, to blow. Past
BLAZE, n. } part. Blazed, blas'd, blast;
BLA'ZING, n. } Ger. Blazen; Dut. Blaesen;
BLA'ZER. } Suscitare ignem flatu, (Kilian.)
BLA'SURE. } To raise a flame by blowing.

More probably to emit a flame, like a blast.

To rush, issue, send forth or emit, like a blast, i. e. suddenly, widely, rapidly.

To spread or disperse, to divulge, to publish, to proclaim: also to display or set forth conspicuously, ostentatiously. And also restricted to the heraldic blazonry of arms.

This lady brought in her right hond
Of brenning fire a blasing brond
Whereof the flame and hete fire
Hath many a lady in desire
Of loue brought. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

While I was glorious in worldly wolefulnesse, and had soche goodes in wealth, as maken manne rich, tho was I drawe into compaignies that loos, prise, and name weuen: tho louteden blasours, tho cufreden glosours, tho welcomeden flatterers, tho worshipped thilke, that now deinen not to looke.—Id. The Testament of Love, b. i.

Tho laye there certaine woodde cliffe
Of whiche the peces newe and efte
She made hem in the pittes wete,
And put hem in the firye hete,
And toke the brande, with all the blaze,
And thries she began to rase
About Eson. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And there withall the blazing of her eyne,
Was like the beames of Titan, truth to tell,
Which glads vs all that in this world do dwell.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew.

I can not tell you what was this knyghtes name, nor of what countie, but the blasure of his armes was goules, two fusses sable, a border sable.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 281.

So spake the Father: and, unfolding bright
Toward the right hand his glorie, on Blaz'd forth unclouded Deitie the Son.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

And as it seemeth that the reverberation of a light doth more offence unto the feeble eyes; even so those reproches which are retorted and sent back again by the truth, upon a man that blazed them before are more offensive.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 197.

For when they hear so much evil blazed abroad in the world, and few or none escape without having some foul blot rubb'd upon him, and infamous crime reported of him, whether truly or falsly, they think that sin and wickedness is no such strange thing, and so embolden themselves to commit that which they hear is so common.
Hopkins. Works, p. 209.

A traine of powder was made, and set on fire, which gave to the blessed martyr of God, a blaze, and scorched his left hand and that side of his face, but neither kindled the wood nor yet the coales.—Knox. Hist. of the Reform. p. 6.

Vtterers of secrets he from thence debard,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Large shells of nuts their covering helmet yield,
And o'er the region, with reflected rays,
Tall groves of needle for their lances blaze,
Dreadful in arms the marching mice appear.
Parnell. Battle of the Frogs and Mice, b. ii.

Others are of opinion that it foretells battell and bloodshed, and believe it of the same prognostication as the tail of a blazing star.—Spectator. No. 127.

But when their chains were cast aside,
See the glad scene unfolding wide,
Clap the glad wing, and tower away,
And mingle with the blaze of day.
Parnell. A Night Piece on Death.

Near, and more near, the swimming radiance roll'd;
Along the mountains stream the lingering fires,
Sublime the groves of Ida blaze with gold,
And all the heaven resounds with louder lyres.
Beattie. The Judgment of Paris.

If of Dryden's fire the blaze is brighter, of Pope's the heat is more regular and constant.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

BLA'ZON, n. } From Blaze. Fr. Blasonner, to blaze arms, (Cotgrave.)
BLA'ZON, v. } As to blaze, so to blazon is—
BLA'ZONER. } To spread or disperse, to
BLA'ZONRY. } divulge, to publish, to proclaim. Also to display or set forth conspicuously, ostentatiously.

I wot not what I say yet, although I know what I would saie, for I would rather blazon lowe with my tongue, without I were sore hurt in mine vnderstanding.
Golden Boke, c. 37.

But now friend Cornelius, sith I haue blasened his vaunt, hearken his vertue and worthinesse.—Golden Boke, Let. 2.

Well, if it were folie to bewaile things which are vnpossible to be recouered, sith Had I wist doth seldome serue as a blason of good understanding.
Gascoigne. Advertisement to the Reader.

Indeed a silence does that tomb befit,
Where is no herald left to blazon it.
Donne. Elegies upon the Authour.

The hag lay long revolving what might be,
The blest event of such an embassy:
Then blazons in dread smile her hideous form;
So lightning gilds the unrelenting storm.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 2.

His whole mind was blazoned over with a variety of glittering images; coronets, escutcheons, &c.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 104.

My honourable friend has not brought down a spirited imp of chivalry to win the first achievement and blazon of arms on his milk-white shield in a field listed against him.
Burke. On the Duration of Parliament.

These historians, recorders, and blazoners of virtues and arms, differ wholly from that other description of historians, who never assign any act of politicians to a good motive.—Id. A Letter to a Noble Lord.

BLE. Able, ible; Lat. Bilis, from the Goth. Abal, strength, power, force. The Lat. termination in Bilis (with few exceptions) was used passively; (e. g.) Arable, that may be ered or ploughed; Audible, that may be heard; and the contraction into ile, docile, that may be taught: and was thus contradistinguished from the terminations, ive and ic, which were used actively; (e. g.) Coercive, that can or may coerce; Didactic, that can or may teach. In the decay of the Lat. language, adjectives terminating in Bilis, used with an active signification, were introduced in great numbers; and many transferred into our own English: thus, Comfortable, that can or may, that does comfort; Conducible, that can or may, that does, conduce. Sensible, we use, to denote—full of sense;—which can feel, which may be felt; he is a sensible man; very sensible of the cold; and of any sensible change of the weather. Many words of this description are considered by Tooke to have been received by us from French words in Ble, which were taken corruptly from Italian words in Vole. As It. Confortevole; Fr. Comfortable: It. Capevole; Fr. Capable. The abuse seems too firmly established, and too widely spread, to admit of any but a very partial remedy. See Ic, IVE.

BLEACH, v. } See BLACK. A. S. Blican, ablican, dealbare; Ger. Bleichen;
BLEACH, n. } Dut. Bleycken; Sw. Bleka.—
BLEACH, adj. } To whiten, to make pale, or BLE'ACHER. } white.
BLE'ACHERY. }

Some one, for she is paie and bleche,
Some one, for she is soft of speche.—Gower. Con. A. b. v

When shepherds pipe on oaten strawes,
And merrie larkes are ploughmans clockes;
When turtles tread, and rookes and dawes,
And maidens bleach their summer smockes.
Shakespeare. Loue's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

After that, they be spred abroad and displaied open to the sunne, and left without dores to take all weathers both day and night, and to bee bleached, untill they be drie and white.
Holland. Pliny, b. xvi. c. 24.

There runneth likewise out of vines a certaine gum, which is passing good for the bleach, scabs, and scals in little children.—Id. Ib. b. xiii. c. 11.

Virgil, to give this thought likewise a cloathing of poetry, describes some spirits as bleaching in the winds.
Tatler, No. 154.

Immortal liberty, whose look sublime,
Hath bleach'd the tyrant's cheek in every varying clime.
Smollett. Ode to Independence.

In the price of linen we must add the wages of the flax-dresser, of the spinner, of the weaver, of the bleacher, &c. together with the profits of their respective employers.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

On the side of the great Bleachery are the public walls.
Pennant.

BLEAK. } A. S. Blac. The same word
BLE'AKNESS. } as Bleach, differently applied:
BLE'AKY. } as the earth, the herbage,
BLE'AKLY. } bleached or bleaked, blighted or blacked, by cold, piercing, withering winds; and then applied to that which is exposed to cold, piercing winds; to that which is chill, dreary, desolate.

By the fourthe seale, the beast, the vovce, and the pale horse, mayest thou vnderstande the heretykes, whiche dyd dyuerse wayes and a long tyme vexe the holy churche with false doctrine. And haue made it, as it were pale & bleaked for very sorow & heuynes.—Udal. Rev. c. 6.

With bleak and with congealing winds
The earth in shining chains he binds;
And still as he doth farther pass,
Quarries his way with liquid glass.—Cotton. Winter.

Being shipped at Deepe, the sea vsed vs hardly · and, after a night and a great part of the day following, sent vs back well wind beaten to that bleak haven whence we set forth.—Bp Hall. Some Specialties.

——— Yett this dull earth
Vnto a few small herbes affoords a birth,
Which are the hardy Nasamonians fare
Neere the sea coast they bleakely seated are.
Moy. Lucan, b. ix.

Those limbs, in lawn and softest silk array'd,
From sun-beams guarded, and of winds afraid,
Can they bear angry Jove? can they resist
The parching dogstar, and the bleak north-east?
Prior. Henry & Emma.

The Inhabitants of Nova Zembla go naked, without complaining of the bleakness of the air: as the armies of the northern nations keep the field all winter.—Addison.

On shrubs they browze, and, on the bleaky top
Of rugged hills, the thorny bramble crop.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 3.

What should they do beset with dangers round,
No neighbouring dorp, no lodging to be found,
But bleaky plains, and bare unhospitable ground.
Id. The Hind & Panther, pt. iii.

For is there aught that Nature's hand has sown
To bloom and ripen in the hottest zone?
We raise it here, in storms of wind and hail,
On the bleak bosom of a sunless vale.
Cowthorn. Of Taste.

BLEAR, v. }
BLEAR, adj. }
BLE'ARNESS. }
BLEAREDNESS. } Skinner and Junius coincide with Minshew, that Blear is the Dut. Blaer, pustula; and Skinner adds that Blaer is from the Ger. Blarn, tumescere; from the A. S. Blæs-an, flare, inflare, (q.d.) cutis inflatio.

To blear the sight, (met.) is to dim, impede, or obstruct the sight, as if disordered with pustules or blains.

He bismedde hem wt hus bulles, & bleredе hure eye.
Piers Ploughman, p. 4.

Phebus, (quod he) for all thy worthinesse
For all thy bountee, and all thy gentillenesse,
For all thy song, and all thy minstralcie,
For all thy waiting blered is thin eye,
With oon of litel reputation.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,198.

Fatising dames my patience still did proue,
And bleard mine eyes, till I became so blind
That seing not what furie brought mee foorth,
I followed most (alwayes) that least was worth.
Gascoigne. The Fruite of Fetters.

And leste thou shouldste suppose by space
my talke myghte ouergrow
In bulke the bleareeyde Crispine roole whose tounge on pattens free
Dil reteblesse run, euen here I cease not one word more of me.
Drant. Horace. The first Satyre.

The Jewe putteth awaye his wife for stench of breth, for bleerace of the eyes, or for any such like faultes, where as among christen men, there is but one cause onely whiche dissolueth wedlocke, and that is the breache of the fayth & promise of matrimony.—Udal. Mark, c. 10.

Thy bright eyes, bleare and wrinkle, and so change
Thy frame at all parts, that thou shalt be strange
To all the woocrs.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xlii.

But say the eyes bee enflamed and bleered onely, without any extraordinarie moisture appearing in them, the little muscles lying within the lowes of a swine, rosted and afterwards punned to a cataplasme, and so applied, do quite rid away the same bleerednesse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 11.

They, who be loath and take heed to offend and hurt them that are bleare-eyed or otherwise given to the paine and inflammation of them, do mingle among the gallant and lively colours, some duskish shadows.—Id. Plutarch, p. 252.

Thro' which, by strength of hand, Alcides drew
Chain'd Cerberus, who lagg'd and restive grew,
With his blear'd eyes our brighter day to view.
Tate and Stonestreet. Ovid. Met. b. vii.

Is't not a pity now, that tickling rheums
Should ever tease the lungs and blear the sight
Of cracks like these? Cowper. Task, b. iii.

BLEAT, v. }
BLEAT, n. }
BLE'ATER. }
BLE'ATING, n. } A. S. Blætan; Dut. Bleten; Ger. Bleken; It. Belare; Fr. Beler; Sp. Balar; Lat. Balare.

Bleat is the cry of the sheep. See Ba, and the quotation below from Chapman.

Awe bleteth after lomb,
Lhouth after calue cu
Bullue sterteth
Bucke verteth
Murie sing cuccu. Ancient Songs. Ritson.

And Samuel answered: what meaneth thē the bleatinge of the shepe I myne eares, and the noyse of the oxē whiche I heare.—Bible, 1551. 1 Sam. c. 15.

Set in my ship, mine eare reacht, where we rod
The bellowing of oxen, and the bleate
Of fleecie sheepe. Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xii.

Then suddenly was heard along the main
To low the ox, to bleat the woolly train.—Pope. Ib.

Ere yet we reach'd the coast the bleat of sheep
And lowings loud of oxen in the stall,
Came o'er mine ear. Cowper. Ib.

The humble shepherd to his rays,
Having his rustic homage paid,
And to some cool retired shade
Driven his bleating flocks to graze;
Sits down delighted with the sight
Of that great lamp, so mild, so fair, so bright.
Sherburne. The Sun Eliz.

The Troians (like a sort of ewes pend in a rich man's fold, Close at his dore, till all be milkt; never bleating hold. Hearing the bleating of their lambs) did all their wide host fill
With shouts and clamours.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

——— The wolf, who from the nightly fold,
Fierce drags the bleating prey, ne'er drunk her milk,
Nor wore her warming fleece. Thomson. Spring.

In time his [Shenstone's] expenses brought clamours about him, that overpowered the lamb's bleat and the linnet's song; and the groves were haunted by beings very different from fauns and fairies.—Johnson. Life of Shenstone.

In cold still soils the bleaters oft complain
Of gouty ails, by shepherds term'd the halt.
Those let the neighbouring fold or ready crook
Detain, and pour into their cloven feet
Corrosive drugs. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

BLEB. Skinner says, from the Ger. Blæn, tumescere, turgescere, to swell. See Blun.

"A blister; also a bubble in the water. North." (Grose.)

And were not the angels a great deal better employed in the beholding the worth of their Creatour, than to diminish their own happinesse, by attending those, whom nothing can make happie? looking on this troubled passing stream of the perishing generations of men, to as little purpose almost, as idle boys do on dancing blebs and bubbles in the water.—More. Song of the Soul, Conclusion.

BLEE. A. S. Bleoh, from Bleowan, efflorescere, to blow, to bloom. In Ritson's Ancient Songs, p. 27, "Hire bleo blykyeth so bright." Applied generally to—

The complexion, hue, colour.

Mine herte oppressed is so wonderfully,
Onely for him which is so bright of blee,
Alas I trowe I shal him neuer see.
Chaucer. Lamentations of Mary Magdalen.

There beth roris of red ble,
And lilie likful for to se.
Uncertaine Auctors. Hickes, vol. i. p 230.

Before him came a dwarffe full lowe,
That waited on his knee,
And at his backe five heads he bore,
All wan and pale of blee.—Sir Cauline. Percy, Poem 3.

Forth then hyed our king, I wisse,
And an angry man was hee;
And soone he found queene Elinore,
That bride so bright of blee. Id. Ib.

BLEED. }
BLE'EDING. } A. S. Bleed-an. Skinner prefers the Dut. Bloesen, rubescere; a colore, scilicet: to grow red; to blush, or bloom. To pour forth, to emit; to draw forth, blood: (met.) to feel the pains or agonies of bleeding. See Blood.

Of al that me him bilimede, hli ne bledde nozt, me sede.
[Belimbed, cut off the limbs.] R. Gloucester, p. 560.

Ich circumsayede myne sone, and al so for hus sake
My self and my meyne, and alle that maule (male) were
Bledden blod for that lordes love.—Piers Ploughman, p. 318.

Sire, he wold say, an emperour mote nede
Be vertuous, and haten tyrannie.
For which he made him in a bathe to bleede
On bothe his armes till he muste die.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,423.

In this meane tyme in Englōde, ye Jewys in dyuerse places of the realme, as Lyncoln, Staumforde, & Lynne, were robbyd & spoyled; and at Yorke to the nombre of cccc. & xl.o, cutte theyr mayster veynes & bled to deth.
Fabyan. Rich. I. an. 1181.

And said whimple alas, there nis no more
But thou shalt fele as wel the blode of me
As thou hast felt the bleding of Tisbe
And with that word, he smote him to the hart.
The blode out of the wound as brode start
As water, whan the conduit broken is Chaucer. Legend of Thisbe of Babilon.

Whereupon he [Cato] called for all his men, one after another, and very angerly asked them his sword, and gave one of them such a blow on his face, that his nose fell a bleeding, and his hand was all bloody withall
North. Plutarch, p. 660.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flowery food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Pope. Essay on Man, Epist. i.

Patriots have toil'd, and in their country's cause
Bled nobly; and their deeds, as they deserve,
Receive proud recompense. We give in charge
Their names to the sweet lyre.—Cowper. Task, b v.

BLE'MISH, v. }
BLE'MISH, n. }
BLE'MISHLESS. }
BLE'MISHMENT. }
BLE'MISHING, n. } To blemish, is to affix some blame, some cause of blame; some stain, some spot, which sullies, taints or tarnishes the original soundness, fairness, or purity. And hence—

To taint, to tarnish, to sully; to deform, to disfigure.

And thus it sufficeth not onley, that they reuerence no manne me naught, but if thou of thy fre will, rather be blemished with mine offencion.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

But whenne he [Chas. IX.] came to mennes astate he then was ryght sorry, and wolde saye full often, to his famyliers, a prince is greatly blemyshed whenne he lakketh conynge of lecture.—Fabyan, an. 1483.

For if ye do ye shall gretely abate the honoure of the lady, and also blemyssheth the honoure of the quene of Castell her doughter, for then ye sholde make her worse then a bastarde.
Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 43.

To see how Christ was propheeied and described therein, cōsider & marke, how that the kidde or lambe must be without spot or blemish, and so was Christ onely of all mankind, in the sight of God and of his lawe.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 439.

But now the Frenchemen haue fortified, victailed and manned their tounes, and we haue spent tyme and doon nothyng at all, lyngeryng for the kyng your master, to the losse of vs and greate blemishyng of our honours.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 4.

If any natural blemish blot our face,
You do protest, it gives our beauty grace.
Drayton. Mrs. Shore to Edw. IV.

Full many lords, and many knights her loued,
Yet she to none of them her liking lent,
Ne euer was with fond affection moued,
But rul'd her thoughts with goodly gouernement,
For dread of blame, and honours blemishment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

A life in all so blemishlesse, that we
Enoch's return may sooner hope, than he
Should be outshin'd by any.—Feltham. Lesorts, c. 37.

The earl thinking there might remain some grudge of the last years' falling out, caused Sir Walter Ralegh and Sir Francis Vere to shake hands; "which we did both," says he, "the more willingly, because there had nothing passed between us that might blemish reputation."
Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

The reliefs of an envious man are those little blemishes and imperfections that discover themselves in an illustrious character.—Spectator, No. 19.

They have possessed other beauties, which were conformable to just criticism; and the force of these beauties has been able to overpower censure, and give the mind a satisfaction superior to the disgust arising from the blemishes.
Hume, pt. i. Fas. 23.

BLENCH, v. }
BLENCH, n. }
BLE'NCHER. }
BLE'NCHING. } See to Blanch, and to Blink.

To blank (qv.)—to avoid, or cause to avoid, to evade, to escape, to elude, to shun, to start or shrink from, to startle.—And, by Gower, to blink.

Thenne shalt the blench at a bergh.
Piers Plouhman, p. 122.

And thus thinkende I stonde still
Without blenchinge of mine eie,
Right as me thought that I seie
Of paradis the most ioie.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

For now if ye so shuld haue answered him as I haue shewed you, thoughe ye shounde haue somwhat blenched him therwith, yet he nught & wold of likelyhod haue gone further with you & haue asked you whereby ye know yt ye shoulde beleue the churche.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 205.

Lyke as the good husbande, when he hath sowen his grounde, setteth vp cloughtes or threds, whiche some call shades, some blenchars, or other lyke shewes, to feare away byrdes, whiche he foreseeth redye to deuoure and hurte his corne.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 23.

Zanch. I feel the old man's master'd by such passion,
And too high rackt, which makes him overshoot all
His valour should direct at, and hurt those
That stand but by as blenchers.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act ii. sc. 1.

Made old offences of affections new,
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Shakespeare, Son. 110.

The noble lord who then conducted affairs, and his worthy colleagues, whilst they trembled at the prospect of such distresses as you have since brought upon yourselves, were not afraid steadily to look in the face that glaring and dazzling influence at which the eyes of eagles have blenched.
Burke. On American Taxation.

BLEND, v. } A. S. Blendan; Sw. Blanda,
BLENT, part. } perhaps from Be-lienan: Blenan, blen-ed, blend; and upon this past part. the verb, Blend-an. See To LEND.

To mix, to mingle; to confound, to give to each ingredient some quality or qualities of the other.

To see both blended in one flood,
The mother's milk, the children's blood,
Makes me doubt if Heaven will gather
Roses hence, or lilies rather.
Crashaw. Upon the Infant Martyr.

But not that matters wilde, and mylde
without reason should goo
Blended as one. Drant. Horace. Art of Poetry.

Nothing is a greater sacrilege than to prostitute the great name of God to the petulancy of an idle tongue, and to end it as an expletive, to fill up the emptiness of a weak discourse.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 2.

He mourned still, and wept ful sore
I sweare by the holy roode
The teares he for his master wept
Were blent water, and bloude.
Old Robin of Portugale. Percy.

Upon the spacious level's utmost bound,
The Cinga rolls his rapid waves around.
But soon in full Iberus' channel lost,
His blended waters seek Iberia's coast.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

The particulars in which an object continues the same, are often so blended with those in which it has become different, that we cannot find proper words for marking the distinction, and therefore must have recourse to obscure circumlocutions.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 2.

BLENT, is the past tense and past part. Blinned, blind, blint or blent, from the A. S. Blinnan; to stop, (sc.) the sight, the vision. See BLIN.

Lucifer loke ne myghte. so lyght hym a blent.
Piers Ploughman, p. 359.

O sely preest, o sely innocent,
With covetise anon thou shalt be blent.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,544.

Lo Argus, which that had an hundred eyen,
For all that ever he conde pore or prien,
Yet was he blent, and, God wot, so ben mo,
That wenen wisly that it be not so.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9985.

He can so well his cause make,
And so well feigne, and so well glose,
That there ne shall no man suppose,
But that he were an innocent,
And thus a mans eie he blent.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

BLENT, the past tense of Blench, shrinked, started aside, (Tyrwhitt.)

And therwithal he blent and cried, a!
As though he stongen were unto the herte.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1023.

Alas! alas! that I ne had yblent,
His hote love is cold, and all yqueint.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3751.

He blent away with a leap.
Richard Coer de Leon. Weber, vol. ii.

BLESS, or BLISS. BLE'SSED. BLE'SSEDLY. BLE'SSEDFUL. BLE'SSEDNESS. BLE'SSER. BLE'SSING. BLE'SSFULNESS. } A. S. Bliss-ian, blessian, blithsian, lætari, lætificare, to make blithe, (qv.) joyous or glad.—A. S. Blithe, be-lithe; blissom, blithsome; i. e. Belissom, be-lithesome. Lithe, lithesome, and lissom, are still used in the north, for quiet, still, gentle, pliant, flexible; from the A. S. Lysan, to loosen or slacken. And, hence, consequentially—

To loosen; or dissolve, to release, to relieve (sc.) the tightness, stiffness; to alleviate, to soothe or soften—the harshness; to mitigate, to assuage, to still, quiet or tranquillize—the violence or turbulence, the pain or anguish; to pacify, to please, to gratify; to communicate or confer ease, pleasure, joy, gladness, happiness, prosperity; to bestow a wish, a prayer, for happiness, or well being.

Bless you; may ease, pleasure, prosperity, happiness, be conferred upon you. I bless you; I (as far as my wishes and prayers are effectual to do so) confer prosperity, happiness upon you.

—— Hii blessede hem echon,
And toke hem al to God grace, & to batayle wende anon.
R. Gloucester, p. 406.

Theruore he gaf hym hys blessynge, & al hys tresour therto,
And he adde hys moder erytage al clene of gyfte al so.
Id. p. 421.

Thus gate was that werre pesed, withouten lore,
That nouther partie com nerre, I blesse Anselme therfore.
R. Brunne, p. 97.

Sonne, on my blessyng trowe thou not his sawe,
Bot late hem haf endyng, as a traytour thorgh lawe.
Id. p. 270.

That they ben cursed of Christ, I can hem wel proue
Withouten his blessynge bare beth thei in her werkes.
For Christ seyde hymselfe to swiche as hym folwede.
Y blessed moste they ben, that men ben in soule:
And alle power in gost, God hym selfe blesseth.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And all the wise that evere were, by ouht ich can aspie
Prisede poverte for beste, yf pacience hit folwe
And bothe betere and blessedere, by many folde than richesse. Id. p. 209.

Blesse ghe men that pursuen ghou, blesse ghe and nyle ghe curse.—Wielif. Romayns, c. 12.

Blesse them whiche persecute you: blesse, but curse not.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therfore I gesside necessarie to prie brethren that thei come bifore to ghou, and make redi this bifight blessyng to be redi so as blessyng and not as nuarice. for I seie this thing, he that sowith scarsli schal also repe scarsli, and he that sowith in blessyngis schal also repe of blessyngis.
Wielif. 2 Corynth, c. 9.

Wherefore I thought it necessary to exhort the bretheren, to come beforehand vnto you for to prepare youre good blessing promysed afore, that it might be ready: so that it be a blessing, and not a defraudyng. This yet remember, how that he which soweth lyttel, shall reape lytell, & he that soweth plenteously shall reape plenteously.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

O leve brother, quod this Arius,
Yeve me a plant of thilke blessed tree,
And in my gardin planted shal it be
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prol. v. 6346.

Proserpina, whiche doughter was
Of Ceres, befell thilke cas,
While she was dwellyng in Cecile,
Hir mother in that like while
Upon her blessynge, and hir hest
Bad, that she shulde ben honest,
And lere for to weuue and spinne
And dwelle at home, and kepe her inne.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For the soule doeth not perishe whiche departeth from the bodye, nor the bodye doeth not altogether go to destruction, that in tyme to come shal liue more blessedlye, and be immortall.—Udal. John, c. 9.

For in this xxxi. Psalme discribeth he also this blessedfull state of man, declared now by the gospel, shewing that yt it is not giuē & receiued, as due vnto vs for the workes of Moses law, but by the fre goodness of God, wherby we are moued & drawen to beleue.—Id. Romaines, c. 4.

Moreouer Aristotle's felicitie and blessednes standeth in auoyding of all tribulatiõs, and in riches, health, honour, worship, frendes, and authoritie, which felicitie pleaseth our spiritualty well.—Tyndall. Preface to the Reader, p. 103.

Lo this is euen the vary grounde,
this is the perfytte cause,
That most mislyke themselues so mucho,
And can no reason pause
In blessfulnes. Drant. Horace, Sat. b. i. s. 1

Blessed, who walk'st not in the worldling's way;
Blessed, who with foul sinners wilt not stand:
Blessed, who with proud mockers dar'st not stay;
Nor sit thee down amongst that scornful band.
P. Fletcher, Psalm 1.

But since so it pleaseth him, whose wisdom and goodness guideth all, put thy confidence in Him, and one day we shall blessedly meet again, never to depart.
Sydney. Arcadia, b. iii.

The deeps and the snows, the hail and the rain, the birds of the air and fishes of the sea, they can and do glorify God, and give him praise in their capacity; and yet he gave them no speech, no reason, no immortal spirit, no capacity of eternal blessedness.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

When thou hast said or done any thing for which thou receivest praise or estimation, take it indifferently, and return it to God; reflecting upon him as the giver of the gift, or the blesser of the action, or the aid of the design.
Id. Holy Living, s. 4. Of Humility.

The assurance of a future blessedness is a cordial that will revive our spirits more in the day of adversity, than all the wise sayings and considerations of philosophy.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 5.

I took up Homer, and dipped into that famous speech of Achilles to Priam, in which he tells him, that Jupiter has by him two great vessels, the one filled with blessings, and the other with misfortunes; out of which he mingles a composition for every man that comes into the world.
Tatler, No. 146.

—— The very babe
Knows this, and 'chance awak'd, his little hands
Lifts to the gods, and on his innocent couch
Calls down a blessing. Mason. Caractacus.

BLIGHT, v. } Perhaps from the A. S. Lihtan,
BLIGHT, n. } behhtan, to alight, to descend, to fall upon, to strike upon;—to strike, to blast, as lightning; and thus—

To destroy, to wither up, to desolate. See BLACK, BLEAK.

Blights are often caused by a continued dry easterly wind, for several days together, without the intervention of showers, or any morning dew, by which the perspiration in the tender blossoms is stopped, so that in a short time their colour is changed and they wither and decay.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

Tho' they could not hinder brave and active spirits from budding out into noble beginnings, of most hopeful benefit to the common wealth; yet could [they] by stopping the channel of supplies or encouragements, blite them from advancing to any fruitful or prontable conclusions.
Quays. Life of Raleigh.

The Lady Blast, you must understand, has such a particular malignity in her whisper, that it blights like an easterly wind, and withers every reputation that it breathes upon
Spectator, No. 457.

Trust not, ye ladies, to your beauty's power,
For beauty withers like a shrivelled flower;
Yet those fair flowers, that Sylvia's temples bind,
Fade not with sudden blights or winter's wind.
Gay. Eclogues. The Ten-Table.

I suspect it will be found, that whenever the blighting wind and those frosts at blooming time have prevailed, the produce of the wheat crop will turn out very indifferently
Burke. On Scarcity.

The various seasons woven into one,
And that one season an eternal spring,
The garden fears no blight, and needs no fence.
Cowper. Task, b. vi

—— Ah, gracious heaven! attend
His fervent prayer; restrain the tempest's rage,
The dreadful blight disarm; nor in one blast
The products of the labouring year destroy!
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

BLIN, v. BLIND, v. BLIND, n. BLI'NDING, n. BLI'NDING, adj. BLI'NDLY. BLI'NDNESS. BLI'NDFOLD v. BLI'NDFOLD, adj. } A. S. Blindan, blindian; Ger. Blinden, or blenden; Dut. Blinden, from the A. S. Blinnan, to stop, (Junius, and after him Tooke.)

To stop or stay; to stop, impede, obstruct, prevent or hinder, (sc.) the sight, the vision, the perception, the understanding.

To blind-fold; to fold any thing over the eyes, the sight, the vision (lit. and met.) so as to blin or stop, prevent the sight, &c.

So longe hoin speddo baddelicke, that hii mizte as wel blinne.—R. Gloucester, p. 550.

Tho wende kyng Edmund to Londone myd ys route,
And al that fore of Denemarch destrude ther aboute,
And drof hem out of thys lond, & gut nolde he nogt blynne.—R. Gloucester, p. 302.

Knoute gadrid him an oste, on Edmunde he ran,
& bicom vnto hun ageyn, as a douhty man,
& tracched sore Knoute, neuer he bisnne.
R. Brunne, p. 48.

Iwis the king & the barons he swore on the boke,
That neuer Alfred his brother thorgh him was dede,
No leynfed no slayn, bot thorgh Haraldes rede.—Id. p. 54.

For if also oure gospel is kenered, in these that perischen it is kenered, in which God hath oiend the soules of unfeithful men of this world that the lightning of the gospel of the glorie of Crist which is the ymage of God schyne not.
Wiclif. 2 Corynthians, c. 4.

If our gospell bee yet hyd, it is hyd amonge them that are lost: in whom the God of thys world hath blynded the myndes of them which beleue not, least the light of the glorious gospel of Christ whiche is the ymage of God, shoulde shine vnto them.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore I sele and witnesse this thing in the Lord, that ye walk not now as heathnne men walken in the vanyte of her witt, that han understondyng derkned with derknessis, and ben alienned fro the lyf of God bi ignorannce that is in hem for the blyndnesse of her herte.—Wiclif. Effesies, c. 4.

Thus I say therefore and testify in the Lord that ye henceforth walke not as other Gentyles walke, in the vanytie of their myndes, blyndeth i their vnderstandyng, beynge straungers from the lyfe whych is in God thorow the ignorancye that is in them because of the blyndnes of theyr heartes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And the men that hadden him scorned him and smyten him. And they blindfelden him: and smyten his face.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 22.

And the men that stode about Jesus mocked him, and smote him, and blynde-folded him and smote his face.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For he cam ther, him to begile he thought,
And so he did, or that they went atwin:
Til he had torned him, coud he not blin.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,610.

And neigh the castle swiche ther dwelten three:
That on of hem was blind, and might not see,
But it were with thilke eyen of his minde,
With which men mowen see whan they ben blinde.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4970.

What blisfull fortune may there been in the blindnesse of ignorance.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Lo thus blindly the world she demeth
In loues cause, as to me semeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

If ye will wincke in so open & cleare light and let yourselues be led blindfolded, and haue your part with the hypocrites in lyke sinne and mischief: be sure, ye shall haue your part with them in lyke wrath and vengeance that is like shortly to fall vpon them.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 311.

As it was readye at hande at one tyme by reason of the obscurunge and blyndinge of God's worde among ye Jewes throwe the cursed Talmud wherunto they gaue more faith and credence, and cleaued more earnestly vnto it than vnto the lawe of God and to the prophets.—Tdal. Rev. c. 13.

But now through their owne lacke of vnderstandinge, and through their owne blyndenesse, these menne haue them faste yoked, and in their daunger.—Jewel. Apologie, p. 697.

Men into stones there with he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all;
And, when him list the proudest lookes subdew,
He would them gazing blind, or turn to other hew.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 7.

God never gave a pow'r to one whole kind,
But most part of that kind did use the same:
Most eyes have perfect sight, though some be blind;
Most legs can nimbly run, though some be lame.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 30.

Those partiall judgements blindely ayme amisse,
At things which stand without our reach retir'd,
Which whilst not ours, as treasures we define,
But not the same whilst we the same enjoy.
Stirling. Alexandrean Tragedy, Chorus 5.

And even then he made shift to flie and escape through [illegible] and blind lanes.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 44.

He [Love] blinds the wise, gives eyesight to the blind,
And teaches and stains a new the lover's mind.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

[illegible] reign the atheist loudly owns,
And Providence blasphemously dethrones.
Id. Suum Cuique.

Invested in all the masks of night,
We left our champion on his flight,
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

Thus husbands well his strength, (altho' he plays
With ire) and deals more sparingly his blows;
That, eager of revenge, himself neglects,
And rushes blindly on.—Lewis. Thevard of Statius, b. vi.

Thus the professors of wisdom, like the foolish Harpaste that Seneca speaks of, who insensible of her own blindness always complained the sun was down and the house dark, thought all things were left at random, in loose disorder, and confusion here below.
Bates. Spiritual Perfection Unfolded, c. 7.

His exhortation therefore was, "Repent ye," renounce those vices and abominations which at present blind your eyes and cloud your understandings, and then you will be able to see the truth and bear the light.
Porteus, vol i. Lect. 3.

If I have an ancient window overlooking my neighbour's ground, he may not erect any blind to obstruct the light.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 26.

I never heard it prescribed as a recipe for strengthening the sight, to keep constantly blindfolded in the day time, and put on spectacles when we go to sleep.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii c. 1.

One month passes and another comes on; the year ends and then begins: but man is still unchanging in folly, still blindly continuing in prejudice.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 94.

BLINK, v.
BLINK, n.
BLI'NKARD.
BLI'NKER.
BLI'NKING, n.

To blink, A.S. Bli-can, coruscare, micare, is to give to the eye the twinkling motion or action of any thing glittering, e. g. a star; to twinkle, to wink; to look with the eye partially closed, to close the eye partially; and as this is frequently done to avoid any sudden action upon the eye; to blench (so Gower writes it) or blink, is consequentially—

To avoid, or cause to avoid, to evade, to escape, to elude, to shun, shrink or start from. See to BLANCH and to BLENCH.

A blink, a quick opening and shutting of the eye; a quick short sight or view; a glimpse, or glance, a wink, a twinkle.

Blinker, one who blinks; also that which screens, (sc.) to prevent blinking.

Than vpon him she kest vp bothe her eyne
And with a blinke it come in till his thought
That he somtime her face before had seen,
But she was in such plite he knew her nought,
Yet than her loke into his minde he brought,
The swete visage, and amorous blenking
Of faire Cresede, sometime his own darling.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Cresede.

Braynelce blynkardes that blowe at the cole.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Remembre Batte the foolish blink-eyed boye
Which was at Rome, thou knowest whome I meane.
Gascoigne. Hearbes.

The amorous blynckes flee to and fro
With sugred wordes that make a show
That fansie is well pleasde withall
And findes itselfe content.
Turberville. The Lover obtaining his Wish, &c.

——The eyes yblent
Do blink even blind with objects vehement,
So that till they themselves do well recure
Lesse matters they no'te see.
More. On the Soul, pt. iii. c. 1. s. 32.

Lo, this is the first blinke, that ever I had of him.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Zaccheus.

Let rigid antiquaries such things write,
Who by a blinking lamp consume the night.
Cotton. An Epigram.

But chief he glory'd with licentious style
To lash the great, and monarchs to revile.
His figure such as might his soul proclaim;
One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

This floor let not the vulgar tread,
Who worship only what they dread.
Nor bigots who but one way see
Through blinkers of authority.—Green. The Grotto.

On being pressed by her friends, sometime after the restoration, to go to court; "By no means," said she, [the Countess of Pembroke] "unless I may be allowed to wear blinkers."—Gilpin. Tour to the Lakes, vol. ii. p. 154.

BLISS, v.
BLISS, n.
BLI'SSFULL.
BLI'SSFULLY.
BLI'SSFULNESS.
BLI'SSLESS.
BLI'SSED.
BLI'SSEDLY.
BLI'SSEDNESS.

See to BLESS. The verb is now written Bless: the n. Bliss is—blessedness. Generally applied to—

Excessive pleasure, happiness, prosperity, good fortune, well-being; to full and complete happiness.

That such a man schulde in helle be, he caredc in hys thogte,
The soule thorth Gode's grace out of helle he frogte,
And to ys body hym joyned, & gef hym Christendom,
War with, as he worthi was, to blesse of heuen he coin.
R. Gloucester, p. 71.

Thorgh tithing brouht bitide the Scottis wist of this
Ek scotte on his side mad therof joy and blis.
R. Brunne, p. 297.

Alle these thingis I schewide to gliun, for so it behoueth men trauelynge to resseyue syke men, and to haue myndo of the word of the Lord Ihesu, for he seide, it is more blisful to ghyue than to resseyue.—Wiclif. Dedis c. 20.

Thise glade folk to dinner ben ysette,
In joy and blisse at mete I let hem dwell,
A thousand fold wel more than I can tell.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5[illegible].

And sithen we know well, that mony a manne hath sought the fruict of blisfulnesse, not only with sufferyng of death, but eke with sufferyng of paynes and tourments: how might then this present life make men blisful, sens that thilke sele life ended, it ne maketh folk no wretches.
Id. Boecius, b. ii. p. 218.

But Christ answeared, Nale, blessed be they that heare the Woorde of God, and keepe the same.
Jewell. Replie to Hardinge, p. 690.

The nearenesse of mothers blonde should haue profited Christes mother nothinge at al, onlesse she had more blessedly carried Christe in her harte, then in her bodie.—Id. Ib.

For it ought not to seme vnto you a greate or grevous matter, though by aflictions and griefes that are but shorte and shall soone have an ende, you come to the blessednesse that neuer shall decaye.—Tdal. 1 Pet. c. 1.

But the death of christians is nothyng else but a slepe, from the whiche they shall awake ageyne at the commyng of Christ, to lyue a great deale more blissfully.
Id. Thess. c. 4.

For if it be so, that the heavens have at all time a measure of their wrathful harms, surely so many have come to my blessed lot, that the rest of the world hath too small a portion, to make with cause so wilful a lamentation.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Of him she thinks she cannot think too much;
This honey tasted still is ever sweet;
The pleasure of her ravish'd thought is such,
As almost here she with her bliss doth meet.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 30.

If Love's sweet music, and his blissful cheer,
Ever touched your hearts, or mollify'd your ear;
Tender the case, and evermore the wed
Shall praise your countenance both at board and bed.
Drayton. The Gul.

—— It had been
A fault of judgment in me, and a dulness
In my affections, not to weigh and thank
My better stars, that offer'd me the grace
Of so much blissfulness.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act i. sc. 3.

Sometimes, with Scipio, the [Science] collects her sail,
And seeks the blissful shore of rural ease.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. v.

Being absolute master of his own actions, onely both lawgiver and counsellour to himself, all-sufficient, and incapable of admitting any accession to his perfect blissfulness.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 8.

'Twas then two swains the Dorie reed essay'd
To sing the praises of a peerless maid.
On Arden's blissful plain her seat she chose,
And hence her rural name Ardenna rose.
Jago. Ardenna.

BLIST, v. What Spenser meant by this word is not evident. Certainly not wounded, from Cotgrave's Blesser, to wound; for not a wound was given. It is written either with the i or e, and may be merely the verb.

To blast, to strike suddenly, violently; to strike, to hurt; or beat about.

The villaine, leauing him vnto his mate
To be captiu'd, and handled as he list,
Himselfe addrest vnto this new debate,
And with his club him all about so blist,
That he which way to turne him scarcely wist:
* * * * * * * *
At last, the eaytiue after long discourse,
When all his strokes he saw avoided quite, &c.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Their shining shieldes about their wrestes they tye,
And burning blades about their heades do blesse,
The instruments of wrath and heavinesse.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 5.

They gave me no leisure, answered Sancho, to look to them so nearly, for scarce had I laid hand on my truncheon, when they blest my shoulders with their pines, in such sort as they wholly deprived me of my sight, and the force of my feet together.—Skelton. Don Quixote, b. iii. c. 1.

BLI'STER, v. } Dut. Bluyster; Sw. Blasa.
BLI'STER, n. } Perhaps no more than Blast, flatus, from Blæstan, to blow, to puff up; as—
A pustule or blain.

Mine opinion is yt he that will not fall among so manie stones, nor pricke him among so manie thornes, nor bluster him among so manie nettels, let him heare what I will sale, and do as he shall see.—Golden Boke, Let. 14.

In hote destillations the head is very hot in feilinge, the seume being in the mouth is thyn and warme, the tongue or chekes within blustered.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2.

Above all, it would be looked well unto, that they [grafles] be neat and bright, so as they shine againe; that no part of them be seene either scorched drie with the sunne, or cicatrized (as it were) and blistered.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 14.

At length, being arrived at Glasgow, the blisters brake out, of a blewish colour, so the physitians presently knew the disease to come by poyson; he [the King] was brought so low that nothing but death was expected; yet the strength of his youth at last did surmount the poison.
Knox. History of Reformation, p. 438.

Blistering, cupping, bleeding are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate; as all those inward applications which are so much in practise among us, are for the most part nothing else but expedients to make luxury consistent with health.—Spectator, No. 195.

I'd not complain tho' Phœbus burnt the lands,
And painful blisters swell'd my tender hands.
Grainger. Tibullus, b. ii. El. 3.

BLITHE. } See BLISS and LITHE. The BLI'THELY. } A. S. Blithe, be-lithe, be-lithe-
BLI'THSOME. } some, be-lissom, is formed of the BLI'THNESS. } prefix Be and lithe, thus—Blithe, blithesome, blissom.

Gentle, easy, pliant, flexible, easy to move or to be moved. And therefore—

Active, spritely, lively, joyous; having activity, liveliness, spriteliness, cheerfulness, gaiety: joy or gladness.

For habbe thou power y-now, thou mygt be glad & blithe.
R. Gloucester, p. 114.

William the Scottis kyng therfor was fulle blithe.
R. Brunne, p. 132.

He bare him so tille his barons, that nother gong no olde,
Wold vnto him bowe, ne blithelt of him holde.—Id. p. 9.

Thenne comen clerk to comfortye hure samen
And beden here be blythe. Piers Ploughman, p. 39.

The sothe is this, the cutte felle on the knight,
Of which ful blith and glad was every wight.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 860.

I shal right blithly, so God me saue
Holly with all the witte I haue
Here you as wel as I can. Id. The Dreame.

O soppe of sorowe sonken into care
O cattife Cresede now & euermare
Gon is thy ioy and al thy mirth in earth
Of all blithnesse now art thou blake and bare.
Id. The Complaint of Cresside.

And after, whan it was recorded
Unto the doughter, howe it stoode,
The yefte of all this worldes good
Ne should haue made hir halfe so blithe.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Would'st see blithe looks, fresh cheeks, beguile
Age, would'st see December smile?
Crashaw. In Praise of Lessius.

Droope not for that (man) but unpleate thy browes,
And blithly, so, fold envies up in pleats:
For, fro' thy makings, milke and melly flowes,
To feed the songster-swaines with art's soot-meats
Browne. An Eclogue.

The delightfulness and blithness of their [poets] compositions, invites most men to be frequently conversant with them, either in songs, or upon the stage, or in other poems.
Digby. On the Soul, c. 3.

Short are our joys, and neighbouring griefs disturb
Our pleasant hours! inclement winter dwells
Contiguous; forthwith frosty blasts deface
The blithsome year. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Then follows blithe, equipt with fork and rake,
In light array, the train of nymphs and swains.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

Now the hill—the hedge—is green,
Now the Warbler's throat's in tune!
Blithsome is the verdant scene,
Brighten'd by the beams of noon.—Cunningham. Noon.

BLIVE. See BELIVE.

BLOAT, v. } Skinner; from Dut. Blosen,
BLOAT, adj. } to blush. It is very probably BLO'ATEDNESS. } Bloated, bloat, bloat; i. e. blown, swelled, puffed out; meaning—
To blow out, swell, or puff out, be or become swollen or tumid.

Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

Groome. Who you? you a masque! why you stinke like so many bloat-herrings newly taken out of the chimney!
B. Jonson. The Masque of Augures.

Then damn not, but indulge his rude essays,
Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,
That he may get more bulk before he dies.
Dryden. Prologue to Circe.

Fast by her side a listless maiden pin'd,
With aching head, and squeamish heart-burnings;
Pale, bloated, cold, she seem'd to hate mankind,
Yet lov'd in secret, all forbidden things.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

Paleness, weak pulse, &c., bloatedness, scorbutical spots, are symptoms of weak fibres.—Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 2.

Smit by the rapture beaming eye,
Deep flushing through the midnight of their mind,
The sable bands combin'd,
Where fear's black banner bloats the troubled sky,
Appall'd retire. Beattie. Ode to Hope.

Ah! how, my friend, has foul gorg'd luxurie,
And bloated slumber on the slothful down,
From the dull world all manly virtue thrown,
And slav'd the age to custom's tyrannie.
Mickle. A Sonnet.

BLOBBER-LIPPED. See BLEB. Having blobbed, swelled lips. P. Plouhman writes Babber-lipped. See BEETLE.

A blobber-lipped shell, seemeth to be a kind of mussel.
Grew.

They make a wit of their insipid friend;
His blobber-lips and beetle-brows commend.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

BLOCK, v. } Block is, be-lock, block;
BLOCK, n. } from the A. S. Lycan, be-
BLOCKA'DE, v. } lycan; Dut. Be-luycken,
BLOCKA'DE, n. } claudere, concludere, occlu-
BLO'CKISH. } dere, obserare; to shut, to
BLO'CKISHLY. } close, to shut up, to lock,
BLO'CKISHNESS. } (Somner.) See LOCK.
BLO'CKHEAD. } A block of wood, or other
BLO'CKHEADED. } substance; i. e. a piece
BLO'CKHEADLY. } suited, fitted, to shut up, or
BLO'CKHEADISM. } close up, to include or exclude, to obstruct.

A block, as well as blockhead, is applied (met.) to any one who has the lumpishness, the heaviness, the dulness of a block; whose faculties seem blocked up; whose understanding is inaccessible.

To blockade; Fr. Bloquer. To shut in, or block up, to besiege, beset, or compass on all sides, (Cotgrave.)

This kynge the wether gan beholde,
And wist well, thei moten holde
Her cours endlonge the marche right,
And made vpon the darke night,
Of great shydes and of blockes,
Great fire ageln in the great rockes,
To shew vpon the billes high:
So that the flete of Grece it sigh.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

His brother the erle, [of Pembroke] when he should laye doune his hed on the blocke to suffer, said to Syr Jhon Conyers and Clappam, masters, let me dye for I am olde, but saue my brother, which is younge, lusty and hardye, mete and apte to serue the greatest prince of Christendo.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 8.

I would not call it heresye, if one woulde translate presbyteros a blocke: but I would say he were a blockhead. And as very a blockhead were he, that would translate presbyteros an elder, instead of a priest, for that this English woorde elder, signifyeth no more a priests, then this Greke woorde presbyteros signifieth an elder stick.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 425.

It shall suffice that the contentions passed in verse long sithens, between M. Churchyard and Camel, were by a blockheaded reader construed to be indeede a quarel between two neighbours, of whom one hauing a camel in keeping, and the other hauing the charge of the churchyard, it was supposed they had growen to debate, because the camel came into the churchyard.
Gascoigne. To the Youth of England.

And except he defende them by his aungels, in vayne gather they treasure, in vayne buylde they blokhouses and munitions.—Joye. The Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

I thincke not much that thinges are carpde
comde from a blockyshe pate.
But that those things are counted worse
which were commencde of late.
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

But what man can bee so blockishly ignorant euer to expect place or honour from a forraine king, hauing no other argument or perswasion then his owne disloyaltie.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 174.

The common sort of strangers, and the off-skowring of mariners, hearing of this rare miracle of nature [Mount Heela] by an inbred and naturall blockishnesse are carried to this imagination of a prison of soules.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 559.

On the side of which port, trending in forme of an halfe moone, stand fiue blockehouses or small forts, wherein is some very good artillery, and the forts are kept with about an hundred Janisaries.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 268.

After the sacking thereof they had in a greedie endevour burnt it quite, but that by blocking up the avenues they were driven backe, and so they made havocke of whatsoever could be found without the towne.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 66.

And beginning from the city of Cenereas unto the haven of Lecheum, they shut and blocked up all the ways from the one sea to the other, with mighty great pieces of timber across, and with a marvellous deep ditch.
North. Plutarch, p. 926.

How many princes of the blood (whereof some of them for age could hardly crawl towards the block,) with a world of others of all degrees (of whom our common chronicles have kept the account) did he [Henry VIII.] execute.
Ralegh. History of the World, Pref.

——— While passers by
Slightly look in your lovely face, where I
See beauteous heaven, whilst silly blockheads, they,
Like laden asses, plod upon their way,
And wonder not.
Drayton. Elegies. Of his Lady's not coming to London.

Like as temperance, a mediocrity between the blockish stupidity of the mind moved with no touch of pleasure, and an unbridled loosenesse whereby it is abandoned to all sensuality.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 57.

Only feare, which being no less void of audacity and boldnesse, than of reason; carrieth with it a certain blockishnesse or stupidity destitute of action.—Id. Ib. p. 214.

Am I twice sand blind? twice so near the blessing I would arrive at? and block-like never know it?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iv. sc. 1.

With moles the opening flood he would restrain,
Would block the port, and intercept the main.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ii.

He [Aristotle] tells us, that a statue lies hid in a block of marble, and that the art of the statuary only clears away the superfluous matter, and removes the rubbish. The figure is in the stone, the sculptor only finds it. What sculpture is to a block of marble, education is to an human soul.
Spectator, No. 215.

Last night arriv'd a mail from Lisbon, which gives a very pleasing account of the posture of affairs in that part of the world, the enemy having been necessitated wholly to abandon the blockade of Olivenza.—Tatler, No. 51.

Prompt at the call, around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal:
Thick and more thick the black blockade extends,
A hundred head of Aristotle's friends.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

A block-head, with melodious voice,
In boarding schools may have his choice;
And oft the dancing master's art
Climbs from the toe to touch the heart.
Swift. Cadenus & Vanessa.

Some fool, some mere elder brother, or some blockheadly hero,
Jove, I beseech thee, send her.
Dryden. Amphitryon, Act i. s. 2.

To these stones are added large blocks, which, when the whole shall be completed, will give it the appearance of an island just emerged from the ocean!
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vi. Let. 31.

He [Col. Briggs] mustered a party, which he thought sufficient, and went himself on the enterprise. How it was conducted, my authority does not inform us—whether he got together the navigation of the lake, and blockaded the place by sea; or whether, he landed, and carried on his approaches in form.—Gilpin. Tour to the Lakes.

One would think from the speech of this learned lord Mayor, that the Parisians, for this twelvemonth past, had been suffering the straits of some dreadful blockade.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

And yet, whatever the reader may think of himself, it is at least two to one but he is a greater blockhead than the most scribbling dunce he affects to despise.
Goldsmith. On Polite Learning, c. 10.

He may truly be said to have been alive, when animated by Atkinson and Steele, though now reduced to that state of Stockheadism, which is so conspicuous in his master

Smart. Notes to the Hilliad.

BLONKET. The Glossary says, "Blonket liveries are gray coats." They are blank, dismal Liveries.

Our blanket liueries been all too sad
For unlike same season, when all is velad
With pleasance.—Spenser. The Shepherd's Calendar. May.

BLOOD, v. } Blood, or as it was anciently written Blod. Blode is the past
BLOOD, n. } part. of the verb to bleed. See BLOODY, v. } the quotations from Boyle and BLOODY, adj. } Arbuthnot.
BLOODINESS. } Blood is applied, (met.) to—
BLOODILY. } Men of high spirit. See BLADE.
BLOODINESS. }

Blood, prefixed to other words, has given birth to expressions of very powerful import: (e. g.) blood-guilty, blood-thirsty.

To a noble lord he schulde come, & there all lord be,
And kynges come of hys blod, & that me schulde se.
R. Gloucester, p. 16.

He seiton ys blode sueord, and loude bygan to grede,
Lesse vese men, Englysse men, sleth anon yeh rede,
Vor Edmond vre kyng, to dethe ys ydo. Id. p. 304.

This lik thre barons, thergh descent of blode,
Haf right & reasons to the coroune fode gode.
R. Brunne, p. 249.

And a woumman hadde ben in the blodi flixe twelve yeer, and hadde resseyved many thingis of ful many leechis, and hadde spendid al hir good, and was nothing amendid but was rather the worse.—Wicclf. Mark, c. 5.

And there was a certayne woman, which was diseased of an issue of blod xii. yeares & had suffred many tormentes of many physicions, and had spent all yt she had, and felt none amendment at al, but waxed worse.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And sawe her blody woundes wide and sore;
And eke she criden bothe lesse and more,
Have mercie, Lord, upon us wommen alle.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1757.

But Dido quaking fierce with frantike moode and grisly hue,
With trembling spotted cheeks, her huge attempting to pursue,
Besides her selfe for rage, and towards death with visage wan,
Her eyes about she rolld, as red as blood they looked than.
Phaer. Virgile. Eneidos, b. iv.

Why these caterpillers and bloudily beasts had undermined hers, they complayned agayn to their lord cardinal
The Life of Doctour Barnes.

For I se he, tendring my most humble sute,
The right, and faith, my Hector's bloodlesse corps
Restored, for to be layd in sepulture,
And sent me to my kingdome home againe.
Surrey. Virgile. Eneis, b. ii.

——— The Gods he feard
The lawes of nature and of nations heard.
He cleard my sorrows, and for sums of gold
The bloodlesse carcass of my Hector sold.
Payd the woes a parent underwent,
And sent me back in safety from his tent.—Dryden. Ib.

Which pettie once obtained thei sent out curriers into every parte, amongst whome Homfrey Cheny pleying the parte of a good blood hounde, faloed the track of the flyer so exactly by the sent, that he overtooke and apprehended hymn not far from Copeyn.—Holl. hist. III. an. 3.

Now shall thou dye, quod he, and with that word
At the altar him trembling gan he draw,
Wallowing through the bloodshed of his son.
Surrey. Virgile. Eneis, b. ii.

I am no butcherly murderer, no bloodshedder of innocence.—Udal. John, c. 19.

Lest if come these pestilences, famine, derth, destructions, burnings, and blood shedings.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

But trembling Dido eagerly now bent
Upon her sterne determination,
Her bloodshed eyes roling within her head;
Her quivering cheekes, marked with deadly staine,
Both pale and wan to think on death to come.
Surrey. Virgile. Eneis, b. iv.

Yet she . . . . .
Seemes not to be with guiltlesse blood defilde,
But taketh glory in her cruelnesse.
Prayer then fairest, let none euer say,
That ye were blooded in a yeelded fray.—Spenser, Son. 20.

Shortly after Peisistratus having wounded himself, and bloodied all his body over, caused his men to carry him in his coach into the market place.—North. Plutarch, p. 80.

They who taught first to dismember, and cut in pieces for meat a tame goose, a house dove and a familiar pigeon, a dunghill cock, or domestical hen of the roust, and that not for to satisfie and remedy the necessity of hunger, as do those wicked and cruel cats, but only for pleasure and to feed a dainty tooth, surely have confirmed and strengthened all that bloodiness and savage cruelty which was in our nature, and made it altogether inflexible and pitiless without any compassion.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 139.

They will extort by torture what
Upon the rest, and hast brought?
Then, mercie God, amongst these men
No mercie is at all:
A bloodier law vode bloodierly
Was never heard or read.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 51.

And threw unmeasur'd cryes, about their wake,
So horrid that a bloodlesse feare surprade
My daunted spirits.—Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xi.

Ah! coward hand; affraid why shouldst thou be?
(Thou instrument of death, shame and despite)
Why schouldst thou feare, with sharp and trenchant knife
To cut the thread of this blood guiltie life?
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xii.

He call'd no lightning from the clouds, or from
His dared eyes to flash on Jesus's face,
And stamp upon his lips that flowing doom
Which due to their blood thirsty flattery was.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 11. s. 227.

——— A patriot's blood,
Well spent in such a strife, may earn indeed,
And for a time ensure, to his lov'd land
The sweets of liberty and equal laws.—Cowper. Task, b. v.

Meantime remember, lifeless drone!
I carry bucks and bloods alone.
Warton. The Phaeton & One Horse Chair.

Stay, bloody soldier, stay thy hand,
Nor take the shepherd's gentle breath:
Thy rage let innocence withstand;
Let music soothe the thirst of death.—Langhorne, Fab. 3.

When this great revolution was attempted in a more regular mode by government, it was opposed by jobs and sections of the people, when by popular efforts, it was repressed as rebellion by the hand of power, and bloody executions often bloodily retarded marked the whole of its progress through all its stages.—Burke. Speech at bristol.

Here may be seen in bloody pomp arrayed,
The pasteboard triumph and the cavalcade,
Processions form'd for piety and love,
A mistress or a saint in every grove.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

The division that nature herself makes of human blood, when being let out of the veins it is suffered to refrigerate and settle, is into a fluid or serous, and a consistent or fibrous part.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 611.

Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body and from which all the rest are derived: the red part differs from the serum; the serum, from the lymph, the lymph, from the nervous juice, and that, from the several other humours that are separated in the glands.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 4.

The public mischief was his private gain,
Children their slaughter'd parent mourn'd in vain,
A brother here his poison'd brother wept,
Some bloodless dy'd, and some by opium slept.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

BLOOM, v. } Goth. Bloma; A. S. Blosm, blosmian, Dut. Bloeme, Ger.
BLOOM, n. } Blume. Skinner thinks from
BLOOMING, n. } Blasen, tumescere; Wachter,
BLOOMY. } from Blasen, flare, spirare; quia spirat (sc. flos.) odorem. In P. Holland we find "the Bloome-smelling." Somner gives, "Blotsmian, florere, gemmare, germinare; to bud, to blossom, to bear flowers, to bloome, to flourish." See BLOW.

To bloom is to blow, to put forth, to throw forth flowers; to have the hue, the complexion, the sweetness, the freshness, of flowers just blown, or thrown forth: and thus—

To flourish; to be in full vigour; in the full vigour of health, beauty, reputation.

In that gere it was, the pape had grete despite
Though the Columpneis, continuallie of habite,
This were born in Rome alle the Columpneis,
That kynde bare the bloome, riche men & curteis.
R. Brunne, p. 322.

Well now I needs not feare, these posies here to praise,
Because I knew them every flower, and where they grew always:
And sure for my concert, even when they bloomed first Methought they smelt not much amisse: no not the very worst.—Gascoigne. Commendatory Verses.

The boltes that now are hoare,
both bud and bloume I save;
I ware a garland of the bryer
that puts me now in awe.
Turbervile. The Lover exhorteth the Lady, &c.

We found it all full of goodly trees, meadowes, fields full of wild corne and peason bloomed, as thick, as ranke, and as faire as any can be seene in Britaine.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 205.

Men have devised also to make the females fruitfull, by casting upon them the bloumes and downe that the male carieth, sexual otherwise by strewing the powder which he yeeldeth upon them.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 4.

Exceeding light it is, and apt to mount aloft with the smoake of the bloume smithie, very speedily, yea, and ready to fle out of the surface.—Id. b. xxxiv. c. 12.

The lively sap creeps up
Into the blooming thorn,
The flowers, which cold in prison kept,
Now laughs the frost to scorn.
R. Edwards. May. Eclog., vol. ii.

O nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still,
Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart dost fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May.
Milton, Son. 1.

Thus did his adversaries reap dishonour and reproach in their victory, while he received triumphant applauses in his overthrow, like some flowers which are sweeter in their fall than others in their bloom.—Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one;
At morn both flourish bright and gay;
Both fade at evening pale, and gone.
Prior. The Garland.

Swiftly it falls, and as it falls invades
The rising herb, or breaks the spreading blades.
Where infant flowers just reard their bloomy heads,
Crushed by its fury, sink into their beds.
Broome. Ecclesiasticus, c. 43.

Beyond the dim horizon far,
That bounds the mortal eye,
A better country blooms to view,
Beneath a brighter sky.—Logan. A Tale.

Some few there are of sordid mould,
Who barter youth and bloom for gold;
Careless with what or whom they mate,
Their ruling passion and for state.—Cotton. Marriage.

He ere one flowry season fades and dies,
Designs the bloomy wonders of the next.
Cowper, Task, b. vi.

But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown foot-way tread,
But all the bloomy flush of life is fled.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

BLORE. See BLARE. Dut. Blaeren; Ger. Blerren, to roar, to bellow. Applied—
To a roaring wind; a gale.

Heere flue at once round out with surging waters,
Stick fast in quicksands, sinking more and more,
There flue agayne the furious know batters,
Being hurried head long with the south west blore,
In thousand peeces gainst great Albion's shore.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 836.

——But when they joynd the dreadfull clamor rose
To such a height, as not the sea, when up, the north-spirit blows
Her raging bellows; bellows so, against the beaten shore
Nor such a rustling keeps a fire, driven with violent blore
Through woods that grow against a hill.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

He found him sitting in his cottage dore;
Where he had raisd to every ayry blore,
A front of great height.—Id. Homer. Odysses, b. xiv.

BLOSSOM, v. } See BLOOM. To bloom or blossom is to put forth, to BLOSSOM, n. } throw forth the flowers; to
BLOSSOMED. } have the hue, the com-
BLOSSOMY. } plexion, the sweetness, the freshness of flowers just thrown forth.

The I be hoor, I fare as doth a tre,
That blosmeth er the fruit ywoxen be,
The blosmy tre n is neither drie nor ded.
I feel me no wher hoor but on my hed.
Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9336.

——Some sonnen cleare
Lakes of love, that joy it was to here
In worshipping and praising of her make
And for the newe beautiful somers sake
Upon the braunches full of blosmes soft.
Id. The Leg. of Good Women. Prol.

Alone I went in my playing
The small foules song herkening
That pained hem full many a paire
To sing on bowes blosmed faire.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

The fruites were faire, the which did grow
Within thy garden planted,
The leaues were greue of euery bough,
And moysture nothing wanted;
Yet or the blossoms gan to fail,
The caterpillar wasted all
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer accusing his Loue, &c.

In my dreame me thought there stode a vyne before me, & in the vyne were three braunches, and it was as thoughe it budded, and her blossoms shotte forth: & the grapes thereof waxed rype.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 11.

That a rod cut from the tree, should blossome, it was strange: but that in one night it should beare buds, blossoms, fruit, and that both ripe and hard, it is highly miraculous.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Aaron's Censer and Rod.

You naked trees, whose shadie leaues are lost,
Wherein the birds were wont to build their bowre,
And now are cloath'd with mosse and hoarie frost,
Instead of blossoms, wherewith your buds did flowre,
I see your teares —Spenser. Shepherd's Calend. Januarie.

So that the blossom of May is generally better than the blossom of March: and yet the best blossom of March is better than the best blossom of May.
Bacon. Colours of Good and Evil.

The blossoms will fall of themselves, when the root that nourishes them is destroyed.—Spectator, No. 16.

Beside yon straggling fence that skirts the way,
With blossom'd furze, unprofitably gay,
There, in his noisy mansion, skill'd to rule,
The village master taught his little school.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

On him fair Science dawn'd in happier hour,
Awakening into bloom young Fancy's flower:
But soon adversity with freezing blast
The blossom wither'd and the dawn o'ercast.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

In such a palace poetry might place
The armory of winter, where his troops,
The gloomy clouds, find weapons; arrowy sleet,
Skin piercing volley, hosom bruising hail,
And snow that often blinds the traveller's course,
And wraps him in an unexpected tomb.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

BLOT, v. BLOT, n. BLO'TTING. } Be-blod, be-blot, is the regular past tense and past part. of Be-blidan, to cover; and has become our Eng. Blot.

A blot upon any thing extends just so far as that thing is covered, and no farther. See Tooke.

To blot out any thing written, is to cover it, and so make it illegible; to obliterate, to efface.

To blot (met.) is to cover (sc.) with disgrace; to fix some mark or stain of disgrace, of infamy.

Vpô this, armour and sworde was sought for this mayden, [of Orleans,] the whiche, as sayeth my sayd auctour, was foûdé myraculously; wherof the processe to me appereth so dark and fantastical, yt therewith me lyst not to blot my booke, but suffre it to passe by.—Fabyan. Hen. VI. an. 1423.

The briefe was writte and blotted all with gore,
And thus it sayde: Behold how stedfast loue,
Hath made me hardy (thankes haue he therefore)
To write these woroes thy doubtes for to remoue
With mine owne blood.—Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew.

Fie faythlesse woman ie,
wilt thou condemne kinde
Bicause of just report of yll, and blot of wauering minde —Turberville. To his Friend.

The which defacyng & blottyng of the beutye of that countrey, sometyme called the queene of ye earth and floure of the worlde, chaunced not of her awne self or her awne cause or desert, but the Italians her awne suckyng children opened the gappe and made the waye of her destruccion.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

But soon forgetting what she went about,
Poor queen, she fell to scribling to her lover:
Here she put in, and there she blotted out,
Her passion did so violently move her.
Drayton. The Baron's Wars, b. vi.

Thus having by the worthy manner of his death (being much more honourable by it, then blameable for any other of his actions) fully blotted out, whatever stain, his fault might seem to bring upon him.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 33.

The moon, in all her brother's beams array'd
Was blotted by the earth's approaching shade.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. i.

——— Sunk in the quenching gloom,
Magnificent and vast, are heaven and earth.
Order confounded lies; all beauty void;
Distinction lost; and gay variety
One universal blot. Thomson Winter.

Nor shall the muse, (should fate ordain her rhymes,
Fond, pleasing thought! to live in after times)
With such a trifler's name her pages blot.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

For should I be reduced to use the coarse and spungy sort, [of parchment] I must either not write at all, or whatever I compose, whether good or bad, must necessarily undergo one general blot!—Melmoth. Pliny, b. viii. Let. 15.

BLOTCH, v. BLOTCH, n. } "Blatchy," Mr. Grose says, "is in Glouc. black or dirty." Skinner writes it Bloach, and suggests that it may be from the A. S. Blodig, bloody, (qd.) a bloody tumour; or from Blase, a blase, which it resembles in its fiery heat and redness. Harmar writes Blatch: it is (perhaps) a Bloatch, from Bloat.

A pustule; a tumour; a corrupt tumour; a spot of corruption, or defilement.

For costly garments fashion'd with device
To form each choice part curious eyes to please,
The sick man's gown is only now in price,
To give their blotch'd and blister'd bodies ease.
Drayton. Moses. His Birth and Miracles, b. ii.

If they [the Egyptians] looke upon themselves, they see themselves lothsome with lice, painful and deformed with scabs, biles and blotches.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Plagues of Egypt.

If no man can like to be smutted and blotched in his face, let us learn much more to detest the spots and blots of the soul.—Harmar. Trans. of Beza's Sermons, p. 195.

The one might be employ'd in healing those blotches and tumours which break out in the body, while the other is sweetening the blood and rectifying the constitution.
Spectator, No. 16.

This o'er the threshold of their cottage hung,
No thieves break in; or, if they dare to steal,
Their feet in blotches, which admit no cure,
Burst loathsome out —Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

BLOW, v. BLO'WER. BLO'WING. } A. S. Blawan, flare; Ger. Blaen. To blow is—

To send forth or emit wind, air, breath; to puff or swell out with wind; to inflate.

To blow always implies an excess, beyond the natural action of the lungs; beyond the breath or effect of that action.

He smote his hors with spors, & fleih fro that rascaile,
And commandid his trompors, to blow vnto bataile.
R. Brunne, p. 117.

The sailes, as men sais, som were blak & blo
Som wer rede & grene, the wynde about tham bleuw.
Id. p. 174.

And reyn cam doun, and flodis camen, and wyndis bleuen: and thei hurliden agen that hous and it felde doun, and the fallyng doun therof was greet.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

And aboundaunce of rain descended, and the fluddes came, and the wyndes bleuw and bet vpon the house, and it fel, and great was the fall of it.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But Saul, ghit a blower of manasis and of betingis a-thens the disciplis of the Lord, cam to the prince of prestis and axide of hym lettris unto Damask to the synagogis.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 9.

And whanne the schip was rauyschid and myghte not enforse aghens the wynd, whanne the schip was ghouun to the blowyngis of the wynd we weren borun with cours into an yle that is clepid Claudia —Id. Ib. c. 27.

What shulde I tellen of the realtee
Of this mariage, or which cours goth beforn,
Who bloweth in a tromp or in an horn!
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5123.

Som sayd it was long on the fire-making;
Som sayd nay, it was long on the blowing.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,390.

The fourth sewende after this
Arcennium by name is hote,
With blowyng and with fires hot.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Doth not this preaty pageant of purgatory signifie and prognosticate what tragedie they will play hereafter, when the word of God shall blow and scatter from the face of the earth the darke clouds and mists of mens inuentions.
Frith. Workes, p. 61.

By meanes where of when men make anye shoutinge or hallowinge, or when anye trompet is blowen, the sound beateth and reboundeth in suche wise vppon the stones from one to another, that the echo is heard double and treble, and the noyse resoundeth farre louder and greater then it went forth.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 110.

The pope which in sinnyng agaynst God and to quench the truth of his holy spirite, is euer chief captaine and trompet blower, to set other a worke, and seketh only his own fredome, libertie, priuiledge, wealth, prosperitie, pleasure, pastime, honour, and glory.—Tyndal. Works, p. 25.

And euery nyght the Scottis made great fyres, and great brute with showttyng and blowyng of hornes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 18.

But prayer against his absolute decree
No more ava is then breath against the wind,
Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

——— Or if he might thence raise
At least distemper'd, discontented thoughts,
Vain hopes, vaine aimes, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engendring pride.
Id. Ib. b. iv.

Boy, blow the pipe until the bubble rise,
Then cast it off to float upon the skies;
Still swell its sides with breath—O beauteous frame!
It grows, it shines: be now the world thy name!
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

If I had found, on blowing up my fire this morning, that the flame was cold, and converted water into ice, I should have been much more astonished, than if I had detected a man reputed honest in the commission of an act of theft.
Beattie. Essays, pt. ii. c. 2.

BLOW, v. BLOW, n. BLOWTH, n. BLO'WERS. } "A. S. Blowan, to blow, to bloome, blossom, or bear flowers: to bud, to burgeon, to spring, to flourish," (Somner.) In Dut. Bloeyen; Ger. Bluen. See BLOOM and BLOSSOM, and also BLADE.

And bygynth to blowe, & suththe to bere frut.
R. Gloucester, p. 332.

This is a propre plante quath ich and pryveliche hit bleweth
And bryngeth forth fayre frut.—Piers Ploughman, p. 309.

——— Love is a gentle spirit
The wind that blows the April flowers not softer.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Progress, Act ii. sc. 1.

Iris there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purple scarf can shew. Milton. Comus.

As killing as the canker to the rose,—
Or frost to flow'rs, that their gay wardrobe wear,
When first the white thorn blows. Id. Lycidas.

The first age was by ancient historians called golden, ambition and covetousness being as then but green, and newly grown up, the seeds and effects whereof were as yet but potential, and in the blouth and bud.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 9. s. 3.

This princess having beheld the child's form and beauty, though but yet in the blouth, so pierced her compassion, as she did not only preserve it, and cause it to be fostered; but commanded that it should be esteemed as her own.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3. s. 3.

Although I have mention'd this mixture as the best for these flowers, yet you must not expect to blow your flowers every year equally large, in the same composition.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary. Caryophillus.

Tulips are generally divided into three classes, according to their seasons of flowering. But there is no occasion for making any more distinctions than two, viz. early and late blowers.

The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones.—Id. Ib.

See, Sylvia, see, this new blown rose,
The image of thy blush,
Mark how it smiles upon the bush,
And triumphs as it grows! Fenton. The Rose.

The gentleman of the house told me, if I delighted in flowers, it would be worth my while, for that he believed he could show me such a blow of tulips as was not to be matched in the whole country.—Tatler, No. 218.

No flow'rs embalm'd the air, but one white rose,
Which on the tenth of June by instinct blows,
By instinct blows at morn, and, when the shades
Of drizzly eve prevail, by instinct fades.
Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

BLOW, n. Dut. Blouwen. To strike. Like the word blast it is applied—

To that which strikes; as a sudden, impetuous, and injurious wind: a hit, a knock, a stroke.

The Macedon perceiuing hurt, gan gnash,
But yet his mynde he bent, in any wise
Him to forbear: set spurre unto his stede,
And turnde away, lest anger of his smarte
Should cause reuenger hand deale balefull blowes.
Vncertaine Auctors. Death of Zoroas.

Tempt not too far, the lothest man to fight,
When he is forste, the lustiest blowes dooth smight.
Gascoigne. A Remembraunce.

Our Lord Jesus might bothe haue destroyed the wicked bishop, and also haue letted this blowgeuer.
Udal. John, c. 18

Hee [Sir J. Gates] desired the people of their charitie to praie vnto God with him for remission of his sinnes, and then refusing the kerchiefe layde downe his head, which was stricken off at three blowes.
Stowe. Queen Mary, an. 1553

Neither is vice a spirit, that will be conjured down by a charm, or with a presto driven away; it is not an adversary, that can be knocked down at a blow, or dispatched with a stab.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

Nor can it be meant, that if a man should actually strike us on one cheek, we should immediately turn to him the other, and desire the blow to be repeated.
Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 6.

For where is the necessity of censuring works without genius which must shortly sink of themselves? what is it, but among our unnecessary blows against a victim already under the hands of justice?
Goldsmith. The Good Natur'd Man.

BLO'UGHTY. Perhaps from Bloated: his swelled; his puffy volume. See BLUFF.

One dash of a penne might thus justly answer the most part of his bloughtie volume.
Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergy, b. i. c. 2.

BLOWZE. } (Not in Skinner or Junius.)
BLO'WZED. } Ford and Burton write Blowze. Hall, Blowesse. Dut. Bloos-en, to blush, (qv.) It seems applied—

To one who has been well blown upon, who has been exposed to blowing winds; who has a coarse, ruddy bloom; a highly coloured blush.

I had rather marry a faire one, and put it to the hazard, than be troubled with a blowse; but doe thou as thou wilt, I speake onely of my selfe.—Burton. Anat. of Mel. p. 628.

Gos. Wench said ye? most mechanically! faugh!
Wench is your trull, your blowze, your dowdie.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act iii. sc. 1.

Sweet blowse, you are a beautious blossom sure.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iv. sc. 2.

Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,
To paint some blowsse with a borrowed grace.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 1.

I protest I don't like to see my daughters trudging up to their pew all blowzed and red with walking, and looking for all the world as if they had been winners at a smock race.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 10.

BLUB, v. See BLEB and BLUBBER. Ger. Bleen, tumescere, turgescere, to swell.

This vice and moe my life and me defaste,
My face was blowne and blub'd with dropsie wan,
And legs more like a monster than a man
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 112.

BLU'BBER, v. } Bleb, blob, blub, blubber,
BLU'BBER, s. } and blubber, have, no doubt,
BLU'BBERING, s. } the same origin; and Bleb, Skinner says, is from the Ger. Bleen, to swell, to puff up. A blubber is used by Chaucer as we now use a bleb. Blubber of a whale, see the quotation from Ray.

To swell out, to distend, to puff out, to inflate, (&c.) with weeping or tears.

Shaking his brande, before Cupide he come,
With reed visage, and grisly glowing eien,
And at his mouth a blubber stode of fome
Like to a bore whetting his tuskes kene.
Chaucer. The Test. of Cresside.

Nor must we be so grosse to imagine, that Homer made Achilles or Diomed blubber, or sob, &c. but in the very point and sting of their invented anger, shed a few violent and seething-over teares.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

So when her teares were stopt from eyther eye
Her singults, blubberings, seem'd to make them flye
Out at her oyster-mouth and nose-thrils wide.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

Straight again when he went from her [Cleopatra] she fell a weeping and blubbering, looking rufully on the matter, and still found the means that Antonius should oftentimes find her weeping.—North. Plutarch, p. 773.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat blubber, (which, by reflecting and redoubling the internal heat, and keeping off the external cold, doth the same thing to them that clothes do to us) is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea water.—Ray. On the Creation.

Dear Chloe, how blubber'd is that pretty face!
Thy cheek all on fire, and thy hair all uncurl'd!
Prythee quit this caprice; and (as old Falstaff says)
Let us ev'n talk a little like folks of this world.
Prior. Answer to Chloe Jealous.

The mauling hero, like a puling boy
Sobbed of his play thing, on the plains of Troy,
Had never blubber'd at Patroclus' tomb.
Churchill. The Times.

BLUE, adj. } Dut. Blauw, (Blouwen, to BLU'ELY. } blow;) Ger. Blau; Fr. Bleu;
BLU'ENESS. } Sp. Bloo; Sw. Blaa; A. S.
BLU'ISH. } Bleo, bleoh, bleow, bleowan,
BLU'ISHNESS. } flare, to blow. Skinner suggests, flavus, (i. e. yellow,) others the Gr. Πελος, niger, subniger. May not the blue, formerly bleue skye, be the bleo-en, or blown skye; the skye from which the clouds are blown, dispersed? Vossius derives cæruleus from cælum.

The word blue is of northern origin, and in these cloudy regions may have been applied to that (colour) which was produced or exposed to view by the blowing away, clearing away, dispersing of the clouds. Bleoh in A. S. Blee, in Eng. was also applied to the complexion, to the air of the countenance. A blue nose, blue cheeks; i. e. having a colour produced by the keen, blowing wind. In the same manner other colours, brown, yellow, &c. take their name from that by which they are produced. And see BLACK.

Among thes lettrede lordes, this Latyn ys to mene
That fur shal falle and for brenne, al to bleue ashes
The houses and the homes, of hem that taken gyftes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 44.

(Qd tho Creselde) wol ye done o thing
And ye therewith shal stinte all his disease
Haue here and here him this bleu ring
For there is nothing might him better plese
Saue I myselfe.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

And for they wolde haue the cytezyns knowen from other straũgers, therfore they ordeyned them hodys partyd of rede and bleue.—Fabyan. King John, an. 8.

Some sparkling fires on beau'ns bright visage shone,
His azure robe the orient blewness lost.
When she (whose wit and reason both were gone,)
Cal'd for a squire she lou'd and trusted most.
Fairfax. Tasso, b. vi. s. 90.

Her snowish necke with bleuish vaines
Stood bolt vpright vpon
Her portly shoulders.—Warner. Albion's England, b. iv.

A tell-tayle in theyre company
They never could endure,
And whoe so kept not secretly
Theyre mirth was punish'd sure;
It was a just and Christian deed,
To pinch such blacke and blew.
Corbet. The Faerye's Farewell.

First, a faire table she apposed, of which, the feet were grac't
With bleuish mettall, mixt with blacke: and on the same she put
A brasse fruit dish.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Men and women are there starched so blew, that if they once grow old, you would verily believe you saw winter walking up to the neck in a barrel of indigo: and therefore they rail at England for spending no more blewing.
Peltham. Character of the Low Countries, p. 54.

Why else this double object in our sight
Of light pursu'd in th' air and ore the ground
One way the self same hour? why in the east
Darkness ere dayes mid course, and morning light
More orient in yon western cloud that drawes
O'er the blew firmament a radiant white,
And slow descends, with something heav'nly fraught.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

——— Their colours' changeable variety,
First clear and white, then yellow, after red.
Then bluely pale. More. Infinity of Worlds, s. 94.

Nor shall I stay to examine, whether this blueness, that has been observed in ice be always an inherent or permanent colour, or sometimes one of those, that are styled emphatical.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 579.

Upon casting salt petre on a glowing coal, or upon the casting of a glowing coal into melted salt petre, the nitre will immediately take fire, and flash out into bluish and halituous flames.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 367.

[The] colour, though it did not quite lose its wonted blueishness, seemed yet to have received a great and somewhat odd alteration.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 575.

Remoter views insensibly decay,
And lights, and shadows sweetly drop away.
In bluish white the farthest mounts arise,
Steal from the eye, and melt into the skies.
Harte. An Essay on Painting.

Or have they deign'd to play,
Where Camus winds along his broider'd vale,
Feeding each blue bell pale, and daisie pied,
That fling their fragrance round his rushy side?
Mason. Musæus.

Then he perhaps, with moist and watery hand,
Shall fondly seem to press her shuddering cheek;
And with blue-swoln face before her stand,
And, shivering cold, these piteous accents speak.
Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands.

BLUFF. } This word is not found in our BLU'FFNESS. } older Lexicographers: nor is it common in composition. It is applied to—

A bluntness, coarseness, roughness of manner.

A bluff point is a blunt, obtuse point: exposed to wind. The manner of one blough or bloated, with his own importance. See BLOUGHTY.

We plied up till near seven o'clock, when the tide being done, we anchored in nineteen fathoms, under the same shore as before. The north west part of it, forming a bluff point, bore north, 20° east, two leagues distant.
Cook. Voyage, b. iv. c. 6

A remarkable bluffness of face, a loud voice, and a masculine air.—The World, No. 88.

Zounds! shall a pert or bluff important wight,
Whose brain is fancyless, whose blood is white;
A mumbling ape of taste: prescribe us laws
To try the poets, for no better cause
Than that he boasts per ann. ten thousand clear,
Yelps in the house, or barely sits a peer?
Armstrong. Taste.

BLU'NDER, v. } A. S. Blinnan, to blin, to BLU'NDER, s. } stop. Blon is the regular BLU'NDERER. } past tense; by adding ed, we BLU'NDERINGLY. } have blon-ed, blon'd, whence blonder, blunder. See BLENT.

To blunder, is to act like one, whose faculties cease, stop, halt, stumble: whose mind is blunt, dull, undistinguishing; who is apt to err, to mistake: also, to cause a blunder, error, or mistake; to mistake, to mislead.

We blundren ever, and poren in the fire,
And for all that we faille of our desire,
For ever we lacken our conclusion.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,138.

What blundrer is yonder that playeth diddil
He fyndeth false mesures out of his fond fiddil.
Skelton. The Crowne of Lawrell.

And where the sayd Erasmus, for otherwise then a great nũbre of ye scholastical serte, & other vnlettered expositours of these last blind seasons, hath written these his paraphrases in as ornate a stile as he hath the most parte of hys other volumes: is not (as some barbarous blounderers haue for safegard & defence of their owne poore honesties alleged) a thing vnseming for bookes of holy scripture matters.
Udal. The Preface unto the Reader.

To shuffle and digress so as by any means whatsoever to blunder an adversary.—Dillon. On the Resurrection, p. 63.

Like drunken sots about the street we roam:
Well knows the sot he has a certain home;
Yet knows not how to find th' uncertain place,
And blunders on, and staggers every pace.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

Dear Mat, hide the nakedness of thy country, and give the best turn thy fertile brain will furnish thee with to the blunders of thy countrymen, who are not much better politicians than the French are poets.
Bolingbroke. Letter to Prior.

I might here name another sort of judges, who will set themselves up to decide in favour of an author, or will pronounce him a mere blunderer, according to the company they have kept, and the judgment they have heard passed upon a book by others of their own stamp or size, though they have no knowledge or taste of the subject themselves.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 3.

You observe of the easterns, that they have done what they did in that kind rather ignorantly, supinely or blunderingly than out of a premeditated design to cover falsehood, and blind and mislead their votaries: but, that, however, the practice is manifestly evil and absurd; condemned by scripture, and the plainest sense and reason.
Lewis. Transl. of the Bible, Diss.

For my part, as I was never distinguished for address, and have often even blundered in making my bow, such bodings as these had liked totally to have repressed my ambition.
Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 1.

We often meet with persons of great sagacity in most of the ordinary affairs of life, and very capable of accurate reasoning, who yet, without any bad intention, commit blunders in regard to decorum.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 1.

BLU'NDERBUSS. In Dut. it is Donder, i. e. thunder-buss. For Buss, see ARQUEBUS. There does not appear much sense in supposing that blunderbuss is so called because it hits by blunder, not by skill in a direct aim:—blunder is perhaps formed from blon-ed, (see ante), and the name given from the blunt, form of the weapon compared with a musket. Used (met.) by Pope.

Jacob, the scourge of grammar, mark with awe,
Nor less revere him, blunderbuss of law.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iii.

With blunderbusses, taught to ride,
Like pocket-pistols, by his side,
In girdle stuck, he seemd to be
A little moving armory.—Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

BLUNT, v. }
BLUNT, adj. }
BLU'NTING, n. }
BLU'NTISHNESS. }
BLU'NTNESS. }
BLU'NTLY. }
Blunt is blon-ed, blond, blent or blunt: i. e. stopped in its decreasing progress towards a point or edge: the past part. of the A. S. Blinnan, to blin, to stop, (See Tooke.)
To deaden, to dull, to render obtuse; to have or cause to have no edge, point, sharpness; no polish, no keenness; no politeness. Hence the adj —
Unpolished, coarse, rude.
To blunt forth, (Sir T. More,) to utter bluntly, rudely.

Then cometh undevotion, thurgh which a man is so blont, as saith Seint Barnard, and hath swiche langour in his soule, that he may neyther rede ne singe in holy churche.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Howbeit if thou can find no proper meane to breake the tale, than excepte thy bare authoritie suffice to commaund silence, it were paradventure good rather to keepe a good silence thyself, than blunt forth rudely, and prevte them to anger, which shal happely therefore not let to take on, but speake much the more, lest they should seme to leue at thy commaundment.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 76.

But he that bluntly runnes on head,
And seeth not what the race shall be,
Is like to bring a fool to bed;
And thus ye get no more of me.
Incer. Auctors. The old Louer to a Young Gentlewoman.

The said cape is on the top of it blunt pointed, and also toward the sea it endeth in a point, wherefore wee named it The pointed Cape.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 204.

Not impediments or bluntings, but rather as whetstones, to set an edge on our desires after higher and more permanent beauty.—Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 73.

For in regard to the multitude of elements, and bluntness of angles, it is furthest off from direct and right lines.
Holland. Plutarch, p 368.

Frank. ——— Fathers are
Won by degrees, not bluntly as our masters
Or wronged friends are.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act i. sc 1.

The faculties of their soules, and the members of their bodies, that before were instruments of sin unto righteousness, are, it may be, blunted and become unserviceable, this maim of nature is far from regenerating grace, that doth not disable a man from the service of sin, but only sets him free from it.—Hopkins. Works, p 475.

Now push we on, disdain we now to fear,
A thousand wounds let every bosom bear,
Till the keen sword be blunt, he broke the pointed spear.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vi.

Soon as the father saw the rosy morn,
And the moon shining with a blunter horn,
He bid the nimble Hours without delay,
Bring forth the steeds.—Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

His [Noy] apprehension (as 'tis said) was quick and clear, his judgment methodical and solid, his memory strong, his curiosity deep and searching, his temper patient and cautious, all tempered with an honest bluntishness, far from court insinuation.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

For what the bark is to the growing tree,
To human mind, that, patience seems to be;
They hold the principles of growth together,
And blunt the force of accident, and weather.
Byrom. An Epistle to his Sister.

——— The shrewd
Contriver who first sweated at the forge,
And forc'd the blunt and yet unbloodied steel
To a keen edge, and made it bright for war.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

Why really, Academicus, the main
Of all that Rusticus, so bluntly plain,
Has here been saying, though it seem so hard,
Hints truth enough to put you on your guard
Byrom. A Dialogue.

Good Jarvis, make no apologies for this honest bluntness. Fidelity, like yours, is the best excuse for every freedom.
Goldsmith. Good Natur'd Man.

BLUR, v. }
BLUR, n. }
Blare, blore, and blurr, have probably the same origin. (See BLARE, and BLORE.) Blurr may perhaps derive its usage from the Dut. Blere, (see BLADDER,) a pustule, or blain, or spot. See BLURT.
To spot, to smear, to blot; to mark with any spot, smear, or stain; to disfigure, to deface.

He that doeth wicked'ye, although he professe God in his wordes, yet he doeth not (for all that) see God truely: for he is sene with moste purely scowred eies of faith, which are blurred with the darkness of vices.
Udal. Third Epistle of John.

I wyll help to rid her, from the oppression of her adversarie, not for any good mynde that I beare her, but leste she wil els at length come againe, and being so many times shaken of, wil with her raillyng sette a greate blurre on myne honeste and good name.—Id. Luke, c. 18.

Wonder they moreover at Sergius, who, by report, was three and twentie times wounded in sundry foughten fields, whose noble and glorious praises Catiline, the last of that race, blurred with the blots of everlasting dishonour.
Holland. Ammianus, p 265.

This all riseth from some unmortified lust or other, which either leaves a deep blur upon their evidences for heaven, or else raiseth a thick mist before their eyes that they cannot read them—Hopkins. Works, p. 756.

But concerning innate principles, I desire these men to say, whether they can or cannot, by education and custom, be blurr'd and blotted out.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 3. § 20.

We have not been drawn and trussed, in order that we may be filled, like stuffed birds in a museum, with chaff and rags and paltry blurred shreds of paper about the rights of man.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

BLURT, n. }
BLURT, v. }
Formed upon the past part. of Blurr; blurred, blurr'd, blurt.
To throw out a blurr; to throw out rudely, hastily, inconsiderately; without consideration or reflection.

That name to which every knee bows, both of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth, whether they be angels or devils, requires from you more respect and honour than to be idly blurted out with every rash and foolish expression.—Hopkins. Works, p 118.

Polyperchon who had the government of the king's person, meaning to give Cassander a slampant and blurt, sent letters patent unto the people at Athens, declaring how the young king did restore unto them their popular state again.
North. Plutarch, p. 633.

And yet the truth may lose its grace,
If blurted to a person's face;
Especially if what you speak
Should crimson o'er the glowing cheek.
Lloyd. The Nightingale, &c.

BLUSH, v. }
BLUSH, n. }
BLU'SHET. }
BLU'SHFUL. }
BLU'SHING. }
BLU'SHLESS. }
BLU'SHY. }
Dut. Blozen, blose, perhaps from Blæsen, flare, spirare; and so connected with blossom, bloom; (qqv.) applied, consequentially, to—
The colours of flowers blossoming or blooming.
To redden, to be or cause to be red, or rosy; blooming with redness or rosiness; to shame or ashame.
At the first blush; on the first complexion or appearance; at the first look.

Amphyon blusht as red
as any glowing flame:
And Orpheus durst not show his face
but hide his head for shame.
Turberville. The Louer that compared his Mistresse, &c.

Hearyng their inditement red how trayterously they had spoken against the kynges Majestie his crowne and dignitie, they neither blushed nor bashed.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 27.

This beast had 11. hornes like the lambe at a blush, but all counterfet & fals in very deede, for he spake as did the dragon, the hornes of Christ, are his high kingdom in the world.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Here's a light crimson, there a deeper one,
A maidens blush, here purples, there a white.
Then all commingled for our more delight.
Henry Peacham. Ellis, vol. ii.

If yet thine eyes (Great Henry) may endure
These tainted lines, drawn with a hand impure,
(Which fain would blush, but fear keeps blushes back,
And therefore suited in despairing black)
Let me for love's sake their acceptance crave.
Drayton. Rosamond to Henry II.

Hereupon the brigantine oppressed with famine, came to an anker at the mouth of the riuer of May, when at the fust blush we thought they had beene shippes come from France; which gaue vs occasion of great ioy.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 336.

In anger, the eyes wax red; and in blushing, not the eyes, but the ears, and the parts behind them.
Bacon. Natural History, § 872.

Chaste Lidia, the favours are so great
On me by you conferr'd, that to entreat
The least addition to them, in true sense
May argue me of blushless impudence.
Massinger. Duke of Florence, Act iv. sc. 1.

And now to kill hime, know you that affect to be the onely minions of Phebus, I am not so blushlessly ambitious as to hope to gaine any the least supreme eminencie amonge you.—Marston. Parasitaster. To my equall Reader.

Go to, little blushet, for this, anan,
You'le steale forth a laugh in the shade of your fan.
B. Jonson. Entertainments.

We find also, that blossoms of trees that are white, are commonly inodorate; as cherries, peares, plumbs: whereas those of apples, crabs, almonds, and peaches, are blushy, and smell sweet.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 507.

He that walketh uprightly is secure as to his honour and credit. He doth not blush at what he is doing, nor doth reproach himself for what he hath done.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Her name was Womanhood. On one side of her sat Shamefacedness, with blushes rising in her cheeks, and her eyes fixed upon the ground.—Tatler, No. 194.

While from his ardent look, the turning spring
Averts her blushful face; and earth and skies,
All smiling, to his hot dominion leaves
Thomson. Summer.

The pride of every grove I chose,
The violet sweet, and lily fair,
The dappled pink, and blushing rose,
To deck my charming Cloe's hair.—Prior. The Garland.

I envy not Arabia's odours, whilst that of this fresh blusher charms my sense; and I had my nose and eyes so ravishingly entertained here, that the bee extracts less sweetness out of flowers.—Boyle. Occas. Reflec. s. 5. Ref. 4.

——— He would stroke
The head of modest and ingenuous worth,
That blush'd at its own praise; and press the youth
Close to his side that pleas'd him.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

When now the setting sun more fiercely burn'd,
Blue vapours rose along the mazy rills,
And light's last blushes ting'd the distant hills
Lyttelton. Uncertainty, Ecl. i.

——— By yon gracious moon,
That rising saw the deed, and instant hid
Her blushing face in twilight's dusky veil,
The flight was parricide.—Mason. Caractacus

Vice now, secure, her blushless front shall raise,
And all her triumph be thro' Britain borne;
Whose worthless sons from guilt shall purchase praise,
Nor dread the hand that pointed them to scorn
Dodsley. On the Death of Mr. Pope.

BLU'STER, v. }
BLU'STER, n. }
BLU'STERER. }
BLU'STERING, n. }
BLU'STEROUS. }
A. S. Blæstan; to blow, to puff, to inflate.
To be roaring, noisy, boisterous, as a loud, hard blowing wind:—to be boisterous or turbulent; to talk loudly, to threaten loudly; to boast noisily.

As ther was weye [wight] non so wys, that the way thider couthe
Bote blostrede forth as bestes.—Piers Ploughman, p. 119.

And I sodainly astonyed, there entered into the place there I was lodged, a ladie semelich and moste goodly to my sight, that euer to forne appeared to any creature, and truly in the blustering of her looke, shee yaue gladnes and comforte, sodainly to all my wittes, and right so she doeth to euery wight, that commeth in her presence.
Chaucer. Test. of Love

He bloweth and blusereth out at last his abhominable blasphemy against the blessed sacramentes of Christ.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 374.

Home runneth he with open cry, that he cannot have justice in England, and you streight believe; and thereupon cometh these often blusters.
Burnet. Records, pt. ii. b. i. No. 39.

He is lyke to a prouydent and circumspect buylder, that buildeth his house not for a vaine braggue or shewe onelye, nor to serue hym for a short whyle and no longer: but for a firmenesse and stedfastenesse to stande and endure without perishynge agaynste any blousterous storme or tempeste to come.—Udal. Luke, c. 6.

Indeed it is the speech of the devil, but it is likewise in the hearts of men, when they storm and bluster at the difficulties of salvation and narrowness of the way, and straitness of the gate.—Hopkins. Works, p. 739.

Pilots and masters of ships have many devices and meanes to escape a blusterous and violent wind when it is aloft, but when the same is allaied and down, there is no man able to raise and set it up againe.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 576.

When I am angry, he cries prithee my dear be calm; when I chide one of my servants, prithee child, do not bluster.—Spectator, No. 211.

Your drums are the blusterers in conversation, that with a loud laugh, unnatural mirth, and a torrent of noise, domineer in public assemblies.—Tatler, No. 153.

As our heroes are generally lovers, their swelling and blustering upon the stage very much recommends them to the fair part of their audience.—Spectator, No. 11.

Your ministerial directors blustered like tragick tyrants here.—Burke. On American Taxation.

Well—now all ended—and my comrades gone,
Pray what becomes of mother's only son?
A hopeful trade!—in town I'll fix my station,
And try to make a bluster in the nation.
Cradock. Epilogue. She Stoops to Conquer.

BOAR. } A.S. Bar; Ger. Eber; Dut. Boa'rish. } Beer. Becanus-beer a baeren (to bear) dici ait, quod plurimos fœtus gignit. Wachter and Skinner agree that it may be from the Lat. Aper. But see Bear.

Boar, may be formed thus,—Bay-er, baer, bár, (pronounced baer,) boar; and the animal so named from its noise. See, also, Brute.

He vemde, [i. e. foamed] and grunte, and stond agen, as yt were a strong bor. R. Gloucester, p. 208.

And go houte hardiliche, to hares and to foxes
To bores and to bockes that breketh adoune menne hegges. Piers Ploughman, p. 129.

The bores heide that we bryng here,
Betokeneth a prince with owte pere,
Ys borne this day to bye vg dere.
A bore ys a soueraygne beste
And acceptable in euery feste
So mote thys lord be to moste & leste.
This bores heide we bryng wt song
In worchyp of hym that thus sprang
Of a virgine to reuresse all wrong.
A Christmas Caroll. Ritson on Warton.

The wylde bore out of the wod hath roted it up, and the beastes of the fielde haue deuoured it
Bible, 1551. Psalm 80.

Only let no man think it a light sin to keep open the passage, whereby the wild boar [of barbarism] enters the Lord's vineyard, and whereby God is deprived of the honour due to his name.—Spelman. English Works, p. 18.

Piscus found out the bore-speare and chasing staffe.
Holland. Pinie, b. viii. c. 56.

Reg. Wherefore to Douer?
Gon. Because I would not see thy cruell nailes
Pluck out his poore old eyes: nor thy fierce sister,
In his anointed flesh, sticke boarish phangs.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 7.

Often our seers and poets have confest,
That music's force can tame the furious beast.
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage, the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song. Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

Certainly you will laugh (and laugh you may) when I tell you, that your old acquaintance is turned sportsman, and has captured three noble boars. What! (you will say, with astonishment) Pliny! Even he.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 6.

BOARD, v. } Dut. Bord; Goth. Baurds, Board, n. } A. S. Brade. "Board, by metaBo'arder. } thesis of the letter r, is from Bo'arding. } Broad." Junius; and in this Tooke agrees. See Broad.

To board is to cover with boards, as a floor, a roof, &c. to go or get on board a ship, and consequentially to force a way on board; also to be or cause to be at the same board or table, and consequentially to take meals at the same board; to receive at the board, to supply the board with provisions.

Board, the noun, is the common word for table in our old writers. Bordles, i. e. boardless, is used by P. Ploughman; without a board or table.

Boarding-house; a house where a board or table is kept.

Board-wages; wages to supply the board or table.

Board is also applied to those who sit at the board or table: as the Board of Control, &c.

And tho he sey that thys Lof, thys traytor sat there,
He hupte hym vp fram the bord, in gret wraththe y nou,
And hente thys Lof by the top, fram the borde hym drou,
And defouled hym vnder hym myd honde and myd fote
R. Gloucester, p. 277.

I prave God if it were so I strangle of this brede
Ar putte a morsele in his mouth with that ilk worde,
Bifor the kyng & tham alle he strangled at the borde.
R. Brunne, p. 55.

Of gold ther is a borde, & tretels there bi [trestles]
Of siluer, other vesselle gilte fulle richeli
R. Brunne, p. 152.

And bad shippe hym a shup. of shides and of bordes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 177.

As a beggere bordles by myself upon the grounde.
Id. p. 237.

And sche seide, yhis lord, for whelpis eten of the crummes that fallen down fro the boord of her lordis.
Wiclif. Matt. c 15.

Now stood the lordes squier atte borde,
That carf his mete, and herde, word by word
Of all this thing, of all which I haue you sayd.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7524.

Whilom ther was dwelling in Oxenforde,
A rich gnof, that gestes heeld to borde,
And of his craft he was a carpenter
Id. The Millares Tale, v. 3188.

——— And of this couche
Within his chamber if I shall touche,
Of Hebenus that sleple tree
The bordes all aboute bee. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

To this thei saiden all yea
Anone as thei weren at the sea,
And all, as who saith, at one woorde
Thei gone within shippes boorde. Id. Fb.

But as the mouse, once caught in crafty trap
May bounce and beate against the boarden wall,
Till shee haue brought hir head in such mishap,
That doune to death her fainting lymbes must fall.
Gascoigne. Adventures of Jeronimi.

And the sayde Barlo set me to boarde in a skynners house that dwelled besyde the house of the Englishe nacion.
Hall. Hen. VII.

Sir Thomas Knevet whiche was ready to haue boarded the greate ship of Depe, saw that the soueraigne had passed the carick.—Id. Hen. VIII. an 4

Which the Turkes perceiuing, made the more haste to come aboard the shippe: which ere they could doe, many a Turke bought it deerely with the losse of their liues, yet was all in vaine, and boarded they were, where they found so hote a skirmish, that it had beene better they had not medled with the feast.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 131.

He aunswered, that when he beheld the boorde whereupon Darius was wont to eate employed to so base an vse, he could not beholde it withoute great greife.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 109.

But [we] received very heavie newes of the death of John Drake, our captain's brother, and another young man called Richard Allen, which were both slaine at one time, as they attempted the boording of a frigate within two dayes after our departing from them.—Sir F. Drake Revived, p. 45.

Where I, both weeds and wealthy couerings keepe,
For all my guests, nor shall fame euer say,
The deare sonne of the man Vlysses, lay
All night a ship boord here.
Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. iii.

The English man defended himself with incredible bravery, and beat off the French, after having been boarded three or four times.—Spectator, No. 350.

The two captains, with some others, took their boat and row'd to land, and by their courteous carriage, soon prevail'd on the native to return with them on board, where they cloathed him, and gave him victuals, wine, and several little toys or utensils, which won the simple creature's heart.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

May every god his friendly aid afford,
Pan guard thy flock, and Ceres bless thy board.
Prior. To Mrs. E. Singer.

The wickedest of all men living, the abandon'd Decius, had opportunities of frequently seeing and entertaining me at a house where mix'd company boarded, and where he placed himself for the base intention which he has since brought to pass.—Tatler, No. 45.

When war was declared against the Dutch, he [Sheffield] went, at seventeen, on board the ship in which prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle sailed, with the command of the fleet.—Johnson. Life of Sheffield.

They do not appear (if we may judge from their letters to the board) to have possessed that peculiar sort of talents and qualifications, that facility and address in conveying religious truths, that unconquerable activity, patience, and perseverance, which the instruction of dull and uncultivated minds requires.—Porteus. Civilization of Negroe Slaves.

Nor does the boarded hovel better guard
The well-stack'd pile of riven logs and roots
From its pernicious force. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

The ancients talk so frequently of a fixed, stated portion of provisions assigned to each slave, that we are naturally led to conclude, that slaves lived almost all single, and received that portion as a kind of board-wages.
Hume, Ess. 2. pt. ii.

BOARD. See Aboard and Bourd.

BOAST, v. } The origin of this very com-
Boast, n. } mon word was unknown to our Bo'aster. } Etymologists. It is, probably,
Bo'astfull. } from the Fr. Bosse; which Cot-
Bo'asting. } grave explains swollen, risen,
Boa'stingly. } puffed up. Eng. Boss; (q. v.)
Bo'astive. } and Dut. Bosse, umbo, tumulus;
Bo'astless. } as the boss of a shield. And Skinner observes that umbo and tumulus are merely things, (quasi extumescentes et inflatæ;) as it were swelling or tumid, and puffed out.

To boast then will mean; to puff out, to swell, to raise or exalt, to enlarge or magnify, to exaggerate, to display ostentatiously.

Vor an batayle at Etendone hil smyte myd her oet,
The kyng Bernulf was there bynethe & bynome al ys bost
And ys fole much aslawe, & he flen wyth muche wo.
R. Gloucester, p. 258.

Boste & deignouse pride & ille aviseinent
Mishapnes oftentide, and dos many be schent.
R. Brunne, p. 289.

Boastyng and braggynge, wyt meny bolde othes
Avauntyng up on my veine glorie.—Piers Ploughman, p. 88.

And buxūnesse and bost, aren ever more at wratthe
And aythers hateth other and mowen nat dwelle to gederes
Id p. 2[illegible]3

Where se ye one, that he hath lafte his lefe
Or been vnkind, or done her some mischefe
Or pilled her, or boasted of his dede
Ye may as well it seen, as ye may rede.
Chaucer. Of Dido Queene of Carthage.

He might for byrth haue boasted noble race
Yet were his manners meke and always milde,
Who gaue a gesse by gazing on his face,
And iudgde thereby, might quickly be beguilde.
Gascoigne. Epitaph upon Capt. Bourcher.

Though Jierome wer a great prater & boaster of virginitie, yet was he no virgine, but may be suspected of yl rule wᵗ ynge womē, for his to moche familiaritie wᵗ thē as apeareth by his epistles.—Bale. Apology, p. 13 Pref

The Frenche men be covetous.
When they sit at a taverne
There they be stout and stern
Boastful wordes for to crack.
Richard Cœur de Lion. Ellis. Rom

For yᵗ ye ought to saye: if the Lord wyl, and we lyue, let vs do this or that. But now ye reioyce in your boastynges, all such reioysyng is euill.—Bible, 1551. St. Judas.

For there are perilous times at hande (saith he) by reason of some, that vnder pretence of godlyness, turne true godlyness vp side downe and so prate boastingly of themselues as thoughe the Christian religion consisted in wordes, and not rather in pureness of herte.
Udal. 2 Tim. Argument.

His auncestours renowned in war and in peace, and [Classicus] himselfe boasted to be descended of enimies to the people of Rome, rather then friends.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 166.

The prince [the Black Prince] inclyned himselfe to the yerthe, honouryng the kyng his father: this night they thanked God for their good aduenture, and made no boast therof, for the kynge wolde that no manne ahuld be proude, or make boost, but euery man humbly to thanke God.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 131.

Sam. Cam'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To discant on my strength, and give thy verdict?
Come nearer, part not hence so slight inform'd.
Milton. Samson Agonistes

Is it not then high time that the laws should provide by the most prudent and effectual means to curb these bold and insolent defiers of heaven, who take a pride in being monsters, and boast themselves in the follies and deformities of humane nature?—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 3.

But did this boaster threaten, did he pray,
Or by his own example urge their stay?
None, none of these, but ran himselfe away.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii

But to the generous still-improving mind,
That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,
Diffusing kind beneficence around,
Boastless, as now descends the silent dew.
Thomson. Summer

Who trust alone in beauty's feeble ray,
Boast but the worth Bassora's pearls display.
Drawn from the deep we own their surface bright,
But dark within, they drink no lustrous light
Such are the maids, and such the charms they boast,
By sense unaided or to virtue lost.—Collins. Selim, Ecl. i.

Reason and morals? and where live they most?
In Christian comfort, or in stoic boast?
Byron. Enthusiasm.

Honest, though poor, (and who shall dare
To disappoint my boasting there!)
Hardy and resolute, though weak,
The dictates of my heart to speak,
Willing I bend at satire's throne.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iii.

What art thou, grandeur! with thy flatt'ring train,
Of pompous lies, and boastful promises!
Where are they now, and what's their mighty sum?
All, all are vanish'd! Jago. Edge-hill, b. ii.

But the right honourable gentleman has chosen to come forward with an uncalled-for declaration; he boastingly tells you, that he has seen, read, digested, compared every thing; and that if he has sinned, he has sinned with his eyes broad open.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

——— The scanty stream
Slow loitering in its channel, seems to vie
With Vaga's depth; but should the sedgy power,
Vain-glorious, empty his penurious urn
O'er the rough rock, how must his fellow stream,
Deride the tinklings of the boastless rill!
Shenstone. Economy.

BOAT. } A. S. Bate, Bat; Dut. Boat;
Bo'ATMAN. } Ger. Bot; Sw. Barat; Fr. Bateau; It. Batello. Wachter says,
Bo'ATSWAIN. } from Ger. Batten, (to beat,) trudere, impellere, to thrust, to dash or drive along. Bat dicitur de Cymba, quia Cymba est alveus trusatilis, qui remis impellitur.

A vessel forced along the water by the beating of the oars.

Boatswain; A. S. Bat-swan; Ger. Batswein; from bat or boat, and swein, a servant; formerly applied to—

The rower or manager of the oars.

Botes he toke & barges, the sides togidere knytte,
Ouer the water that lage [large] is fro bank to bank rauht itte. R. Brunne, p. 241.

——— So fareth hit by the ryghtful
Thauh he falle he falleth nat, bote as he full in a bote
That ay is saf and sounde, that suteth with ynne the borde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 168.

Therfor whanne thei hadden rowid as fyve and twenty furlongis, or thritti, thei seen Jhesus walkinge on the see, and to be nygh the boot: and thei dredden.
Wiclif. John, c. 6.

The wisest wny, thy boate in wane and wind to giue,
Is neither still the trade of middle streame to try,
Ne (warely shunning wrecke by wether) aye to nie,
To presse upon perilious shore.
Uncertaine Auctors. Of the Golden Meane.

Whom as the boat-man first, with eyes vpcast, in comming spied
To walke in silent woods, and how to shore their feete they plied;
He thus began to chafe, and towards them full lowd he cried. Phaer. Virgile. Æneidos, b. vi.

Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw·
Whom from the shore, the surly boatman saw:
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood;
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood.
Then thus he call'd aloud, inflam'd with wrath.
Dryden. Ib.

You shall for the companies profite, and for the good husbanding of the victuals aboord, call upon the boatswaine and other of the company to vse such hookes and other engines as they haue aboord to take fish with.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 273.

But you may intermeddle in the offices of maiors, baylifes, justices of peace, & indeede haue an oare in euery mans boate, and yet nothing hinder your pastoral office.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 760.

The swan by his great Maker taught this good,
T' avoid the fury of the falling flood,
His boat-like breast, his wings rais'd for his sail.
And oar like feet, him nothing to avail
Against the rain. Drayton. Noah's Flood.

But th' heedful boateman strongly forth did stretch
His brawnie armes, and all his body straine,
That th' vtmost sandy beach they shortly fetch,
Whiles the drad danger does behind remaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

How would the wits of King Charles's time have laughed to have seen Nicolini exposed to a tempest in robes of ermin, and sailing in an open boat upon a sea of paste-board!
Spectator, No. 5.

——— Full bowls of milk are hung around,
From vessels boat-wise form'd, they pour a flood
Of milk yet smoking, mix'd with sable blood.
Lewis. Thebaid of Statius, b. vi.

You may frequently see one of the large islands sailing along with a lesser joined to it, like a ship with its long boat: or, perhaps, seeming to strive which shall out-swim the other.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. viii. Let. 20.

Amid this fearful trance, a thund'ring sound
He hears, and thrice the hollow decks rebound;
Upstarting from his couch on deck he sprung,
Thrice with shrill note the boatswain's whistle rung:
All hands unmoor! Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

BOA'TION. Lat. Boare, boatum; from Bovis, the ancient Latins formed bovare; whence boare. Boatus est Βοη του Βοος.

The roar or bellow of an ox, anv roaring or bellowing.

For who but an intelligent being, what less than an omnipotent, and infinitely wise God could contrive, and make such a fine body, such a medium, so susceptible of every impression, that the sense of hearing hath occasion for, to empower all animals to express their sense and meaning to others; to make known their fears, their wants, their pains and sorrows in melancholic tones; their joys and pleasures in more harmonious notes; to send their mind at great distances, in a short time, in loud boations; or to express their thoughts near at hand with a gentle voice, or in secret whispers!—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3.

BOB, v. } "That I bobb'd from him;
Bob, n. } that I fool'd him out of. A bob
Bo'BCHERRY. } formerly signified a mock, a jeer.
Bo'BTAIL. } Cole renders it in his Dictionary,
Bo'BWIG. } 1679, by sanna, and bobb'd by illusus. To bob for fish is likewise a technical term among those who delight in angling." So far Mr. Steevens. The Etymologists afford no insight into the origin of this word. It seems to be usually applied—

To some short, jerking action: as to bob in the face, to bob a curtesy; to play at bob-cherry; to bob for grig, when some part of the tackle bobs into the water;—

To something short, cropt, docked; as a bob-tail, a bob-wig, ear-bobs.

Whether to bob, to cheat, is so applied from some short, sharp, sudden act or trick, like those of a juggler, admits only of conjecture.

At length to marriage flat he fell,
when wedding day was doon
To play her prancks, and bob the foole
the shrowish wife begon.
Turberville. A Prette Epigram.

If any manne hapened by longe sitting to slepe, or by any other countenance, to shewe hym-selfe to be wery, he was sodeynely bobbed on the face by the seruantes of Nero for that purpose attendynge.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 7.

For Lucius thinking to become a foule,
Became a fool, yea more than that, an asse,
A bobbing blocke, a beating stocke, an owle
Well woondred at in place where he did passe.
Gascoigne. David to Bersabe.

He maketh no nobbes,
But with his dialogues
To prove our prelates gods
And laymen very lobbs
Beating them with bobbes.
Skelton. The Image of Ypocrysye.

When fencers fees are like to apes rewards
A piece of breade, and therewithal a bobbe.
Gascoigne. The Steel Glas

Dor. ——— Your old love—disclaims ye
And utterly abjures your memory
Till time has manag'd ye—will ye command me?
Thom. What, bobb'd on all sides.
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 1.

Tho. ——— I will have her.—
I am resolv'd that, if she live above ground,
I'le not be bob'd in th' nose by every bob-tail.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 2.

Now wight that acts on stage of Bull,
In skullers' bark does lie at Hull,
Which he for pennies two does rig,
All day on Thames to bob for grig.
Davenant. The long Vacation in London.

So long as they are secure of any feare and daunger, they go directly streight, letting down their horns at length along their sides, which naturally by themselves have a round point or bob at the end.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 30.

——— Auaunt you
Curres, be thy mouth or blacke or white:
Or bobtaile tight, or troudle taile,
Tom will make him weepe and waile.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 6.

His angle-rod made of a sturdy oak,
His line a cable, which in storms ne'er broke,
His hook he baited with a dragon's tail,
And sat upon a rock, and bobb'd for whale.
King. Upon a Giant's angling.

We shall only instance one of the most useful and instructive, bob-cherry, which teaches at once two noble virtues, patience and constancy, the first in adhering to the pursuit of one end, the latter in bearing a disappointment
Pope. Martinus Scriblerus.

Upon our way from hence we saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob-wig and a black silken bag tied to it.—Spectator, No. 129.

When Tom to Cambridge first was sent,
A plain brown bob he wore;
Read much, and look'd as though he meant
To be a fop no more.—Shenstone. Extent of Cookery.

BOBA'NCE. Fr. Bobancer, to boast. Bobance, or Bombance; which Menage forms from Pompa: perhaps from Bombasin. See BOMBAST.

———Of my purveance
I spake to him, and said him how that he,
If I were widewe, shulde wedden me.
For certainly, I say for no bobance,
Yet was I never without purveance
Of mariage.—Chaucer. Wif of Bathes Prol. v. 26,149.

Now lete we be the werre of Fraunce,
And the Soudan with hys bobaunce,
And turne ayen to fayre Floraunce,
How that sche kam
For to dwelle, throughs Goddes grace and chaunce,
In Jerusalem.
Octouian Imperator, v. 1550. Weber, vol iii.

Yèelle ou for sothe, for al huere bobaunce,
Ne for the auowerie of the kyng of Fraunce,
Tuenti score and fyue haden ther mischaunce
By day and eke by nyht.
Ancient Songs. Ritson, p. 9. A Ballad against the French

BO'BBIN. Fr. "Bobine, a quil for a spinning wheel; also a skane of gold or silver thread," (Cotgrave.) Perhaps, Bombine. See Menage in v. BOBINE.

And some of them turned in manner of spindles or bobins, as folk spin or twist therewith, yet drawing a troubled and unequall course, and not able to direct and compose the motion straight.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 994.

I'm sure I always lov'd cousin Con's hazle eyes, and her pretty long fingers, that she twists this way and that, over the hazpicolls, like a parcel of bobbins.
Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer.

BODE, v. } Tooke considers the primitive
Bo'DEN, v. } word to be the A. S. Boda, the
Bode, n. } first outward extremity or border
Bo'DEWORD. } of any thing. A. S. Bodian;
Bo'DEMENT. } Ger. Bieten, to make known, to Bo'DING. } manifest, to announce. The bode came to the King (in R. Brunne), is the news came; it was made known.

To abode, to bode, and to forbode, are used in the same manner; viz.

To see or discern, to shew or exhibit some external, superficial appearance, sign or token; from which we infer good or ill.

Thulke sterre ys selde ys eye, bote yt beddynge be.
R. Gloucester, p. 416

In the ger, that he was ynome, men yney ywys
The tayiede stirre, that gret bodynge ys.—Id. p. 428.

The bode com to the kyng, that soiorned ther in,
That the kyng Suane the toun wild he wyn.
R. Brunne, p. 43.

On the Wissonday at Burgh in Lyndesen
Com bode to the kyng, & thus gan thei sein,
That the duke Siwarde had taken in his baile
Machog, pe Scottes kyng. Id. p. 61.

———Whan bodword com tham tille
To London for to com, whan parlement shuld be,
Als custom was wonne, & tak ther his liuere.—Id. p. 146.

His spere was of fyn cypres,
That bodeth werre, and nothing pees
The hed ful sharpe yground.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,810.

Alexander, who beinge desirous to vndoe the fatal knotte at Gordium a towne in Phrygia, hearinge that the empiere of the worlde was boded by an olde prophecie to him that coulde vnknitte it, not findinge out the endes of the stringes, not perceiuinge by what meanes he coulde doo it, drewe foorth his swoorde, and hewed it in pieces, supplyinge wante of skil, with wilful violence.—Hardinge. Jewel, p. 81.

One word presenteth unto them safetie, victorie, life and libertie. the other, I dread to boden what it may import.
Holland. Livie, p. 270.

Troy. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girle,
Makes all these bodements.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 3.

The strange overflowing of vice and wickedness in our land, and the prodigious increase and impudence of infidelity and impiety, hath of late years boaded very ill to us, and brought terrible judgments upon this city and nation.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 20.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
And with loud shrieks and clamours rent the skies,
Nor knew what signify'd the boding sign,
But found the powers displeas'd, and fear'd the wrath divine.—Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Jarvis. One who's voice is a passing bell.
Honeywood. Well, well, go, do.
Jarvis. A raven that bodes nothing but mischief.
Goldsmith. Good Natur'd Man.

So sad Apollo with a boding sigh,
Told his fond child the danger of the sky:
Careful the parent, such advice to give;
Could fate be chang'd, or headstrong youth believe!
Harte. Thebaid of Statius, b. vi.

BODGE, v. } "I find," says Mr. Malone,
BODGE, n. } "bodgery, used by Nash in his Apologie of Pierce Penniless, 1593, from botchery." And Mr. Steevens thinks that "we bodg'd," only means "we boggled, made bad or bungling work of our attempt to rally. A low unskilful tailor is often called a botcher."

To bodge and to botch seem nearly the same word differently written and pronounced. See BOGGLE.

Mr. Nares revives the conjecture of Johnson that we should read "budge," but the context is decidedly against it.

With this we charg'd againe: but out alas,
We bodg'd againe, as I haue seene a swan
With bootlesse labour swimme against the tyde,
And spend her strength with ouer-matching waues.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

The poore artificer and householder, which tilleth no land, but laboring all the weeke to bute a bushell or two of graine on the market daie, can there haue none for his monie, because badgers, bolers, and common carriers of corne doo onlie bute vp all, but giue aboue the price, to be serued of great quantities.—Harrison. Desc. of England, c. 18.

They wage one poore man or other to become a badger, and thetto get him a licence upon some few forged surmise.
Id. Ib.

Because it followeth, in the same place, nor will it be a badge in this, I cannot omit the consequence of this disheartening lesche.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 437.

BODICE. Something worn round the body.

And first she wet her comely cheiks,
And then her boddice green,
Her silken cordes of twirtle twist,
Well plett with silver sheen.
Hardycanute. Percy. Reliques.

But I who live, and have liv'd twentie yeare
Where I may handle silke, as free, and neere,
As any mercer; or the whale-bone man
That quints those bodies I have leave to span.
B. Jonson. An Elegie.

Her bodice half way she unlac'd;
About his arms she sisly cast
The silken bond, and held him fast
Prior. Love Disarmed.

When he [Pope] rose, he was invested in bodice made of stiff canvass, being scarcely able to hold himself erect, till they were laced.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

BODKIN. Skinner suggests that it may be a bodkin, a diminutive of body; on account of its thinness, its slenderness.

But on a time Brutus and Cassius,
That ever had of his high estat envie,
Full prively had made conspiracie
Agains this Julius in soth wise:
And cast the place, in which he shulde die
With bodekins, as I shal you devise
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,625.

At last with bodkins dubd and doust to death;
And all his [Cæsar's] glorie banisht with his breath
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

He sitteth in iudgement almost euery day. They vse no speech, but giue vp their supplications written in the leaues of a tree with the point of an yron bigger then a bodkin.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 260.

In the beginning of his empire his manner was to retire himselfe daily into a secret place for one hour, and there doe nothing else but catch flies, and with the sharp point of a bodkin or writing steel pricke thé through: in so much, as whé one enquired, whether any bodie were with Cæsar within? Vibius Crispus made answer not impertinently, no, not so much as a flie.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 261.

If I had stuck him with my bodkin, and behaved myself like a man, since he won't treat me like a woman, I had, I think, served him right.—Spectator, No. 508.

BODY, v. }
BODY, n. }
BO'DIED. }
BO'DILESS. }
BO'DILY, adj. }
BO'DILY, ad. }
BO'DY-GUARD. }

A word of very various applications. Skinner thinks that, when used as it is in Lincolnshire for the lower part, inferiori corporis parte, it is connected with the Ger. Boden, which, according to Wachter, means fundus, (i. e. bottom,) et quicquid natura pedibus nostris calcandum subjecit. Fr. Beeld, the Dut. have formed Boude, (see BOLD,) and from Bild-en, the Ger. may have formed Bod-en. Body, may be the build; the form, constructure, the consolidated mass.

It is applied to the body—of a man or other animal, as distinguished from the members; of a tree, as distinguished from the branches; of an army, as distinguished from van-guard, rear-guard, &c.; to material things, as distinguished from immaterial; to the main bulk, (the build,) the greater proportion, the united or collected mass.

To body, or to embody, is to put into bodily, corporeal, material or substantial shape or form.

To the eldest he seide first, "dogter ich bidde the
Sey me al clene thin herte, how muche thou louest me,
Min heye Godes," quoth this mayde, "to witnesse I take echon
That y loue more in myn herte thi leue bodi one
Than myn soule and my lif, that in my bodi ys."
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

Therfore I sey to you that ye be not besy to youre lyf, what ye schul ete, neither to your bodi, with what ye schul be clothid, whether lyf is not more than mete and the body more than the cloth?—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 6.

Therfore I say vnto you: be not carefull for your lyfe, what ye shall eate or what ye shall drinke, nor yet for your body, what ye shal put on. Is not the life more worthe then meate, and the body more of value thé raiment.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

He for despit, and for his tyrannie,
To don the ded bodies a vilanie,
Of alle our lordes, which that ben yslawe,
Hath alle the bodies on a hepe y drawe,
And will not suffren hem by non assent,
Neyther to ben yberied, ne yburnt,
But maketh houndes ete hem in dispite.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 944.

Bodily manslaughter is whan thou sleest him with thy tonge in other maner, as whan thou commandest to sle a man, or elles yevest conseil to sle a man.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Firste for thy bodyliche kynde,
And for thy woeful soul also,
Thou shalt be hole of both two.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Like to the aged boysteous bodied oke,
The which among the Aspes the northerne windes
Blowyng now from this quarter, now from that,
Betwixt them striue to ouerwhelme with blastes,
The whistlyng ayre among the braunches rores.
Surrey. Virgile. Aneis, b. iv.

The signification of baptism is described of Paule in the 6th of ye Romaines, that as we are plunged bodily into the water. Euen so we are dead & buried with Christ from sinne.—Frith. Workes, p. 33.

On Wednesday the Indians of the toune hauing hunted a doe, shee tooke soyle & came neer our ship, and putting off with our boat we tooke her, being like vnto our deere in England, not altogether so fat, but very good flesh and good bodied.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 695.

I shall rendre my brother into your handes, to do your pleasure with hym, without he woll obey as I woll haue him; so that ye promyse me by the fayth of your body, that ye shall do his person no bodely hurt.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 67.

The primary ideas we have peculiar to body, as contradistinguished to spirit, are the cohesion of solid, and consequently separable parts, and a power of communicating motion by impulse.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 23.

For of all forms, she holds the first degree,
That are to grose material bodies knit;
Yet she herself is bodyless and free;
And, though confin'd, is almost infinite.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 4.

Then the senate graunted out a decree, that the consul before he departed from the citie, should put up a bill or supplication unto the bodie of the people, that it would please them to elect a dictatour.—Holland. Livie, p. 629.

Idea is a bodilesse substance, which of itselfe hath no subsistence, but giveth figure and forme unto shapeless matters, and becommeth the very cause that bringeth them into shew and evidence.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 666.

Now I give up my shop, and dispose of all my poetical goods at once; I must therefore desire, that the public would please to take them in the gross; and that every body would turn over what he does not like.
Prior. Postscript to his Works.

The ancient sage, who did so long maintain
That bodies die, but souls return again,
With all the births and deaths he had in store,
Went out Pythagoras, and came no more.
Id. To the Memory of Villiers.

I am mightily surpris'd to see you so good a judge of our nature and circumstances, since you are a mere spirit, and have no knowledge of the bodily part of us.—Tatler, No. 15.

But how a body so fantastic, trim,
And quaint, in its deportment and attire,
Can lodge an heavenly mind—demands a doubt.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

As men grew more and more acquainted with the motions and appearances of the heavenly bodies, they became more and more sensible, that the sun, earth, and planets, bear some very peculiar relation to one another.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 1.

But in reality it arose from very different causes: sometimes from bodily pain, which he often felt when he did not own it.—Portens. Life of Abp. Secker.

It is in the body politic, as in the natural, those disorders are most dangerous that flow from the head.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. iv. Let. 22.

BOG, v. }
BOG, n. }
BO'GGY. }
BO'GLAND. }
BO'GTROTTER. }

A.S. Bug-an, to bow; Dut. Boogen, flectere, quia (sc.) prementi cedit; because it gives way to pressure. See Skinner. Applied to—

Land, or ground, that bows, yields, gives way to pressure:—marshy, miry, land.

No part or corner man can looke upon.
But there are objects, bid him to be gone
As farre as he can flie, or follow day,
Rather than here so bogg'd in vices stay.
B. Jonson. Underwood. An Epistle to a Friend

Therefore of purpose he sometime brought them one way, other while another way, and at last brought them into a great bog or marish, full of deep holes and ditches, and where they must needs make many turns, and returns before they could get out again, and yet very hardly.
North. Plutarch, p. 480.

This prouince of Amapaia is a very low and a marish ground nere the riuer; and by reason of the red water which issueth out in small branches thorow the fenny and boggy ground, there breed diuers poisonfull wormes and serpents.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 635

Every bog hath most certainly a living spring in it. If possibly we could light on the head of that spring, or meet it higher than the place of the bog, and give it a clear passage, the nether bog will vanish.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 383

For he that is deeply engaged in vice is like a man laid fast in a bogg, who by a faint and lazy struggling to get out, does but spend his strength to no purpose, and sinks himself the deeper into it.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 28.

Go, conquerors of your male and female foes;
Men without hearts, and women without hose.
Each bring his love a bogland captive home;
Such proper pages will long trains become.
Dryden. Prologue to the Prophetess.

While, at each step, his trembling rider quakes,
Appall'd with thoughts of bog, or cavern'd pit,
Or treach'rous earth, subsiding where they tread,
Tremendous passage to the realms of death!
Jago. Edge-Hill, b. iii.

For if I have been led into bogs and quagmires, by following an ignis fatuus, what can I do better, than to warn others to beware of it?—Reid. Enquiry, c. 1. s. 8.

It's a damn'd long, dark, boggy, dirty, dangerous way.
Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer.

BO'GGLE, v. }
BO'GGLER. }
BO'GGLING, n. }
BO'GGLISH. }

The diminutive of Bog; (q. d.) to stick in the mud, labouring in vain to disembarrass yourself, (Skinner.)

To stick or stay, as if sunk in a bog; unable, afraid, unwilling to proceed or advance, and thus—to hesitate.

Ros. My lord, I do confesse the ring was hers.
Kin. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.
Is this the man you speake of?
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act. v. sc. 3.

Cleo. Good my lord.
Ant. You haue beene a boggler euer,
But when we in our vitiousnesse grow hard,
(Oh misery on't) the wise Gods seele our eyes.
Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11

What wise man or woman doth not know, that nothing is more sly, touchy, and boggish, nothing more violent, rash, and various, than that opinion, prejudice, passion, and superstition of the many or common people!
Bp. Taylor. Artif Handsomeness, p. 172.

He [Edw. Bagshaw, jun.] fell to the old trade of conventicling and raising sedition, for which being ever and anon troubled, [he] had at length the oaths of allegiance and supremacy tendered to him, but he boggling at them at first, and afterwards denying to take them, was committed prisoner to Newgate.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

'Tis true indeed when a sinner is first tempted to the commission of a more gross and notorious sin, his conscience is apt to boggle and start at it, he doth it with great difficulty and regret.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 10.

In fermentations we do generally see a circulation, or several kinds of boglins, as it were by a mixture of agitations, partly by spiral lines, partly by undulations, not mixt otherwise than in the motion of smoke
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 426.

BOIL, v. Fr. Bouillir; It. Bollire; Sp. Bullir; Lat. Bullire; perhaps BOIL, n. from the Gr. Βαλλειν, to throw, to BO'ILING. throw forth; (sc.) from the sur-
BO'ILER. face. The noun, when applied to an ebullition or ejection from the surface of the skin, is written Bile by Wiclif and Tindall; and the opinion of etymologists, who consider it to be correctly so written, are given under BILE.

To boil is to throw, to cast up or forth, (sc.) some portions of a solid mass above or over the rest; and thus to fluctuate; to effervesce; to agitate or cause to be agitated; to be heated (as water by fire, till it throws itself or is thrown over, (sc.) the vessel.)

Met. to be warm, animated, ardent, eager.

Boiler is applied to the person who, and the vessel in which any thing, boils.

—— Roynouse scabbes
Bules and biotches, and brennyng agnwes
Frenesyes and foule uveles.—Piers Ploughman, p. 356.

For certes whan the pot boileth strongly, the best remedy is to withdraw the fire.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The stomake koke is for the hall,
And boyleth meate for them all
To make hem mighte for to serue
The herte, that he shall not sterue.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Then boyld my breast with flame and burning wrath,
To reuenge my town vnto such ruin brought
With worthy pains on her to work my will
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

In this year [1542] the tēth daie of Marche, there was a maide boiled in Smithfielde for poisonyng diuers honest persons that she had dwelled with in the cite of London
Fabyan. Hen. VIII. an. 1542.

And whan the place was marked in Normandy, and dylygently sought out, the searchers beheldē a fearful fluttering and terybie boylynge in a serten water, an horyble stynkyng smoke arysynge thereof.—Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

The spye entered downe into the dykes, where ther was no water, nor none coude abyde there, for it was all a quycke boylyng sande.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 321.

How happy were those, in very height
Of this great battle that had bravely dy'd!
When as their boiling bosome, in the fight,
Felt not the sharp steel thorough them to slide.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

And so the black-guard are pleased with any lease of life (for some 999) especially those o' the boyling-house: they are to have Medeas kettle hung up, that they may souse into it when they will, and come out renew'd like so many strip'd snakes at their pleasure.
B. Jonson. Masques. Mercurie Vindicated.

He can give you favour, when he pleaseth, in the sight of the worst enemies in the world, so as to make them your best friends; and how long soever he may suffer their choler to boil in their breasts, he can keep it from breaking forth either at their hands or tongues.
Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 123.

Soap is made up by the soap boilers of oil or grease, and salt, and water diligently incorporated together.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 500.

The kettle boil'd, and all prepar'd
To give the morning treat,
When Dick, the country beau, appear'd,
And, bowing, took his seat
Cunningham. The Broken China.

O steep my senses in oblivion's balm,
And sooth my throbbing pulse with lenient hand:
Thy tempest of my boiling blood becalm!
Despair grows mild at thy supreme command.
Warton. Ode to Sleep.

—— [God] bids a plague
Kindle a fiery boil upon the skin,
And putrify the breath of blooming health.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

BOIST. Fr. Boiste, a box. See Box.

I pray to God to save thy gentil corps
And every boist ful of thy letuarie.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,239.

And there in was a vessell of gold, fulle of manna, and cloathanges and ournements and the tabernacle of Aaro, and the tabernacle square of geld, with 12 precyous stones, and a boyst of Jasper grene.
Maundevile. Voia. and Trav. p. 103.

BO'ISTEROUS. } Dut. Büsen; Ger. Beisen,
BO'ISTEROUSLY. } mordere. Beiswind is a
BO'ISTEROUSNESS. } keen biting wind; as the BO'ISTOUS. } north wind. The Dut.
BO'ISTEOUSNESS. } Büster is furious, raging,
BO'ISTOUSLY. } turbulent. And from these Boistous and Boisterous may have been formed, and applied to any thing—

Turbulent, tempestuous, stormy, violent; to any thing coarse, rude, noisy.

And no man puttith a clout of boistous cloth into an old cloathing, for it doeth awey the fulnesse of the cloth and a worse brekyng is maad.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 9.

I am a boistous man, right thus say I.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,160.

He on a day in open audience
Ful boistously hath said hire this sentence.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8666.

Wherefore here of your gentilness
I you require my boistousnesse
Ye let passe, as thing rude
And heareth what I wend conclude
And of the enditing taketh no hed
Ye of the termes, so God you sped.—Id. Dreame.

When dreadful swelling seas, through boysterous windy blasts,
So tosse the ships that all for nought serves ancor, saile, and masts:
Who takes not pleasure then safely on shore to rest,
And see with drede and depe dispayre, how shipmen are distrest!
Uncertaine Auctore. Felicitie of a Minde, &c.

—— To the house top I climbe
And harkning stood I: like as when the flame
Lightes in the corn, by drift of boisterous winde:
The silly herdman all astonnied standes,
From the hye rock, while he doth here the sound.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

—— Vp the toure I climbe by staires on hie,
And layde mine eare, and still I stood about me round to spy.
And euen as fire in boystrous wind some country ripe of corne
Doth burne, • • • •
The plowman wayling from the rock beholds and heares the sound. Phaer. Ib.

These hast thou exhorted as a father, & proued them: but vnto the other ye haste bene a boysterous kynge, laied harde to their charge, & cōdēned them.
Bible, 1551. B. of Wisdome, c. 11.

She holds no longer hande,
But (tygerlike) she take
The little boy ful boistrously
Who now for terror quooke.
Gascoigne. Complaint of Phylomene.

Time makes the tender twig
to boysterous tree to grow
It makes the oke to overlooke
The slender shrubs bylow.
Turbervile. Time Conquereth all Things.

One is soft, meeke & gentle, as was Dauid, John, & Peter, an other is boysterous, harde, and vehement, as was Helias, Esay, & Paule.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

A cruell sorte of false disciples and wicked bretheren arose vp fro among them, all earthly minded to couetusnesse, puffed vp with pride and ambition, inflamed also with anger, spight, & vengeaunce, they boysteously entred among the people, so mutable and fickle as the sea, which chaungeth with euery winde.—Id. Ib.

But whan he cast hys iyes a little from Jesus, and began to looke about him, and to considre the boysteousnes of the winde, the hurling of the waues and his owne feblenes, he was afrayed agayn, and began to sinke downe & be in danger of drowning.—Udal. Matthew, c. 14.

Or when with boist'rous rage the swelling main,
Puft up by mighty winds, does hoarsely roar;
And beating with his waves the trembling shore,
His sandy girdle scorns, and breaks earth's rampart door.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

For he [David] before had not been us'd to these,
Nor him at all their boist rousness can please,
His gorget gall'd his neck, his chin beneath.
And most extremely hinder'd him to breathe
Drayton. David & Goliah.

Spread then towards Vulcan's shores thy speedy wing,
Where round his anvils ceaseless hammers ring.
Bid him no more his boisterous bellows ply,
Till heaven-built Argo sail securely by.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius, b. iv.

On the contrary he took the fact for granted, and so joined in with the cry, and hallooʼd it as boisterously as the rest
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iii. c. 20.

Lord Coningsby, Mr. Stanhope, and Mr. Lechmere were the principal interrogators; who, in this examination [of Prior] of which there is printed an account not unentertaining, behaved with the boisterousness of men elated by recent authority.—Johnson. Life of Prior.

BO'LARY, adj. Of or pertaining to the species of clayey earth, called Bol-armoniac. Lat. Bolus Armenus, a kind of earth found in Armenia, (Minshew.)

The magnes carneus is nothing else but a weak, an inanimate kind of loadstone, veined here and there with a few magnetical and ferreous lines, but chiefly consisting of a bolary and clammy substance, whereby it adheres like hematites, or terra lemnia, unto the lips
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

BOLD, v. Fr. Baud; It. Baldo; Dut.
BOLD, adj. Boude; A. S. Bald, Bald, Ge-
BO'LDEN. bald, audax. A. S. Baldan, to BO'LDHEDE. build, to confirm, to establish, to BO'LDLY. make firm, and sure and fast, to
BO'LDNESS. consolidate, to strengthen. And thus (adds Tooke) a man of confirmed courage; i. e. a confirmed heart, is properly said to be a builded, built, or bold man, who, in the A. S. is termed bald, balded, ge-bald, ge-balded, as well as bald. The A. S. words Bold and Bolt, i. e. builded, built, are both likewise used indifferently for what we now call a building, (i. e. building) or strong edifice, (Tooke, ii. 129.) See BOLD, infra.

To bold or bolden; is to confirm the courage, to give additional courage; or as we now say, to encourage or embolden (qv.)

Bold, the adj., is also applied to the extreme of courage, to that which is a daring, audacious, impudent: as well as to that which is—

Fearless, intrepid, dauntless, courageous. To that which is—

Well, firmly, built; strongly constructed, either in nature or art, as a bold coast; or, in painting or statuary, a bold figure.

Hony & mylk ther ys muche, mony folk & bolde.
This ys the stat of Yriond, as iche habbe y tolde.
R. Gloucester, p. 43.

Thise kynges nen dred, & alle the world tham knewe.
For alle ther grete boldehed, the dede git doun tham threwe.
R. Brunne, p. 340

Boldely thie camen, & schewed tham to his face
Fell it to gode or grame, thie did tham in his grace.
Id. p. 327

Now has Elfred nede of help & socoure,
For boldnes he wild him bynd to som berde in boure.
Id. p. 40.

Be ge nevere the boldere to breke the ten hestes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 164.

Anticrist thus sone hadde hundredes at hus baner
And pruyde bar thi baner boldelsche aboughte.—Id. p. 395.

For I preie ghou that lest I present be not boold bi the trist in which I am gessid to be boold into summe that demen us as if we wandren aftir the fleich.
Wiclif. 2 Corinthians, c. 10.

I beseech you that I nede not to be bold when I am present (with that same cōfydence, wherewith I am supposed to be bolde) agaynst some whyche repute vs as though we walked carnally.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Swiche thinges maken children for to be
To sone ripe and bold, as men may see,
Which is ful perilous, and hath ben yore;
For al to sone may she lernen lore
Of boldnesse, whan she woxen is a wif.
Chaucer. Doctoures Tale v. 1201.

One beam of ruth is in her cloudy looke,
Which comfortes the mind, that erst for fear shooke;
That bolded straight the way then aske I how
To vtter forth the smart I byde within;
But such it is, I not how to begin.
Wyat. The Wauering Louer.

Alexaundre wel holy byholdith;
His Gregeys [i. e. Greeks] ful faire he boldeth,
With Antioche, and Mark of Rome,
That tho him to socoure come.
Kyng Alisaunder, v. 2467. Weber, vol. i.

The disciples beyng boldened with these sayinges begunne sumwhat to stande in their own conceite, and as though they had of their own strength been able to abide and beare their lordes death that was at hande, they answere on this wyse.
Udal. John, c. 16.

And he spoke boldlier: no, if I should dye with the, I will not deny the.—Bible, 1551. Mark, c. 14.

And this dare I boldly affirme, that they, whiche feare not God but for purgatoryes sake, shall neuer come in it no nor yet in heuen.—Frith. Workes, p. 25.

Hee was a bold Israelite that set the first foot into the channell of the sea and every step that they set in that moist way, was a new exercise of their faith.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Plagues of Ægypt.

A christian so long as he preserves his integrity to God and to religion, is bold in all accidents, he dares die, and he dares be poor.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

But after, bolden'd with my first successe,
I durst essay the new-found paths, that led
To slavish Mosco's dullard sluggishnesse.
P. Fletcher, Ecl. 1. The Argument.

Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-face'd suitor 'gins to woo him.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

They all approved wel of this speech of his, and willed him to speak boldly without bashful modestie in that case what he thought in equitie & reason the senat & people of Rome was to yeald unto him by the way of just recompense.
Holland. Livie, p. 975.

He [Romulus] had no sooner ended his prayer, but divers of his men that fled, began to be ashamed to fly before their king, and a sudden boldnesse came upon them, and their fear therewithall vanished away.—North. Plutarch, p. 24.

Bold is the critic who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love;
And bolder he, who dares aver
That they were enemies to war. Prior. Alma, c. 1.

Among them there was one laden with withies, who being demanded, what he intended to have done with them? Sandys answer'd, to have hung up the English churls.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh

In every state and condition of life, we may with an humble boldness address ourselves to him as to our Father which is in heaven, and so always rest secure under his paternal care and conduct.—Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 46.

It is a bold philosophy that rejects, without ceremony, principles which irresistibly govern the belief and the conduct of all mankind in the common concerns of life; and to which the philosopher himself must yield, after he imagines he hath confuted them.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 1. s. 5.

Ask an Englishman, however, whether he is afraid of death, and he boldly answers in the negative, but observe his behaviour in circumstances of approaching sickness, and you will find his actions give his assertions the lie.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 12

He well knew the savage and unrelenting temper of that sanguinary tyrant, he knew that this boldness of expostulation would sooner or later bring down upon him the whole weight of his resentment.—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 3.

BOLD, from Built, build-en, or as we now say, build-ing. See BOLD above.

From Londone to Wynchestere he wende to se there
The tayre hale, & other bold, that hys fader let rere.
R. Gloucester, p. 383.

That ich ther vppe mowe a siker bold a rere.—Id. p. 116.

BOLL, v. } Ger. Bol; any thing which has
BOLL, n. } a round, globular, or spherical
BOLLINGS. } form or shape, from Bolen, vertere, volvere, rotare, (Waehter.) See BALL and BOWL.

To boll, is to round by circumvolution, by rotation; and then, generally, to round, to rise out in a round form or shape, to swell out.

Wiclif renders inflationes, bolnings.

Ghe ben bolnen with pride.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 5.

Lest perauenture stryuyngis, enuyes, sturdenessis, discencsions, and detraccouns, priuy spechis of discord, bolnyngis bi pride, debatis ben among ghou—Id. Gal. c. 12.

But this well toat I here reherse
So holsome was, that would aswaig
Bolien hartes, and venem peerce
Of pensifeheb, with all the cruel rage.
Chaucer. The Blacke Knight.

And by the throte bolle he caught Alein
And he him hent despitously again,
And on the nose he smote him with his fist.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4270.

If I were a fleshly felowe, & a preacher of lyes, and told them that they might syt bebbynge and bollynge & be dronckea: O that were a prophete for thys people.
Bible, 1551. Micheas, c. 2

The flaxe & the barly were smytten for the barly was shot vp and the flax was boulted; but the wheate and the rye were not smitten, for they ware late sowen.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 9.

Drawn at a cart as he of late had be,
Distained with bloody dust, whose feete were bounde
With the streight cordes wherewith they haled him.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

But after that his bodye began to bolne wt strypes, and that he coulde not abide the scourges which pearced vnto ye bare bones.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, p. 108.

He thought it the acte of a wyse man in tyme to get him to a restyng place, and to leaue ye followyng of such a doubtfull captayne, which with a leaden sword would cut his own throte bolle.—Hall. Hen. IV.

——— The goodly bole, being got
To certaine cubits height, from every side
The boughes decline, which taking roote afresh,
Spring up new boles, and those spring new, and newer,
Till the whole tree become a porticus,
Or arched arbour, able to receive
A numerous troupe. B. Jonson. Neptune's Triumph.

All fell upon the high hair'd okes and doune their curled browes
Fell busling to the earth: and up went all the boles and bowes. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

Yet Phœbus loves her still, and, casting round
Her bole, his arms, some little warmth he found.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

I lopp'd the branchy head; aloft in twain
Sever'd the bole, and smooth'd the shining grain;
Then posts, capacious of the frame I raise,
And bore it, regular, from space to space.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

And severing near the root its solid bole,
I smooth'd the rugged stump, till it became
A pedestal, and, squaring it by line,
Fam'd next the shapely pillar. Cowper. Ib.

The pipe (for 'twas a pipe of soul)
Raising himself upon his bole,
In smoke, like oracle of old,
Did thus his sentiments unfold. Smart, Fab. 16.

BOLSTER, v. } A. S. Bolster, bolstre;
BOLSTER, n. } Dut. Bolster; Ger. Polster,
BOLSTERED. } from Boll. (See BOLL.)
BOLSTERER. } And Ster, or Stre, is perhaps BOLSTERING. } A. S. Stre, straw. A boll or roll of straw.

To bolster is—to put or place a bolster; or any thing in shape or form of a bolster, (sc.) as a support; and thus, consequentially, to raise, to uphold, to sustain, or to support.

And in so great confusion emong sondry nacions, sondry sectis shal aryse boulsred vp by mans witte & reason concerning God's worship inuented by man and the justification by workes.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, Argum.

Ye saye, it is a perfight ymitatiō of Christ. What a shamelesse lye is thys, and what a bolde bragge to bolster out fylthynesse.—Bale. Apology, p. 134.

Wo be vnto you, that sowe pillowes vnder al arme hooles, and bolsters vnder the heads both of younge & olde, to catche soules withal.—Bible, 1551. Ezek. c. 13.

Which blyndnes it pleased God by his secrete counsel to suffer for a tyme, to thentent, that I being sodenly chaunged from so great a bolsterer of the lawe into a preacher of the gospel, myght by myne example drawe and prouoke many to Christe.—Udal. Galath. c. 2.

For who durst begyn suche a ryot, as to enterprise to ale the erles bayly, holdynge the erles baner in his handes, doying his office, without some bolsterer or cōforter in their dedo.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 350.

If this chaplayn had mynded the preferrements of a veryte, as he did the bolsteryng oute of a falshede, he had there more aduisedlye marked thys wurde possunt, whyche carryeth all the wayght of the whole matter.
Bale. Apology, fol. 41.

On the world's idols I do hate to smile,
Nor shall their names e'er in my page appear,
To bolster baseness I account it vile.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 5

The smell of wormewood procureth sleepe, or if it be laid under the pilow or bolster, provided alwaies that the patient be not ware of it.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 7

But when the eyes be dressed with this bloud, it would not be forgotten, that there bee a thin bolster boiled in honey, laid aloft, yea, and a locke of greasie woull upon it, which had been soaked either in oile or wine.
Id. Ib. b. xxix. c. 6

Corruption, springing from his canker'd breast,
Purs up the channel, and disturbs his rest,
With head propt up the bolster'd engine lies;
If pillow slipt aside, the monarch dies.
Dryden. Suum Cuique.

BOLT, v. } To bolt,—as to bolt the door, is
BOLT, n. } to fasten the door, to strengthen it; to throw to—a bolt, i. e. as now applied, to throw to—that by which a door, or shutter is fastened or strengthened; from the A. S. Byldan, to build, strengthen, or confirm. (See Tooke.) Also, simply—

To fasten; to make, to hold or keep, fast; to confine, to constrain.

In Dutch it is Bout, i. e. Bould, the past tense and past part. of Bouwen, to build.

He bolteth their arms with a paulsy, that they cannot lift their hands to their heads.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1246.

So that it was a breach of their Christian liberty belike, to have a lock or a bolt on a door, to keep peculiar possession of any thing from them.—Spelman. On Tithes, p. 157.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast,
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Heav'ns! and are these the plagues that wait,
Around the hospitable gate!
Let tenfold iron bolt my door,
And the gaunt mastiff growl before.
Langhorn. To Lord Granby.

BOLT, v. } (Sc.) To bolt the bran; Dut.
BOULTER. } Buyddelen; Ger. Beutelen; Fr. Bluter; and this latter, Ferrarius derives from the Lat. Aplauda, (Bran.) And Aplauda, according to Wachter, a plaudendo, (whence our English, to explode.) See Wachter and Menage.

To force away, to drive out, to sift or separate; (sc.) the fine from the coarse, the good from the bad. See BOLT, infra.

But I ne cannot boult it to the bren,
As can the holy doctour Augustin.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,246.

For as a wynnower powereth the chaffe from the corn, and the boulter tryeth out the branne from the mele: so hath Erasmus scowered out of all the doctours and commentaries vpon scripture, the dregge which through the faute of the times or places in whiche those writers lyued, had setled itselfe amonge the pure & fine substaunce.
Udal. Preface to the King's Majesty.

The Bishop of Winchester had longe agoe throwely boulted this mater, euen vnto the branne.
Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 731

Divers sorts of sieves and boulters there be. The saree made of haire, was a devise of the Frenchmen, the tamis raunger for course bread, as also the fine floure boulter for manchet (made both of linnen cloth) the Spaniards invented.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 11.

For as a miller in his boulting hutch
Drives out the pure meale nearly, (as he can)
And in his sifter leaves the coarser bran.
So doth the canker of a poet's name
Let slip such lines as might inherit fame.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

This day thou shalt have ingots: and to-morrow,
Give lords th' affront. Is it, my Zephyrus, right,
Blushes the bolts-head?
B. Jonson. Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 2

——She is not to be found i' the house
With all the hue and cry is made for her,
Through every roome the larder ha' beene search'd,
The bak-houses, and boulting-tub.
Id. Magnetick Lady, Act v. sc. 8.

This fierce inquisitor has chief
Dominion over men's belief
And manners, can pronounce a saint
Idolatrous or ignorant,
When supercilionsly he sifts
Through coarsest boulter other gifts.—Hudibras, pt. i. p. 3.

Above all, those judicious collectors of bright parts and flowers, and observanda's, are to be nicely dwelt on, by some called the sieves or boulters of learning; though it is left undetermined, whether they dealt in pearls or meal; and consequently, whether we are more to value, that which passed through, or what staid behind.

Swift. A Digression in praise of Digression.

In short one sentence may the whole discuss,
As we with truth, truth coincides with us:
This boults the matter fairly to the bran,
And nothing more, wits, bards, deans, doctors can.

Harte. An Essay on Reason.

The report of the committee was examined, and sifted and bolted to the bran, by a gentleman, whose keen and powerful talents I have ever admired.

Burke. On Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

BOLT, v. } Dut. Bolt; Ger. Bolz; from the BOLT, n. } v. Bolen, to throw, which Wachter thinks is certainly from the Gr. Βαλλειν, to cast or throw. It admits of conjecture, that to bolt a door, to bolt bran, to bolt out, are usages of the same word, and denote:—to throw, to throw out, to expel, to eject.

To force out or away, to throw or drive out, to eject, to expel, to rush or cause to rush out, to start out.

The noun is applied, to an arrow from a bow; to a thunder-bolt, a bird-bolt. Upright as a bolt; upright as a dart, straight as an arrow.

Winsing she was, as is a joly colt,
Long as a mast, and upright as a bolt

Chaucer. The Millieres Tale, v. 3263.

Now seeing the blindnes of vs worldlye folke, how precisely we presume to shoote our folish bolt in those matters most, in whiche we least can skill.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 73.

Or as the seely byrd, that with the bolte is brus'd,
And lieth aloofe among the leaues of al her pheares refus'd,
And heares them sing full shrill, yet cannot she reioyce,
Nor frame one warbling note to passe out of hir mournful voice.—Gascoigne. The Lamentation of a Louer.

The fore head and brest hath the sign of the crosse made vpon them, glorye is giuen to the Lorde downe to the grounde, euery man ariseth and standeth bolt vpright, the heades be bare, the eares attentife, the eyes full of reuerence.

Udal. John, Pref.

They chose a place where they erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back again to their den.—Bacon. Of a War with Spain.

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver shafted queen, for ever chaste,
Wherewith she tam'd the brinded lioness
And spotted mountain pard, but set at nought
The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton. Comus.

And so when thou rashly bolted out somewhat that is either doubtful or false, thou wilt seal it up and confirm it with an oath, before thou hast had time to consider what thou hast said, or what thou art swearing.

Hopkins. Works, p. 123.

With your kind work her drooping hopes revive;
You bid her read, repent, adore, and live;
You wrest the bolt from heaven's avenging hand;
Stop ready Death, and save a sinking land.

Prior. To Dr. Sherlock.

The man had no sooner set one foot within the vault, than the statue erecting itself from its leaning posture, stood bolt-upright.—Spectator, No. 379.

Sir, this vermin of court reporters, when they are forced into day upon one point, are sure to burrow in another; but they shall have no refuge: I will make them bolt out of all their holes.—Burke. On American Taxation.

The infidel has shot his bolts away,
Till, his exhausted quiver yielding none,
He gleans the blunted shafts that have recoil'd,
And aims them at the shield of truth again.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

BOMB, v. }
BOMB, n. }
BOMBA'RD, v. }
BO'MBARD, n. }
BOMBARDI'ER. }
BOMBA'RDMENT. }
BOMBILA'TION. } Fr. Bombarde; It. Bombarda; Sp. Bombarda; Ger. Bombe, bombert; Dut. Bommen, bombannen; which Kilian thinks are words a sono ficta. Vossius thinks the same of the Gr. Βομβος, and the Lat. Bombus. Bombarda, (a new word, he remarks, for a new thing) a bombo, et ardere, so named because it vomits or throws forth iron balls with a noise and blazing fire,—cum sonitu et flamma. Laurentius Valla, who wrote in 1420, about forty years after the invention of these murthering pieces, as Cotgrave calls them, gives the same opinion.

Bomb; a loud humming noise or sound. Bomb, bombard; a gun or cannon, remarkable for its loud noise, when discharged.

Bombard-phrase is used by B. Jonson for ampullax; a phrase of more sound than sense;—sounding or noisy as a bomb or bombard.

A bombard of sack or beer; is a vessel, so called, perhaps, from some resemblance to the murthering piece.

A bombard-man, Mr. Gifford says, was one of the people who attended at the buttery-hatch, and carried the huge cans of beer to the different offices.

The capitaine with all his retinue departed leuyng behynd the ordinaunce of bombardes, curtawes & demy curtaux, slinges, canons, volgers, and other ordinaunce.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 15.

At the entrynge into the towne there were many slayne and hurte, mo than xl.: the men of the towne were aboue ouer the gate, and caste downe stones, and shotte out bombardes, so that the Englishemen durste aproche no nerer.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 134.

In Saturn's name, the father of my lord!
What over-charged piece of melancholie
Is this, breakes in betweene my wishes thus,
With bombing sighs!

B. Jonson. Masques. The Fortunate Isles.

Why dost thou converse with that trunke of humours, that huge bombard of sacke

Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

I answered, we are all masques sometimes: with which they knock'd hypocrisie o' the pate, and made room for a bombard man, that brought bouge for a country lady or two, that fainted, he said, with fasting, for the fine sight since seven a clock i' the morning

B. Jonson. Masques. Love Restored.

Against which, one day I am to deliver the buttry in, so many firkins of aurum potabile, as it delivers out bombards of budge to them, between this and that.

Id. Mercurie Vindicated.

This [Charles Berkley] dying without issue, was succeeded in his honour and estate by his next brother John, afterwards an Admiral at sea, and the same, who with his fleet bombarded and burnt down Dieppe in France, and bombarded Havre de Grace, in the same country, in July, 1649

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

—— Both Telephus,
And Peleus, if they seeke to heart-strike us
That are spectators, with their miserie,
When they are poore, and banish'd must throw by
Their bombard-vnrase, and foot, and half foot words.

B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

How to abate the vigor thereof, or silence its bombulation, a way is promised by Porta not onely in general terms by some fat bodies, but in particular by borax and butter mixed in a due proportion; which saith he, will so go off as scarce to be heard by the discharger, and indeed plentifully mixed, it will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

Our king thus trembles at Namur;
Whilst Villeroy, who ne er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,
To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies.

Prior. On taking Namur.

The bombardier tosses his balls sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. His chief aim is at several eminent stations, which he looks upon as the fairest marks, and uses all his skill to do execution upon those who possess them. Every man so situated, let his merit be never so great, is sure to undergo a bombardment. It is further observ'd, that the only way to be out of danger from the bursting of a bomb, is to be prostrate on the ground, a posture too abject for generous spirits.—Tatler, No. 88.

Nor could an ordinary fleet with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place [Venice] that has always in its arsenal a considerable number of gallies and men of war ready to put to sea on a very short warning.

Addison. Remarks on Italy.

Of boasting more than of a bomb afraid,
A soldier should be modest as a maid.

Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 4.

It is known as a fact that she [France] proposes the ravage of the Ecclesiastical state, and the pillage of Rome, as her first object; that next she means to bombard Naples, to awe, to humble, and thus to command all Italy.

Burke. On the present State of Affairs.

From the earliest dawnings of policy to this day, the invention of men has been sharpening and improving the mystery of murder, from the first rude essays of clubs and stones, to the present perfection of gunnery, cannoneering, bombarding, mining, &c.

Id. A Vindication of Natural Society.

BOMBASI'N. Fr. Bombasin; It. Bombagino; Lat. Bombyx; Gr. Βομβυξ, a word, as Vossius thinks, of eastern origin. The ancients (says Skinner) so called—

Any soft or delicate wool adapted for weaving garments.

There is planted on the one side of the Casiques house a faire garden, with all herbes growing in it, and at the lower end a well of fresh water, and round about it are trees set, whereon bombasin cotton groweth, after this manner.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 813.

In six months after, come the silke worms (bombyces.) Silke worms spin and weave webs like to those of the spiders, and all to please our dainty dames, who thereof make their fine silkes and velvets, forme their costly garments and superfluous apparell, which are called bombycina.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 22.

BOMBA'ST, or
BUMBA'ST, v.
BO'MBAST, n.
BO'MBAST, adj.
BOMBA'STICK.
BOMBA'STRY. } Of the same origin as Bombasin, (qv.) Bumbast, Skinner says, is linen sewed together with flax between. Hence bumbast words or stile;—inflated, et quasi stuppâ refertus. See the example from Holland's Plinie.

To stuff out; to swell or cause to swell out, largely, excessively; hence the n. applied (met.) to tumid or inflated words, or language, exceeding the occasion, of more sound than sense.

Steph. Then for an earnest penie take this blow.
I shall bumbast you, you mocking knave.

Edwards. Damon & Pythias.

Need you any inke and bombase, [i. e. cotton to put into the inke.]—Hollyband. Italian Schole Maister, sig. E. 3.

My thighes are thin, my body lanck and leane,
It hath no bumbast now, but skin and bones.

Gascoigne. Bartholomew of Bath.

Lette none outlandishe taylour take disport,
To stuffe thy doublet full of such bumbast.

Id. Councell Giuen, &c.

Thy bodies bolstred out with bumbast and with bagges.

Id. Challenge to Beautie.

The foresaid merchants transport thither ermines and grey furres, with other rich and costly skinnes. Others carry cloathes made of cotton or bombast.

Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 93.

This plant is but small, and bringeth forth a fruit resembling the bearded nut or filberd; out of the inner shell or husk whereof (called bombyx) (hereupon, Holland observes, cotton is called bombace,) there breaketh forth a cotton like unto down, so easie to be spun: and there is no flax in the world comparable to it for whiteness and softnesse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

Give me those lines (whose touch the skilful ear to please)
That gliding flow in state, like swelling Euphrates,
In which things natural be; and not in falsely wrong;
The sounds are fine and smooth, the sense is full and strong;
Not bombasted with words vain ticklish ears to feed,
But such as may content the perfect man to read.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

Some braver brain in high heroic rhymes
Compileth worm-eaten stories of old times.
And he like some imperious Maronist,
Conjures the muses that they him assist.
Then strives he to bombast his feeble lines
With far-fetch'd phrase.—Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 4.

Tis not such lines as almost crack the stage
When Bajaset begins to rage;
Nor a tall metaphor in bombast way.

Cowley. Ode. Of Wit.

By his [Arthur Wilson] endeavouring too much to set out his bare collections in an affected and bombastic stile, they are much neglected.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Yet noisy bombast carefully avoid,
Nor think to raise, though on Pharsalia's plain,
"Millions of mourning mountains of the slain."

Dryden. Art of Poetry, c. 1.

Bombastry and buffoonery, by nature lofty and light, soare highest of all, and would be lost in the roof, if the prudent architect had not with much foresight contrived for them a fourth place, called the twelve-penny gallery, and there planted a suitable colony, who greedily intercept them in their passage.—Swift. Tale of a Tub, s. 1.

Young had much of a sublime genius, though without common sense; so that his genius, having no guide, was perpetually liable to degenerate into bombast.

Pope, in Johnson's Life of Young.

A theatrical, bombastick, windy phraseology of heroick virtue, blended and mingled up with a worse dissoluteness, and joined to a murderous and savage ferocity, forms the tone and idiom of their language and their manners.

Burke. Letter on a Regicide Peace.

BOND, n. }
BOND, adj. } The past tense and past part. of the verb to bind, (qv.)
BO'NDAGE. } A bond is that which binds, fastens, or confines; or by which any thing is bound, fastened, or confined; which puts or keeps in confinement, under constraint, under obligation; that which constrains or obliges, which forces or compels.

A bond man, maid, &c. is a bound man, &c. bound to servitude or obedience; the words are usually written affixed.

Me may se a bonde mane's sone other wyle knygt bi come,
And some gromes and squires, and seththe knygtes some.
R. Gloucester, p. 100.

For alle this thraldam, that now on Ingloud es,
Thorgh Normans it cam, bondage & destres,
And if thei now powere had of vs, wite ge wele
Streiter we suld be lad by the tend dele.
R. Brunne, p. 261.

He of bond was brouht for raunson that was riche.
Id. p. 201.

And anon hise eeris weren opened and the bond of his tunge was unbounden and he spak rightly.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 7.

And kyngis of the erthe and pryncee and tribunes and riche and stronge, and ech boondman and free man hidden hem in dennys and stoonys of hillis.—Id. Apocalips, c. 6.

And the kynges of the earth, and the great menne, and the ryche menne, and the chiefe captaynes, and the mighty men, and euery bondmenne and euery free manne hyd themselues in dennes, and in rockes of the hylles.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

No lasse flatering in her word
That purely her simple record
Was found as trew as any bond
Or trouth, of any mannes hond.—Chaucer. The Dreame.

And furtherever, ther as the lawe sayth, that temporel goodes or bondfolk ben the goodes of hir Lord.
Id. The Persones Tale.

This geaunt wote he maie not longe
Endure vnder so harde bondes,
And thought he wolde out of his hondes
By sleighte, in some maner escape.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

They therefore whiche gaue themselues vnto synne became bondeslaues, the fruite of that theyr bondage is death.
Udal. Romaines, c. 6.

If thou wilt mighty be, flee from the rage
Of cruell will, and see thou kepe the free
From the foul yoke of sensual bondage.
Wyat. He ruleth not, &c.

For Sina is a mountain in Arabia, whiche in the Chaldees language hath the name of the bondmaiden Agar, and bordereth upon the mountaine of Sion.—Udal. Galathi, c. 4.

Yet satest thou an idle looker on,
And gaid attendest which side won or lost
Now if thou be a bondslaue vile become
No wrong is that, but Gods most righteous doome.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. i. s 51.

I tell you, master Thorney, I give no security Bonds and bills are but terriers to catch fools, and keep lazy knaves busy My security shall be present payment.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act i sc. 2.

And thus whilst all a mutual change desire,
The ancient bonds of their allegiance broke.
Resolv'd with blood their liberty to buy,
And in this quarrell vow'd to live and die.
Drayton. The Baron's Wars.

100 were Spaniards, every one well mounted upon his horse, the rest were Indians, running as dogs at their heels, all naked and in the most miserable bondage
Sir Francis Drake. The World Encompassed.

Mr Lambard therefore (to decline the misconceiving of the word villanus) doth render it in the Saxon lawe by Paganus, which signifieth the same that villanus doth, according to the French for a villager, but not according to our English for a bondman.
Spelman. On Feuds and Tenures, c. 7.

Others of some note,
As story tells, have trod this wilderness;
The fugitive bond-woman with her son
Outcast Nebaioth, yet found he relief
By a prouiding Angel.—Milton. Par. Reg. b. ii. l. 308.

When thick as Egypt's locusts on the sand,
Our tribes lay slaughter'd through the promis'd land
Whose few survivors with worse fate remain,
To drag the bondage of a tyrant's reign.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, pt. ii.

——— Th' appointed time
With pious toil fulfil'd, the callow young,
Warm'd and expanded into perfect life,
Their brittle bondage break, and come to light.
Thomson. Spring.

I have struggled through much discouragement and much opposition; much obloquy, much calumny, for a people with whom I have no tie, but the common bond of mankind.
Burke. A Letter to Sir Hercules Langrishe.

Let them endeavour to wipe away the reproach of having delivered over so many of their innocent fellow-creatures to a most heavy temporal bondage, both by contributing to soothe and alleviate that as much as possible, and by endeavouring to rescue them from the still more cruel bondage of ignorance and sin.—Portens, vol. i. ser. 17.

BONE, v. BONE, s. BO'NED. BO'NELESS. BO'NY. A. S. Ban; Ger. Bein, Sw. and Dut. Been; Martinius, Wachter, Ihre, agree with other etymologists that the Northern Ban and the Gr. Βαινω, to go, to step forward, to proceed, ire, gradi, incedere, must have some affinity. "Crura," says Wachter, "sunt naturalia gradiendi instrumenta." And Martinius, "Bein, Os, quia ossium virtute est το Βαινειν." Quere? A. S. Beon, existere, extare. See the quotation from Ray.

Bone-lace, or bone-worked lace, is lace worked, made, or manufactured upon bones.

To make no bones, is to do—as willingly, as readily, as easily as a dog or other animal devours meat without bones; and thus—to invent no difficulties.

Bone-set, to set a dislocated or fractured bone into its place.

He smot to gronde, and lygtliche he ne gef strok non,
That he ne brak hed other arm, or som other bon.
R. Gloucester, p. 126.

Thycke man he was ynou, round & nogt wel long
Thoru out red, myd gred woumbe, wel yboned & strong.
Id. p. 414.

See ye my hondis and my feet: for I myself am, feele ye and see ye for a spirit hath no flesch and boones as ye see that I hauc.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 24.

Beholde my handes and my fete, that it is euen my selfe. Handle me and see, for spirites haue not fleshe and bones, as ye see me haue.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

The helmes they to-hewen, and to-shrede;
Out brest the blod, with sterne stremes rede.
With mighty maces the bones they to-breste
He thurgh the thickest of the throng gan threste.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1611.

The bathes weren than araied
With herbes tempred and assaied,
And Jason was vnarmed soone,
And did, as it befelle to doone,
Into his bathe he went anone,
And wisshe hym cleane as any bone.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Alas my Lord while I do muze hereon
And call to minde my youthfull years myspente,
They giue me suche a bone to gnawe vpon,
That all my sensis are in silence pent.
Gascoigne. Woodmanship.

For those pictures expresse only ye lothely figure of our dead bony bodies biten away ye flesh.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 77.

This seemed to bee a bone cast betweene the nobles and the commons, to set them together at strife and contention.
Holland. Livius, p. 170.

I haue giuen sucke, and know
How tender 'tis to loue the babe that milkes me
I would, while it was smyling in my face,
Haue pluckt my nipple from his boneless gummes
And dasht the braines out, had I so sworne
As you haue done to this.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 7.

Thomas Wyat had on a shirt of maile, and on his head a faire hat of veluet, with broad boneworke lace about it.
Stowe. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

The artifice of nature is wonderful in the construction of the bones, that are to support the body, and to bear great burdens, or to be employed in strong exercises, they being made hollow, for lightness and stiffness.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Like Æsop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.
The fruitless fight continued all the day;
A cur came by, and snatched the prize away.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

I am not without hopes, because I am not like the tawdry gay things that are fit only to make bone-lace.
Tatler, No. 83.

Some have amus'd the dull, sad years of life
(Life spent in indolence, and therefore sad)
With schemes of monumental fame; and sought
By pyramids of Mausolean pomp,
Sort-liv'd themselves, t'immortalize their bones
Cowper. Task, b. v.

Unlike to living sounds it came,
Unmix'd, unmelodis'd with breath:
But, grinding through some scrannel frame,
Creak'd from the bony lungs of death.
Longhorne, Fab. 11.

BONECHIEF. Fr. Bon, good, and chef, the chief or head; opposed to Mischief. (Another example may be found under Acheve, (qv.)

As semeth wele by reson, who so can intend,
That o mann'ys wyt ne wyll may not comprehend
The boncheff and the myscheff as may many hedis
Chaucer. The Merchantes Second Tale.

BO'NER. Fr. Bonnaire, "gentle, courteous, affable, mild, without malice, faithful, sincere," (Cotgrave.)

Boner is still preserved in the compound Debonair.

He telleth a tale of the Patriarke of Constantinople that he should be boner and buxom to the bishop of Rome, and yet at that time, when, as he imagineth, this graunte was made, the cittie of Constantinople was not builded.
Jewel. Def. of the Apologie, p. 538.

Hath he be so bonayre and benynge,
And sewed me syth I was yynge
And redy with me in every nede.
The Squyr of Lowe Degre. Ritson. Rom. vol ii.

Of all thys deckdom feyr
That ylke lady ys eyr;
And come of knyghtes kenne,
Sche is meke and boneyre,
Therefore we beth in despeyre,
That sche be dyght to synne.
Lybeaus Disconus. Ib. vol ii.

BO'NFIRE. Hickes in his Diction. Island. says that Bern-fyr, whence our Bone-fire, by change of a letter of the same organic utterance (namely l into n) is from Bal-fyr, rogus; Sax. Bæl; Isl. Baal, incendium. The glossarist to G. Douglas adopts this opinion, and it is transcribed into Lye's edition of Junius, without comment. But Junius himself, in his Gloss. Goth. in v. Baluyan, torquere, (with which he considers the A. S. Bæl to be connected) intimates nothing of the kind. He indeed produces (in consistency with this connexion) instances of the usage of the A. S. Bælfyr and Baellilyse (i. e. blaze) in application to the fires lighted by Abraham, to burn his only son, and by Nabuchodonozor to burn the three young men.

There is no evidence that such a word as Banfyr ever existed. The etymology proposed by Skinner certainly accords better with our more common usage of the word, and is more simple in itself. "Ignis festus, q. d. bonus, vel bene ominatus ignis, i. e. Fr. G. un bon feu;"

A boon-fire, a fire of joy or gladness; generally, a fire voluntarily kindled as a token.

This moneth was reported all the realme ouer, that the quene was deliuered of a prince, for ioy whereof, in many places thei sang Te Deum, and made bonefires.
Fabyan. Quene Marie, an. 1555

When tidynges of this notable victory was blowen into Englande, solempne processions and other praysinges to Almightie God, with bonefires and dancis were ordeined in euery towne, citee and borough.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 3.

& so he died of euell diseases. But they made him no bonefire, like the bonefires of his fathers.
Bible, 1551. 2 Chron. c. 21.

When hee beheld any bonfires made for ioy of his fathers victories, he would weepe, saying, my father will conquer all and leaue nothing for me to conquer.
Stowe. Memorable Antiquities. Alexander the Great.

I venture to assure you in the name of the whole neighbourhood, that we will at our next meeting hold a day of thanksgiving on that account, and conclude the evening with a bonfire of Dawk's, Dyer's, and Post-boys.
Tatler, No. 217.

Do you feel any, even the least, warmth, in the idea of a bonfire, a burning mountain, or the general conflagration?
Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 11.

BO'NGRACE. The Fr. Bonne-grace, Cotgrave says, is the uppermost flap of the downhanging tail of a French hood; and hence detorto sensu, according to Skinner our Bongrace, a frontal or covering for the foreheads of infants to defend them from injury, when they fall; so called because they seem graceful or becoming to them. Baret considers it to have been a mere umbrella or umbraculum "to keepe off the sunne."

———What can my face,
That is no better than a ragged map now
Of where I have march'd and travell'd, profit me:
Unless it be for ladies to abuse, and say
'Twas spoil'd for want of a bongrace when I was young.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 1.

BO'NIFY. } Fr. Bonifier, from the Lat.
Bo'NIFORM. } Bonus, and fio; to become, or cause to become, good; to do good, to benefit. Cudworth is sole authority.

This must be acknowledged to be the greatest of all arts, to bonifie evils, or tincture them with good.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 221.

Knowledge and truth may likewise both be said to be bonaform things, and of kin to the chief good, but neither of them to be that chief good itself.—Id. Ib. p. 204.

BO'NNET, v. } Fr. Bonnet; Sp. Bonete;
Bo'NNET, n. } Dut. Bonet; Sw. Bonad. The Sw. Bonad, Ihre deduces from Sw. Bo, boa, to prepare, to provide. Wal bodd, he observes, is well clothed; i. e. well prepared or provided, (sc.) against the cold; and hence, Bonad, a clothing, a covering: Hufvud bonad, tegmen capitis;

A clothing or covering of the head.

Bonnet is also applied to certain small sails attached to the larger sails.

For though some be lidder, and list for to rayle,
Yet to he vpon me they can not preuayle.
Then let them vale a bonet of their proud sayle.
Skelton. Against Venemous Tongues.

Lete youre chaplayne auayle hys bonet, & receyue hym wyth reuerence, for here nowe he commeth.
Bale. Apology, fol 22.

They shall haue fayre lynnen bonnettes vpon their heades, and lynen breches vpon their loynes.
Bible, 1551. Ezek. c. 44.

This same day the Salamander being vnder both her corses and bonnets, happened to strike a great whale with her full stemme.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 77.

As for veiling bonnet before great rulers and magistrates, or within their sight, Varro saith, it was a fashion at first not commaunded for any reverence or honour thereby to be done unto governours, but for health sake; and namely, that men's heads might be more firme and hardie, by that ordinarie use and custome of being bare
Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 6.

Hee hath deserued worthily of his country, and his assent is not by such easie degrees as those, who hauing been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted, without any further deed, to haue them at all into their estimation.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

Thus the vast jetting coat and small bonnet, which was the habit in Harry the Seventh's time, is kept on in the yeomen of the guard, not without a good and politick view, because they look a foot taller, and a foot and an half broader.—Spectator, No. 109.

BO'NNY. } Not in our old lexicons. It is Bo'NNILY. } common in our old ballads and Bo'NNINESS. } romances. Fr. Bon, bonne, good; good, in any respect;

Having good features, good complexion, good form, well made; having good and manly dispositions. See BOON.

Their goynge out of Britanye was to be come honest Christen mennys wyues, and not to go on pylgrymage to Rome, and so become byshoppes bonilasses or prestes playferes.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

And every little grass
Broad itself spreadeth,
Proud that this bonny lass
Upon it treadeth.—Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

So blyth and bonny now the lads and lasses are,
That ever as anon the bag-pipe up doth blow,
Cast in a gallant round about the hearth they go.
Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 27.

We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue:
And that the Queenes kindred are made gentle folkes.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 1.

O bonnie bonnie was her mouth,
And cherry were hir cheiks,
And clear clear was hir zellow hair,
Whereon the reid bluid dreipe.—Edom of Gordon. Percy.

He bad his folk fyghte harde,
With speare, mace, and sweord;
And he wolde, after fyght,
Bonie londis to heom dyght.
Kyng Alisaunder, l. 3903. Weber, vol. i.

Your bonynes, your bewtie bricht,
Your stately stature, trim and ticht,
Your properties dois all appeir.
My senses to illude. Philotas. Jamieson, in v.

BO'OBY. } Junius thinks that Booby has
Bo'OBYISH. } the same origin as the Scotch Bowbard; namely, the Gr. Βουβαρας, as heavy as an ox; or, as Hesychius interprets, a great, senseless fellow, (from Βους, an ox; and Βαρος, heaviness.) Ruddiman derives Bowbard, from the Lat. Bubo, an owl.

The Eng. Booby is probably no more than an emphatic repetition of boy, (sc.) boy, boy; a boy indeed, a mere boy, having none but boyish, childish qualities and dispositions; a simpleton.

The penguin is called booby, from its stupidity, when in danger of being killed.

In ancient Greece, she says, when Sappho writ,
By their applause the critics show'd their wit,
They tun'd their voices to her lyric string;
Though they could all do something more than sing.
But one exception to this fact we find,
That booby Phaon only was unkind.
Prior. Epilogue to Mr. Manley's Lucius.

The booby, when it comes to his turn, appears quite stupid and insensible. The company divert themselves with his confusion; and sneers, winks and whispers are circulated at his expense.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 82.

BOOK, v. }
Book, n. }
Bo'OKFUL. }
Bo'OKISH. }
Bo'OKISHLY. }
Bo'OKISHNESS. } Ger. Buch; Dut. Boek; Sw. Book; A. S. Boc, and also Boc-ian, to book. In A. S. Boc is also a beech tree. Hence it has been presumed by Skinner, amongst others, that our ancestors wrote upon the bark of the beech tree (fagnis corticibus, Skinner), and that the name thus originated. Wachter, supported by learned names, ascribes to it an origin similar to that of the Lat. Volumen, (from Volvere, to roll,) viz. from the Ger. Bug-en; A. S. Bug-an, flectere, convolvere; to bow, to bend, to fold.
Bo'OKLESS. }
Bo'OKMAN. }
Bo'OKWORM. }

To be well booked, in Gower, is to be well read in books; learned in books, booklearned:—bookman, a man who reads many books; learned in books. A book-worm, (met.) one who feeds on, delights in books.

To book, in modern usage, is to write into a book.

In bygynnynge of this boc me may rede, and nogt lye
Hou muche lond ech of hem adde to ys partye.
R. Gloucester, p. 227.

Thus my boke gan telle, scho tok grete vilanie
Of the Londreis alle, whan scho of London went.
R. Brunne, p. 216.

Wel may the barn blesse, that hym to book sette
That lyvynge after lettrure, savede hym lyf and soule.
Piers Ploughman, p. 236.

And if there any aske me
Whether that it be he or she,
Now this booke, which is here
Shall hite, that I rede you hire
It is the Romaunt of the Rose
In which all the art of loue I close.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

She was well kepte, she was well loked,
She was well taught, she was well boked:
So well she sped hir in hir youth,
That she of euery wysedome couth.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

As for the others which had not yet by baptisme booked themselues as souldiers, to fight vnder the baner of Christes capitayne, none durst company with them.—Udal. Acts, c. 5.

——— Lay adoune
Thy conference with bokishe muse,
and let the shrewe go frowne,
That thow maist feede yfeare, vpon
thy hardly purchasde praye.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

He also remembred this, that his pleasures in reading books were more frequent, while he remembred but little of yesterdays study, and to-morrow the book is new, and with its novelties gives him fresh entertainment, while the retaining brain lays the book aside, and is full already.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 22.

The young stripling, rather of nature addicted to valiantness than wedded to bookishnesse, choosed to be a traveller.
Hollinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1536.

What needes me care for anie bookish skill,
To blot white papers with my restless quill.
Bp. Hall, b. ii. s. 2.

Dul. You two are book-men: can you tell by your wit, what was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not fiue weekes old as yet?—Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 1.

But of all books, the book of God was that, in which she was most delighted and employed; and which was never, for any considerable time, out of her hands.
Atterbury. Sermon on the Death of Lady Cutts.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears
And always listening to himself appears.
Pope. Essay on Criticism, pt. i.

This Will. looks upon as the learning of a gentleman, and regards all other kinds of science as the accomplishments of one whom he calls a scholar, a bookish man, or a philosopher.
Spectator, No. 105.

These poring bookworms will run you a long detail of every injured prince and state that sued to the Roman Senate for protection, but know nothing of the four Indian Kings that were lately here.—Tatler, No. 278.

It is another advantage of reading, that we may review what we have read; we may consult the page again and again, and meditate on it at successive seasons in our serenest and retired hours, having the book always at hand.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 2.

The number of manuscripts, far exceeding those of any other book, and their wide dispersion, afford an argument, in some measure to the senses, that the Scriptures anciently, in like manner as at this day, were more read and sought after than any other books, and that also in many different countries.—Paley. Evidences, pt. i. c. 9.

BOOM, v. Applied, as bumble by Chaucer, and bump by Dryden, to the noise of the bittern. See to BOMB, and BITTERN.

To boom, is also applied to the noise and the roar of the waves.

Philomel chants it whilst it bleeds,
The bittern booms it in the reeds;
And reynard ent'ring the back yard,
The Capitolian cry is heard.—Cotton. Night Quatrains.

With ceaseless hazard and fatigue oppress,
Dismay and anguish ev'ry heart possess;
For, while with sweeping inundation o'er
The sea beat ship the booming waters roar,
Displac'd beneath by her capacious womb,
They rage their ancient station to resume.
Falconer. Shipwreck.

BOOM. A long pole or beam; and to boom off, to keep, to push off with a boom or pole. Used (met.) by North.

This made the whole party engage, as pro aris et focis, with all the skill and interest they had, to boom off this fire ship, and save their friend, [Stephen Colledge.]
North. Examen.

BOON, adj. Fr. Bon, bonne. A boon blade or companion, a Fr. Bon compagnon. Bonus (l. e.) lepidus, facetus et hilaris socius, (Skinner.)

A pleasant, witty, merry companion. See BONNY.

A boon companion, to his liquor given,
Come thither with his neighbours to be shriven.
Uncertain Author. Ellis, vol. iii. The Shrift.

My darlinge goulde, my leauest gueste,
my solace and my glee,
He is the bone companion,
its he that cheares vp me.—Drant. Horace, Sat. 1.

This Tho. Chaloner was as far from a Puritan or Presbyterian, as the east is from the west; for he was a boon companion, was of Harry Marten's gang, was of the natural religion, and loved to enjoy the comfortable importances of this life without any regard of laying up for a wet day, which at his last he wanted.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

BOON, s. A. S. Bene; Sw. Bon. In Luke, i. 13, the Gr. δεησις, Lat. deprecatio, are in A. S. version rendered bene. It appears, Skinner thinks, to be from the Lat. Bonum; and is always applied to—

Some good or benefit either asked or granted.

To boon or beun, (Ray,) to do service to another as a landlord; and boon days, (Brocket,) those days which tenants are obliged to employ for the benefit of their lord, gratis, are from the Fr. Abonnir or Abonner, to make good or do good unto; to make good one thing with another; to compound with. See Cotgrave.

The kyng ne hulde that bute a lutel, he grantede hys bone.
R. Gloucester, p. 116.

The knyghtes wel yarmed weude hem out anon,
And, thoru boue of Seyn Wolston, & thoru God's grace,
Hii nowe & ouercome vyf thousend in the place.
R. Gloucester, p. 386.

Saturnus sayde: Daughter, hold thy pees.
Mars hath his wil, his knight hath all his bone.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2671.

Placebo came, and eke his frendes sone,
And ariderst he bade them all a bone
That non of hem non argumentes make
Agein the purpos that he hath ytake
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9452.

Wherefore I come to seeke out care,
beseeching him of courtesie,
To cut the thread which cannot weare,
by panges of such perplexitie.
And but he graunt this boone of mine,
thus must I liue and euer pine
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

Assisted by the former bourne
Persist, my muse, to tell
How by the Normane conquest here
Another world befell — Warner Albion's England, b. v.

And now when Elijah findes himselfe treading on his last earth he profers a munificent boone to his faithfull servant, Aske what I shall doe for thee before I am taken from thee.
Bp Hall. Cont. The Rapture of Elijah.

Most spoil the boon that nature a pleas'd t'impart,
By too much varnish, or by want of art.
Fenton. Epistle to Mr. Lambard.

He that freely offers a rich boon is no less to be accompted a benefactour and liberal, although his gift be refused, than if it were accepted.—Barrow, vol iii. Ser. 40.

——— Theirs is indeed
A teaching voice; but 'tis the praise of thine
That whom it teaches it makes prompt to learn,
And with the boon gives talents for its use.
Cowper. Task, b v.

If you mean to please any people, you must give them the boon which they ask, not what you may think better for them, but of a kind totally different.
Burke. On the Conciliation with America.

BOOR. Belgarsit. Belgarsitly. } A.S. Buend; Dut. Boer; Ger. Bauer. A.S. Bure, is found in composition as Gebure, a countryman, a tiller of the land, from the A.S. Byan; Dut. Boer, from Bouwen; Ger. Bauer, from Bauen, habitare, colere, incolere. See the example from Spelman.

A rustick, a clown; a rude, uncivilized, person.

Our Saxons otherwhile did term them, like the Dutchmen, boors, that is, such as live by tilth or grasing, and by works of husbandry —Spelman. On Feuds and Tenures, c. 7

Neere to the shore that bord'red on the rocke
No merry swaine was seene to feed his flocke,
No lusty neat-heard thither drove his kine,
No boorish hog-heard fed his rooting swine.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

The people of Holland may be divided into these several classes: the clowns, or boors (as they call them) who cultivate the land: the mariners, &c.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 4.

But though they make the greatest appearance in the field, and cry the loudest, the best on't is they are but a sort of French Huguenots, or Dutch boors, brought over in herds, but not naturalized —Spectator, No. 62.

A healthful body with such limbs I'd bear
As should it be graceful, well proportion'd, just,
And neither weak, nor boorishly robust
Fenton. Martial, b x. Ep 47

There sit, involv'd and lost in curling clouds,
Of Indian fume, and guzzling deep, the boor,
The lackey and the groom.—Cowper. Task, b iv

The boorish driver leaning o'er his team
Vocif'rous, and impatient of delay.—Id. Ib. b. i.

BOOT, v. Boot, s. Bootless. Bootlessly. Booty. } A.S. Betan or Botan; Dut. Boeten; Ger. Batten; Sw. Bota. To superadd, to substitute, to supply, to atone for, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something else. See Tooke, i. 291.

And more generally; to compensate, to reward, to bestow or confer some benefit or advantage upon, to serve or be of service to. To boot is the infinitive, and is equivalent to—in addition. What boots it? what profits, what benefit is it? what avails it? Boot and booty are the same; viz. acquisition, gain, profit, advantage; the latter applied to that which is acquired or gained from an enemy; as plunder, pillage. To play booty, is to play apparently to the gain or advantage of another.

Bootless,—profitless, useless.

If so be that they wolden yeve swiche pounsoned and dagged clothing to the poure peple, it is not convenient to were for hir estate, ne suffisant to bote hir necessitee, to keepe hem fro the distemperance of the firmament.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The cause yknowe, and of his harm the rote,
Anon he gave to the sike man his bote
Id. Prologue, v. 425.

Nor that I may encresen hire honour,
For she hireselven is honour and rote
Of bountee, next hire sone, and soules bote.
Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 1394

(Od Pandarus) alas what may this be
That thou dispared art, thus causeless,
What, lieth nat thy lady, benedicite,
Now wost thou so that thou art graceless
Such eual is not alway boteless Id. Troilus, b. i.

But netheles or he forthe went
A fyry darte me thought he sent
And threwe it through mine herte roote
In hym fonde I none other boote.—Gower. Con. A b. i.

Lyke as the larke within the Marliana foote
With piteous tunes doth chirp her yelden lay,
sing I now, seyng no other boote.
Incertaine Auctors. The Louer sheweth, &c.

(As Ofeil sayth) if thou percase
from one sinne wouldste be gone,
And therby happe into a worse,
that were a bootlesse case.—Drant. Horace, Sat 2.

Where mighty power, doth ouerrule the right,
Where iniuries, do foster secret grudge,
Where bloudy sword, makes euery booty prize,
Where banqueting, is compted comly cost.
Gascoigne The Steel Glas.

Then after counsail take he gaue them a penon of Sainct George and bad them aduenture (of which they were called aduenturers) and farther bad them that if they got any botie they should euer bryng it to tharmy, and thei should be payd to the vttermost —Hall. Hen. VIII, an. 14.

Straight, captiue kinges are hald in sight
with punyand armes behinde
The wagon, coche, horselitter, barge, to followe are assinde
The captiue booties must be seene,
all things to please the eye.
Drant Horace, b. ii. Epistle to Augustus.

Why then doest thou, O Man, that of them all
Art Lord, and eke of nature soverains,
Wilfully make thyselfe a wretched thrall,
And waste thy ioyous howres in needeless paine,
Seeking for daunger and adventures vaine?
What boots it al to haue and nothing use?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b ii c. 6

A man's heaviness is refreshed long before he comes to drunkenness; for when he arrives thither, he hath but changed his heaviness, and taken a crime to boot.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

What boots it at one gate to make defence,
And at another to let in the foe
Effeminatly vanquisht? Milton. Samson Agonistes

And as soone as they [Romulus and Remus] grew once to some bignesse, it was no boot to keepe them within doores, nor to set them idle to tend the cattell, for they would use to hunt abroad in the forrest.—Holland. Livie, p. 5.

Seeing he would not have those about him who were cowardly affected, what boot was it to keep among his souldiers men suspected?—Id. Plutarch, p. 1009.

Whilest the one parte of their army went a foraging and boote-haling the other part stayed with Martheisia to safegard the country of Asia
Stowe. Memorable Antiquities. Amazones.

During which time her gentle wit she plyes,
To teach them truth; which worshipt her in vaine,
And made her th' Image of Idolatryes;
But, when their bootlesse zeale she did restrayne,
From her own worship, they her asse would worship fayn.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Knowing it bootlesse to grieve at things past, and having learned by experience, that all safety in extremities consisteth in taking of time.—Sir F. Drake Revived, p. 60.

Good nymph, no more, why dost thou bootlessly
Stay thus tormenting both thyself and me?
Fanshawe Pastor fido, p. 133.

Which when the soldier finds his hopes in vain,
So rich a booty forced to forsake,
To put himself and pris'ner out of pain,
He on the sudden stabs him, and doth swear,
Would th'ave his ransom, they should take it there.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

No more could he endure covetousness: for if sometime he gave his men leave to go a booting, his meaning was, that whatsoever they got should be bestowed in furnishing of arms.—North. Plutarch, p. 927.

They saw the city open lay,
An easy and a bootless prey.—Sprat. Plague of Athens

——— Witness the toil,
The blood of ages, bootless to secure,
Beneath an empire's yoke, a stubborn isle,
Disputed hard, and never quite subdued
Thomson. Liberty, pt iv

The next, whose fate drew on, was Sir James Desmond, who, on the fourth of August in the above-mentioned year [1680], having made an inroad upon Muskerry, and taken a great booty from Sir Cormac Mac Teige, sheriff of Cork, the said sheriff making head against him, recovered the booty, wounded Sir James mortally, and took him prisoner.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh, p. 14.

I have set this argument in the best light I can, that the ladies may not think that I write booty.
Dryden. Discourse on Epick Poetry

If it be indeed an incendiary letter, what if you and I, Sir, go there; and, when the writer comes to be paid for his expected booty, seize him?
Goldsmith. The Good Natur'd Man.

BOOT, n. Boot, v. } Fr. Boter, to pull on boots, or put boots on, (Cotgrave.) Skinner prefers the A.S. Abutan, about, because boots go round or about the legs. It is more probably from A.S. Botan; Dut. Boeten, to boot, to superadd, to supply, to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something less.

The boot of a coach is something superadded to the coach, to convey additional luggage, &c.

Boots for the legs are an additional covering or protection for the legs.

His hotes souple, his hors in gret estat,
Now certainly he was a fayre prelat.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 206

Either of them hauyng an hatchet in their handes, and bootes with pykes turned vp —Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1

In the morenynge folowynge Charles came boted and spurred about viii. of the clocke, and asked if hys horse was sadelled.—Id. Ib. an. 6.

And bycause ye daye came on, we ordayned a hundred speares to abyde there to kepe oure horses and bootes, and the remynaunt of vs passed forthe foreby the Frenche bussshment.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 29.

My selfe have seene one named Athanatus, do wonderfull straunge matters in the open shew and face of the world, namely, to walke his stations upon the stage with a currace of lead weighing 500 pound, booted besides with a paire of huskins or greaves about his legges that came to as much in weight.—Holland Plinie, b. vii c 20.

Bion. Oh sir, his lackey, for all the world caparison'd like the horse with a linnen stock on the leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartred with a red and blew list.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii sc. 2

The horses (being young) took some affrightment, and running away so furiously, that one of them tore all his belly open upon the corner of a beer-cart; my nephew (who in this mean while adventured to leap out) seemeth to have hung on one of the pins of the boot.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 417

So he was put to the torture, which in Scotland they call the boots; for they put a pair of iron boots close on the leg, and drive wedges between these and the leg The common torture was only to drive these in the calf of the leg, but I have been told they were sometimes driven upon the shin bone.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1666.

The smith, the sadler's journeyman, the cook at the inn, the ostler, and the boot catcher, ought all, by your means, to partake of your master's generosity; thus his fame will reach from one country to another.
Swift. Directions to Servants.

Go on, brave youths, till in some future age
Whips shall become the senatorial badge,
Till England see her thronging senators
Meet all at Westminster, in boots and spurs.
Warton. Newmarket.

However, both mulish, and well booted folks
Came safe to the mountain, and cut down its oaks.
Byrom, Epist. 3.

BOOTH. Dut. Boede; an abode; from the verb, Beijden; A.S. Budan, to abide; manere, morare; or more immediately from the Dut. Bouwen, to build, to construct, (Skinner.) More probably because made of that which boweth or bougheth. See the quotation from Tyndall.

Booth, an house made of bowes.—Tyndall. Works, p. 11.

And whanne Jhesus passide fro thannes he sigh a man Matheu bi name sittynge in a tol-boothe, and he seide to him, sue thou me, and he roos and folowide him.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 9.

—— God wote the soothe
My feyre is not in suche a boothe.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And Jacob toke his iourney towarde Sucoth, and bylt him an house, and made boothes for his cattle.
Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 33.

To behold these sights and shewes, such a number of people resorted from all parts, as most of the strangers either within the streetes of the cittie or in the high waies without, were faine to abide within booths pitched of purpose.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 17.

And even they also make no certaine place of abode and habitation, but are called Scenitæ, of their tabernacles and booths which they make of haire cloths, and encampe under them when and where they list.—Id. Plinie, b. vi. c. 28.

Booths sudden hide the Thames, long streets appear,
And numerous games proclaim the crowded fair.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

Does not the sweat of the mason and carpenter, who toil in order to partake the sweat of the peasant, flow as pleasantly and as salubriously, in the construction and repair of the majestick edifices of religion, as in the painted booths and sordid sties of vice and luxury?
Burke. On the French Revolution.

BOPE'EP. Lusus puerilis, says Skinner, the sport of children; or perhaps of parent and child, hiding and peeping.

He sayth that elles we make the aũgell a lyer, that sayde he is not here, and also that els we make as though Chrystes bodye in hys ascencion did not goe vppe in the cloude into heauen from the earthe, but onely hydde hymselfe in the cloude, and played bo pepe, and taryed beneath still.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 841.

The woman wantonnesse, shee commes with ticing traine,
Pride in hir pocket places bo peepe, and bawdry in hir braine.
Gascoigne. Flowers.

(They) for sodaine ioy did weepe,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a King should play bo-peepe,
And goe the foole among.
Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

Your ancient conjurers were wont
To make her from her sphere dismount,
And to their incantation stoop;
They scorn'd to pore through telescope,
Or idly play at bo-peep with her.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

Just so, in life, he runs about,
Plays at bo-peep, now in, now out,
But hurts no mortal creature.—E. More. Ode to Garrick.

BO'RDELL. } Ger. Bordell; Dut. Bordeel;
Bo'RDELLO. } Fr. Bordeau; It. Bordello;
Bo'RDELLER. } Sp. Bordel, a brothel-house. Menage thinks the Old Fr. Bordeau is compounded of bord, the border or edge, and eau, water; because such places were heretofore au bord de l'eau, on the edge of the water. Wachter says, that Bordell, lupanar, is the diminutive of the A. S. Bord, a house; and properly signifies domuncula, a small house. Domuncula, he considers to have been so called, because the places for luxurious indulgences among the ancients, were tents or booths stationed on the banks of rivers. This fact, he observes, Menage has proved from Cicero, Orat. x. in Verrem, and Suetonius in Nerone.

May not bord-ell, applied not merely to places, but to persons, be derived from Bawd? (qv.)

And the same shal the man tel plainly, with all the circumstances, and wheder he hath sinned with commun bordel women or non, or don his sinne in holy times or non.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Or these that haunten simonie—
Or other baudes or bordeliers.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And he by name Bacchus hight,
Whiche afterwarde, whan that he might,
A waster was, and all his rent
In wyne and bordell he dispent.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

One Leonin it herde telle,
Whiche maister of the bordel was,
And had hym go a redie pas
To fetchen hir: and forth he went,
And Thaise out of his barge he hent,
And to the bordeler hir solde. Id. Ib. b viii.

But Tyberius, Nero, Caligula, Heliogabalus, & other semblable monsters, exhausted and consumed infinite treasures in bordell houses, and places, where abominations were vsed.—Elyot The Governour, b. ii. c. 10.

From the burdello it might come as well
The spittle, or pict-hatch.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 2.

BO'RDER, v. } Fr. Border; Dut. Boorden, Bo'RDER, n. } from Board, (qv. and also Bo'RDERER. } Aboard,) in its consequential usage:—

To approach, to accost, or accoast. See the example from the Book of Chronicles.

To be or come near upon, close to, close to the edge or confines of; also to surround with an edge or border.

In the netherest hemme or border of these clothes, menne redde ywouen therein, a Greekish A. that signifieth the life actiue, and aboue that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Greekish L. that signifieth the life contemplatife.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And then there was appoyntmẽt made betwene the emperoures of Constantinople and of Rome and the places assigned how farre the borders of either empire shuld reach.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 349.

In the same yere, Kyng Henry, with a stroge hoste, yode to Scotlonde, and made so cruell warre vpon Wyllyam, kyng of that londe, yt lastly he was takyn, and dyd to the sayd Henry recompensacion, in yealdinge vnto hym ye cytie of Carlill, the castell of Baburghe, the newe Castell vpon Tyne, with dyuerse other holdys and great parte of Northuberlonde, the whiche he hadde wonne from the borderers.
Fabyan. Chronicle, c. 236.

And the Lord styrred vp agnynst Jehorã ye spirite of ye Philistines & ye Arabiãs yt bordred on ye blacke mor.
Bible, 1551. 2 Chron. c. 21.

They bordered vpon his countrey, and were wont to inuade ye same vpon euery occasion.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 12.

There were no lawes to binde men to their obedience: but the commaundementes of princes were insteade of lawes, whose custome was rather to defend than enlarge the borders of their kyngdomes.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 1.

Inarus sonne of Sannyticus kynge of Lybyans, that be borderers to the countreye of Egypte, hauynge assembled a mightye puyssaance in his citie, entred into the sayde countreye of Egypte.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 36.

About which lodgings, tow'rds the upper face,
Ran a fine bordure circularly led,
As equal 'twixt the highest point and the base,
That as a zone the waist ingirdled.
Drayton. The Baron's Wars.

But all that pass'd without with ease was seen,
As if nor fence nor tree was plac'd between.
'Twas border'd with a field; and some was plain
With grass, and some was sow'd with rising grain.
Dryden. The Flower & the Leaf.

Nay even the excess of knowledge and wisdom, especially if attended with pride, as too often it is, is very dangerous, and does many times border upon distraction and run into madness.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 41.

It is most adviseable, when we are in the borders of death to provide for that state, which lieth just beyond it.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

Ralegh ask'd, if he thought the company he had with him were sufficient to take that town: the king thought they were, and proffer'd to assist him with all his borderers, if he would leave him a guard of fifty men upon his departure.
Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

—— Why to view
Would you thus cruelly those scenes unfold,
Which, without pain and horrour to behold,
Must speak me something more or less than man;
Which friends may pardon, but I never can!
Look back! a thought which borders on despair,
Which human nature must, yet cannot bear.
Churchill. The Conference.

—— They that dwell
Along the banks of Don's and Volga's streams;
And borderers of the Caspian, who renew
That ancient path to India's climes, which fill'd
With proudest affluence the Colchian state.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. iv.

BO'RDRAGINGS. Perhaps merely raging or ravaging the border.

Who hauing oft in battell vanquished
Those spoilefull Picts, and swarming Easterlings,
Long time in peace his realme established,
Yet oft annoyd with sundry bordragings
Of neighbour Scots, and forraine scatterlings.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

BORE, n. Perhaps this noun bore, applied to the rapid and noisy influx of the tide into a river or strait, is Baw-er, bawr, bore, from the loud noise which accompanies it. See Boreal, and Baw.

Tumbling from the Gallick coast, the victorious tenth wave
Shall ride like the bore over all the rest.
Burke. On Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

If from internal causes, as well as the consequence of hostilities the tide ebbed in 1793, it rushed back again with a bore in the following year.—Id. Ib. Let. 3.

BORE, v. } A. S. Bor-ian; Ger. Boren;
Bore, n. } Dut. Booren; Sw. Bora. Wach-
Bo'RER. } ter and Skinner think the Gr. Περαν, transfigere, whence the Latin forare, is the parent of this word.

To pierce or penetrate through, to make a hole or cavity through, to perforate: (met.) to tease by ceaseless repetition;—like the unvaried continued action of a borer.

Lo sir ye make ymaginacions I can not tell you what. But here is a wharle and it is round as the world is, and we shal not neede to ymagin an hole bored thorow, for it hath an hole bored through indeede.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 628.

Darrest thou drawe out Leuyathã with an angle, or bynde his touge with a snare, canst thou put a rynge in the nose of him, or bore his chaftes throw wyth a naule
Bible, 1551. Job, c. 41.

A peece as well renforst, as euer yet was wrought,
The brauest peece for breech and bore, that euer yet was bought.—Gascoigne. Complaint of Greene Knight.

The dreadfull blowe quite through his target droue,
And bored through his breastplate strong and thicke,
The tender skin it in his bosom roue,
The purple bloud out-streamed from the quicke.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bullloigne, b. ii. s. 79.

Duc. I read in's looks
Matter against me, and his eye reuil'd
Me as his abject object, at this instant
He bores me with some tricke.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act i. sc. 1

This said, a worke not worthy him, he set to of both feete,
He bor'd the nerves through, from the heele, to the ankle, and then knit
Both to his chariot, with a thong of white leather; his head
Trailing the center.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii

(Unworthy of himself and of the dead)
The nervous ancles bor'd, his feet he bound
With thongs inverted through the double wound.
These fix'd up high behind the rolling wain,
His graceful head was trail'd along the plain.—Pope. Ib.

Del. I saw a Dutch man breake his pate once
For calling him pot gun, he made his head
Have a boare in't like a musket.
Webster. The Dutchesse of Malfy, Act iii. sc. 3

Some are celebrated for a happy dexterity in tipping the lion upon them; which is perform'd by squeezing the nose flat to the face, and boring out the eyes with their fingers.
Spectator, No. 324.

Our careful monarch stands in person by,
His new cast cannon's firmness to explore.
The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
And ball and cartrage sorts for every bore
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 149.

Not such his ev'ning, who with shining face
Sweats in the crowded theatre, and, squeez'd
And bor'd with elbow points through both his sides,
Out scolds the ranting actor on the stage.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Another contrivance, equally mechanical, and equally clear, is the awl or borer fixed at the tails of various species of flies; and with which they pierce, in some cases, plants; in others, wood, in others, the skin and flesh of animals, in others, the coat of the chrysalis of insects of a different species from their own; and in others, even lime, mortar, and stone.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

BORE. } The past tense and past part. of
Born, or } the verb, to bear. Borne is—
Borne. } Borne, into life; brought forth, produced; into being, or existence.

For he was y*bore* at Rome, & of this londe's blod.
R. Gloucester, p. 90.

Therefore whanne Jhesus was borun in Bethleem of Juda in the daies of King Eroude, Lo astronomyens camen fro the eest to Jerusalem.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 2.

Whẽ Jesus was borne at Bethleem in Jurie, in the tyme of Herode the kynge, beholde there came wise men frõ the east to Jerusalẽ.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And he that wol han pris of his gentrie,
For he was boren of a gentil hous,
And had his eldres noble and vertuous,
And nil't himselven do no gentil dedes,
Ne folow his gentil auncestrie, that ded is,
He n' is gentil, be he duk or erl;
For vilains sinful dedes make a cherl.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 1683

Togeder han thise three hir trouthes plight
To live and dien eche of hem for other,
As though he were his owen boren brother.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,635.

Gregorie saith in his aprise,
It helpeth nought a man be bore,
If God's sonne were unbore.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Aristotle, we grete you well. Lettynge you wytte, that we haue a sonne borne, for the which we gyve due thankes vnto God not for that he is borne onely, but also for as moch as it happeneth hym to be borne you lyuinge.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 9.

We may therefore now well consider him born to instruct us by his excellent doctrine, and to guide us by his perfect example; born to merit God's mercy and favour toward us by an entire submission to God's pleasure; in the whole course of his life, and in the final resignation of it; born to renew and sanctifie our nature, to support and strengthen us in obedience to God's commandments, to succour us in temptations, to comfort us in distresses by his grace; born to rear himself from the grave for confirming our faith, and ensuring our hopes of salvation; born to ascend up above all the heavens to God's right hand, there effectually to intercede for us, thence liberally to dispense all heavenly blessings to us.—Barrow, vol iii. Ser. 43.

BO'REAL. Lat. Borealis, from Boreas, the name given to the north wind, απο της Βορης,—from its bellowing, roaring noise. See Vossius. See BORE, n.

The earls of Marche and Warwycke determined first to trye to London, as the chefe keye, and common spectacle to the whole reame, thinking there to assure themself of the east and west parte of the kingdome, as Kyng Henry & his faction nesteled and strongheed him and his alyes, in the north regions and boreal plage.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 39.

So from their own clear north, in radiant streams
Bright over Europe bursts the boreal morn.
Thomson. Autumn.

BO'ROUGH. Goth. Bairgan; A. S. Beorgan, birgan, byrgan: to bar, to defend, to fortify. See BURGH.

A Burg or Borough meant formerly a fortified town. (See Tooke, ii. 183.) And Verstegan says, "All places that in old time had among our ancestors the name of Bourroughs, were places one way or other fenced or fortified." (Restitution of Decayed Intellegence, c. 7.)

Generally—A place of defence or security. See BURROW.

This was eke four hundred yer, and four score, & throttene
Aftur that the borg of Rome first was mad iche wene.
R. Gloucester, p. 47.

Ne ys nogt semly forsoth in eyte ne in borwton
That usurers oth regratours, for eny kynne gestes
Be fraunchised for a free man, and have fulle name.
Piers Ploukman, p. 43.

Wherefore by secret meanys they apoynted a daye of assemble amonge theymselfe, & sodeynly well armyd entryd ye towne of Bruges, and slewe therein dyuers of ye cytys aduersaryes and some of the borough maisters of the sayde towne, such as they suspectyd to be of counceyll of the beuyinge of the sayde taske.—Fabyan. Caroli V. an. 1322.

The borrow-masters sonne told me, that he would go to Amsterdam with his lading of stockfish, who gaue me a barrel of strong beere, and brought it in aboord our ship himselfe.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. p. 295.

The said king therefore built there a borow, by the which he also erected a pallace for himselfe, making the burgesses there as free as any other burgesses of ye realme were.
Stowe. Hen. I. an. 1017.

Now the thing that terrified us, was the full moone shining all night long, and the flat levell and plaine fields not able to afford us, if we had been distressed and put to our shifts, any borough to shelter us.
Holland. Ammianus, p 114.

No office-clerks with busy face,
To make fools wonder as they pass,
Whisper deal nothings in his ear,
Lest some rogue borough monger there.
Cooper. The Retreat of Aristippus, Epist 1.

A borough is now understood to be a town, either corporate or not, that sendeth burgesses to parliament.
Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd. § 4.

BO'RREL, n. } Mr. Tyrwhitt derives it from
BO'RREL, adj. } the Fr. Bureau, which, Cotgrave says, is a thick coarse cloth, of a brown russet, or dark mingled colour. It appears to have been also applied to those who wore such coarse garments; to laymen.

This is to say, if I be gay, sire shrewe,
I wol renne out, my borel for to shewe.
Sire olde fool, what helpeth thee to spien?
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prol. v. 5938.

For, sire and dame, trusteth me right wel,
Our orisons ben more effectuel,
And more we seen of Cristes secree thinges,
Than borel folk, although that they be Kinges.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7451.

Thus I whiche am a borell clerke,
Purpose for to write a booke
After the worlde that wholome toke
Louge time in olde daies passed.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Had they themselues but light to see the ropes
And snares of Hell which for their feete are drest,
Because they pill and pole, because they wrest,
Bycause they couet more than borrell men.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

BO'RROW, v. }
BO'RROW, n. }
BO'RROWER. } A. S. Beorgan; Dut. Borghen; Ger. Bergen, to guard, to secure. (See BOROUGH.)
BO'RROWING. }
A borowe was formerly used for what we now call a security, any person or thing by which repayment is secured; and by which the lender is defended or guarded from the loss of his loan, (Tooke, ii. 185.) My faith to borwe; St. John to borwe; Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets,—My faith for a pledge; St. John, for a security. See the quotation from Spencer.

To borrow, in mercantile concerns, is to take or receive the money, or other property of another, upon a promise or pledge, or security given to repay or return it.

To take or receive without such a pledge;—a gentle term for—to steal, to thieve.

And borwede of hym thervppe an hundred thousend marc,
To wende wyth to the holy lond, & that was somdel starc
R. Gloucester, p. 393.

To binde him gode borwes, and sauf condut al so.
Id. p. 497.

Nien gere, sais my buke, lasted so grete sorrywe,
The bischop clerkes tuke, that lyues for to borrowe.
R. Brunne, p. 76.

Thow broughtest me borwe, my byddyng to fulfille
To lyve on me and lovye me, all thy lyve tyme.
Piers Ploukmon, p. 16.

This Palamon answerd, I grant it thee.
And thus they ben departed til a morwe,
Whan eche of hem hath laid his faith to borwe.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1622.

Maugre thin hed thou must for indigence
Or stele, or begge, or borwe thy dispence.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4524.

For which this marchant is to Paris gone
To borwe of certain frendes that he had
A certain franke, and som with him he ladde.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,262.

But loketh, for non negligence or slouth,
Ye tarie us here no lenger than to morwe.
Nay, quod this clerk, have here my faith to borwe.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,544.

Thus was he for the time in loye
Till that he shulde go to Troye:
But tho she made mochell sorowe
And he his trouth leyd to borowe
To come, and if that he line maie
Ageine, within a moneth daie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

That other [Prodigality] all his owne and more,
Ayene the wise mannes lore,
Yeueth and dispendeth here and there,
So that hym recheth neuer where,
While he male borowe, he woll dispende,
Tyll at last he saith, I wende. Id. Ib. b. v.

For ye shall vnderstande that at those dayes, by lycence graunted vnto the Jewes of the kynge, they might take by vsury of eury man that of theym wolde borowe money, xii d for a li. for a weke lendynge, & so of gretter & of smaller sūmes after that rate.—Fabyan. Hen. III. an. 1263.

And she [our lady] was borowe, sayd Robyn,
Betwene a knight and me,
Of a lytell money that I hym lent,
Under the grene wode tree;
* * * * * * *
The Monke swore a full grete othe,
With a sory chere,
Of the borowehode thou spekest to me,
Herde I never ere.
A Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode. Ritson.

Concernyng merchaundise, & chapmen, the lesse borowyng were among them, the better should the common wealth be.
Tyndall. Workes, p 215.

And not onelye lette them cary and conuay out with them al theyr owne, but lent theym also so great substaunce of theirs, that the Hebrewes as the Scripture saith in their going with that plentuous borowyng, spoyled the Egyptions.
Sir T. More. Workes, p 1295

Borh, in old Saxon signifieth a pledge or surety, and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith St. John to borrow, that is, for assurance and warranty.
Spenser. On Ireland.

And now she wishes she could borrow Esau's tongue as well as his garments, that she might securely deceive all the senses of him, which had suffered himselfe more dangerously deceived with his affection
Bp. Hall Cont. Of Jacob and Esau.

As for his panegyrick oration, he was in penning it ten years, and by the report of some, fifteen, which he is thought to have translated and borrowed out of Gorgias the Leontine and Lysias.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 758.

As I have seene some infants of the sword
Well knowne, and practiz'd borrowers on their word,
Give thankes by stealth, and whispering in the eare,
For what they streight would to the world foreweare.
B. Jonson. Epistle to Sir E. Sacrville

Fear not, ye gentle tribes, 'tis not the knife
Of horrid slaughter that is o'er you wav'd;
No, 'tis the tender swain's weel guided shears,
Who having now, to pay his annual care,
Borrow'd your fleece, to you a cumbrous load,
Will send you bounding to your hills again.
Thomson. Summer

There is a poorer creature in the world than this, and he is a borrower of snuff; a fellow that keeps no box of his own, but is always asking others for a pinch.
Tatler, No 33

Besides, as the English and Norman languages were concurrently used by our ancestors for several centuries together, the two idioms have naturally assimilated, and mutually borrowed from each other.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 21

Upon hiring or borrowing, the hirer or borrower, at the same time that he acquires a property in the thing lent, may also become indebted to the lender, upon his contract to restore the money borrowed, to pay the price or premium of the loan, the hire of the horse, or the like
Id Ib. b. ii. c 30.

BO'RSHOLDER, n. See the quotation from Blackstone.

So that tenne tythings make an hundred, and five made a lathe or wapentake, of which tenne, each one was bound for another, and the eldest or best of them, whom they called the Tythingman or Borsolder, that is, the eldest pledge became surety for all the rest.—Spenser. On Ireland.

One of the principal inhabitants of the tithing is annually appointed to preside over the rest, being called the tithingman, the headborough, and in some counties the borsholder or borough's elder, being supposed the discreetest man in the borough, town, or tithing.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. I. Introd. § 11

BO'SOM, v. }
BO'SOM, n. } A. S. Bosme; Dut. Boesem; Ger. Busem. Junius derives from Bo-an, Boorew, to feed, to nourish. Skinner; from the Fr. Poser, for Reposer, to rest, to lean upon; because infants rest and repose upon the bosom. Wachter says, those, whose ears are accustomed to the change of letters, will easily understand that Bosm may arise from fathm, and this fathm, from fassen, fatten, to seize, to embrace. In this uncertainty a new attempt to trace the word may be allowed.

In A. S. we have Bug-an, to bow; Bugsum, buhsum. Hence perhaps the A. S. Bosme. In Dut. Boogen, to bow; Boogsaem. Hence perhaps the Dut. Boesem. In Ger. Beugen, to bow; Beug-sam. And hence perhaps the Ger. Busem. In confirmation, it may be remarked, that the Lat. Sinus and the Gr. Κολπος, are the bosom, and also a bay or bow.

Bosom then may be so called from its form or shape; bowing, bending, curving, arching. It is also applied to that within or beneath the bosom; as the heart,—the feelings or passions, the affections, the desires of the heart. To bosom,—

To store, to treasure up in the bosom, to seat or fix deeply; to store or conceal, to shelter. See EMBOSOM.

A bosom friend; a friend of our affections; a friend affectionately, especially, beloved. And so of other compounds.

No man sigh euere God, no but the oon bigetun sone, that is in the bosum of the fadir, he hath teeld out.
Wiclif. John, c. 1.

No man hath sene God at any time The onely begotten sonne whiche is in the bosome of the father, he hath declared him —Bible, 1551. Ib.

O seruant traitour, false of holy hewe,
Like to the nedder in bosom slie untrewe,
God shelde us alle from your acquaintance!
Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9659.

My fits are like the feuer ectick fits,
Which one daye quakes within and burnes without,
The next day heate within the bosom sits,
And shiuering colde the body goes about.
Gascoigne. The Passion of a Louer.

Thou wilt the wylie braine, that aught is bent
To fowle suspect and spot of fell destrust,
Perswade that here something of him was ment,
And jealous coales unto his bosome thrust.
Turbervile. To the Rayling Route, &c.

Reg. I am doubtful, that you have been conjunct
And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act v. sc. 1.

——Bosome vp my counsell,
You'l finde it wholesome —Id. Hen. VIII. Act i. sc. 1.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts.
Milton. Comus, l. 368.

——If you can pace your wisdome
In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shal haue your bosome on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, reuenges to your heart
And general honor —Shakes. Meas for Meas. Act iv. sc. 3.

Now with your swords their traytors bosoms lance,
And with their blood wash out that ancient stain,
And make our earth drunk with the Englishh gore,
Which hath of ours oft surfeited before
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

King No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceiue
Our bosome-interest: goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 2.

There must be needs a like proportion
Of lyniaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me thinke that this Anthonio
Being the bosome-louer of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 4.

The fourth privilege of friendship is that which is here specified in the text, a communication of secrets. A bosom-secret and a bosom friend are usually put together.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

As long as they do what they have no great temptation to allure them from doing; or omit that sin to which they are under no strong bias; they foolishly imagine that inclination and bias to another sin will be excuse enough for their darling, and bosom-vice.—Hoadly. Of Acceptance, Ser. 7.

And such a gift, a vengeance so design'd
As suits the council of a god to find,
A pleasing bosom-cheat, a specious ill,
Which feel the curse, yet covets still to feel
Parnell. The Rise of Woman.

Let eastern tyrants, from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom-slaves, meanly possess'd
Of a mere, lifeless, violated form.—Thomson. Spring.

Fain would I sing (much yet unsung remains)
What sweet delirium o'er his bosom stole.
When the great shepherd of the Mantuan plains
His deep majestick melody 'gan roll.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii.

There is a certain pleasure in giving vent to one's grief; especially when we pour out our sorrow in the bosom of a friend, who will approve, or, at least, pardon our tears.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. viii. Let. 16.

Are there (still more amazing!) who resist
The rising thought? who smother, in its birth,
The glorious truth? who struggle to be brutes?
Who through this bosom-barrier burst their way,
And, with revers'd ambition, strive to sink?
Young, Night 8.

BOSKE. } Also written Buske, busky.
BO'SCAGE. } See BUSK.
BO'SKY, adj. } A bush.

The enemie which shall come this way to winne the citie, must come marching euer land a good way vpon a sandie banke or bay, where the sea lyeth on the one side, and a groue or boske of wood on the other side.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 550.

In the dawning of the next day, we might plainly discern that it was a land flat to our sight, and full of boscage, which made it shew the more dark.—Bacon. New Atlantis.

Cer. Haile, many-coloured messenger
Who with each end of thy blewe bowe do'st crowne
My boskie acres, and my vnshrub'd downe,
Rich scarph to my proud earth.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

Com. I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every hoary bourne from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood.
Milton. Comus.

BOSS, v. } It. Bozza. "Bosse, Fr. from
Boss, n. } Pusa, which is formed from Φυσα,
BO'SSED. } Φυσαω, inflo; — Φυσα, pusa, busa,
BO'SSY. } buxsa, bosse. From Pusa, the Latins formed Pusula, pustula (a pustule)." Thus Menage. Kilian has Bosse, bokeler, umbo. Wachter explains Bosseln, globis et cornu ludere; but adds, that the proper meaning is trudere, impellere, propulsare. Skinner varies little from Menage; and adds that Boss is res quasi extumescens; any thing rising up. (See Exposs.) A boss is—

Any thing rising or raised up, swollen, projecting, thrusting or pushing forth.

Mr. Gifford, in a note on B. Jonson's Time Vindicated, observes that "Boss (The Boss of Billinsgate) is an head or reservoir of water. It frequently occurs in Stowe. 'The bosses of water at Belinsgate, by Powles Wharfe, and by St. Giles without Cripplegate, were made in the year 1423.' (Survey of London.)"

A broche she bare upon hire low colere,
As brode as is the bosse of a bokelere
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3265.

The serpents twaine, with hasted traile they glide
To Pallas temple, and her toures of heighte.
Under the feete of which the goddess sterne,
Hidden behinde her targettes bosse they crept.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii

Ouer that was a worke of purple veluet, embroudered richely with golde, cutte in knottes or foldes fastened, so that it bossed out and frounced very stately to behold.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 16.

Which importeth as much, as if the night were nothing els, but when the sunne hideth itselfe behinde some mountaine or other, or els, that albeit the earth toward the middest was globose and bossed, yet was it toward the poles flattish and plaine.—Saville. Tacitus. Historie, p. 205.

The other piece he gaue to one William Wright a sailor, for an old knife: which pieces of siluer were in forme like vnto the bosse of a bridle.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. iii. p 369.

The arched front did on vaste pillars fall;
Where all harmonious instruments they spie
Drawn out in boase: which from the astrigall
To the flat frise, in apt resemblance lie.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 6.

Oft, as with shining share he ploughs the field,
The swain astonish'd finds the massy shield,
On whose broad boss, and source of various woes,
He views engrav'd, the long-disputed rose
Fawkes. Bramham Park.

——— There they form'd
Their ardent virtues: in the boasy piles,
The proud triumphal arches: all their wars,
Their conquests, honours, in the sculptures live.
Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

BO'TANY. } Fr. Botanique; It. Botanica; Sp. Botanico; Gr.
BO'TANIST. } Βοτανη, a herb, herbage;
BOTA'NICK. } that which is fed upon;—
BOTA'NICAL. } from Βοσκω, to feed.
BOTANO'LOGER. }

Knowledge, science of herbs, of plants; of vegetable nature.

I have chosen to follow the methods of Tournefort and Boerhaave, who have written so well on the subject of botany, that their works are now generally read by every one who pursues that study.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary, Pref.

Therefore were there some counterfeit writings obtruded also under that specious title; such as that ancient botanick book mentioned by Galen.—Cudworth. Intel. Syst. p. 326.

April 12, 1694. I went to visit Mr. Waller, an extraordinary young gentleman of greate accomplishments, an excellent botanist.—Evelyn. Diary.

Where, with bright marbles big and future pomp,
Hymettus spread, amid the scented sky,
His thymy treasures to the labouring bee,
And to botanick hand the stores of health.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. ii.

Then spring the living herbs, profusely wild,
O'er all the deep-green earth, beyond the power
Of botanists to number up their tribes.—Thomson. Spring.

Through botany, through every sylvan scene,
That various deck the vegetating plain,
Distinct, each species of peculiar frame,
Distinct, peculiar love and fondness claim
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. iii.

Thus botanists, with eyes acute
To see prolific dust minute,
Taught by their learn'd northern Brahmen
To class by pistil and by stamen,
Produce from nature's rich dominion
Flow'rs polyandrian, monogynian,
Where embryon blossoms, fruits, and leaves
Twenty prepare, and one receives.
Jones. The Enchanted Fruit

Whether at least a like ordination [the quincunx] were not in the garden of Solomon, probability may contest, answerably unto the wisdom of that eminent Botanologer, and orderly disposer of all his other works.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden.

BOTCH, v. } Junius thinks that the Dut.
BOTCH, n. } Boetsen, to bodge or botche, is BO'TCHER. } the frequentative of boeten, (see BO'TCHY. } BOOT,) to amend, to repair.
BO'TCHILY. } Botch, the noun, he and Skinner suppose to be from the Fr. Bosse; It. Bozza; but there appears to be no reason for assigning a different origin to these words. As now used—

To botch is to amend or repair, in patches, in clumsy pieces; to patch together clumsily, unsuitably; with pieces of a different quality or colour. And thus the noun may be applied to discoloured, disfiguring spots, tumours or eruptions.

It was now the Sabboth daye and the people religiously and with great deuocion rested fro the workes forbidden, which yet of theselues were not euil as for exaumple to go a iourneye, to kindle a fyer, to grynde theyr corne, to presse theyr wynes, or to botche vp theyr garment beeyng broken or seamerent.—Udal. Luke, c. 4.

The Lord shal smyte the with a myscheuous botche in the knees and legges, so that thou canste not be healed, euen from the sole of the fote vnto the toppe of the heade.
Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 28

Also the commune experiēce teacheth, that no man wyl put his sonne to a botcher to lerne, or he bynde hym prentyse to a tailour — Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 15.

I, neighbour, quoth the tayler (then he bent
His pace to me, spruce like a Jacke of Lent)
Your judgement is not scatne rent when you spend it,
Nor is it botching, for I cannot mend it
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

As Aaron grasping ashes in his hand,
Which scarcely cast into the open air,
But brings a murrain over all the land,
With scabs and botches such as never were
Drayton. Moses's Birth and Miracles, b. ii

And this conceit they feed with fond supposals that have not the least footing in Scripture: As that the Jews learnt this custom of divorce in Egypt, and therefore God would not unteach it them till Christ came, but let it stick as a notorious botch of deformity in the midst of his most perfect and severe law.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Ther. And those byles did runne, say so; did not the General run, were not that a botchy core.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 1.

Thus patch they heaven more botch'dly then old cloths.
This prettie sport doth make my heart to tickle
With laughter, and mine eyes with merry tears to trickle.
More. Psychathanasia, b. iii. c. 2. s. 67.

Nor ought nature or the world to be supposed so imperfect, as if it must be bungled and botched up every where after this manner.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 679.

I see, I see, 'tis counsel given in vain,
For treason botch'd in rhyme will be thy bane
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, pt. ii.

And nodes and botches in their rinds,
Have no effect to operate
Upon that duller block, your pate?
Hudibras to Sidrophel.

Why may we not inquire what is the most perfect of all, though the common botched and inaccurate governments seem to serve the purposes of society, and though it be not so easy to establish a new system of government, as to build a vessel upon a new construction?
Hume, pt. ii. Ess. 10.

Read over again my letter to the Lord Chancellor, and my last letter to yourself, and if they do not satisfy you that I am right in looking forward to a more substantial ecclesiastical reform, and in not promoting this botchy business, you must forgive me if I never say another word upon the business —Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, June 21, 1803

BOTH, adj. } Goth. Ba, bai; A. S. Ba,
BOTH, conj. } batwa; Ger. and Dut. Beyde; Swed. Bade. R. Gloucester writes Beye as well as Bothe. The origin of this word is unknown. Ihre thinks it is compounded of two synonymous words, ba two, and twa two. See Ihre in v. Bade.

Chaucer uses the expression, "your bother love," which Mr. Tyrwhitt observes might lead one to suspect that bother was the genitive of both, as aller of alle.

Aftur hys brother Camber hasteliche he sende,
And bothe with gret ost to ward the kyng wende.
R. Gloucester, p 23.

Now hadde kyng Lud, ys brother, gonge sones twei,
Androge and Tennant, that tho gonge were beye.—Id. p.47.

Whan he had hir wedded, he went also quik,
& oute of alle tho londes he kast the erle Edrik,
Of alle that tenement, that bothe the brethres ware
That longed to Sigiferd, & to Sir Morkare.
R. Brunne, p. 46.

And sith ys God of loue hath thee bestowed
In place digne vnto thy worthinesse
Stond fast, for to good port hast thou rowed;
And of thyself, for any heuinesse
Hope alway wel, for but if drerinesse
Or ouer hast our both labour shend
I hope of this to maken a good end.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

And ye shul bothe anon unto me swere,
That never mo ye shul my contree dere,
Ne maken werre upon me night ne day
But ben my frendes in alle that ye may.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1823.

Loue him made al prest to done her bide
And rather dien, than she should go
But Reason said him on that other side
Withouten assent of her, do nat so
List for thy werke she wouldе be thy foe
And sain, that through thy medling is yblow
Your bother loue, ther it was erst know.
Id. Troilus, b. iii.

Thus was the wenche and he of on assent,
And he wold feeche a feined mandement;
And sompne hem to the chapitre bothe two,
And pill the man and let the wenche go.
Id. The Frere's Tale, v. 6943.

The king said, for your bother ease,
In hir land i sal hir sese,
And sho sal hald hir land of the Iwaine & Gawin. Ritson. Rom. vol 1.

My Lorde (quod I) this lady here,
Whome I esteeme above the rest,
Doth knowe my guilte if any were.
Wherefore hir doome shall please me best
Let hir bee judge and jurour bothe,
To trye mee guiltless by myne oathe
Gascoigne. The Arraignment of a Louer.

BOTHER, v. } A word common in vulgar
BOTHER, n. } speech, but rare in writing. Perhaps the same as pother. Locke uses pother (qv.) exactly as Swift uses bother. And in the two quotations from Swift which follow, it matters not which way the words are written.

To pother is to make a pudder or rather a putter; (q.d.) a pounder; to raise a dust, as a horse running with speed, (Skinner.) Consequentially—

To be or cause to be as one involved in dust, in a cloud,—who cannot see his way; to perplex, to puzzle, to confound.

With ev'ry lady in the land
Soft Strephon kept a pother;
One year he languished for one hand,
And next year for another —Swift. Strephon & Flavia.

With the din of which tube my head you so bother,
That I scarce can distinguish my right ear from t'other.
Id. Ib.

BOTT. From the A. S. Bitan, to bite.

A grub that bites. See the quotation from Pliny.

If the same bee conveighed downe by a horne into the throat of horses and such like beasts, they will cure the wringing torments of the botts that fret and gnaw them in the bellies —Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 11.

His horse hip'd with an old mothy saddle, besides begnawne with the bots —Shakes. Tam. of the Sh. Act iii. sc 2.

At last a chapman approached, and, after he had for a good while examined the horse round, finding him blind of one eye, he would have nothing to say to him: a fourth knew by his eye that he had the botts.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 14

BOTTLE, n. Fr. Botteau, a bundle, or bottle, as of hay, (Cotgrave.) It is still common in the northern parts of England to call a truss or bundle of hay, a bottle. Skinner suggests that it may be a corruption of bundle.

Is that a coke of London, with meschance?
Do him come forth, he knoweth his penaunce;
For he shal tell a tale by my fey,
Altho it be not worth a botel hey.
Chaucer. The Manciples Prologue, v. 16,960.

BOTTLE, v. } Fr. Bouteille; It. Botiglia;
BOTTLE, n. } Sp. Botija; Low Lat. Buticula; Sw. Buteljie. Vossius
BOTTLED. } and Menage derive this word
BOTTLINGS. } from the Low Gr. BOUTTIS, which Skinner has no doubt is itself of northern origin. Lye and Serenius think that bottle is a diminutive of the A. S. Bytta, a butt or cask. See BUTT.

Bottle is the name of—

A vessel of various sizes, made of glass or other material, narrowing to a neck at the top, to receive the stopper.

——— And thus gate ich begge.
With oute bagge oth' botel.—Piers Ploughman, p. 77.

Neither men putten newe wyn in to olde botels allis the botels ben to broken and destryed, and the wyn ached out, but men putten newe wyn in to newe botels, and bothe ben kept.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 9.

There came two sculdiours, whyche going before with suche as had taken vp ye campe, had found water, and were carying of it in bottelles vnto their sonnes, whiche were sore afflicted for want of drinke behynde in the armye.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 166.

And found it hath been by experience, that in Fraunce, the wine bottles made thereof [yugh] for wayfaring men and travellers, have poysoned and killed those that drunke out of them.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 10.

Itha. Oh, mistress! I have the bravest, gravest, secret, subtitle,
Bottle-nosed knave to my master, that ever gentleman had.
Marlow. The Jew of Malta, Act iii.

They importun'd me to drink something before I went to bed, and upon my refusing, at last left a bottle of stingo as they called it, for fear I should wake and be thirsty in the night.—Tatler, No. 298.

Can they not juggle, and with slight
Conveyance play with wrong and right;
And sell their blasts of wind as dear
As Lapland witches bottled air?—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

A good butler always breaks off the point of his bottle-screw in two days, by trying which is the hardest, the point of the screw, or the neck of the bottle
Swift. Directions to Servants.

In the bottle, discontent seeks for comfort, cowardice for courage, and bashfulness for confidence.
Johnson. Life of Addison.

When calm around the common room,
I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume!
Rode for a stomach, and inspected,
At annual bottlings, corks selected.
Warton. The Progress of Discontent.

BOTTOM, v. } Dut. Bodem; Ger. Boden;
BOTTOM, n. } Sw. Botn. Wachter refers
BOTTOM, adj. } to the Ger. Pedden; A. S.
BOTTOMED. } Peththian, (whence our path;)
BOTTOMLESS. } to trample or tread upon, to
BOTTOMRY. } bruise with the feet.

Bottom, the noun, is that upon which we tread, stand, walk, or go; the lowest part; the part at the lowest depth. That upon which any thing stands, rests: upon which it is sustained or supported; the foundation, the ground-work.

To venture in the same bottom, is (met.) to run the same risk as those who have ventured to embark themselves or property in the same ship's bottom; and bottom is applied to the whole ship. For Bottomry, see the quotation from Blackstone.

To bottom is to rest, place, or stand upon; to fix, found, or establish.

He sllly toke it out, this cursed heine,
(Unweting this preest of his false craft)
And in the pannes botome he it laft.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,787.

Unto the well than went I me
And downe I louted for to see
The clere water in the stone
And eke the gravel which that shone
Doune in the botome, as siluer fine.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

But in her letter made she soch feasts
That wonder was & swore she loued him best
Of which he found but bottomlesse behestes
But Troilus thou maist now east and west
Pipe in an ivy leafe if that thee lest.—Id. Troilus, b. i

Por if a man wouldе in a bote
(Whiche is without botome) rowe,
He must nedes ouerthrowe. Gower. Con. A. b. i

They haue searched to come to the bottome of hys bottomles wisdome, and because they cánot attayne to that secrete and be to proude to let it alone, they go and set up freewill with the heathen philosophers.—Tyndall. Works, p. 19.

Wherefore their intent and purpose was, that the Duke of Parma in his small and flat-bottomed shippes, should as it were vnder the shadow and wings of the Spanish fleet, conuey over all his troupes, armour, and warlike prouision
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. p. 601

From Holland, Zealand, and from Flanders won
By weekly pay, three-score twelve bottoms came,
From fifty upward to five hundred ton,
For every use a mariner could name.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

To repeat God's judgments in particular, upon those of all degrees, which have played with his mercies, would require a volume apart. for the sea of examples hath no bottom
Raleigh. History of the World, Pref.

But this is certaine, that as he in heat of anger stepped hastily to the entrie or porch of the temple, and went a pace hee fell downe the staires, and so hurt his head that dashed against the bottom staire, that hee swooned withall, and lay for dead.—Holland. Livie, p. 284.

Yea such was the extremity of the tempest, that it appeared to us as if he had pronounced a sentence, not to stay his hand, nor to withdraw his judgment, till he had buried our bodies and ships also, in the bottomlesse depth of the raging sea.—Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p 39

Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom grass, and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis

——— This I have learnt
Tending my flocks hard i' th' hilly crofts,
That brow this bottom-glade.—Milton. Comus.

I mean, not barely comprehending what is affirmed or denied in each proposition (though that great readers do not always think themselves concern'd precisely to do) but to see and follow the train of his reasonings, observe the strength and clearness of their connection, and examine upon what they bottom.
Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, s 24

True or false, solid or sandy, the mind must have some foundation to rest itself upon, and, as I have remarked in another place, it no sooner entertains any proposition, but it presently hastens to some hypothesis to bottom it on; till then it is unquiet and unsettled.—Id. Ib. s. 6.

Besides, though slow of belief, he [Thomas the Apostle] was at the bottom honest and sincere, not led into those doubts which he entertained, by his lusts and vices.
Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 2

But now I come to look on death near at hand, and see beyond the grave, that is just under me, that bottomless gulf of eternity, methinks it a very hard thing to be sufficiently prepared for a change, that will transmit us to the barr of an omniscient judge, to be there doom'd to an endless state of either infinite happiness or misery —Boyle, s. 2. Med. 7.

We ought to be bottomed enough in principle not to be carried away upon the first prospect of any sinister advantage.—Burke. On the Policy of the Allies.

If those gentlemen stopped when they came to the brink of the gulph of guilt and public misery, that yawned before them in the abyss of these dark and bottomless speculations, I forgive their first errour.
Id. A Letter to a Member of the National Assembly

Bottomry, is in the nature of a mortgage of a ship: when the owner takes up money to enable him to carry on his voyage, and pledges the keel or bottom of the ship (partem pro toto) as a security for the repayment.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 30.

BOUGE. To bilge or bulge. (See BULGE.) Utres is by Holland rendered Bouges; i. e. something swelling or bellying out.

Which ancor cast, we soone the same forsooke,
And cut it off, for feare least therevpon
Our shippes should bouge.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Holland.

But in the ende, by grace and great manhode of ye kynge, which there was sore woundyd, and by his great comforte the Prēshemen were chasyd, and many of theyr shyppys bowyd & taken with many prysoners in them.
Fabyan. Edw. III. an. 1340.

Sir Thomas Knevet which was ready to haue borded the greate ship of Depe, sawe that the souereigne had missed the Caricke, which Sir Anthony Oughtred chased hard at the starne, and bowged her in diuerse places.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an 4.

The barcke perceiuyng this small Craer to bee an Englisheman, shot at hym and bouged hym, wherfore the Craer drewe streight to the greate ship, and sixe or seuen of the men, leapt into the barke.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 37.

Thus they launching out into the maine sea be either drowned there, their shippe bouged for that purpose, or els doe cast themselues ouer-boord headlong into the sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 86.

The Spaniards made no more adoe, but fastning their apparrell to bouges of lether like bladders, full of wind, and laying their bucklers thereupon, sat aloft and passed over nimbly.—Holland. Livius, p. 408.

For it soundeth not like a truth, that horsemen with their armor and horses safe could overcome so great a rage of the river, although we should graunt that all the Spaniards gat over upon blown bladders and leathern bouges.—Id. Ib. p. 420.

BOUGE. Fr. "Bouche, a mouth; also, a passage, entry, entrance, or overturn into. Avoir bouche à Court: to eat and drink scot-free; to have budge-a-Court, to be in ordinary at Court," (Cotgrave.)

Mr. Gifford observes, that "bouge of Court was an allowance of meat-and-drink for the tables of the inferior officers, and others who were occasionally called to serve and entertain the Court." (B. Jonson's Workes, vol. vii. p. 228. n. 1.) See Bown, for other examples of Bouge.

It appears to have meant merely free entrance or access, ingress and egress.

I am an officer, groom of the revels, that is my place.
Not. To fetch bouge of court a parcell of invisible bread, and beere for the players (for they never see it.)
B. Jonson. Masque of Augures.

BOUGH, or Bow } A.S. Bug-an, to bow, (qv.) The bow of a tree is so called, because it bows or bends from the stem or trunk.

And see it by ensample of trees in somer tyme
Theer som bowes bereth leves, and some bereth none.
Piers Ploukman, p. 277.

There might men does and roes ysee
And of squirels full great plentie
From bow to bow alway leping.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

The boistrous winds oft theire high bowes do blast,
Hott sighes in me continually be shed,
Wilde beastes in them, fierce loue in me is fed:
Unmounable am I and they stedfast.
Wyat. The Lover's Life compared to the Alpes.

And after that goodly disport was passyd, the kyng cõmaunded his officers to bryngе the mayer and his company vnto a pleasaunt lodge made all of greene bowys, and garnished with tables and other thinges necessary.
Fabyan. Edw. V. an. 1482.

Take hede least whiles thou dost labour to attein to the top, thou failest with the bowes which thou doest embrace
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 198.

Yet comfort comes againe, when from the roote
He sees a bough into the north to shoote,
Which, nourisht there, extends itself from thence,
And girds this iland with a firme defence.
Sir J. Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

I do not know whether I am singular in my opinion, but, for my own part, I would rather look upon a tree in all its luxuriancy and diffusion of boughs and branches, than when it is thus cut and trimmed into a mathematical figure.
Spectator, No. 414.

And burns Lorenzo still for the sublime
Of life? To hang his airy nest on high,
On the slight timber of the topmost bough,
Rockt at each breeze, and menacing a fall?
Young. Complaint, Night 5.

BOUGHT, or Bout. } From the A.S. Bug-an, to bow; to bend, to turn. See Bout.

The bought of a serpent; the flexures, bends, curves, folds or involutions.

The bought of the knee or elbow (in the north called beight) is the flexure or curvature of the knee or elbow. A winding bout;—an involution. Another bout;—another turn. The bout of a sling, is the bent leather upon which the stone or thing to be thrown is laid.

But bow all knees, now of her knees
My tongue doth tell what fancy sees
Whose bought inearv doth yield such sight,
Like cunning painter shadowed white.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

And, as shee lay vpon the durtie ground,
Her huge long taile her den all ouerspred,
Yet was in knots and many boughtes vpwound
Pointed with mortall sting.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

He passing by with rolling wreathed pace,
With brandisht tongue the emptie ayre did gride
And wrapt his scaly boughts with fell despight
That all things seem'd appalled at his sight.
Spenser. Virgile. Gnat.

Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God, and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling. [The Margin says, Hebr. in the midst of the bought of a sling.]
Bible. 1 Sam. xxv. 29.

Lap me in soft Lydian airs
Married to immortal verse;
Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out.—Milton. L'Allegro.

The different flexure and order of the joints might also countenance the same; being not disposed in the elephant, as they are in other quadrupeds, but carry a nearer conformity into those of man; that is, the bought of the foreleg, not directly backward, but laterally and somewhat inward; but the hough or suffraginous flexure behinde rather outward.—Browne. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

BOUGHT. The past tense and past part. of the verb, to buy, (qv.)

Wanne yt come byuore hym, he nolde therof nogt,
Nere yt no so lute worth, bote yt were dere ybogt.
R. Gloucester, p. 390.

O glotonie, full of cursednesse;
O cause first of our confusion,
O original of our damnation,
Till Crist had bought us with his blood again.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,432.

The wrath (as I began you for to say)
Of Troilus, the Greeks boughten dere,
For thousandes his hondes maden dey.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

BOUN, or Bound. } Ray,—To boun or unboun, is to dress, and undress; perhaps from the Dut. Bouwen, to build, to manure. Boon days, are those days which the tenants are obliged to employ for the benefit of their lord, gratis.—Boun (boun-ed), bound, are, in Scotch, and also in northern parts of England, very common words: Whither are ye bound? I am bound for such a place; the Gloss. to G. Douglas interprets Ready, adopting the etymology of Skinner, the A. S. Abund-en, expeditus, from the verb Bind-an, to bind; and, agreeing with him that it is a metaphor from military service, in which the men, when prepared for march, have all their baggage bound up, (whence he adds the Lat. accingi ad iter.) Dr. Jamieson thinks the true origin is the Sw. Boa, to prepare. Ihre interprets Rede-boen, rite paratus, (i. e. ready boun,) ready or already prepared; Far-boen, farda-boen, prepared for a journey, prepared to go. Ready boun is a common Scotch phrase, (and see the quotation from Ipomydon, infra.) The Sw. Boa is the Dut. Bouwen (proposed by Ray); Ger. Bauen; A. S. By-an, to build:—consequentially, to construct, to contrive, to provide, to prepare, also to till; or, as Ray says, to manure, to dress the land. Boun, bone, or boon, (see the quotations from R. Brunne and Piers Ploughman,) then, is—

Prepared, or provided, dressed, ready: and to be bound to any place;

Prepared or provided, furnished or supplied (with freight or cargo, as a ship bound to Brazil.) I am bound, to go to such a place, to do such a thing; prepared, ready, to go; on the start, on the way; ready to do it, on the point of doing it. In Spenser: "The way that does to heaven bound;" i. e. prepare, fit, lead, guide: and, generally, to be bound is—

To be on the way or voyage, on the road, in the course.

The erle wist it sone, in him was no defaute,
The barons were alle bone, to mak the kyng assaute.
R. Brunne, p. 292.

Leulyn ageyn the kyng & Dauid were alle bone,
To maynten forth the werre, & susteyn ther treson.
Id. p. 240.

And bed hem all ben boun, beggeres and othere
To wenden wt hem to Westmynstere.—P. Ploughman, p. 33.

[He] of adventure happed hire to mete,
Amid the toun, right in the quikkest strete,
As she was boun to go the way forth right
Toward the garden.—Chaucer. Frankeleine's Tale, 11,807.

Ipomydon said, "I shall you tell
At this covenant would I dwell,
Full fain I would be ready boun
To lead your queen, both up and down,
Fro her chamber to her hall.
Ipomydon. Life. Ellis. Rom. vol. iii.

O holy sire, quoth he, how shall I quight
The many favours I with thee have found,
That hast my name and nation redd aright,
And taught the way that does to heaven bound!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

His be that care whom most it doth concerne,
Sayd he; but whither, with such hasty flight,
Art thou now bound? Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 4.

Jan. 31. 1577. We took a Portugall, laden the best part with wine, and much good cloth.—bound for Brasil.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown:—
Say what you seek, and whither were you bound?
* * * * * *
Willing we sought your shores, and hither bound,
The port, so long desir'd, at length we found.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vii.

This cape [Blanco] lies in the lat. of 4° 15' south, and is always made by ships bound either to windward or to leeward.—Anson. Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

BOUNCE, v. Bounce, n. Bo'uncer. Bo'uncing, n. } Vox a sono ficta, says Skinner. Perhaps from Bounds, bounts, bounce. See Bound, infra, to which bounce is equivalent, and Scotch, to bount, in Jamieson.

Met. to boast; to crack.

This sodaine chaunge when he began to spye
And colde suspect into his minde had crept,
He bounst and bet his head tormentingly,
And from all company himself he kept.
Gascoyne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

They waste their winde in sighes,
they bleare their eyes with brine:
They breake their bulcks with bouncing grief,
their harts with lingring pine.
Turbervile. Of the Torments, &c.

With that he gave her a bounce
Full vpon the gorge.—Skelton. Ware the Hawke.

Yet still he bet and bounst vpon the dore,
And thundred strokes thereon so hideously,
That all the peece he shaked from the flore,
And filled all the house with feare and great vp-rore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

As savage beasts with keene and fell teeth kept up in grated cages, and made more fierce and cruell with their foule and filthie keeping, upon hope to get out, rush and bounce against the barres that turne and wind within their sockets.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 129.

Pel. —— To bestride
The frothy foams of Neptune's surging waves,
When blust'ring Boreas tosseth up the deep
And thumps a louder bounce.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act i. 1.

A sylvan life till then the natives led,
In the brown shades and green-wood forest lost,
All careless rambling where it lik'd them most;
Their wealth the wild-deer bouncing through the glade.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

As I was sitting in my chamber, and thinking on a subject for my next Spectator, I heard two or three irregular bounces at my landlady's door, and upon the opening of it a loud chearful voice inquiring whether the philosopher was at home.—Spectator, No. 383.

The heroines undertook the task,
Through lanes unknown, o'er stiles they ventur'd,
Rap'd at the door, nor stay'd to ask,
But bounce into the parlour enter'd.—Gray. Long Story.

At this information I could instantly perceive the widow bounce from her seat; but correcting herself, she sat down again, repressed by motives of good breeding.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 70.

BOUND. See Bind, Bond.

BOUND, v. Bound, n. Bo'unding-stone. } To bound, Skinner says, is from the Fr. Bondir, to be struck back, to leap back, to be dashed back, from the Lat. Undare. Abundare, Redundare, because a ball, when struck back, comment et remeat instar undarum. But Rebound, (to which he refers, and which he explains to signify—to be driven back as a ball,) he derives from the It. Rimbombare, to resound as an echo, from the Gr. Βομβος, βομβειν, to bomb, or hum.

Fr. "Bondir, to bound, to rebound, to leap, jump, jert, skip, rise (suddenly and swiftly) upward," (Cotgrave.)

So dreadfully he towards him did pas,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled brest,
And often bounding on the bruised gras,
As for great joyance of his new come guest.
Spenser. The Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 11.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girts he breaks asunder,
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like Heaven's thunder.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

'Tis strange! the pilot keeps his seat;
His bounding ship does so curvet,
Whilst the poor passengers are found,
In their own fears already drown'd.—Cotton. Winter.

——— This discourse did breath
The fiery boundings of his heart, that still
Lay in that gesture.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

For doe but note a wilde and wanton heard
Or race of youthful and vnhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

I've seen a huntsman, active as the morn,
Salute her earliest blush with sounding horn;
Pursue the bounding stag with op'ning cries,
And slight the timid hare, his easy prize.
Then, with the setting sun, his hounds restrain;
Nor bounding stag, nor timid hare obtain.
Blacklock. Desiderium Lutetiæ.

BOUND, v.
BOUND, n.
BO'UNDARY.
BO'UNDER.
BO'UNDLESS.
BO'UNDLESSNESS.

Low Lat. Bonna, or borna, or bunda, bonnare; Fr. Bonne, or borne, borner. Abonner, aborner, to fix the bourn or bound; to include, or inclose within limits; to bound, or (with the mere difference of the interchangeable letters b, and p.) to pound, from the A. S. verb Pynd-an, to inclose.

To include or inclose, within limits or confines; to limit, to confine, to restrict or restrain; to determine or terminate.

First the nemnid alle the, • • •
That thorgh the reame suld go, the boundes forto stake.
R. Brunne, p. 309.

And every reaume went he far to see,
He was so strong that no man might him let;
At bothe wormes endes, with Trophee,
In stede of boundes he a pilar set
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,121.

Why doest thou rather put into his head howe farre he may extende the boundes of his dominions, then put him in remembraunce with howe narrowe lymites the seignorie, whiche he hath nowe at this present, was in old tyme bounded.—Udal Mark, Pref. p. x.

While Peire, and Plowmá hopes to picke a thãke,
By mouing bounder, (which got skarce graze his goose)
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

So maye the feare of infamy, dishonour and dyspraise, refreine and restrayne them fro euyl, and some tyme holesomely bridle and contein them within the limites & boundes of good and honorable order.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 622.

For let vs first consider the breadth and bignesse of this burning zone, which as euery man man knoweth, is 47. degrees, each tropike, which are the boundees thereof, being 23 degrees and a halfe distant from the equinoctial.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 48.

Which to outbarre, with painefull pyonings
From sea to sea he heapt a mighty mound,
Which from Arduid to Panweit did that border bound.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Whose circled waters rapt with whirling away
Like to a restlesse wheele, still running round,
Did covet, as they passed by that way,
To draw their bote within the utmost bound
Of his wide Labyrinth. Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 12.

Besides her modest countenance he saw
So goodly grave, and full of princely aw
That it his ranging fancie did refraine,
And looser thoughts to lawful bounds withdraw.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Which, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'erflows.
Grief counsell with nor law nor limit knows.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

In his miracles, hee loves ever to meet nature in her bounds; and when shee hath done her best, to supply the rest by his overruling power.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Simon called.

And him, whom all the skill and power of armes did late attend,
Now like a man in counsell poore, that (trauelling) goes amisse,
And (hauing past a boundlesse plaine) not knowing where he is,
Comes on the sudden, where he sees a riuer rough.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

But, Sir with what possibilitie can your constitution be so boundlessly amorous as to affect all women of what degree, forme or complection soeuer?
Marston. The Fawne, D 43. (1606.)

———Ye good distrest!
Ye noble few! who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up awhile,
And what your bounded view, which only saw
A little part, deemed evil, is no more.—Thomson. Winter.

As in geometry, of all lines or surfaces contained within the same bounds, the streight line and the plain surface are the shortest: so it is also in morality by the right line of Justice, upon the plain ground of Vertue, a man soonest will arrive to any well-chosen end.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser 5.

Let active thought these close meanders trace,
Let human wit their dubious boundaries place,
Are all things miracle or nothing such?
Prior. Solomon, b. i.

God has given no man a body as strong as his appetites: but has corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires, by stinting his strengths, and contracting his capacities.
South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

The world was ne'er design'd for thee:
You're like a passenger below,
That stays perhaps a night or so,
But still his native country lies
Beyond the bound'ries of the skies.
Cotton. Content, Vision 4.

Is there a temple of the deity,
Except earth, sea, and air, yon azure pole;
And chief, his holiest shrine, the virtuous soul?
Where'er the eye can pierce, the feet can move,
This wide, this boundless universe is Jove.
Lyttelton. Cato's Speech to Labienus.

BO'UNTY.
BO'UNTEOUS.
BO'UNTEOUSLY.
BO'UNTEOUSNESS.
BO'UNTIFUL.
BO'UNTIFULLY.
BO'UNTIFULNESS.
BO'UNTIHEAD.

Fr. Bonté; It. Bontà; Sp. Bondad; Lat. Bonitas, (of unsettled etymology,) is—

Goodness, kindness, beneficence, benevolence, munificence, liberality, generosity.

For God it wot, that children often been
Unlike hir worthy eldere hem before,
Bountee cometh al of God, not of the streen,
Of which they ben ygendred and ybore:
I trust in Goddes bountee, and therefore
My marriage, and min estat, and rest
I him betake, he may don as him lest.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8032.

This maid, of which I tell my tale expresse,
She kept hireself, hire needed no maistresse;
For in hire living maidens mighten rede,
As in a book, every good word and deede,
That longeth to a maiden vertuous.
She was so prudent and so bounteous,
For which the fame outsprong on every side
Both of hire beautee and hire bountee wide.
Id. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,039.

Nature set in hir at ones
Beautee with bountee so beseyn,
That I male well afferme and seyn,
I sawe yet neuer creature,
Of comly hede, and of feture,
In any kyynges region,
Be liche hir in comparison.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Hereby see we that dedes and works are but outward signes of the inward grace of the bounteous and plenteous mercy of God, frely receyued without all merites of dedes, ye and before all dedes.—Tyndall. Workes, p 66.

Wherfore he thanched the king with all his harte for his honorable present, promising to requite his bounteous liberalitye, by some good tourne that lay in his owne pryuate power to doo.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 128.

Ye maye (sayde the kynge) bounteously rewarde me, if ye lende me the yonge man that daunced before your maiestie.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 20.

A parte of ye cause was, yt the sayd Charlye after theyr thynkyng, had not so bounteously rewarded them as they had deseruyd.—Fabyan. Ludowic XI. an. 1465.

But this sudden pang, hauing first commended the bounteousness of his minde,—the L.L. of the senate staied;—affirming it to be the dissolution of the empire, if the reuenewes by which it was sustained should be diminished.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 106.

Wherefore, he vsyng all lenitie, mercie, and bounteousnesse would not once touche or apprehende the body of king Henry, whome he might both haue slaine, and vtterly destroyed, considering that he had him in his warde and gouernance.—Grafton. Hen. VI. an. 33.

Rue on me, Lord, for thy goodnes and grace,
That of thy nature arte so bountifull;
For that goodness, that in the worlde dothe brace
Repugnant natures in quiet wonderfull.
Wyatt. Psalme 51.

Then the commons louyngly thãked the kyng and muche praised his witte that he had denyed it to them when they unworthely demaunded it, and had bountifully graunted it when he perceiued that they sorowed and lamented.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 22.

And in afflictions thorowe the help of God they be inuincible and if any prosperitie come vnto them, thei ascribe it wholly to the goodnes and bountifulnes of God.
Udal. Matthew, c. 4.

For that I may not remark the bounties of God running over the tables of the rich, God hath also made provisions for the poorest persons; so that if they can but rule their desires, they shall have their tables furnished.
Taylor, vol. ii Ser 26

Now gins this goodly frame of temperance
Fairely to rise, and her adorned hed
To prick of highest praise forth to aduance,
Formerly grounded, and fast settled
On firme foundation of true vertuhed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

If then he be as deceived and as absurd, who thinketh that the gods be mortal and corruptible, as he who is of opinion, that they bear no bountiful and loving affection toward men, Chrysippus is as far from the truth as Epicurus.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 881

Hath the kings bountifulneese giuen lands and possessions to Christian churches for this end? that Clarkes harlots should bee pampered with delicious dainties.
Stowe. The West Saxons, an. 974.

His honest friends, at thirsty hour of dusk,
Come unInvited, he with bounteous hand
Imparts his smacking vintage, sweet reward
Of his own industry. Philips. Cyder, b. ii

The duke turned to the lady, and told her, it now remaine for me to put you in quiet possession of what your husband has so bountifully bestowed on you, and ordered the immediate execution of Rhynsault.—Spectator, No. 491.

For Providence decrees, that we obtain
With toil each blessing destin'd to our use;
But means to teach us, that our toil is vain,
If he the bounty of his hand refuse.—Scott, Eleg. 3.

But oh thou bounteous giver of all good,
Thou art of all thy gifts thyself the crown!
Give what thou canst, without thee we are poor;
And with thee rich, take what thou wilt away.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

To thy blest hand, and bounteousness of mind,
Has giv'n extensive powers unslacken'd rein;
To me a bartenness of wish assign'd,
That grieves itself to see another's pain.—Hoyle. Ode.

It is true, indeed, the direction of the public weal is in the hands of a single person, who, for the general good, takes upon himself to ease us of the whole care and weight of government; but still that bountiful source of power permits, by a very generous dispensation, some streams to flow down to us.—Monmouth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 20.

If they are less bountifully provided than the rich, with the materials of happiness for the present life, let them however be thankful to Providence that they have fewer difficulties to contend with, fewer temptations to combat, and fewer obstacles to surmount, in their way to the life which is to come.—Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 17.

BOURD, v.
BOURD, n.
BO'URDING.

Fr. Bourde, scoffs, jeasts, gibes, cuts, quips, (Cotgrave.) Dut. Boerde; Mid. Lat. Burda. Dr. Jamieson thinks that the Fr. Bourd-er is merely an abbreviation of Be-hourdir, behourder, to joust together with lances,—and that this being a species of mock fighting very common in former times, the idea has been transferred to talking in jest or mockery.

To Bourd, bord or board, seems merely to be—To abord or aboard, to accost, to approach; to accost in speech, to address; or direct the speech or discourse to: to attack in speech, sportively, jestingly; to jeer or jest, to banter.

Bretheren, quad he, take kepe what I shal say;
My wit is gret, though that I bourde and play.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,710.

Yet had I lever payen for the mare,
Which he rit on then he should with me strive.
I wool not wrathen him so mote I thrive;
That that I spake, I sayd it in my bourd.
Id. The Manciples Prol. v. 17,026

Gamelyn satte him adoun
In the justic'is stede.
Herkeneth now of the bourde
That Gamelyn tho dede. Id. The Plowmans Tale.

With sugred wordes she wood and sparde no speech,
But bourded him with many a pleasant tale.
Turbervile. The Louer wisheth, &c.

At length her self bordeth Æneas thus,
Unfaithful wight, to cover such a fault,
Coldest thou hope? Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv

She smote her breast and rushing through the rout;
And her dieng she cleapes thus by her name.
Sister, for this with craft did you me board.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Ye should not, sir, in a strange land,
Mock, nor yet be ouer-bourdand;
But, if ye will with bourdings deal,
Right cleanly than ye should them veil.
Sir Eger. Ellis. Rom. vol. iii.

They all agreed: so turning all to game
And pleasant bord, they past forth on their way:
And all that while, whereto they rode or came,
That masked mock knight was their sport and play.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

Whom thus at gaze the Palmer gan to bord
With goodly reason, and thus fayre bespoke.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

The next, the Stubborne Newre whose waters gray
By faire Kilkenny and Rosseponte board.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 11.

The wisard could no longer beare her bord
But, bursting forth in laughter, to her sayd.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

I am wise enough to tell you I can board where I see occasion, or if you like my uncle's wit better than mine, you shall marry me.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act iii. sc. 5.

Gramercy, Borril, for thy company,
For all thy jests, and all thy merry bourds,
Upon thy judgment much I shall rely,
Because I find much wisdom in thy words.
Drayton Pastorals, Ecl. 7.

BO'URDON, n. Burden, or Burthen, (qqv.)

—— And there in mourning spend their time
With waitfull tunes, whiles wolves do howle and barke,
And seem to beare a bourdon to their plaint.
Spenser. On the Death of Sir Philip Sidney.

BO'URGEON, v. } Sursum geminans is rendered by Wiclif — burionynge upwards. Menage says the Fr. Bourgeon is from Burrio; and Burrio from Burra. Skinner, that it is from Bourre, soft down, because buds are generally soft and downy. But the origin of Bourre is still to seek.

Fr. Bourgeonner, to bud, to spring or sprout out, to put or shoot out, (Cotgrave.)

Biholde ghe that no man faile to the grace of God, that no roote of bittirnesse burionynge upward lette and manye be defoulid by it.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 12.

Wost thou not well (qd. she) but euery tree in his seasonable time of bourioning shew his blomes from within, in signe of what fruite shoulde out of him spring, els the fruit for that yere men hait deliuered, be the ground neuer so good. And though the stock be mighty at ye full, & ye braunches seer & no burions shew, farwel ye gardiner, he may pipe with an yue leaf, his fruit is failed.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

Good lady (qd. I than) it hath oft be seen, yt weathers & stormes so hurely haue fall in burioning time, & by perte duresse han beaten of the springs so clean, wherthrough ye fruit of thilk yere hath failed. It is a great grace whā burions han good wethers, their fruits foorth to bring.—Id. Ib.

By the flowres the fruites are knowen, and the vines in burgenyng.—Golden Boke, c. 42.

Thus Cham his broode did burgeon first,
And helde the worlde in awe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 1.

Also they have deviseđ, that the said impe to be engrafted, be gathered from the tree when it beginneth to bud or burgen.
Holland. Pinie, b. i. c. 15.

Furthermore looke what is the nature that forked trees have in their boughes, the same hath the vine in her eyes and burgeons.—Id. Ib. b. xvi. c. 30.

When first on trees burgen the blossomes soft,
Prickt forward with the sting of fertile kinde,
Against the aire cast vp her head aloft,
And gath'reth seed so from the fruitfull winde.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. vii. s. 76.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might bourgeon where another fell.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act i. sc. 1.

BOURN. A. S. Byrna, burn; Dut. Born; Ger. Born, brunn; Sw. Brunna. A well, spring, fountain. Junius and Wachter think it is from the Gr. Βρυειν, to spring or flow forth. Ihre, from Rinnan, be-rinnan, brinnan, to run. See an example from Milton in v. Bosky. Perilous bourne in Spenser is, in st. 38 of the same Canto, called perilous shard: and T. Warton thinks that Bourne here, and perhaps always, means boundary: "streams of water" being "the most distinguishable aboriginal divisions of property." (See Bourn, infra.) The Bourn of Spenser is previously denoted a river, st. 2.

See the quotation from Stow.

Ne care ne feare I how the wind do blow
Or whether swift I wend or whether slow;
Both slow and swift alike do serve my tourne;
Ne swelling Neptune, ne lowd thundring Jove,
Can chaunge my cheare, or make me ever mourne;
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6. s. 10.

She Beverley salutes, whose beauties so delight,
The fair-enamour'd flood, as ravish'd with the sight,
That she could ever stay, that gorgeous phane to view,
But that the brooks and bourns so hotly her pursue.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

Diuers bournes sodainly brake out of the hollowe places of the earth, and ouerflowed a great part of Canterbury cittie, the streame whereof was so swift and violent, that it bare downe buildings and houses, and drowned manie people.
Stow. Hen. III. an. 1271.

BOURN. Fr. Bonne or Borne, a bound, limit, meere, march; the end or furthest compass of a thing. (Cotgrave.)

For the etymology, see To bound or Inclose.

Ulys. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 3.

Cleop. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.
Cleop. I'll set a bourn, how far to be belov'd.
Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 1.

Death hath summon'd it to go
Pensive to the shades below:
Dismal regions! from whose bourn
No pale travellers return. Fawke. The Sparrow.

BOUSE. } The Dut. Buyse is, (according to Bo'usy. } Kilian,) a cup with two handles, which on account of its size is taken up and set down with both hands. Buysen, to drink out of such a cup, to drink largely. Skinner suggests from the Gr. Φυσειν, to blow. It seems plainly formed from the Fr. Boire, to drink, beu, drunken. To bouse is—

To drink largely, sottishly; to swill.

Her loathly leare
Is nothynge cleare
But vglye of cheare
Her face all bousy
Comelye crinkled
Wonderously wrynkled. Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

Still as he rode, he somewhat still did eate,
And in his hand did beare a bouzing can,
Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
His drunken corse he scarce vpholden can.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Now, though from the table he [Sylla] was commonly found both very active, painful, and severe; yet falling into such company, by drinking, bousing, and making good cheer, he suddenly became another manner of man.
North. Plutarch, p. 387.

The guests upon the day appointed came,
Each bousy farmer with his simpering dame.
King. The Old Cheese.

Rous'd at his name, up rose the bousy sire,
And shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iv.

Let the men of all nations, but Italy, prove
The blessings that wait upon beauty and love
But in boosing, alas! one unfortunate bout
Will rob us of vigour, and leave us the gout.
Fawkes. Woman. A Ballad.

Where'er you see ungracious Ham,
Bent to disclose his father's shame,
And, spite of modest Shem and Japhet,
Persist the boozy sire to laugh at,
You aid the pious brother's cares:
Your delicacy suits with theirs.—Cambridge. Painting.

BOUT. See Bocht. One bout, one turn; another turn, another trial.

Here, tyrant, take a taste of my good will,
For thus I doe begin my bloody bout:
You cannot chuse but like the greeting ill;
It is not that same clubb will beare you out.
Guy & Amarant. Percy, vol. iii.

But leave we Hob to clamber out,
Queen Mab and all her fairy rout,
And come again to have a bout
With Oberon yet madding. Drayton. Nymphidia.

We'll see when 'tis enough, when both eyes out,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout;
But, if it hes too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drugging-box to be recall'd.
King. The Art of Cookery.

The prince of * * * has taken me in his train, so that I am in no danger of starving for this bout.
Goldsmith. A Letter from a Traveller.

BO'UTEFEU. Fr. Boute-feu, a wilful or voluntary firer of houses; also a fire-brand of sedition, a kindler of strife and contention: one that loves to set, and see men together by the ears.

For an example, see the quotation from Hammond in v. Broil.

A charge was brought up from the House of Commons to the Lords, by Sir Henry Vane the Younger, a most notorious sectarist, an indefatigable boutefeu, and promoter of the discontents and rebellion that followed.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. W. Laud.

When the Long Parliament began, he [Will. Strode] became an active and busy man, and a downright boutefeu therein against the king's prerogative.—Id. Ib.

BOW, v. }
Bow, n. }
Bo'wer. }
Bo'wyer. }
Bo'wing, n. }
Bo'wband. }
Bo'wman. }

A. S. Byg-an; Dut. Buygen; Ger. Beugen; Sw. Boga, to bow.

To bend, to curve, to crook, to arch, to incline, to decline.

Bow, the noun, whether applied to the inclination of the body in reverence; or to an engine of war; or an instrument of musick; or a particular kind of knot; or the curved part of a saddle, or of a ship; or to the arc-en-ciel, (rainbow;) or to bended legs; or to the branches of trees;—always means one and the same thing; viz. bended or curved; and is the past tense and past part. of the A. S. Bygan, flectere, incurvare. See Tooke, ii. 216.

Wiclif renders the Lat. declinare, vitare, (sc. to slip on one side, to escape,) by the English word, to bow. It is also used (consequentially) for—

To give way, to yield, to submit; to obey.

Canon bowede a doun to hym, & thonkede hym faste
And bi bet to serue hym trewliche, the while ye lyf laste.
R. Gloucester, p. 93.

The bowiares asoppe hii breke, & bowe nome ech on.
Id. p. 541.

Wilton had thei taken, Southampton also,
Cornwaile and Wales bowed tham vnto.
R. Brunne, p. 39.

And brynge alle men to bowe, with oute bitter wonde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 73.

And the day began to bowe doun, and the twelve camen and seiden to him, leeve the puple that thei go and turne into castels and tounes that ben aboute that thei fynde mete: for we ben here in a desert place.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 9.

But he that was maad hool, wiste not who it was: and Jhesus bowide awey fro the people that was set in the place.
Id. Jon. c. 5.

And I aȝigh, and lo a whyt hors, and he that sat on hym hadde a bowe, and a crowne was gouun to him and he wente out ouercomynge that he schulde ouercome.
Id. Apocalips, c. 6.

And beholde there was a whyte horsse, and he that sat on hym had a bowe, and a crowne was geuen vnto him, and he went forth cõquering and for to ouercome.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Ther were also of Martes division,
Th' armerer, and the bowyer, and the smith,
That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his stith.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2026.

For euer his bowe is ready bent,
And whom he hit I tell hym shent.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Amid the court vnder the heuen all bare
A great alter there stood, by which there grew
An old laurel tree bowing therunto,
Which with his shadow did embrace the gods.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

By worshippyng, whether it was in the olde testament, or newe, vnderstand the bowing of a mans self vpon the ground: as we ofte tymes, as we kneele to our prayers bow our selues, and lie on our armes & hands with our face to the ground.
Tyndal. Workes, p. 11.

Then all the gonnes seuered them selues into one place, the pykes in another, and the bowmen in another.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 31.

When the Turke was arriued, he bent his ordinance toward the towne and did no great harm, when he saw that the walles were of that defence that ordinaunce did litle harme, he caused all his pyoners to cast yearth one banke ouer another styl, tyll they came within a bowshot of the wall.—Grafton. Hen. VIII. an. 14.

They vse little drummes at their sadle bowes, by the sound whereof their horses vse to runne more swiftly.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 314.

Wyllyam shot so wonderous well,
That hys arrowes were all agoe,
And the fyre so fast upon hym fell,
That hys bowestryng brent in two.—Adam Bell. Percy.

She sees her son, her God,
Bow with a load
Of borrow'd sins; and swim
In woes that were not made for him.
Crashaw. Sancta Maria Dolorum.

So fairely dight, when she in presence came,
She to her sire made humble reuerence,
And bowed lowe, that her right well became,
And added grace vnto her excellence.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

——When he came, he saw
Vlysses viewing, ere he tried to draw
The famous bow; which euery way he mou'd;
Vp, and downe turning it in which he prou'd
The knight it was in fearing chiefly, lest
The hornes were eate with wormes, in so long rest:
But what his thoughts intended, turning so;
And keeping such a search about the bow;
The wooers little knowing, feel to lest,
And said, past doubt, he is a man profest
In bowyers craft, and sees quite through the wood.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

And now his well known bow the master bore,
Turn'd on all sides, and view'd it o'er and o'er:
Lest time or worms had done the weapon wrong,
Its owner absent and untry'd so long.
While some deriding—"How he turns the bow!
Some other like it sure the man must know,
Or else would copy; or in bows he deals;
Perhaps he makes them, or perhaps he steals."
Pope. Homer. Ib.

Atrides dart, of Helenus, the thrust out bow-hand strooke,
And through the hand, stucke in the bow.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

The bow-men (which no country hath the like)
With his sheaf arrow proveth by his might,
How many score off he his foe can strike,
Yet not to draw above his bosom's height.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

For once it was my dismal hap to hear
A Sibyl old, bow-bent with crooked age
That far events full wisely could presage,
And in time's long and dark prospective glass
Foresaw what future days should bring to pass.
Milton. Vacation Exercise.

——See, though from far,
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth, steel bows, and shafts their arms
Of equal dread in flight, or in pursuit.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. iii. l. 305.

But I shall instance only in the Greek and Syriack churches. in the Greek they have their ordinary bowings, which they properly call προσκυνηματα, worshippings; and their extraordinary which they call μετανοιαι; which are of two sorts the lesser and the greater; the lesser are, when they bow their heads only to the ground; the greater, when they lie prostrate upon it.—Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 5.

For the string is always ready upon their bow to let fly this arrow [ill report] with an incredible swiftness, through city and country, for fear the innocent man's justification should overtake it.—Tillotson, vol. i. ser. 42.

Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.
Dryden. The Flower & the Leaf.

At this, resuming heart, the prophet said:
Nor hecatomb unslain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks, accurs'd, this dire contagion bring,
Or call for vengeance from the bowyer king.
Id. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Doth not the ox obedient bow
His patient neck, and draw the plough.—Cotton, Fab. 1.

But pays his debts, and visit, when 't is due;
His character and gloves are ever clean,
And then he can out bow the bowing dean.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 4.

——There the sycophant and he
Who, with bare-headed and obsequious bows,
Begs a warm office, doom'd to a cold jail
And groat per diem, if his patron frown.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

In Turkey, where the place, where the fortune, where the head itself, are so insecure, that scarcely any have died in their beds for ages; so that the bow string is the natural death of Bashaws, yet in no country is power and distinction (precarious enough, God knows, in all) sought for with such boundless avidity, as if the value of place was enhanced by the danger and insecurity of its tenure.
Burke. Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

BO'WEL, v. Bo'WEL, n. Bo'WELS. Bo'WELLESS. Fr. Boyau, boyaux; It. Budello, which Menage derives from the Lat. Botellus. Junius observes, that the English word seems to be taken from bow, to bend, to wind, to twist: as the Gr. ενδινα, παρα το εντος δινεισθαι, on account of their folds or convolutions within us—quod intus convolvantur in gyrum. (Flexuosissimis orbibus, Plin. xi. 37.)

Bowels is used generally for the innermost, the vital parts, the seat of feeling, compassion, or sympathy.

To bowel, to take out the bowels, to eviscerate, to excavate. See DISBOWEL.

She toke hereafter the bowels
Of the see foule, and for the heie
Of Eson, withva thousand mo
Of thynges, that she had tho
In that caldron. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

But the auctor of Polycronycon sayth, he was bowelled at Crongthon Abbey and buryed at Worcetyr, in the myddle of the quer of mukis, when he had reygned xvi. yeres. vi. monethes. and iiii. dayes.—Fabyan. K. John, an. 1217.

Then was the bodye bowelled, embawmed, and cered, and secretly amongest other stuile conueyed to Newcastle.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5

I therefore exhorte your excellent majestie in the bowels of Jesus Christ.—Bale. Apology, p. 61.

The angrie and outragious woman, [Q. Isabell] who commaunded the erle [Hugh Spenser] to be bound, and without question or answere to bee drawen & hanged in his armour, taken downe alive and bowelled, his bowelles burned, then his head smitten off, and his bodie hanged up againe, and after foure dayes to be cut all to peeces and cast to dogges to be eaten.—Stow. Edw. II. an. 1326.

And verily, Homer seemeth not to be ignorant of this difference whereof we speak, for of diviners and soothsayers, some he calleth οιωνοθοους, i. e. augurs, that is to say authours or observers of birds; others ιερεις, that is to say, bowel priers, that spie into the inwards of sacrifices.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 995.

And the bowell-prying soothsaier, (as it is reported) shewed to Decius the head of the liver on the inner side wounded (as it were) and cut off.—Holland. Livie, p. 287.

Not to the surface of enliven'd earth,
Graceful with hills and dales, and leafy woods,
Her liberal treasure, is thy force confin'd;
But to the bowel'd cavern darting deep,
The mineral kinds confess thy mighty power.
Thomson. Summer.

Miserable men commiserate not themselves; bowel-less unto others, and merciless unto their own bowels.
Browne. Christian Morals, i. 7.

She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
That tears the bowels of thy mangled mate,
From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
The scourge of heav'n Gray. The Bard.

BO'WER, v. Bo'WER, n. Bo'WERY. "A. S. Bur, bure, conclave, an inner chamber, a parlour, a bower," (Somner.) Dut. Bure, tugurium; Ger. Bauer, from Ger. Bauen; A. S. Byan; to inhabit, to indwell. Applied to—

A habitation, a dwelling, an apartment in a dwelling; now usually applied—to some shaded place of retirement formed of trees or the bows or branches of trees.

And Junius thinks bower is so called because formed of the bows or boughs of trees.

——Justices some
Buskede hem to the boure. ther this berde dwellyd
Confortynge hure as thei couthe.—Piers Plowman, p. 38.

So mote I thrive, I shal at cockes crow
Ful prively go knocke at his window,
That stant ful low upon his bowres wall
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3674.

And in a launde, vpon an hill of floures
Was set this noble goddesse Nature,
Of branches were her halles and bowres
Ywrought, after her craft and her measure.
Id. The Assemblie of Foules.

Glue me my lute in bed now as I lie
And lock the doores of mine vnluckie bower:
So shall my voyce in mournfull verse discrie
The secrete smart which causeth me to lower.
Gascoigne. A Lady, &c. doth thus bewray her Grief.

The next day the lordes of Fraunce, who hadde lost their tentes and their prouisyons, thanne took counsayle to lodge in bowers of trees, more neret to the towne.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 80.

Thee lastly nuptial bowre, by me adornd
With what to sight or smell was sweet: from thee
How shall I part.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

"Come, kinsman," said the little god,
"Put off your wings, lay by your rod;
Retire with me to yonder bower,
And rest yourself for half an hour."
Prior. Mercury & Cupid.

More happy! laid where trees with trees entwin'd
In bowery arches tremble to the wind,
With innocence and shade like Adam blest,
While a new Eden opens in the breast.
Broome. Epist. to Mr. E. Fenton

He keeps a garden where the spices breathe,
Its bowering borders kiss the vale beneath;
'Tis there he gathers lilies, there he dwells,
And binds his flowerets to unite their smells.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

[He] plac'd thy green and grassy shrine,
With myrtle bower'd and jessamine.
Warton. Ode on the Approach of Summer.

Far happier thou, in this sequester'd bower,
To shroud thy poet, who, with fost'ring hand,
Here bade thee flourish, and with grateful strain
Now chants the praise of thy maturer bloom.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

O! what descriptive eloquence can tell
The woods and winding walks of Boscobell?
The various vistas, and the grassy glades,
The bowery coverts in sequester'd shades!
Fawke. Bramham Park.

BOWL, v. Bowl, n. Bo'WLER. Bo'WLING, n. Bo'WLING-GREEN. Fr. Boule; It. Balla, palla; Sp. Bolla: Dut. Bol, Ger. Bol, from the Ger. Bol-en, to roll. Bowl, patera rotunda; A. S. Bolla; Ger Bulle, Wachter derives from the same verb, Bol-en, volvere, rotare. A bowl or ball is—

Any thing round or rolling; a round body to roll upon the ground; a round or circular body—hollow—to contain liquids; a round or circular hollow.

And whyle the kynge was shyppinge of his men, one broughte forthe a bolle full of mede or meth to drynke vpon bon vyage, and after that came bowl after bowl, so that after drynke came dronkennes, and after langelynge, and langelynge tourned into strife, and stryfe tourned into fyghtinge, where through many were slayne.
Fabyan. Edw. the Conf an. 1053

The bowle is round, and doth down slide,
Eche one thrusteth, none doth uphold,
A fall failes not, where blinde is guide,
The stay is gone, who can him hold?
Uncertaine Auctors. Totus Mundus, &c

A gentle state, where two such tenis balles
Are tossed still and better bowles let lie.
Gascoygne. Voyage into Holland.

Garlick indeed should not be suffered to boll and run up to seed, and therefore the blade thereof ought to be wreathed.
Holland. Pinie, b. xix. c. 6.

——While one doth bring
A carven bowl well wrought of beechen tree,
Praising it by the story, or the frame,
Or want of use, or skilful maker's name.
Bp. Hall. Defiance to Envy

A little boll or cup, to sacrifice and offer unto the gods withall.—Holland. Livie, p. 611.

Placed it [the obelisk] was in the middest of the shew-place, and upon it a bowle or globe of brasse set, glittering with thin plates of gold.—Id. Ammianus, p. 84.

He [Antigonus] espied upon a time within his camp, certaine common souldiers playing at the ball and bowling, having their corslets on their backs, and their morions upon their heads, he took a great pleasure therein.
Id. Plutarch, p. 341.

An. Alas I had rather be set quick i'th' earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives, Act iii. sc. 4.

Breake all the spokes and fellies from her wheele,
And bowle the round naue downe the hill of heauen,
As low as to the fiends. Id. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

The captains and commanders were then it seems at bowls upon the Hoe at Plymouth; and the tradition goes, that Drake would needs see the game up; but was soon prevail'd on to go and play out the rubbers with the Spaniards.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh

The right side of the pall old Egeus kept,
And on the left the royal Theseus wept;
Each bore a golden bowl, of work divine,
With honey fill'd, and milk, and mix'd with ruddy wine.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, pt iii

Another evil faculty he has, in making the bowling-green his daily residence, instead of his church, where his curate reads prayers every day.—Tatler, No. 71.

The midnight reveller's intemperate bowl,
To rage and riot fires his furious brain;
Remorse ensues, and agony of soul,
His future life condemn'd to ceaseless pain.
Dodsley. Pain & Patience.

BOX, v. } A. S. Boxe; Ger. Buchs: Lat.
Box, n. } Buxus, Gr. Πυξος, from πυκαζειν,
Bo'xen. } to thicken, to condense; the tree or wood being so called from its firm solidity. See the quotation from Pliny.

The most massie and fast wood, and therefore the weightiest of all other, by judgement of men, is that of the ebene and the boxe.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 11.

He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man
That pale turns yellow, and his face receives
The faded hue of hapless boxen leaves.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

A youth, once fowling in a shady grove,
On a tall box-tree spyd the god of love,
Perch'd like a beauteous bird, with sudden joy
At sight so noble leap'd the simple boy.
Fawkes. Bion, Idyl. 2.

BOX, v. } Ger. Bux; Dut. Boss, buss; It.
Box, n. } Bosso; Fr. Boite; so called because
Bo'xen. } made of the box-us or box-tree. Chaucer and Mandeville adopt the Fr. Boist, (qv.) See Box, ante.

Box is technically distinguished from chest, trunk, bin, &c.

And lo a synful woman that was in the cytee as sche knewe that Jhesus sat at the mete in the hous of the Farisee, she broughte an alabastre box of oynement; and sche stood bihinde bisidis hise feet; and began to moiste hise feet with teeris, and wypide with the heeris of her heed, and kiste hise feet, and anoyntide with oyntment.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 7.

And beholde a womā in that citie, whiche was a synner, as she knewe that Jesus sat at meate in ye Pharisees house, she brought an alabaster boxe of oyntment, and she stode at his fete behynde him wepinge, and began to wash his fete with teares, and dyd wype thē with ye heeres of her heade, and kissed his fete, and anoynted them with oyntment.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

That fond his maister wel in his chaffare,
For often time he fond his box ful bare.
Chaucer. The Cokes Tale, v. 4388.

This cursed man hath in his hond yhent
This poison in a box, and swithe he ran
Into the next strete. Id. v. 12,802.

And whan he had it thrice radde,
To open a boxe she him badde,
That she there toke hym in present,
And was full of suche oignement,
That there was fire ne venym none,
That shulde fastenen hym vpon,
Whan that he were anoynt withall.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

In this meantime returned from France the Lord James, who beside his great expences, and the losse of a box wherein was his secret purse, escaped a desperate danger in Paris.
Knox. History of the Reformation, p. 293.

And when she could not prevail with them to stay, being but few in company, though the natives had no edge-tools of iron or steel, and had proffer'd a great box of pearl for some armour and a sword, she sent her women to watch them all night in their ships on the bank-side.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

Canst thou not find, among thy numerous race
Of kindred, one to tell thee that thy plays
Are laught at by the pit, box, gallerie, nay, stage!
Dorset. Epistle to Mr. E. Howard.

Those who sat in the boxes appeared in the most unhappy situation of all. The rest of the audience came merely for their own amusement; these rather to furnish out a part of the entertainment themselves.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 21.

Yet, since his neighbours give, the churl unlocks,
Damning the poor, his triple-bolted box.—Warton. Fashion.

I mention these particulars, to let you see how much he will be obliged to me, as I shall be to you, if you can help him to this convenient little box, at a price which he shall have no occasion to repent.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 24.

——— As sweetly he
Who quits the coach-box at the midnight hour
To sleep within the carriage more secure,
His legs depending at the open door.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

BOX, v. } Fr. Buquer, to knock or rapp,
Box, n. } (Cotgrave.) Ger. Bocken or Bo'xer. } Pocken:—
Bo'xing, n. } To knock, to strike, to beat, to hit; to fight with the fists.

Cleopatra was in such a rage with him, that she flew upon him, and took him by the hair of the head, and boxed him well favouredly.—North. Plutarch, p. 783.

They cause a chambermaid to enter into her [Matata] temple, and there they box her about the ears.—Id. Ib. p. 115.

A. Gellius tells of a boy that would give every one that he met a box on the ear.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 24.

Faith, they may hang their harps upon the willows;
'Tis just like children when they box with pillows.
Dryden. Epilogue for the King's House.

Whether a man may put up a box on the ear received from a stranger in the dark? with several other subtilties of the like nature.—Tatler, No. 250.

Where Slack is made to box with Broughton,
I see the very stage they fought on.
Cambridge. A Dialogue.

A tilt or tournament, the martial diversions of our ancestors, was however an unlawful act; and so are boxing and sword playing, the succeeding amusement of their posterity.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14.

He grew one day very uneasy in bed, and a gentleman who watched him, desirous of covering him up close, received from the patient a violent box on his ear.
Goldsmith. Particulars relative to Charles XII.

Thrice with an arm, which might have made
The Theban boxer curse his trade,
The drone he shook, who rear'd the head,
And thrice fell backward on his bed.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

If boxing were ever to become a spectacle patronised by princes, and encouraged by a people, there would be reason to fear lest man, as man, had lost his value, lest life were estimated of little value; and lest the spirit of despotism were gradually insinuating itself into the community.
Anon. The Spirit of Despotism.

BOY, v. } Ger. Bub. Wachter observes,
Boy, n. } that the Lat. Pupus is a little boy;
Bo'yery. } and Pupa, a little girl. The Ger.
Bo'yish. } Bub, is perhaps formed from Bubu;
Bo'yism. } which Wachter calls the na-
Bo'yship. } tural voice of children, asking for drink. The Eng. Babe, (qv.) the Gr. Πα-ις, the Lat. Pu-er, pu-pus, pupa;—Pa-pa, common to so many tongues, all seem to derive their origin from the natural cry of children. The Lat. Pupus and pupa, receive a sexual distinction from their terminations. The Ger. Bub; Eng. Boy, are applied first to—

Male infants; then to male children, beyond the period of infancy. See Girl.

By Cryst quath Peers Plouhman tho, theese pybes wolle teh showe
To beggers and to boyes, that loth ben to worcke.
Piers Plouhman, p. 142.

Big laddes and strieplynges grou quite awaye from the pursues of babehood to boyish wantonnesse.
Udal. Luke, c. 8.

And all about her necke and shoulders flew
A flock of little loues, and sports, and ioyes,
With nimble wings of gold and purple hew;
Whose shapes seem'd not like to terrestriall boyes,
But like to angels playing heavenly toyes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

They called the children that were past infancy two years, Irene, and the greatest boyes, Melirenes: as who would say, ready to go out of boyery. This boy who was made overseer of them was commonly twenty years of age.
North. Plutarch, p. 42

Mount. And for the boy, the grave Gomera gave thee,
When she accepted thee her champion,
And in thy absence, like a valiant gentleman,
I well remember it:—he is too young,
Too boyish, and too tender, to adventure.
Mir. Boy, did he call me!
Gomera call me boy!
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of Malta, Act ii. sc. 3.

Mir. 'Tis not thy cause,—
Thou hast no reputation wounded in't,
Thine's but a general zeal; 'death! I am tainted,
The dearest twyn to life, my credit's murder'd,— Baffl'd and boy'd.—Id. Ib.

Is his a boyish fault, that you should deem
A whipping, meet and ample punishment.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 13. s. 239.

And is pert he alone, said murmering they,
His father's lawfully-begotten child,
And we by-blows? Or must his boyship prey
On all our seniorities?—Id. Ib. c. 1. s. 85.

——— Nor can I think
He has forsaken her: say what she please,
I know his curious eye, or say he had,
Put case he could be so boy-blind and foolish,
Yet stil I fear she keeps the contract with her.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 2.

He [Ovid] had complain'd he was farther off from possession, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the dignity of the subject.
Dryden. Pref. to Fables.

One boy of ten, and another of nine years old, who had killed their companions, have been sentenced to death, and he of ten years actually hanged; because it appeared upon their trials, that the one hid himself, and the other hid the body he had killed, which hiding manifested a consciousness of guilt, and a discretion to discern between good and evil
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 2.

Then Milton had indeed a poet's charms:
New to my taste, his Paradise surpass'd
The struggling efforts of my boyish tongue
To speak its excellence.—Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BRA'BBLE, v. } To Brabble or brawl; In Bra'bble, n. } Dut. Brabbelen, (be-rabbelen, Bra'bblen. } see Rabble); Fr. Brouiller,
Bra'bbling. } (to embroil,) is—
Bra'bblingly. } To confound, to mingle,
Bra'bblement. } to disturb, to trouble, to disorder, to squabble, to rail.

Assuredly these callers make the blinde, more blind then he was before. But the Apostles obeying their maisters cōmaundment, called this man vnto Jesus, and so true is it, yᵗ they dyd not crie, & brabble against him, as the people did, that they put him (hauing good hope already) in more hope and comforte, saying, be of good chere, aryse Jesus calleth thee.—Udal. Mark, c. 10.

Emongst the poets new or ould,
where shall we place him (lo,)
Amongste good, or bad: in sadnes nowe
to exclude all brabling moode,
How many winters do you wene
will make a poet good.
Drant. Horace. Ep. b. ii. To Augustus.

Yf I canne entreat hym to heare and abide the brablyng of Tyndales tonge, as I trust yet to intreat hym hereafter.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 410.

In hauing our wiues with vs still in companye, we should liue euer dying, for we should passe the nights in hearing their complaints and the daies in suffering their brablings [Ed. 1553, brawlinges] and childings.—Golden Boke, c. 19.

I do not warn the of these thinges without a cause, for there be many wayward persones brablers and deceyuers of mennes myndes.—Udal. Titus, c. 1.

And although S. Hierome would haue no body to be patient, when he is suspected of hereeie, yet we will deale herein neither bitterly nor brablingly, nor yet be carried away with anger & heate: though he ought to be reckened neither bitter, nor brabler yᵗ speaketh ye truth.
Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 44.

Aron. ———Away I say.
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brabble will undoe us all.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act ii. sc. 1.

In the execution whereof there fell out a brabble at the Lord Vaux his house in North-hamptonshire wherein there were some blowes exchanged.
Cabbala. Earl Carlile to the Duke, Nov. 20, 1625.

If they meet with one who can relate the order of a feast or great dinner, discourse from point to point of a solemne shew or pompe, tell a tale of some dreame, or make report of a quarrell and brablement between him and another, they harken with great silence, bid him say on, and will misse never a circumstance.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 44.

Dol. We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabler.—Shakespeare. K. John, Act. v. sc. 1.

BRACE, v. } Lat. Brachium; It. Braccio;
Brace, n. } Fr. Bras, the arm; applied to Bra'celet. } that which embraceth, or holds,
Bra'cer. } as the arms do.—Bracelet; Fr. Bracelet; It. Braccialetto.

To hold, bind, or tie together; to tighten, to strengthen, to fasten, to confine, to restrain.

A brace of dogs, as Skinner remarks, is a couple of dogs, dogs braced or coupled together: and, from usage, restricted in number to two. Brace, the n. and bracelet are applied, particularly, to armour, or ornaments bracing or binding the arm; brace, to a certain part of the rigging of a ship; to certain timbers which are to brace or hold together.

Upon his arm he bare a gaie bracer,
And by his side a swerde and a bokeler.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 111.

I spie a bracelet bounde about mine arme,
Which to my shaddowe seemeth thus to saye,
"Beleeue not me for I was but a charme,
To make the sleepe, when others went to playe."
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

Wherewith he set his souldiers on suche a courage, that taking more thought for their burial thē for their lives, euery manne put aboute his righte arme a braceiet wherein was grauen his owne name, and the name of his father.

Goldyng. Iustine, fol. 24.

They carry also certaine little long bagges about an hand breade tyed to their left arme, which serue them also in stead of brasers for their bowes, full of the powder of a certaine bearbe whereof they make a certain beuerage.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 427.

Which York obeys; and up King Henry comes,
When for his guidance he had got him room;
The dreadful bellowing of whose straight brac'd drums,
To the French sounded like the dreadful doom.

Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

——Do but start
An eccho with the clamor of thy drumme,
And euen at hand, a drumme is readie brac'd,
That shall reuerberate all, as loud as thine.

Shakespeare. King John, Act v. sc. 2.

In precious clothes his legs the chieftaine ties,
Nought could the man from bloud and fight debar,
A sturdie lance in his right hand he braced,
His shield he tooke, and on his helmet laced.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xi. s. 75.

——When we consider
Th' importancie of Cyprus to the Turke,
And let our selues againe but vnderstand,
That as it more concernes the Turke then Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question beare it,
For that it stands not in such warrelike brace,
But altogether lackes th' abilities that Rhodes is dress'd in.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc 3.

And when with little hands they stroke thy face
As in thy lap they sit (ah, careless!) playing,
And stammering ask a kiss, give them a brace,
The last from me. P. Fletcher. Eliza, an Elegy.

Meanwhile the combatants, of mind elate,
Drew on their hands the dreadful gloves of fate:
The leathern thongs that brac'd their shoulders round,
Firm to their arms the ponderous gauntlets bound.

Fawkes. Theocritus. Idyl. 22.

The K—g, who was then at Newmarket, heard of it, and was pleas'd mernly and graciously to say, he could not be there himself but he would send them a brace of bucks.

Spectator, No. 79.

But then—her voice! how fram'd t'endear!
The music of the gods to hear!
Wit that so pierc'd, without offence,
So brac'd by the strong nerves of sense.—Smart, Bal. 10

It could not fail if I carried the list. I'll undertake to set down a brace of dukes, two dozen lords, and half the lower house, at my own peril.

Goldsmith. The Good-Natur'd Man, Act iii.

She took, she kiss'd the present, and disguis'd
Her conscious trouble under busy care
To fix the bracelet in its lovely seat.

Glover. The Athenaid, b. xviii.

BRACH. Dut. Brack; Fr. Braque; It. Bracco. Cotgrave says, that the Fr. Braque is a kind of short-tailed setting-dog, ordinarily spotted or party coloured. The Scotch Rach (see Jamieson); Eng. Brach; are applied to a hound, canis venaticus; to a dog that scents out, or traces out by the scent; perhaps rach and brach are ræcc, be-ræcc, brecc, from the A. S. Ræcc, from Reccan, to reek, to send forth a fume or scent; Ger. Ruechen, be-riechen, to scent out, to trace by the scent or odour. (Odorem spirare et odorem percipere, Wachter.) Rach also occurs in the old romance of Lybeaus Disconus.

Mr. Steevens quotes the following passage from Sir Thomas More's Comfort against Tribulation, b. iii. c. 24:—

Here it must be known of some men that can skill of hunting, whether that we mistake not our terms, for then are we vtterly ashamed as ye wott well.—And I am so cunning, that I can not tell, whether among them a bitche be a bralde or no, but I remember she is no bitch but a bracke.

For as the dogs pursue the silly doe,
The bracke behind, the hounds on every side;
So trac'd they me among the mountains wide.

Phaer. Legend of Owen Glandower.

Young. He dy't: hark, hither, is that your brother!
Fl. Lo. Yes, have you lost your memory!
Young. As I live, he's a pretty fellow.
Yo. Lo. O this is a sweet bracke

Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

Eve still ye theefe, and heare the lady sing in Welsh.
Hots. I had rather heare (lady) my brach howle in Irish.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

As they ryde talkynge
A rach ther cum flyngynge
Overthwert the way
Thanne seyde old and yynge
From her ferst gynnynge
They ne sawe honde never so gay.

Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson. Rom. vol. ii.

BRACHY'GRAPHY. } From the Gr. Βραχυς, short, and γραφειν, to write.
BRACHY'GRAPHER. }

Writing in a short or small space: an abbreviate or epitome: also by "short marks," now called short hand.

Look upon all the sad moneful objects in the world, betwixt whom all our compassion is wont to be divided; first the bankrupt rotting in a gaol; secondly, the direful bloody spectacle of the soldier wounded by the sword of war; thirdly, the malefactor howling under the stone, or gasping upon the rack or wheel; and fourthly, the gallant person on the scaffold or gallows ready for execution; and the secure, senseless sinner is the brachygraphy of all these.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 530.

It may be all the certainty of those high pretenders to it (science) may be circumscrib'd by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny.—Glanvill. Van. of Dog. c. 2.

He beheld himself, and sermon-writer; and did not know which most to wonder at, his own deafness, or the fellow's acuteness. At last he asked the brachygrapher, whether he wrote the notes of that sermon, or something of his own conception.—Guyton. Notes on Don Quixote, vol. i. p. 8.

BRACK. A breach, any thing broken; A. S. Braecan, to break.

Called I was William De la Poole,
Of Suffolke Duke in Queene Margarets daies,
That found the meane Duke Humfreys bloode to coole,
Whose worthie acts deserue eternall praise,
Whereby I note that fortune cannot raise
Any aloft, without some others wracke:
Flouds drowne no fields before they find a bracke.

Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 340.

You may find time out in eternity,
Decent and violence in heavenly justice,
Life in the grave, and death among the blessed,
Ere stain or brack in her sweet reputation.

Beaum. & Fletch. A Wife for a Month, Act i. sc. 1.

Let not a brack i'th' stuff, or here and there
The fading gloss, a general loss appear.

Id. Valentinian. Epilogue.

——A cord that would not slip
For knots and bracks about the mouth of it,
Made serue the turn—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

'Tis but my closer pressing to the fire
In th' euening's cold, because, my weeds, you know
Are passing thin: for I made bold to show
Their brackes to you, and pray'd your kinde supply.

Id. Ib. b. xvii.

BRACK, n. } Brack, Dut. Salsus, salt; a word still in use in Lincolnshire, says Skinner. He would derive it from the Dut. Braecken, vomere (prorumpere in Vomitum, Kilian,) because salt and salt water provoke vomition. (See PARBREAKE.) G. Douglas renders, extaque salsos Porriciam in fluctus.
BRA'CKISH. }
BRA'CKISHNESS. }
BRA'CKY. }

Brackish, impregnated with, tasting of, salt.

The entreilis eke fer in the fludis brake
——I shall slyng. Æneados, b. v.

But when I wake and finde away
that did delight me so,
Then in comes care to pleasure's place
that makes my limmes to quake,
That all besprent with brackish bryne
(O bed) I thee forsake.

Turberville. The Louer to his Careful Bed, &c.

Upon whose moisted skirt, with sea-weed fring'd about,
The bastard coral breeds, that, drawn out of the brack,
A brittle stalk becomes, from greenish turn'd to black.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

A great number of them rebelling against Spartacus, went and camped themselves by the Lake of Lucania, which water by report hath this variable property, that at certain times it changeth and becometh very sweet, and at some other times again so salt and brackish as no man can drink it.

North. Plutarch, p. 471.

But the souldiers were driven to take sea weeds called Alga (washing away the brackishness thereof with fresh water, putting to it a little herb called Dogs-tooth) to eat it so to their horse to eat.—Id. Ib. p. 610.

And, what the famous flood far more than that enriches,
The bracky fountains are, those two renouned wyches,
The Nant-wych and the North.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

Some are in a secret discontent at God's afflicting providence, and this raiseth the memory of former mercies, and takes away the relish of present mercies: as the sweet showers of heaven that fall into the sea are turned into its brackish taste: such neither enjoy God nor themselves.

Bates. The great Duty of Resignation.

Having long since written a short discourse of the Saltness of the Sea, I had been industrious to devise ways of comparing water in point of brackishness.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 394

BRA'CKET. A bracket or brace in Printing, is a certain mark bracing or confining words or lines together.

So much of the verse as is explained, is included in one, if it be from the beginning of the verse, or, if not, in two brackets [ ] so that the rest of the text, which is excluded by the brackets, may coherently be read with the paraphrase of that which is included, and the sense continue undisturbed by that means.—Hammond. To the Reader.

At the head of each article, I have referred, by figures included in brackets, to the page of Dr Lardner's volume, where the section, from which the abridgement is made, begins.—Paley Evidences, pt. ii. c. 6.

BRAG, v. } Dut. Braggeren; Fr. Brague. Junius observes that Brag, in Scotch, is fear, terror; and he quotes several instances from G. Douglas of the word so used. The Glossarist also remarks, that, to boast and brag one, is, to threaten, or sharply reprove one. And hence was deduced, as Junius believes, the English application of the word—to those, who endeavour to strike terror into their opponent by the noisiness of their threats. The word itself he refers to the A. S. Breg-an, terrere, to terrify. Skinner, on the other hand, says,—perhaps from the Lat. Fragor; qui (sc.) fragorem magnum edit. G. Douglas writes, "with brask and bout," which, as the Glossarist seems to consider, can be merely the word Brag, differently written: and this brings us to the A. S. Bræc-an, frangere, to break; Bræg-an, diripere, as the more probable etymology. Breg-an, terrere, is (there can scarcely be a doubt) Brec-an, frangere, contundere, to break or bruise, differently written and applied. Our older English writers, as well as modern speech, supply us with a word similar both in origin and usage: viz, to crack, a crack, (qv.) To brag, then, is—
BRA'GGER. }
BRA'GGERY. }
BRA'GGING, n. }
BRA'GGINGLY. }
BRA'GLESS. }
BRA'GLY. }
BRA'GGART, n. }
BRA'GGART, adj. }
BRA'GGADISM. }
BRAGGADO'CIO. }

To break or burst out, to bray out, (sc.) in noisy threats, or boastings; in clamorous pretensions; and thus to proclaim ostentatiously, (bravingly); to vaunt, to boast, to exaggerate. Bale uses the expression, "Bragge boastynge." See BRAVE, and BRAY.

An horne blew with many boustous bragge,
Which all this world with war hath made to wagge.

Chaucer. The Test. of Cresside

But did I then diuise with crueltie
(As tyrants do) to kill the yeelding pray?
Or did I bragge and boast triumphauntly
As who should saye the field were mine that day.

Gascoigne. Lookes of a Louer Forsaken.

May brainsick Bacchus brag
or boast himself as free!
Not I, but Aryadna's crowne
sherues him in loue to bee.

Turberville. To a late acquainted Friend.

Geue place, ye louers, here before,
That spent your boates and braggs in vain.
My ladies beawty passeth more,
The best of yours, I dare well sayen.

Surrey. A Warning to a Louer

The chefe cause of thys hath beene the cruell contempt of holye wedlocke, and the bragge boastynge out of their vnholye chastitie.—Bale. Eng. Votaries, pt i. Conclusion.

These vaunting verses with a many mo,
(To his mishap) haue come vnto my handes,
Whereof the rest (because he sailed so,
In braggers boate which set itselfe on sandes,
And brought him eke fast bound in follyes bandes,)
Of curtesie I keepe them from your sight,
Lest those suffice which of myselfe I write.

Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bath

All the nobles of the Frenche courte were in garmentes of many colours, so that they were not knowen from the braggery.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

The French King did not only contemne his prowd wordes, and laughed at his manacyng and bolde bragging, but soberly answered, that without enfringyng of any league or treatie he lawfully might and woulde helpe his frendes.—Id. Edw. IV. an. 9.

None bewail more braggingly Germanicus death in outward show, then such as in their harts are most glad.
Greneway. Tacitus, Annales, p. 58.

The fox bragged what a number of shifts and devices he had to get from the hounds; and the cat said he had but one, which was to climbe a tree.
Bacon. Colours of Good and Evil.

Like as a ship, in which no balance lies,
Without a pilot on the sleeping waves,
Fairly along with wind and water flies,
And painted masts with silken sails embraces,
Till Neptune's self the bragging vessel saves,
To laugh a while at her so proud array.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Pro. Why Valentine, what bragadisme is this?
Val. Pardon me (Protheus) all I can is nothing,
To her, whose worth, make other worthies nothing,
Shee is alone.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. sc. 4.

Or shall I say, that I can scarce forbear
To class, when I a captain do meet there,
So lively in his own vain humour drest,
So braggishly, and like himself exprest,
That modern cowards, when they saw him plaid,
Saw, blusht, departed guilty, and betraied.
Maine. On Beaum. & Fletcher's Works.

Dio. The bruite is, Hector's slaine, and by Achilles.
Aia. If it be so, yet bragliesse let it be,
Great Hector was a man as good as he.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act v. sc. 10.

Seest not thilke same hawthorne studde,
How bragly it begins to budde,
And vtter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids make ready Maia's bower
That now is uprist from bed.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. March.

To the onely shadow of whose worth yet, I entitle not the bold rimes of euery aprish and impudent braggart, (though he dares assume any thing) such I turne over to the weauing of cobwebs.—Chapman. Homer. Preface to the Reader.

His steward was his kinsman, vain expence,
Who proudly strove in matters light, to show
Heroic mind in braggart affluence
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 8.

Craggs. Alas! if I am such a creature,
To grow the worse for growing greater,
Why faith, in spite of all my brags,
The Pope must be asham'd of Craggs.—Pope. Dialogue.

I left him well recruited in his strength: forewarning him again to trust such braggers.—Wiseman. Surg. b. ii. c. 5.

Up spring the tapers as before
The fairies bragly foot the floor,
And music fills the hall. Parnell. Fairy Tale.

Nor have I hazarded my art,
And neck, so long on the state's part,
To be expos'd, I'th' end to suffer
By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras, pt ii. c 3.

What if, when a pudding for dinner he lacks,
He cribs without scruple from other men's sacks,
In this right noble example he brags,
To borrow as freely from other men's bags.
Dodsley. Song. The Miller of Mansfield.

Immortal Guy! who near Wintonia's walls
With that gigantic braggard Colebrand fight!
For a long summer's day sole fight maintain'd,
But huge gigantic size, and braggart oaths,
And sword or massy club, dismay'd thee not.
Jago. Edge Hill, b. ii.

As yet, notwithstanding the strutting and lying independence of a braggart philosophy, nature maintains her rights, and great names have great prevalence.
Burke. Appeal to the Old Whigs.

BRA'GGET. Scotch, Bragwort. The etymology is unknown. A compound drink made of honey and spices, (Grose.) Whalley adds, ale. See the quotation from Hollinshed.

Thereto she coude skip, and make a game,
As any kid or calf folowing his dame.
His mouth was swete as braket or the meth,
Or hord of apples, laid in hay or heth
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3261.

Captaine, if ever at the boxing ken,
You have in draught of Darby drilled your men;
And we haue seru'd there armed all in sle
With the browne bowle, and charg'd in bragget stale
B. Jonson. Masques. Gypsies Metamorphosed.

Before she [the Author's wife] putteth her first woort into the furnace, or mingleth it with the hops, she taketh out a vessel full of eight or nine gallons, which she shutteth up close, and suffereth no aire to come into it till it become yellow, and this she reserveth by itself unto further use, calling it brackwoort.—Hollinshed. Desc. of England, c. 6.

BRAID, v. } A. S. Bræg-an, ge-brægan, diBRAID, n. } ripere, eximere, stringere, to tear,
BRAID, adj. } or drag out, or away. Bray, brayed, braid: (See ABRAID and BRAY,) applied to any frequent or sudden and violent action or motion. The adjective, used by Shakespeare, seems to denote, sudden and violent.

To break, pull, drag, rend, or tear;—to start, leap or spring: to make an irruption, or eruption, or sally, assault, onset, insurrection, revolt. See Dr. Jamieson in v. Brade, who assigns (unnecessarily) various etymologies for various applications of the same word.

Mr. Tooke thinks that Braide, quoted below from Shakespeare, has the same meaning that it has in Proverbs; "Diana (he remarks) does not confine herself to his craft or deceit; but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes Bertram to be compounded; and which would not depart from him, though bray'd in a mortar." Such an interpretation is scarcely intelligible. Diana has previously said,

"My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sate in's heart. She sayes, all men
Have the like oaths."

The word appears to refer to the suddenness and violence with which Bertram had wooed her.

A gret ok he wolde breide a doun, as smal gerde were,
And bere forth in his hond, that fole forte a fere.
R. Gloucester, p. 22.

When the day was ent, to rest men wer alle laid,
Isaac gan repent, that he to R[illegible] said.
Fulle stille away he went, that was a theues braid
R. Brunne, p. 164.

Iak brother had he slayn, the Waleis .nat is said,
The more Iak [illegible] fayn, to do William that braid.
Id. p. 329.

And whanne he cam nygh, the devel hurlede him doun and to brayde him.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 9.

And whan he saw how stille that I lay,
He was agast, and wold have fled away,
Til at the last out of my swough I brayde,
O, hast thou slain me, false theef! I sayde,
And for my lond thus hast thou mordred me.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6381.

For fere almost out of his wit he brayde,
And to his goddes pitously preid
For socour. Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,456.

——— And solemnly
His swerde all naked out he braide
In his fooli hast, and thus he saide
I am cause of this felonie,
So it is reason, that I die Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Fot Hercules bede of hym toke,
Til it was vnderne high and mo
And than he gan to sigh sore,
And solemnly he brayde of slepe. Id. Ib. b. v.

While in this sort he did his tale pronounce:
With waiward looke she gan him ay behold,
And roiling eies, that moued to and fro;
With silente looke discoursing ouer all
And foorth in rage at last thus gan she brayde.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

He brigeth to the matter after his twoo yeres musing thereupō, neither in sight of any substaunciall learning, nor yet anye proofe of reason or natural wytte, but onely a rashe malicious fráticke braide.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 442.

Diana. Since Frenchmen are so braide
Marry that will, I liue and die a maid.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 2.

BRAID, OR BREID, v. } See BROID and EMBROIDER.
BRAID, n. } A. S. Bredan; Dut. Breyden.
BRA'IDED, adj. } To knit, to plight, to wreathe.
BRA'IDING, n. }

Whose apparell shall not be outward with broided heare, & hangings on of gold, either in putting on of gorgious apparell: but let the hid man of the hert be vncorupt, with a meke and quiet spirit, which spirit is before God a thinge much set by.—Bible, 1551. 1 Peter, c. 3.

Lykewyse also the wemen that they araye them selues in comlye apparell wyth shamefastnes and discrete behaueoure, not wyth broyded heere, other golde, or pearles, or costly araye.—Id. 1 Timothy, c. 2.

The single twyned cordes may no such stresse indure.
As cables brayded thre-fould may, together wrethed sure.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes.

S Peter saith: let not the outward apparell of women bee decked with the brayding of hir haire, not with wrapping of golde about it, or goodly cloathing, but the mind and the conscience, that is not seene with eyes, if it be pure & quiet, that is a godly thing and excellent afore God. And S. Paul saith; women in their array shoulde apparell themselues with shamefastnes and sobernes, and not with braydes of their haires, or golde, or pearles or precious clothing, but as women ought to doe, let them shew vertue by good workes.—Vives. Instr. of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 9.

Behold, behold, they neuer stand content
With God, with kinde, with any help of arte,
But curle their locks, with bodkins and with braids,
But dye their heare, with sundry subtill sleights.
Gascoigne. Epilogue to the Steel Glass.

When he [Alexander] sawe he coulde not finde the end of the thonges, that wer hidden within the wrethes, constraining the oracle to the uttermooste. He cutte the wrethes a sonder with a swoorde, and so when he had loosed the wreathes, he found the ends of the knottes wythin the braides.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 54.

Thy colours I devis'd with care,
Which were unknown before,
Which since that, in their braided hair
The Nymphs and Silvans wore.
Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

The richest colours, flowery Carmel wears,
Red fillets, cross'd with purple, braid thy hairs.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair;
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair;
A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

She was, it seems, a person of distinction, for she every day came to him in a different dress, of the most beautiful shells, bugles and bredes.—Spectator, No. 11.

O nymph reserv'd, while now the bright-hair'd Sun
Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
With brede ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed. Collins. Ode to Evening

All the shadowy tribes of mind
In braided dance their murmurs joind,
And all the bright uncounted powers,
Who feed on heaven's ambrosial flowers
Id. Ode on the Poetical Character

BRAIL, v. } The ropes used to truss up a
BRAIL, n. } sail to the yard or mast whereto it is attached, are, in a general sense, called brails. (Falconer, note 12 on The Shipwreck, c. 2.) Perhaps Be-rail or Be-riggle. See RAIL, RIG.

The main sail, by the squall so lately rent,
In streaming pendants flying is unbent:
With brails refix'd another soon prepar'd,
Ascending spreads along beneath the yard.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c 2.

Deep, on her side, the reeling vessel lies:
Brail up the mizen quick! the master cries.—Id. Ib

BRAIN, v. } A. S. Bragen; Dut. Breyne;
BRAIN, n. } Ger. Breyne. Wachter, Junius and Skinner concur in referring to the Gr. Βρεγμα,
BRA'INISH. } sinciput; quod est (Skinner
BRA'INLESS. } adds) cerebri sedes. Βρεγμα, BRA'INSICK. } Eustathius says, (in Il. ε.
BRA'INSICKLY. } v. 586.) is so called απο του
BRA'INSICKNESS. } βρεχειν, to wet, to moisten;
BRA'INWORM. } because in infants that part is wet or moist? Bragen may be formed of Be-ragn, (ber pronounced br.) See RAIN.

To brain, is to deprive of the brain, to knock out the brains.

Brainsick,—sick in the head or brain; weak, ailing, addle, in the head or understanding.

Brain-worm,—one who has a worm, a maggot, in his head.

As the emperour mid his scheld the strok hente ynow,
And drow hys sword an hey, & to the gronde faste slow,
And smot Nennyn thorg the helm somdel toward the bragn.
R. Gloucester, p. 49.

The long day with speares sharp yground
With arowe, darts, swerds, and maces fel
They fight, & bringen horse & man to ground
And with hir axes out the braines quel.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

Yet haue I prooued them openly with the everlastynge worde of God and that not wroonge, nor wrested after my lyghte brayne, but after the exposition of clerkely doctours, yea and that of the oldest & of the best
Barnes. Workes, p 333

And in very deed it were better to be married vnto an image, or a picture, or vnto a painted table than to bee married to a vicious, or a foolish, or a brainlesse man.
Peres. Instr. of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 16.

When rash vnbridled youth had run his reckleese race,
And caried me with careleese course to many a great disgrace,
Then riper mellowed yeares, thought good to turne their trade,
And bad repentance holde the reines, to rule the brain-sicke lade. Gascoigne. Weedes.

He sayd, this unement es so gode,
That if a man be brayn-wode,
And he war ones anoynt with yt,
Surely sone he have his wit.—Ywaine & Gawin, l. 1756.

Trin. They say there 's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if th' other two be brain'd like us, the state totters.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 2.

Post. 'Tis still a dreame, or else such stuffe as madmen
Tongue, but braine not. Id. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 4.

Hots. By this hand, if I were now by this rascall, I could braine him with his ladies' fan.
Id. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

"I did not read to the intent to be edified thereby nor to seeke the glorie of God: contrariwise, arrogantly to be seditious and to dispute thereof, and priuately to interpret it after my owne brayne and affection."
Stow. Q. Mary, an. 1553.

Because the work might in truth be judged brainish, if nothing but amorous humour were handled therein, I have interwoven matters historical, which unexplained, might defraud the mind of much content.
Drayton. To the Reader.

The old Earle of Kildare, deceased in the tower, wishing in his death bed, that either he had died before he had heard of the Rebellion, or that his brainelesse boy had never lived to raise the like commotion.
Hollinshed. Chron. of Ireland, an. 1539.

The upper part of this root (for it groweth double) stamped with frankincence and mixt with wine of equall weight, and so made into salve, draweth out the splits or broken skales in the brain-pan or scull.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 11.

Whilst charming fancies moue me to reueale
The idle rauings of my brain-sicke youthe,
My heart doth pant within, to heare my mouth
Vnfold the follies which it would conceale
Stirling. Aurora, s. 1.

Lady. Who was it, that thus cry'd? why worthy Thane,
You doe vnbend your noble strength, to thinke
So braine-sickly of things: goe get some water,
And wash this filthie witnesse from your hand.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 2.

Cowardise is nothing with them but heedful wariness: brain-sickness they entitle promptitude, quickness, and cesertie.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 77.

Whereas I briefly mentioned certain heads of discourse, which I refer'd to a place more proper according to my method to be treated there at full with all their reasons about them, this brain-worm against all the laws of dispute, will needs deal with them here.—Milton. Colasterion.

I stop a little at the brain, as the most considerable part of this part [the head] of the body, being the great instrument of life and motion of quadrupeds, as 'tis in man of that, as also in all probability, the chief seat of his immortal soul.—Derham. Physico Theo. b. vi. c. 2.

Let those who boast the uncommon gift of brains,
The laurel pluck, and wear it for their pains;
Fresh on their brows for ages let it bloom
And, ages past, still flourish round their tomb.
Churchill. The Candidate.

Ill fated youth! what stars malignant shed
Their baneful influence o'er thy brainless head,
Doom'd to be ever writing, never read.
P. Whitehead. State Dunces.

BRAKE. That which breaketh; (lit. and met.) sc. the strength, the spirit, the temper; that which, any thing, (bridle, frame, close or narrow place,) which restrains, holds, or keeps in, confines, curbs, tames, subdues. (See the Com. on Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas. Act ii. sc. 1; and Nare's Gloss.) Holland renders the Lat. Ballista, a brake.

But such as haue their stables full-fraught
With pampred jades, ought therewithal to wey,
What great excesse, vpon them may be spent.
How many poore, (which nede nor brake nor bit)
Might therewithal, in godly wise be fedde.
Gascoigne. The Steel Glass.

In her right hand (which to and fro did shake)
She bare a skourge, with many a knottie string,
And in her left, a snaffle bit or brake,
Inbost with gold, and many a gingling ring.—Id. Ib.

But the law had them in suche a brake, that they coulde not chuse, but graunt, that they had well deserued punishement, for so muche as it could not be denied, but that it was good and honeste, whiche was by the law commaunded.
Udal. Galathi, c. 3.

This Bucephal was a passing faire horse fierce & ful of courage, whiche Philip had bought of a Thessalie for thirteene talents & because of his fiercenesse, kepte him within a brake of iron barres.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 6.

Among engines of artillery, the Cretes invented the scorpion or crosse bow: the Syrians, the catapult: the Phenicians the balist or brake, and the sling.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

Yet ceased not eyther the brakes or scorpions, wherof these discharged stones thicke, the other sent out darts as fast.—Id. Ammianus, b. xx. c. 8.

BRAKE. } Brake or bracken is perhaps so
BRA'KY. } called, says Skinner, quia fragilis est; easy to be broken. A brake, Junius refers to the same origin.

Any place covered with such undergrowth as bracken, briars, or brambles.

So sheepe with wool are clad,
their maisters haue the gaine,
So birds do build their neats on brakes
and put themselues to paine.
Turbervile. The Lover finding his Love.

Repaire to heare the wedded make
And late ycoupled in a knote,
The Philomele that sits in brakes,
And telles of Tereus truth by note.
Id. The Lover hoping Redress, &c.

Had I that honest blood in my veins again, Queen, that your feats, and these frights have drain'd from me, honour should pull hard, e'r it drew me into these brakes.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theo. Act v. sc. 1.

The fields of combat here are beds of downe,
Or heaped lilies vnder shadie brakes;
But come and see our queene with golden crowne
That all her seruants blest & happie makes.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. xv. s. 64.

The nimble squirrel noting here,
Her mossy dray that makes;
And laugh to see the dusty deer
Come bounding o'er the brakes.
Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

Why kept he not amongst the fennes?
Or on the copses by,
Or in the woods, and braky glennes,
Where hawes and acorns lie.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe.

Fearne or brake, will die at the root in two yeares, if you will not suffer it to braunch, and grow above ground.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 6.

——— The juicy groves
Put forth their buds, unfolding by degrees,
Till the whole leafy forest stands display'd,
In full luxuriance to the sighing gales,
Where the deer rustle through the twining brake,
And the birds sing concealed. Thomson. Spring.

Thus at the shut of ev'n, the weary bird
Leaves the wide air, and in some lonely brake
Cow'rs down, and dozes till the dawn of day,
Then claps her well-fledg'd wings and bears away.
Blair. The Grave.

BRA'MBLE, n. } Dut. Braem; A. S. Bræm-bel, bremble, which Skinner
BRA'MBLED. } derives from the A. S. Bremel,
BRA'MBLY. } angens, crucians; because it tears or lacerates the hands with its thorns. Bremel probably is from Bremman, furere. See BRIMME.

But he was chaste and no lechour,
And swete as is the bramble flour
That beareth the red hepe.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13,676.

None of you all there is, that is so madde
To seke for grapes on brambles or on bryers.
Wyat. Of the meane and sure Estate.

But in the one it bryngeth forth good corne & sweete frutes: and in the other it bryngeth forth nettles and brambles, that be nothing worth but to the fier.
Barnes. Workes, p. 261.

Whereupon is thought that he [Demosthenes] forsook his colours and fled; now as he made haste away, there chanced a bramble to take hold of his cassock beninde, whereat he turned back and said unto the bramble: Save my life and take my ransome.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 766.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge: where if it chances to prick the owner, it will tear the thief.—Grew. Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 3.

Hark, how they warble in that brambly bush,
The gaudy goldfinch, and the speckly thrush.
A. Philips, Past. 4.

What tho' no native charms my person grace,
Nor beauty moulds my form, nor paints my face;
The sweetest fruit may often pall the taste,
While sloes and brambles yield a safe repast.
Blacklock. The Plaintive Shepherd.

Yet hence inthron'd in venerable state,
Proud hospitality dispens'd her store;
Ah, see, beneath yon tower's unvaulted gate,
Forlorn she sits upon the brambled floor
Warton, Ode 3.

BRAN. } Fr. Bran; It. Brenna. Somner
BRA'NNY. } thinks it is from the A. S. Brun, brown. Chaucer writes Bren. (See Junius and Menage.)

The brown, as contrasted with the white, (sc.) the white meal.

In schole is great altercation
In this matere, and grete disputation,
And hath ben of an hundred thousand men,
But I ne can not boulte it to the bren.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,177.

Ye shall, I warrant you, very well perceiue, that whē his wordes be well sifted, men shall find little fine flowre in the, but all very mustie branne, not worthy so much as to feue either horse or hogges.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 649.

For that is meale with philosophers, is taken but for bran and chaffe with simple folke. And contrariwise, the meale of the simple is but bran and chaffe among wise men.
Golden Boke, c. 12.

Their common drinke is mead, the poorer sort vse water, and a third drinke called quasse, which is nothing else (as we say) but water turned out of his wits, with a little branne meashed with it.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 469.

Otherwhiles there be certain brannie scales called dandruffe, which ouer-spread the head.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 6

Feed him with herbs, whatever thou canst find,
Of generous warmth: and of salacious kind,
Then water him, and (drinking what he can)
Encourage him to thirst again with bran.
Dryden. Virgile, Geor. 3.

BRANCH, v. } Dut. Branche; Ger. Rank;
BRANCH, n. } Fr. Branche; It. Branca.
BRA'NCHER. } Kilian and Wachter, from BRA'NCHING, n. } Rank-en, recken, to reach, to BRA'NCHLESS. } extend. Others, from Lat. Ra-
BRA'NCHY. } mus or Brachium. More plainly from the A. S. Be-wrenc-an, or be-wring-an; Dut. Be-wringhen, wroncken; Ger. Renk-en, to wring, or wrench, or raunch, to be-raunch, to braunch or branch, to twist, to turn, to bend; and thus branch, the n. is nearly equivalent to bough; and to branch—

To bend, to turn, to incline, to diverge: and further—

To branch, is to reach or stretch out, or off, to extend, (sc.) as from the trunk, the main stem or material; the main road, course, or direction: to spread or shoot out.

Ther come in tueif olde men myd eueue pas there
Men of well vayr semblant, and braunchye hil here,
Of olyue, as in sygne that hil of pes were.
R. Gloucester, p. 193.

It it be so no braunche in wedlaike of tham be nomen,
It blanche ouer lyue Edward, &c.—R. Brunne, p. 254.

Ypocrisie is a braunche of pryde, and most among clarkes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 278.

And fulle mychē pepie spredden her clothis in the way, other kittiden braunchis of treese and strewiden in the weye.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 21.

And many of the people spred their garmētes in ye way. Other cut downe braunches from the trees & strewed thē in the waye.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This naked sword, that hangeth by my side,
Swiche vertue hath, that what man that it smite,
Thurghout his armure it wol kerve and bite
Were it as thicke as is a braunched oke.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,473.

But ouer this nowe wolde I preye,
To witte what the braunches are
Of auarice, and howe thei fare,
Als wel in loue as otherwise. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

After masse the kyng departed out of the churche in the same estate, and went to his palays, and there was a fountayne that ran by dyuers braunches whyte wyne and red.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 265.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may prove proles tarde crescentis Olivæ: and yield, though with a little longer expectation, as useful, and more sober fruit than the other.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 77.

It was but now they gathered blooming May,
And of his armes disrob'd the branching tree,
To strow with boughs and blossoms all thy way;
And now the branchless trunk a cross for thee,
And May, dismay'd, thy coronet must be.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

The branches of the oak endure all the seasons of the year, though its leaves fall off in autumn; and these too will be restored with the returning spring
Spectator, No. 173

Let your meditations run over the names of all the sciences, with their numerous branchings, and innumerable particular themes of knowledge: and then reflect how few of them you are acquainted with in a tolerable degree
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 1.

I might give another plain simile to confirm the truth of this, What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the various rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once!—Id. Ib. pt. i. c. 17.

Shall reptile sinners frowning justice fear,
And pageant titles privilege the peer?
So falls the humbler game in common fields
While the branch'd beast the royal forest shields
P. Whitehead. Honour. A Satire, 1747.

One principal branch of which is to distinguish merit in every degree, and so to gain the love of the lower rank, as to preserve at the same time, the affection of their superiors.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. ix. Let. 5.

In those trifling manufactures which are destined to supply the small wants of but a small number of people, the whole number of workmen must necessarily be small; and those employed in every different branch of the work can often be collected into the same workhouse, and placed at once under the view of the spectator.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 1.

Quite round the pile, a row of reverend elms,
(Coeval near with that) all' rugged show,
Long lash'd by the rude winds, some rift half down
Their branchless trunks. Blair. Grave.

Beneath thy branchy bowers of thickest gloom
Much on th' imperfect state of man I've mus'd.
Scott. Amwell.

BRAND, v. }
BRAND, n. } A brand, torris ignitus. Dut. and Ger. Brand, from the Dut.
BRAND-NEW. } Branden; Ger. Brennen; A. S. Brennan, to burn.

To brand is to burn, (sc.) a spot or mark in token of infamy.

A brand is a burning stick or torch; a spot or mark burned.

A sword is also so called, because in motion it glitters like a burning torch, like a fire-brand, (Skinner.) But Hickes,—because the ancients in fabricating swords, endeavoured to give them the appearance of flaming fire.

Brand-new,—Dut. Brandnieuw (Skinner observes), is by an elegant metaphor deduced e re fabrili: new from the fire, from the forge.

Fire & brondes thei nam in houses of ther gatis,
& ouer the water suam, and set fire on the gatis.
R. Brunne, p. 295.

Therefore whanne Iudas hadde take a company of knyghtis and mynistris of the bischopis and of the Pariseis, he cam thider with lanternes and brondis and armeris
Wiclif. John, c. 18.

Judas then after he had receaued a bonde of men, and ministers of the hye preestes, and Pharisees, came thither with lanters and fyer brandes and wepens.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And at the brondes ende outran anon
As it were blody dropes many on.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2342.

O suffer me among so many men,
To tread aright the traces of thy pen;
And light my link at thy eternal flame,
Till without it I brand everlasting shame,
On the world's forehead.
The Returne from Parnassus, Act i. sc. 1.

His black uncombed locks dishevell'd fell
About his face; through which, as brands of hell,
Sunk in his skull, his staring eyes did glow.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

——— Waes me, I hae forgot,
With hast of coming aff, to fetch my coat.
What shall I do? it was almaist brand new,
'Tis but a hellier since't came aff the clew.
Ross. Helenore, in Jamieson.

All wit which borders upon prophaneness and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due deserves to be branded for folly.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Yet since the effects of Providence we find
Are variously dispensed to human kind;
That vice triumphs, and virtue suffers here,
A brand that sovereign justice cannot bear;
Our reason prompts us to a future state.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

When in her faithful and immortal page,
They saw transmitted down from age to age
Recorded villains, and each spotted name
Branded with marks of everlasting shame,
Succeeding villains sought her as a friend,
And if not really mended, feign'd to mend.
Churchill. The Candidate.

Hence the school divines have branded the practice of taking interest, as being contrary to the divine law both natural and revealed.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 30.

Trample th' invader's lofty crest
And from his grasp the dagger wrest,
And desolating brand.
Beattie. Ode on Lord H's Birth-day.

BRA'NDISH, v. }
BRA'NDISH, n. } "From Brand, (see ante.) Anglicè, — to brandish a BRA'NDISHER. } sword, gladium strictum vibrando corruscare facere," (Hickes, Gram. A. S. p. 192.) Junius also thinks that brandish was first applied to the motion of a brand, and then generally to denote—to wave, to shake. Fr. Brandir; (It. Brandire; which Menage derives from the Lat. Vibrare,) to shine or glister with a gentle shaking or soft moving, (Cotgrave.)

To wave, (sc. while held or grasped,) to move to and fro in attitude of defence or attack; to vibrate.

To the king again went he there,
And said, "Lief sir, I saw a hand;
Out of the water it came all bare,
And thrice it brandished that rich brand."
Morte Arthur. Ellis. Rom. vol. i.

So they set on, first discharging their arrowes, then dealing with their swordes, which they use in brauerie to shake, and brandish ouer their heads before they came to strokes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 484.

And as Jove brandishing a starre (which men a comet call)
Hurles out his curled haire abroad, that from his brand exales
A thousand sparkes.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Vpon the bridge appear'd a warlike swaine
From top to toe all clad in armour good,
Who brandishing a broad and cutting sword,
Thus threat'ned death with many an idle word.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovllogne, b. xvii. s. 31.

It is in vaine braue friends, to shew the right
Which we are forc'd to seeke by ciuill fight.
Your swords are brandisht in a noble cause,
To free your country from a tyrant's lawes.
Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

But their auxiliary bands, those brandishers of speares
From many cities drawn are they, that are our hinderers.
Not suffering well rays'd Troy to fall.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Dame Justice waits thee, well I ween,
Her sword is brandish'd high:
Naught can thee from her vengeance screen,
Nor canst thou from her fly.
Prior. The Viceroy. A Ballad.

But the most sonorous part of our consort, was a she drum, or (as the vulgar call it) a kettle drum, who accompanied her discourse with motions of the body, tosses of the head, and brandishes of the fan.—Tatler, No. 157.

With old Silenus reclining, through the crowd
Which gambols round him, in convulsions wild
Tossing their limbs, and brandishing in air
The ivy-mantled thyrsus.—Akenside. Hymn to the Naiads.

One hand secures his hat, save when with both
He brandishes his pliant length of whip,
Resounding oft, and never heard in vain.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BRA'NDLE. Fr. Brandiller. "To brandle, wag, shake, swing, totter," (Cotgrave.) Menage says from Brandir, to wave, to shake. (See BRANDISH.) Bp. Taylor writes Brank. See in v. ANTITYPE.

Princes cannot be too suspicious when their lives are sought, and subjects cannot be too curious when the state brandies.—State Trials, 4th James I. an. 1606.

BRA'NDY. Dut. Brand-wijn; Sw. Braen-win; Ger. Brand-wein. Brand, i. e. burned;—and wine, corrupted into y in English.

Ger. Buy any brand wine, buy any brand wine!
Beaum. & Fletch. Beggar's Bush, Act iii. sc. 1.

The Dutch their wine and all their brandy lose,
Disarm'd of that from which their courage grows:
While the glad English, to relieve their toil,
In healths to their great leader drink the spoil.
Waller. Instructions to a Painter.

Forgets his pomp, dead to ambitious fires,
And to some peaceful brandy-shop retires;
Where in full gills his anxious thoughts he drowns,
And quaffs away the care that waits on crowns.
Addison. The Play House.

Thus the wool of England used to be exchanged for the wines of France, and the fine cloths of Flanders; in the same manner, as the corn in Poland is at this day, exchanged for the wines and brandies of France, and for the silks and velvets of France and Italy.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 3.

BRA'NGLE. To brangle is interpreted by Lye,—to brandish, to shake. The Glossarist to G. Douglas thinks it is from the Fr. Branler or Bransler, to move, to shake. Dr. Jamieson coincides in this; and if they are right, brangle and brandle are merely different ways of writing the same word. (See BRANDLE and BRANSEL.) But Brangle is also interpreted jurgari, altercari, to wrangle; which Skinner and Junius agree is wrongle, a diminutive of wrong, the past part. of wring, to twist, to distort, to misrepresent; and thus—

To dispute, to squabble, to quarrel.

Be-wrangle, berangle, brangle, presents a common course of corruption.

Brangill and Brangland (i. e. brangling) occur in G. Douglas, Æneados, b. ii. p. 59. b. x. p. 334; applied to the motion of a tree and of a spear. In b. x. p. 347, Mezentius is said 'To go brangland through the field," and here Dr. Jamieson interprets it to denote—to menace; to make a threatening appearance.

This is "durus sermo," says some brangling parishioner, that fetches up his poor minister every term for trifles.
Bp. Hall. Rem. p. 81.

A fellow, whose father was a butcher, desiring a lawyer to be referee in some little brangle between him and his neighbour, complained that the lawyer excused himself.
Swift, vol. xxi. Let. 410.

Jealousies, quarrels, and other ruptures, are as frequent between neighbouring squires, and from the same motives: the former brangling about their mears and bounds, as the others do about their frontiers.—Id. Ib.

The payment of tythes in this kingdom is subject to so many frauds, brangles, and other difficulties, not only from papists and dissenters, but even from those who profess themselves protestants.—Id. On settling the Tithe on Hemp.

BRA'NSEL. Fr. Branler or bransler; to brandle. Bransle the n. Cotgrave says, is "a brandling, &c. Also, a brawl or dance, wherein many (men and women) holding by the hands, sometimes, in a ring, and otherwhiles at length, move altogether" G. Douglas, in the Threttene Booke of Eneados uses brangill for a dance.

And other-whiles, with amorous delights,
And pleasing toyes he would her entertaine
Now singing sweetly, to suprise her sprights,
Now making layes of loue and louer's paine,
Brauntes, ballads, virelayes, and verses vaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

BRASS. }
BRA'SSY. } A. S. Bræs; whence perhaps (says Junius) the Fr. Bronze; It.
BRA'SIER. } and Sp. Bronzo: but Tooke is of opinion that these are from the old English to bren or brin; (A. S. Bernan, brenn-an;) i. e. to burn. The A. S. Bræs, brass, may have a similar origin, viz. A. S. Brastlian; Ger. Brasen, to burn; and the metal may be so called from its colour.

The Brutons made deol y nou tho he ded lay,
And made Kynge's fourme of brass al holu wythinne
Vpe an hors ryde of bras, & that body dude theryune.
R. Gloucester, p. 251.

———Reison me shewith
A belle to byggen of bras. other of brygt silver.
Piers Ploukman, p. 9.

If I speke with tungis of men and of aungels and I haue no charite, I am maad as bras sownyng, or a cymbal tynklynge.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth, c. 13.

Thoughe I spake w^e the tonges of men and angels, & yet had no loue. I were euen as soüdinge brasse: or as tikelynge cymball.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Shee must needs forsooth make a feast for to shew this candlesticke to her guests, which cost her fiftee thousand sesterces. Now the founder or brasier that sold it her, was misshapen, and bunch-backt.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv c 3.

——Losses
That hsue of late so hurled on his backe,
Know to presse a royall merchant downe;
And plucke commisseration of his state
From brasse bosomes and rough hearts of flinte.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iv. sc 1.

I could not but look upon these registers of existence, whether of brass or marble, as a kind of satyr upon the departed persons, who had left no other memorial of them, but that they were born and that they died.
Spectator, No 26.

His front, with ten fold plates of brass
Secur'd, shame never yet could pass,
Nor on the surface of his skin
Blush for that guilt which dwelt within.
Churchill. The Duellist, b iii.

BRAST. A. S. Burstan, to burst, to break out. See Burst.

The Sarazin so he smote in the hede with that treste
That brayn & blode alle hote & sprew alle out gan brest.
R. Brunne, p 229

No hart may thinke, ne tong sain
A quarter of my wo and pain
I might not with the anger last
Mine hart in poinct was for to brast.
Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

Peter brast fourth into teares, askyng nothing with his voice.—Barnes. An Epitome of his Workes, p 370.

Some of these that came hyther with the duke, not able to dissemble theyr sorow were faine at his backe to turne their face to the wall, while the doloure of their hearte braste oute at theyr eyen.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 65.

BRAT. The past part. of the A. S. Bred-an, fovere.

Any thing nourished, cherished, fostered.

O Israell, O housholde of the Lorde,
O Abraham's bratles, O broode of blessed seede.
O chosen sheepe that loused the Lord in deede;
O hungry heartes, feed stil vpon his worde,
And put your trust in him with one accorde.
Gascoigne. De Profundis.

For thou of Æols brats,
thyself the woorst dost showe
And hauing no just cause to rage
to soone beginst to bowe.
Turberville. Pyndara's Answer, &c.

Here therefore these atheistick politicians, as they first of all slander human nature, and make a villain of it; so do they in the next place, reproach justice and civil sovereignty also, making it to be nothing but an ignoble and bastardly brat of fear.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 891.

No parish, if they once adopt
The spurious brats by strolers dropt,
Leaves them, when grown up lustie fellows,
To the wide world, that is, the gallows.
Prior. To Fleetwood Shephard.

When the mad fit comes on, I seize the pen
Rough as they run, the rapid thoughts set down,
Rough as they run discharge them on the town
Hence rude unfinish'd brats, before their time,
Are borne into this idle world of rhyme.
Churchill. Gotham, b. ii.

BRATT. From the same source as the former Brat. Lye says, "Bred-an, Wormian," that is, to warm. A bratt then, is—

That which warmeth, a warm cloak or covering.

—— For ne had they but a shete
Which that they might wrappen hem in a-night.
And a bratt to warmen in by day-light.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,349.

BRAVE, v. Brave, n. Brave, adj. Brav'ing, n. Brav'ely. Brav'eness. Brav'ery. Brava'do. Bra'vo.

Fr. Brave; It and Sp. Bravo; Ger. Braw; Dut. Brauwe; Sw. Braf. Junius says, that it seems to be ἀπο του βραβειον, the reward of victory. Wachter derives it from the Lat. Probus: to this Ihre prefers, Brage, heros; A. S. Brego. But Duchat observes, that brave, in the application to finery, is the same thing as the ancient word braggard. (g into v.) And it is evident in many of the examples following, that brave, bravery, (applied either to person or thing,) and bravado, are used to express, loud, ostentatious bragging; a bragging, boastful, ostentatious display of finery, of dress, of pride, of power, of courage, of daring. (See the usages of Brave in Jamieson.) A brave, and to brave, are still so used; while brave, the adj. and bravery, the n. are employed to express—simply—courage. (See Brag, and the quotation from G. Fletcher; also, to Break.)

A brag, and a brave, denote the same thing.

To brave is to set boastfully at defiance; to challenge, in a boastful, bragging, daring manner. In Taming of the Shrew, to set off in finery.

He braued him vnder his nose and often compassed him about as if he had besieged him: till the Parthians not accustomed to endure such bravadoes, came about their King, and demanded battell.
Grenewey Tacitus Annales, p. 133.

Then who reioyst but I?
who thought himselfe yblest?
That was in Cupid's seruice plaste
as brauely as the best!
Turberville. An Answere in Dispraise of Wit, &c.

And she decked her selfe brauely to allure the eyes of all men that shoulde see her.—Bible, 1583. Judeth x 4.

Alas (quod she) behold eche pleasaunte greene,
Will now renew his sommers liuery.
The fragrant flowers, which haue not long bene sene,
Will flourish now, (ere long) in brauery.
Gascoigne. A Young Lady being Wounded, &c.

—— O Priam's sonne (said he)
How long the slaughter of your men, can ye sustaine to see,
Euen til they braue you at your gates?
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Gru. [To the Tailor.] Face not mee: thou hast brau'd manie men: braue not me; I will neither be fac'd nor brau'd.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 3.

Spen. Were I King Edward, England's sovereign,
Son to the lovely Eleanor of Spain,
Great Edward Longshank's issue, would I bear
These braues? Marlow. Edward II.

As those braue Edwards, father and the son,
At conquer'd Cressy with successful luck.
Where first all France (as at one game) they won.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

We may either alledge for excuse, necessity, or set against it the peril to which we exposed ourselves, the brauenesse of the exploit and the service so well performed, to make amends and recompence.—Holland. Plutarch, p 366.

From royall court I lately came (said he)
Where all the braueries that eye may see,
And all the happinesse that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser. Mother Hubberds Tale.

True. To refuse him at such a festival-time as this, being a brauery, and a wit too.
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act I. sc. 2.

Know. Nor would I, you should melt away yourself
In flashing brauery, lest, while you affect
To make a blaze of gentry to the world
A little puff of scorn extinguish it.
Id. Every Man in his Humour, Act I. sc. 1.

Har. By Astaroth e're long thou shalt lament
These braueries in irons loaden on thee.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Like a stately ship
Of Tarsus, bound for th' Isles
Of Javan or Gadier
With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving.—Id. Ib.

One Tait, a follower of Cesford, who as then was of the Lord's party, came forth in a bravery and called to the opposite party of horsemen, asking if any among them had courage to break a lance for his mistress.—Spottiswoode. History of the Church of Scotland, b. vi. an. 1578.

Minutius, general of his horsemen [Fabius] did trouble him much: for he being earnestly bent to fight without discretion, and brauing of a lusty courage, crept into opinion with the souldiers, by his hot fury, and desire to fight.
North. Plutarch, p. 152.

—— She [Penelope] told his foe
It was not faire nor equall t'ouercrow
The poorest guest her sonne pleas'd t'entertaine
In his free turrets; with so proud a straine
Of threats and brauings.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

In their passage divers of the enemy, who had before braued them with the greatest insolence, came with white napkins at the end of staves, and voluntarily abused themselves to offices of the greatest servility.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

Who combats bravely is not therefore brave,
He dreads a death-bed like the meanest slave.
Pope. Moral Essay, Epist. I.

Certainly it denotes no great bravery of mind to be worked up to any noble action by so selfish a motive, and to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to by a disinterested love to mankind, or by a generous passion for glory of him that made us.—Spectator, No. 255.

Tho' I never was out of this dear town, and fifty miles about it, [I] have been three nights together dogged by bravo's for an intreague with a cardinal's mistress at Rome.
Spectator, No. 156

And like a lordly ship which braves
The roar of winds, and rush of waves,
Weather and storms, which jealous hate
Or frantic malice may create.—Lloyd. Charity, a Pragment

Unknown among the nations of the earth,
Or only known to raise contempt and mirth;
Long free, because the race of Roman braves
Thought it not worth their while to make us slaves.
Churchill. Prophesy of Famine

And every moralist will find
A ruling passion in the mind,
Which though pent up and barricado'd,
Like winds where Æolus bravado'd,
Like them will sally from their den,
And raise a tempest now and then.—Lloyd. The Poet.

Grant me thy strength, and in that needful hour,
(Should it e'er come) when law submits to pow'r,
With firm resolve my steady bosom steel,
Bravely to suffer, though I deeply feel.
Churchill. The Conference.

I'm told so. And own, it has often surprised me while we have had so many instances of bravery there, we have had so few of wit at home to praise it.
Goldsmith. The Good Natur'd Man, Act iii.

Conscious of guilt, and fearful of the light,
They lurk enshrouded in the vale of night,
Safe from detection, seize th'unwary prey,
And stab, like braves, all who come that way.
Churchill. The Apology.

BRAWL, v. Brawl, n. Brawler. Braw'ling. Brawl is contracted from Brabble, (qv.) And see Broil. As now applied it is—To squabble, to quarrel in a loud and noisy manner, to wrangle, to rail.

For brawlers and brawling in Piers Ploughman, see Backbite.

Let a man that is a man consider that he is a foole that brawleth openlie with his wife.—Golden Boke, c. 19.

Nor with such nightlie brawles
thy postern gate shall sounde,
Nor pace strewde afront thy dore
in dawning shall be founde.
Turberville. The Lover exhorteth his Ladie, &c.

And who soeuer imagineth any other fayth, deceueth himselfe, and is a vaine disputer and a brawler about wordes, and hath no feelyng in his hart.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 93.

Some as enemies of all peace and concorde, couet no thing but discorde, debate and brallinge. And there be some families wherein the man & wife do braule & striue like dogs and catts.—Calisine. Poure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

Than ye Captall say'd, nay, I warrant you it is nat for our profyte, for tharchpreste is so great a brauler, yt if he come to vs he wyll but iangle.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. I. c. 220

There is seldome any playinge at dyce, but therat is vehement chydyng and braulynge, horrible oathes, cruell, and some tyme mortall menaces.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. I. c. 16.

I was here stunned with a mixed noise of clamour and jollity; on one side of me I heard singing and dancing; on the other, brawles and clashing of swords.—Tatler, No. 120.

Thou shalt be in as much danger in contending with a brawler in a private quarrel as in a battle, wherein thou may'st get honour to thyself and safety to thy prince and country; but, if thou be once engaged, carry thyself bravely that they may fear thee after.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh

Self is so mingled with the sentiments which we have chosen, and has such a tender feeling of all the opposition which is made to them, that personal brawls are very ready to come in as seconds, to succeed and finish the dispute of opinions.—Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. I. c. 10.

BRAWL. A dance. See Branrl.

They maye (celerity and slowness) be welle resembled to the braule in daunsynge (for in our Englyshe tonge we say men do braule), whan between them there is altercation in wordis.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. I. c. 22.

And so haue I declared what utilitie may be taken of a braule in daunsynge.—Id. Ib.

And thence did Venus learn to lead
Th' Idalian braules and so tread
As if the wind, not she did walke,
Nor prest a flower, nor bow'd a stalke.
B Jonson. The Vision of Delight.

Full oft within the spacious walls,
When he had fifty winters o'er him,
My grave lord keeper led the braule;
The seal and maces danc'd before him.
Gray. A Long Story

BRAWN. } Brawn is bar-en, or baur-en.
BRA'WNED. } Baw'rn was the ancient adjec-
BRA'WNER. } tive of Bar, baur, and by the BRA'WNY. } (common) transposition of r,
BRA'WNINESS. } Baurn has become Brawn; which is therefore an adjective, and means Boar-en, boar's (subaud.) flesh. See Tooke.

It is also applied to that which has the strength and vigour of a boar.

Brawn and blod of the goos. bacon and colhopes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 245.

His limmes gret, his braunes hard and stronge,
His shoulders brode, his armes round and longe.
Chaucer. The Knyghtes Tale, v. 2136.

Janus sit by the fire with double berd,
And drinketh of his bugle horn the wine:
Beforn him stant braune of the tusked swine.
Id. Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,566.

It was ordeined that murtherers should be brent on the brawne of the left hande with an hote iron signed with this lettre M, and theues in the same place wt this lettre T.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 15.

Fyrst had we brawne from Lucanie
the father of the feast,
Saide he was slaine when southerne wind
his blustering blastes released.
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 8.

These arms quite brawnsome are with beating on my breast.—Gascoigne. Anatomy of a Lover.

Rusht in so close, that with his sword he on his shoulders laid
A blow, that his armes brawne cut off
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Moreover, the flesh of wild bores came to be in great request, and was much set by; in such sort, as Cato the censor in his invective orations challenged men for brawne.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

His bodie was well brawned, musculous and strong.
Id. Ammianus, p. 397.

——— Yet he
(By Jove's high grace of Troy) is slaine, Mars started horribly
(As Juno knew he would) at this; beate, with his hurl'd out hands,
His brawnie thighes.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

With greater might Alcides did not straine
The giant Antheus on the Libian sands,
On holdfast knots their brawnie armes they cast,
And whom he hateth most, each held embrast
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xix. s. 17.

Their spirits [were] fatned and incrassated within them, stall'd up and fed to such a brawniness, that neither the understanding nor the affections were capable of any impression.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 651.

This brawniness and insensibility of mind is the best armour we can have against the common evils and accidents of life; and being a temper that is to be got by exercise and custom more than by any other way, the practice of it should be begun by times; and happy is he that is taught it early.—Locke. On Education, § 113.

Thy brawn-fall'n arms and thy declining back
To the sad burthen of thy years shall yeald.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 3.

But most their looke on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend.
Id. Palamon & Arcite.

Then if you would send up the brawner's head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread:
His foaming tusks let some large pippin grace,
Or midst those thundering spears an orange place.
King. The Art of Cookery.

O'er a brown cassoc, which had once been black,
Which hung in tatters on his brawny back,
A sight most strange, and awkward to behold,
He threw a covering of blue and gold.
Churchill. Independence.

BRAY. (See BRAID.) Perhaps a consequential usage; Fr. Brayer, broyer—

To pound or beat to pieces: to separate or dissever by violent action upon the mass:—"to beat small, break into little pieces," (Cotgrave.)

Though thou shuldest braye a foole in a morter among the wheate brayed with a pestel, (yet) wil not his foolishnes depart from him.—Gen. Bible, 1561. Prov. xxvii. 22.

The Englysshmen were fayne to gather the thystelles in the feldes, and braye them in a morter, and tempre it with water, and mak therof a paaste, and so bake it to ete, suche pouertie they endured.
Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 72.

BRAY, v. } (See BRAG, BRAY, supra, and BRAY, s. } BRAID.) Fr. Brayer or braire:
BRA'YER. } To break out into a loud noise
BRA'YING. } or clamour; to make an uproar; to utter aloud, harshly, dissonantly.

He kneleth in his wise, and braieth,
To seche mercy, and assaieth
His god, which made him nothing strāge,
Whan that he sawe his pride change.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Certainly there is not so crooked a hors, but yf he see a mare, he will braie once or twice.—Golden Boke, c. 55.

Thus with a braying sigh this noble tongue he stayde.
Gascoigne. A Deuise of a Maske.

Where yᵉ elephātes that had bodies of an vnreasonable greatenes stoode in their syght, being prouoked to braye of purpose, to thintent that with their terrible noyse, they should fil their enemies eares full of feare.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 245.

Then shrilling trompets loudly gan to bray,
And bad them leave their labours & long toyle
To ioyous feast and other gentle play.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

——— The lance againe he [man] got,
But left the wound; that stung him so, he laid out such a throat,
As if nine or ten thousand men had bray'd out all their breath
In one confusion. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b v.

The elephant there brayes, the camell cries;
The horses neigh as to and fro they passe:
Which seene and heard, he said within his thought,
Hither all Asia is, all Africke, brought.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xix. s. 58.

For if one of them [elephants] be overmatched and vanquished in fight, he will never after abide the voice and braying of the conqueror, but in token of submission giveth him a turf of earthe with vervaine or grasse upon it.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 5.

It was accorded, that the morning following these seven princes should mount on horseback; and on him the kingdom should be conferr'd, whose horse, after the sun-rising, should first neigh or bray. The horse whereon Darius was mounted was the first horse that brayed
Ralegh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 4. § 4.

Before proud gates attending asses bray,
Or arrogate with solemn pace the way;
These grave physicians with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

——— With pondrous clubs
As weak against the mountain heape they push
Their beating breast in vain, and piteous bray.
He lays them quivering on th' ensanguin'd snows.
Thomson. Winter.

"Hold," cry'd the queen, "A cat-call each shall win;
Equal your merits! equal as your din!
But that this well-disputed game may end.
Sound forth, my brayers, and the welkin rend"
Pope. The Dunciad, b ii.

Heard ye the din of battle bray,
Lance to lance, and horse to horse? Gray. The Bard.

What signifies a lion's skin,
If it conceal an ass within?
If thou'rt a lion, prithee roar;
If ass—bray once, and stalk no more.
Lloyd. Epistle to J. B. Esq.

BRAY. As Bay and Bow are the same word differently written and applied, so seem Bray and brow. A. S. Brawe, bruwa; Dut. Brauwe or browe; the edge, the brow. It appears to be applied—

To any thing which overhangs or overlooks, as a bray or brow of a hill; a part of a fortification raised so as to overlook. The Dutch have Browieren, speculari.

Then began the assaulte againe, and George Harbet and Willyam Kneuet, helde theim twoo within so harde, that thei could scant put their heddes ouer the bray or bulwerke.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 16.

The wynde then turneth agayne even as a vehement water doth against a rocke, or an hye braye.
Ascham. Toxophilus. Workes, p. 170.

For even as our men had given back, he and his company came to the head of the bray and did not onely stay the Frenchmen, but also some of ours brake upon their horsemen.—Anon. History of the Reformation, p. 215.

Push'd up the bray, indignantly they feel
The clanking lash, and the retorted steel;
Then down the steep with quick'ning rapture go
And stretch and sweat upon the plain below.
Brookes. The Fox-chase.

BRAZE, v. } Ger. Brasen, urere, to burn,
BRA'ZEN, adj. } to give a burnt or brown co-
BRA'ZENFACED. } lour. See BRASS.

To braze,—to work in brass, to cover with brass Brazen, (met.) is hardened, impudent, shameless. A face of glaring effrontery, or impudence.

Setteth bowes of brake, a brasene gonne
And sheteth out shot ynowh.—Piers Ploughman, p. 355.

And he made a brasen gredyron of net worke vnto the alter rounde aboute as lowe beneth vnder the compasse of the alter; so that it reached vnto halfe the altar, & cast foure rynges of brasse for the iiii endes of the gredyrē to put staues in.—Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 38.

Not to be giltye or wax wan
at anye faite at all,
A bulwarke that, to beare all bruntes
to be the brazen wall.
Drant. Horace. Ep. To Maecenas.

And nowe they came not to him with entretance, and humble sute, as by the way of petition, but with fasing and bracinge. Bidding him finish his warres alone with his father Hammō, and then go set lighte by his souldioures
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 63.

——— Nor vngratifide
Will any one remit vs; some one thing
Will each present vs, that along may bring
Our passe with loue; and proue our vertues blaz'd
A caldron or a tripod, richly braz'd.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

For as the lovers of faire Danae,
When she was lockt up in a brazen tower,
Desired her more, and wax't outrageous,
So did it fare with me. Marlow. Edw. II.

——— She qualifies their zeal
With the cold epode of a graver note,
Thus high, thus low, as if her silver throat
Would reach the brazen voice of war's hoarse bird.
Crashaw. Musick's Duel.

Call'd with the shot from far, the legions join,
Their bucklers in the warlike shell combine,
Compact and close the brazen roof they bear,
And in just order to the town draw near.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b iii.

The Grecian fleet, four hundred gallies, fill
The Salaminian straits; barbarian prows
In two divisions point to either mouth
Six hundred brazen beaks of tow'r like ships,
Unwieldy bulks. Glover. The Athenaid, b vi

Would honest Tom G—d get rid of a scold,
The torture, the plague of his life!
Pray tell him to take down his lion of gold
And hang up his brazen-faced wife.
Cunningham. To the Landlord of the Golden Lion.

BREACH. The past tense and past part. of the Goth. Brican; A. S. Brecan, brǽcan, to break.

A rupture; a way, passage, or opening,—broken through any thing.

(Met.) An infraction or violation of an agreement, of a duty; a destruction, a separation, a dissension.

Loke whether we be not more angry with our seruantes for the breche of one commaundment of our own, than for the breche of Gods al tenn.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 87.

He is as hote as any man at spoile,
But at a breach he keepeth no such coyle.
Gascoigne. Fruits of Warre.

So fast I am in gyue
within your beauties gayle,
As thence to make a breach
no engine may preuayle.
Turbervile. The dispairing Louer craues, &c.

For the rotture or breache beganne on the bihalf of the Lacedemonians, for that, that the Thebains had inuaded Plates without breaking the appointement.
Nicolle. Thucydides, p. 179.

Like some just prince, who to establish laws
Suffers the breach at his best lov'd to strike,
To learn the vulgar to endure the like.
Drayton. Of Worldly Crosses.

For he that openeth the waters but a little, knoweth not how great a breach they will make at length.
Speiman. English Works, p. 12.

For should a void her monarchy invade,
Should in her works the smallest breach be made,
That breach the mighty fabric would dissolve,
And in immediate ruin all involve.
Blackmore. The Creation, b. v.

For though nothing less than sincere obedience to all the lawes of God can denominate a man to be righteous; the wilful breach of any one makes him to be a sinner.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 64.

Men like these, united by one bond, pursuing one design, spend their labour and their lives in making their fellow-creatures happy, and in repairing the breaches caused by ambition.—Goldsmith. On Polite Learning.

This volume containing some letters from noblemen, Pope incited a prosecution against him in the House of Lords, for breach of privilege, and attended himself to stimulate the resentment of his friends.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

BREAD. BRE'ADEN. BRE'ADLESS. } Skinner believes that it is from the A.S. Bread-an, fovere, to nourish. Tooke, that Bread is brayed grain or corn; — the past tense and past part. of the verb, to bray, (Fr. Broyer) i. e. to pound, to beat to pieces, with a subaudition of corn, grain, or other similar substances. (Vol. ii. p. 46.)

Brayed corn is the first state of the process towards the loaf; the next is dough. See DOUGH, and LOAF.

Syre hyssop, wy ne gyfst us of thyne wyte brede,
That thou est the sulf at thy masse, in thyne vayre wede.
R. Gloucester, p. 238.

In tentis R. rested alle that ilk nyght,
His men wer wele gested with brede, wyne & light.
R. Brunne, p. 160.

But we denounceen to hem that ben suche men, and beseechen in the Lord Jesu Crist, that thei worche with silence, and eet her owne breed.—Wiclif. 2 Tessal. c. 3.

Them that are such, we commaunde and exorte by our Lord Jesu Christ, that they worke with quietness, and eate their owne bread.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Of smale houndes hadde she, that she fedde
With roasted flesh, and milk, and wastel brede.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 147.

He consulted with the oracle of his breaden God, which because it answered not, he cast it into the fire.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergy.

That the same body should at once have quantity and extension in heaven, and no quantity nor extension in the host, as the papists affirm of their breaden God (are things contradictory.)
Hopkins. Catechistical Expos. of the Lord's Prayer.

I would therefore in a very particular manner recommend these my speculations to all well regulated families that set apart an hour in every morning for tea and bread and butter.
Spectator, No. 10.

Thro' the scarcity caused by regraters of bread corn (of which starch is made) and the gentry's immoderate frequenting the operas; the ladies, to save charges, have their heads washed at home, and the beaus put out their linen to common landresses.—Tatler, No. 118.

And see the good old seat, whose Gothic tow'rs
Awful emerge from yonder tufted bow'rs;
Whose rafter'd hall the crowding tenants fed,
And deant to age and want their daily bread.
Warton. Newmarket.

Dullness no more roosts only near the sky,
But senates, drawing-rooms with garrets vie;
Plump peers, and breadless bards alike are dull;
St James's and Rag-fair club fool for fool.
P. Whitehead. State Dunces.

BREADTH. BRE'ADTHLESS. } The third person singular Bredeth, (A. S.) of the indicative of Brædan, dilatare; to broaden, to expand, to dilate. See BROAD.

And robbed Wurcestre savre in lengthe & in brede,
And al the contreye aboute the toune ryst
R. Gloucester, p. 385.

Euane, the Danes kyng, was of so grete strength,
That he destroied this lond in brede & in length.
R. Brunne, p. 41.

And the citee was sett in a square & the lengthe of it so mych as mych as is the brede, and he mat the citee with the rohed by furlongis twelue thousyndis, and the highthe and the lengthe and breede of it ben euene.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 21.

And the cyty was bylt IIII. square & the lenght was as large as the bredth of it, and he measured the cytye wyth the rede XII M. furlongs & the leght and the bredthe, & the heygth of it wer equall.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Why shulde I not as wel eke tell you all
The purtreiture, that was upon the wall
Within the temple of mighty Mars, the rede!
All peinted was the wall in length and brede.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1972.

On the Sonday in the mornyng there was suche a myst that a man myght nat se the bredethe of an acre of land fro hym.—Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol i. c. 131.

The term of latitude is breadthiesse line.
More. Song on the Soul, b. ii. c. 2. s. 6.

3. That if the quantity of any man's nose be eminently miscalculated, whether as to length or breadth, he shall have a just pretence to be elected.—Spectator, No. 17.

Oft let the turf recede, and oft approach,
With varied breadth, now sink into the shade,
Now to the sun its verdant bosom bare.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

BREAK, v. BREAK, n. BRE'AKER. BRE'AKING. BRE'AKFAST, v. BRE'AKFAST, n. } Goth. Brican; A. S. Brecan, bræcan, breacan; Dut. Breken; Ger. Brechen, Sw. Bræcka. To the A. S. Brec-an, brag-han, we owe the verbs to break or broche, to brag, or brave, to bray, to braid. See these words; see also BROKE, v. and BROK-EN.

To separate or divide into parts; to sunder, to rive, or burst asunder; to crack or split asunder—into parts or pieces—any thing united into one mass.

To make or cause a rupture or breach; a disruption, or breaking apart; an eruption, or breaking out; an irruption, or breaking in.

To separate, (met.) to disjoin, to dispart, to force apart; to dissever, to interrupt, to intercept.

To break down; to suppress, to subdue, to subject, to crush, to tame, to overpower, to bring or reduce to obedience,—to poverty,—to decay.

To break or infringe, to violate. Adultery, in our old writers, is called spousebreach.

To break one's mind, is to break (to broche) it open; to open it, to disclose it.

To break the fast, or to break-fast, is to separate the times of fasting, to interrupt the continuance of fasting, to discontinue fasting.

This word is of most universal application (met. or lit.) to any separation; particularly when made with suddenness, violence, injury.

Corineus tok hys bowe of hym, & smote hym a wonde
A bouen on the scolle with ys owne bowe a non,
That the scolle to breke in peses n ony on.
R. Gloucester, p. 16.

To breke ys trewe couenant, the kyng was loth therto,
And natheles ys conseyl hym gef, that he moste yt nede do.
Id. p. 259.

The Mortayn befor spoken, with his nevow Reynere,
The sege the wend haf broken, thei com with ther powere
R. Brunne, p. 100.

For Jhesus as a gyaunt, with a gyn cometh goende
To breke and to bete adoun, al that ben agayne hym
And to have out alle of hem that hym liketh.
Piers Ploughman, p. 353.

Therefore he that brekith oon of these leeste maundementis and techith thus men, schal be clepid the leest in the rewme of hevenes.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

Whosoeuer breaketh one of these commaundements, and teacheth men so, he shall be called the lest in the kyngdome of heauen.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whiche answerde and seide to hem, an yvel kyndrede and a spouse breker [Mod. Vers. adulterous] sekith a tokene, and a tokene schal not be geven to it: but the tokene of Jonas the profete.—Wiclif. Matth. c. 12.

No man sewith a pacche of new cloth to an old cloth, else he takith awey the new pacche fro the olde, and a more brekyng is maad.—Id. Mark, c. 2.

For, sith the day is come that I shal die
I make plainly my confession,
That I am thilke woful Palamon,
That hath thy prison broken wilfully
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1737.

And breakers of the lawe, sothe to saine
And likerous folke, after that they been dede,
Shull whirle about ye world, alway in paine
Till many a world be passed.
Id. The Assembly of Foules.

Before the breake or dawning of the daye,
Before the light be seene in lofty skyes,
Before the Sunne appeare in pleasaunt wyse.
Gascoigne. De profundis

Whoe came directly againste them, for though in the nyght they were hydde in a place, yet alwayes they were in the moarnynge, at breake of daye, apparevuedde.
Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 66.

By vertue and tenor whereof all our aforesaid subiects, and euery one of them, shall both publikely and priuately vse and behaue themselues, to correct and punish the breakers of those lawes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 159.

All the fleete are to follow and obserue the same without straying or breaking of company at any time vpon the penalty before specified.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 454.

As thou seest blessynges, or cursynges followe the breaking, or keping of the law of Moyses: euen so naturally do the blessynges, or cursynges followe the breakyng or keeping of the law of nature, out of which spryng all our temporal laws.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 10.

Thus they stode styll all ye nyght armed, euery man vnder his owne stādard and baner: and in the brekyng of the daye 11. trompettis of Scotland mette with the Englishe scoutwatche.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 18.

Then sayde (he who called himself) Robyn hood, sir, outlawes brekefastes is venyson, and therefore you must be contente with suche fare as we vse. Then the kyng and quene sate doune, & were serued with venyson and wyne by Robyn hood and hys men, too theyr great contentacion.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 7.

And [I] deliberated with myselfe, that if it were possible, to find the meanes to breake off, I would neuer enter into the yoke with her.—Stowe. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

For the old Romans, howsoever they dined or brake their fast ordinarily by themselves alone, yet they supped ever with their friends about them.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 636.

They found him by a water side.
Where he broke the beast that tide,
That hart that was so wild.
Sir Triamour. Ellis, vol. iii.

Much did Sir Calidore admyre his speach,
Tempred so well, but more admyr'd the stroke
That through the mayles had made so strong a break
Into his hart, and had so sternely wroke
His wrath on him that first occasion broke.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

——— The mules march all before
Vp hill, and downe hill; overthwartes, and breake-neck clifts they past.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

——— I must
Forsake the court: to do't, or no, is certain
To me a breake-neck.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

In the mean time the king of France, sent Queen Elizabeth a message, assuring her, that the tempest, which had been long gathering in Spain for three years, would certainly break very speedily upon her kingdom.
Oldys. Life of Raleigh

He break my darts! or hurt my power!
His, Leda's swan and Danae's shower!
Go, bid him his wise tongue restrain,
And mind his thunder, and his rain.
Prior. Mercury & Cupid.

For the same reason I do not dislike the speeches in our English tragedy that close with abrupt pauses and breakings off in the middle of a verse, when they humour any passion that is expressed by it.—Spectator, No. 39.

——— Inprimis,
As soon as Phœbus' rays inspect us,
First, sir, I read, and then I breakfast.
Prior. An Epistle to F. Shephard.

I resolve not to believe my senses. I break my nose against a post that comes in my way. I step into a dirty kennel; and after twenty such wise and rational actions I am taken up and clapt into a mad house.
Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 20.

In dire amazement rivetted they stand
And hear the breakers lash the rugged strand.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 3.

This duty being performed, my son and I went to pursue our usual industry abroad, while my wife and daughters employed themselves in providing breakfast, which was always ready at a certain time.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 4.

BREAST, v. BREAST, n. BRE'ASTPLATE. BRE'ASTLAP. } Goth. Brusts; A. S. Breost; Dut. Borst; Ger. Brust; Sw. Borst. Eccard (in Wachter) derives the Ger. Brust, from Ger. Bersten, bresten, (A. S. Barstan, beorst-an,) to, be broken, quia in pectore costæ, ac si fractæ essent, cocunt. Wachter thinks Brechen, and not Bersten, the parent of Burst. He remarks, (and the remark is as applicable to the etymology of Eccard, as to his own,) that no one will doubt the truth of this etymology, who is aware that it is the genius of our most ancient language; that the various parts of the body,—quas natura vel incisione vel ruptura aut alio divisionis genere notavit,—should from that receive their name.

To breast, is to act with the breast; to bear the breast against, to oppose the breast, to face, to front.

The breast is applied (met.) to that within or beneath the breast, to the heart; the feelings, passions or affections, the disposition of the heart

Perhaps also to the lungs; as a singer with strong power to emit his breath is said to be well-breasted.—to have a good breast. See the quotation from Tusfer.

So that thys Water Tyrel, that ther bysyde was ney
Wolde seete another hert, that, as he sede, he sey.
He seet the kyng in atte breste, that neuer eft he ne speke
R. Gloucester, p. 419.

And so whanne he hadde restid ageln on the brest of Jhesus, he saith to him, Lord, who is it?—Wiclif. John, c. 13.

He then as he leaned on Jesus breste, sayde vnto hym. Lord who is it?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And on that other side a gaie daggere,
Harneised wel, and sharpe as point of spere;
A Cristofre on his brest of silver shene.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 113.

Me thought I sighe vpon a stage,
Where stoode a wonder strange image:
His head with all the neck also
They were of fine golde bothe two,
His breaste, his shoulders, and his armes
Were all of siluer. Gower. Con. A. Prol.

This kyng Edward was a manne of goodly personage, of stature high, and excedyng all other in countenaunce, welfauoured and comly, of lyc quicke and pleasaunt, brode brested, and well set, and other members doune to his feet, kepe iust proporcion with the bulke of his body.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 23.

But let vs which are of the daye, be sober, armed with the brest plate of fayth and loue, and with hope of saluaciō as an helmet.—Bible, 1551. 1 Thessalonians, c. 5.

Breastlap, or breast flappe, is such a flap, as thou seest in the brest of a cope.—Tyndall. Table for expound. Words.

Meane time I wish a good renowne, that these deep-brested dames
Of Ilion and Dardania may, for th'extinguish't flames
Of their friends liues, with both their hands, wipe miserable teares
From their so curiously kept cheekes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

——— Behold the threaden sayles,
Borne with th' inuisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottomes through the furrowed sea,
Breasting the lofty surge.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Chor. 3.

Giue sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath beene breeder of these dire euents.
Luc. Set him breast deepe in earth, and famish him.
Id. Titus Andronicus, Act v. sc. 3.

Thence for my voice, I must (no choice)
Away of forse, like posting horse,
For sundry men had placards then
Such child to take.
The better brest, the lesser rest,
To serve the queene, now there, now here,
For time so spent, I may repent,
And sorrow make.—Tusfer. Ritson, Diss. p 194.

And as a lyon sculking all in night,
Farre off in pastures; and come home, all dight
In iawes and breast-locks, with an oxes blood,
New feasted on him.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

The hide of his [the buffe] backe is so tough and hard that thereof they make breast-plates
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 34.

Whether it be hierogliphical, or not, this difference in the Military or Civil List, but I have ever understood the fact to be, that the close minister is buttoned up, and the brave officer open-breasted on these occasions.—Spectator, No. 193.

But if we offend our consciences, by doing contrary to the clear dictate and conviction of them, we make the unhappiest breach in the world; we stir up a quarrell in our own breasts, and arme our minds against ourselves.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 39.

The censor, finding some reasons to suspect (by the sturdiness of their behaviour) that they were not so very brave as they would have the court believe them, ordered them both to be searched by the grand jury, who found a breast-plate upon the one, and two quires of paper upon the other.
Tatler, No. 265.

——— Patience here,
Her meek hands folded on her modest breast,
In mute submission lifts th' adoring eye,
Ev'n to the storm that wrecks her.—Mason. Caractacus.

BREATHE, v. } A. S. Brathe, breth.
BREATH, n. }
BRE'ATHER. }
BRE'ATHING. }
BRE'ATHFULL. } To breathe is to draw in or drive out from, the breast, (sc.) the air by the action of the lungs; to inspire or inhale, to expire or exhale. Also—
BRE'ATHLESS. }
BRE'ATHLESSNESS. }

To send forth or emit, to eject, to utter, (sc.) an odour, a perfume, a vow, a prayer.

To breathe is also to take breath; to give breath; to put or keep the lungs in wholesome breathing; either by ceasing from too violent action; or by taking well regulated exercise.

For he ghyueth lyf to alle men, and brething and alle thingis, and made of oon al the kynde of men to enhabite on al the face of the earthe.—Wiclif. Deeds, c. 17.

Seyng he him selfe geueth lyfe and breath to all men euery where, and hathe made of one blonde all nacyons of menne for to dwell on all the face of the earth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whan Zephirus eke with his sote brethe
Enspired hath in every holt and hethe
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the ram his halfe cours yronne.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 5.

Thē the Lorde God shope man, euen of the moulde of the erth, & brethed into hys face the breth of lyfe.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 2.

Behold how greuouse and bitter it is for 3 or 4 yeares continually, & then after, how God remitteth it for as long a ceason agen to geue vs a place for a lytle ceason to rest vs, euen as it were the halcyon dayes to suffer his chirche to breathe a whyle that she may be the stronger ayenst the next storme & batail folowinge.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

Euery man made hym redy and laced on his basnet, and gyrte their horses, and set themselfe in good aray togyther, and rode forthe an easy passe to kepe their horses well brethed.—Berners Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 136.

Therefore farewel, my life, my death,
My gaine, my losse, my salue, my sore
Farewell also, with all my breath,
For I am gone for evermore.
Wyat. The Louer suspected of Change.

When first the post arrived at my tent,
And brought the letters Rosamond had sent,
Think from his lips but what dear comfort came,
When to mine eare he softly breath'd thy name.
Drayton. Henry to Rosamond.

——— Yet reason dares her no,
For my authority beares of a credent bulke,
That no particular scandall once can touch
But it confounds the breather.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iv. sc. 4.

Now this whole sea, Pontus, in all the circuit thereof flowing round about, is both cloudye and sweeter also than other seas, yea and full of shallowes, for that the ayre thickened oftentimes with the breathing up and elevation of moist vapours, congealeth.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 201.

For they for nought would from their work refraine,
Ne let his speeches come vnto their eare,
And eke the breathfull bellowes blew amaine;
Like to the northern wind, that none could heare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

And Hector came, where (seeing how bloud was spilt)
Andromache might see him come, who made as he would passe
The ports without saluting her, not knowing where she was:
She with his sight made breathlesse haste to meet him.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

The nimble Dactils, striving to out go
The drawling Spondees, pacing it below
The limping Spondees, labouring to delay
The breathlesse Dactiles, with a sudden stay.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 6.

Me thinks I heare the soldiers and busie officers when they were roling that other weighty stone (for such we probably conceive) to the mouth of the vault with much toyle and sweat, and breathlessnesse, how they brag'd of the sureness of the place, and unremoveablenesse of that load.
Id. Cont. The Resurrection.

The divine Socrates is here represented in a figure worthy his great wisdom and philosophy, worthy the greatest mere man that ever breath'd.—Spectator, No. 146.

What is this mighty breath, ye sages, say,
That in a powerful language, felt, not heard,
Instructs the fowls of heaven, and through their breast
These arts of love diffuses? What but God?
Thomson. Spring.

Let us then begin heaven here, in the frame and temper of our minds, in our heavenly affections and conversation: in a due preparation for, and in earnest desires and breathings after that blessed state which we firmly believe and assuredly hope to be one day possessed of.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 24.

I feel the gales that from ye blow,
A momentary bliss bestow,
As, waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to sooth,
And redolent of joy and youth
To breathe a second spring.
Gray. Prospect of Eton College.

He raised himself up, with the assistance of two of his servants, and instantly fell down dead: suffocated, I conjecture, by some gross and noxious vapour, as always having weak lungs, and being frequently subject to a difficulty of breathing.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. vi. Let. 16

Perhaps a friend, a father's dead,
Or the lov'd partner of thy bed!
Perhaps thy only son lies there,
Breathless upon the sable bier.—Cowper. Estimate of Life.

He ought, says this great political doctor, [Machiavel] to consider peace only as a breathing-time, which gives him leisure to contrive, and furnishes ability to execute military plans.—Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

BREDE. See BRAID.

BREECH, v. } The noun is the past part. of the verb Brǽcan, to break; and the verb is formed upon the noun.
BREECH, n. }
BRE'ECHES, n. }
BRE'ECHING, n. }

The breech is the part where the body is broken into two. And the breeches that which covers the part so broken, (Tooke, ii. 251.) See also Skinner, and the observation quoted from Wachter under the word BREAST.

To breech is to put on the, to cover or clothe with, breeches; also to beat or whip the breech.

Breech is applied to the hinder part generally, and breeching to that which covers it.

——— So longe yt [sc. the water] wax an hey,
That yt watte hys [Canute's] brych al aboute, & euere vpard yt stey.
R. Gloucester, p. 322.

Thou woldest make me kisse thin old breech,
And swere it were a relike of a seint.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,882.

The cause (say some) consisteth in the locke,
Some other iudge, bicause they be so strong,
Renforced well, and breeched like a brocke,
Stiffe, straight, and stout, which though they be not long,
Yet spit they foorth their pellets such a pace,
And with such force, as seems a wondrous case.
Gascoigne. The Fruite of Feltes.

Then the eyes of them bothe were opened, and they knewe that they were naked: and they sewed fig tre leaues together, and made them seluce breeches.
Gen. Bible, 1570. Genesis iii. 7.

Feared am I more than loved—let me be feared;
And when I frown, make all the court look pale,
I view the prince with Aristarchus' eyes,
Whose looks were as a breeching to a boy.
Marlow. Edward II.

As Gammer Gurton, with manye a wyde stytche,
Sat pesyng and patching of Hodge her man's breche,
By chance or misfortune, as shee her geare tost,
In Hodge lether brychas her needle she lost.
Gammer Gurton's Needle. Prologue.

To-day to cherche y wolde have gon,
But me fawtede hosyn and schon,
Clenly breech and scherte.—Launfal. Ritson. Rom. pt. i.

So to her midnight-feasts the hag
Rides on a broomstick for a nag;
That rais'd by magic of her breech,
O'er sea and land conveys the witch.
Swift. The Magician's Rod.

From Sappho down through all succeeding ages,
And now on French or on Italian stages,
Rough satyrs, sly remarks, ill-natur'd speeches,
Are always aim'd at poets that wear breeches.
Prior. Epilogue to Mrs. Manley's Lucius.

Time was, when clothing sumptuous or for use,
Save their own painted skins, our sires had none.
As yet black breeches were not, satin smooth
Or velvet soft, or plush with shaggy pile.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

There was one who actually died in a stall that I had left, worth seven pounds seven shillings, and all in hard gold, which he had quilted into the waistband of his breeches.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 64.

BREED, v. } A. S. Bredan; Dut. Broeden; Ger. Bruten, to nourish, to cherish; (sc.) the fœtus in the womb; and then, to bear young, to be pregnant. See BROOD.
BRED, n. }
BRE'EDER. }
BRE'EDING. }
BRE'EDBATE. }

To nourish or cherish, (sc.) children, the minds of children, to bring them up, to train, to educate. And generally—

To produce or bring forth; to cause to be or to exist.

A man of breeding is (elliptically) a man of good breeding; well bred, well trained, well educated; (sc.) in good society.

A breed-bate, a breeder of debate or strife.

For in suche wise as auarice
Loseth for scarsenesse his good name;
Right so that other is to blame,
Which through his waste mesure excedeth,
For no man wote what harm it bredeth.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

I fall and see mine own decay,
As one that beares flame in his breast
Forgets in paine to put away,
The thinge that bredith mine unrest.
Surrey. The Louer describes his restless State.

But here because of their voluptcous sensuall liuing, he vsed no familiaritie of carnall conuersacion emong them: (whiche familiaritie hath euermore been a breder of contépte, & hath vsed to make ménes authoritie the less regarded.)
Udal. Luke, c. 3.

To let them die upon their march abroad
And fowls upon their carcases to feed,
The heaps of them upon the common road
And great infection likely were to breed.
For our own safeties see them then bestowed.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Towards the end of the yeere a quarrell of certaine consuls burst forth, which had been long time a breeding.
Grenewey Tacitus. Annales, p. 119.

In brief, must it not follow necessarily that the earth, which is the mother and breeder of men, of living creatures and all plants, shall perish and be wholly extinct.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 943.

An honest, willing, kinde fellow, as euer seruant shall come in house withall and I warrant you no tel-tale, nor no breedebate, his worst fault is that he is giuen to prayer.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. sc. 4.

He is a clergyman, a very philosophick man, of general learning, great sanctity of life, and the most exact good breeding.—Spectator, No. 2.

In the spring following, he [Thomas Churchyard] contrary to his former resolutions, went to the wars again, (in Flanders as it seems) had a command there, was wounded and taken prisoner; but shewing himself a person of bravery and breeding, was respected and well used by the enemy.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

It is certain that an unknown heap of trifles and impertinencies have been intermingled with these useful parts of learning, upon which account many persons in this polite age have made it a part of their breeding to throw a jest upon them.—Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt i. c. 20.

When we observe men bred up in arms repeatedly spoken of in Scripture in such strong terms of commendation as those we have mentioned, we are authorized to conclude that the profession they are engaged in is not, as a mistaken sect of Christians amongst us profess to think, an unlawful one.
Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 8.

There was a time, indeed, when his family deserved their title, but they are long since degenerated, and his ancestors for more than a century have been more and more solicitous to keep up the breed of their dogs and horses, than that of their children.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, c. 31.

I shall also be bold enough to affirm, that among the ancients, there was not much delicacy of breeding, or that polite deference and respect, which civility obliges us either to express or counterfeit towards the persons with whom we converse.—Hume. The Rise of Arts and Sciences, Ess. 14.

I cannot deny, but that on this occasion there was displayed a great deal of good breeding, which consists in the accommodation of the entertainment to the relish of the guest.—Burke. Letter to Thomas Burgh, Esq.

BREESE, or Brize. } A. S. Briosa, brimsa; Ger. Breme, bremse; Dut. Bremme, bremse. Wachter thinks from the Ger. Bremen, pungere, to pierce, to prick; A. S. Bremman. It is probably the same word as the succeeding—differently applied. See the quotation from Dryden.

Till that a brize, a scorned little creature,
Through his faire hide his angry sting did threaten,
And vext so sore, that all his goodly feature,
And all his plentious pastur nought him pleased
So by the small the great is oft diseased.
Spenser. Visions of the World's Vanitie, vol. ii.

——— Yon ribaudred nagge of Egypt
(Whom leprosie o'er take) i'th' midst o'th' fight,
When vantage like a payre of twinnes appear'd
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
(The breeze vpon her) like a cow in June,
Hoists sailes, and flyes.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 8.

Ab Why, what's the matter among these maids?
Now benedicite, have we got the breeze there!
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act v. sc. 6.

Having thus disfigur'd and made men beneath men, as Juno in the fable of Io, they deliver up the poor transform'd heifer of the commonwealth to be stung and vexed with the breeze and goad of oppression, under the custody of some Argus with a hundred eyes of jealousy
Milton. Of Reformation in England.

This flying plague (to mark its quality,)
Oestros the Grecians call Asylus, we:
A fierce loud buzzing breez, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattel gadding through the wood.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. b. iii.

BREEZE. Breʹezy. Breʹezeless. } Anciently written Brize, and perhaps derived immediately from the Fr. Briser, to burst, break, or rush forth. Applied to any thing,
A wind;—that rises or breaks forth suddenly.
See the quotation from Dampier.

By sea if any man inunde to the eastward, those to the west cannot in many monethe turne against the brize and eastern wind.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 661.

All necessary causes of our staying longer in this place being at last finished, our Generall prepared to be in a readinesse, to take the first advantage of the comming of a brize of winde which we expected.
Sir Francis Drake. The World encompassed.

Sea breezes commonly rise in the morning about nine o'clock. They first approach the shore so gently, as if they were afraid to come near it, and oft times they make some faint breathings, and as if not willing to offend, they make a halt, and seem ready to retire. It comes in a fine, small, black curle upon the water, whereas all the sea between it and the shore (not yet reached by it) is as smooth and even as glass in comparison.—Dampier. Voyage, vol ii pt. iii. c. 4.

The Orenoque was now swoln most dreadfully, so that it was impossible for him to return by the way he enter'd, for the river of Amana could not be sailed back by any means, the breese and current of the sea were so outrageous
Oudys. Life of Raleigh.

As soon as ever I pronounce—Flutter your fans,—the place is filled with so many Zephirs, and gentle breezes as are very refreshing in that season of the year, though they might be dangerous to ladies of a tender constitution in any other.—Spectator, No. 102.

Ye nightingales, ye twisting pines!
Ye swains that haunt the grove!
Ye gentle echoes, breezy winds!
Ye close retreats of love.
Parnell. Song. Love & Innocence.

While they thus formed a little concert, my wife and I would stroll down the sloping field that was embellished with blue bells and centuary, talk of our children with rapture, and enjoy the breeze that wafted both health and harmony.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 8.

But now 't is o'er, the dear delusion's o'er!
A stagnant breezeless air becalms my soul:
A fond aspiring candidate no more,
I scorn the palm before I reach the goal.
Shenstone. To Mr. Jago, Eleg. ii.

Thou oft art seen at early dawn,
Blow pacing o'er the breezy lawn.—Mallet. A Fragment.

BREME. Breʹmness. } A. S. Bremman, furere, fremere. Written Brem, brim or brume. See Brim.
Furious, violent, fierce, outrageous.
"The breem freezing air"—the fiercely, sharply, freezing air. See Drayton, Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

Whan the kyng herd say, that David werred on him,
To Wales he went his way full scharply & fulle brem.
R. Brunne, p 244.

And when this duk was comen to the launde,
Under the sonne he loked, and anon
He was ware of Arcite and Palamon,
That foughten breme, as it were bolles two.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v 1701.

For quietnes is of more authoritie than hastie bremnes.
Vives. Instruction to a Christian Woman.

Let me, ah! let me in your foldes ye lock,
Ere the breme winter breede you greater grief.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar, December.

BREN, or Brinn, Brent. Breʹnning. Breʹnningly. } To burn, (qv.) A. S. Bernan or brennan: this transposition of vowel and consonant is common.

Whanne at an god mannes hous ye men were at inne,
Yorst hii wolde ete & drynke that hii found ther inne.
And suththe the louerd of the hous quelle and alle hys,
And suththe brenne al ys hous. R. Gloucester, p. 296.

He brent cites and tounes, ouer alle did he schame.
R. Brunne, p. 25.

I counsele thee to bie of me brent gold and preued, that thou be maad riche, and be clothid with white clothis
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 3.

And they brent all the cornes in that lond,
And all hir oliveres, and vines eke
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14 041

And over all this, to slen me utterly,
Love hath his fyry dart so brenningly
Yetiked thurgh my trewe careful hert
That shapen was my deth erst than my shert.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1566

And as it queinte, it made a whistling,
As don these brondes wet in hir brenning.
Id. Ib. v. 2340

And as he was towarde his sayde journey, he sawe in his slepe, the sygne of the crosse shynynge in the fyrmament, as if it had been a brennynge lyghte of fyre, and an aungell standynge thereby.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 68.

Well, quod the duke, and what shall I do then? shall I suffre myselfe to be inclosed in one of my townes, and in the mean tyme they shall brynne and exile my countrey?
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 136

The great heate and brennynge of the sonne dyd put the crysten men to great payne and traueyle, for whan they were in harnesse, by reason of the heate, it brente them within their armure.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. c 171.

Or consuming fire
Brent his shearing-house or stall,
Or a deluge drowned all?
Tell it me intire.—Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl 3.

BRENT. (Of a hill.) Sw. Bryn, vertex montis. Ihre thinks bryn denotes that which stands above other things, or is preeminent beyond other things. Dr. Jamieson interprets brent to be—high, straight, upright. It is perhaps be-rent, brent: i. e. rent or riven, torn or sheared. See Scar.

Heich in the fore stam stand he micht be sene,
For his blyith browis brent, and athir ene
The fyre twinkling.
Douglas. Eneados, b. viii. l. 12, p. 268.

The grapes grow on the brent rocks so wonderfully, that ye will marvell how men dare climb up to them, and yet so plentifully, that it is not only a marvell where men dwell that drink it.—Ascham. Letter to Mr. Raven.

BRETFUL. Of Bretful, Mr. Tyrwhitt observes that the sense is much more clear than the etymology. The breeds of a hat in Gloucestershire, are the brims of a hat. Breeds may be that which broden, broads or broadens; and bretful may be full to the whole breadth, the whole extent or dimensions; brimful.

——— A frere on a bench
With a face so fat as a full bleddere,
Blowen bretful of breath.—Piers Ploughman Crede.

His wallet lay beforne him in his lappe,
Bretful of pardon come from Rome al hote.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 689

BREVE, n. Breve, adj. Breʹvely. Breʹviary. Breʹvity. Breʹviate. } Lat. Brevis; Gr. Βραχυς, short. See Brief, and Abbreviate.
A breve, brief, or breviary, is a short, concise, compendious writing; appointing or describing (something to be done) in a brief style, in a few words; or containing shortly or briefly, in an abridged or compendious form, the substance of something larger or more expanded.

For that on bereth bote a boxe, a breuet th' ynne
Ther the marchaunt ledeth a mule, with meny kynne thynges. Piers Plouhman, p 217.

Now woll I shortly here reherce
Of that I haue said in verse
All the sentence by and by
In wordes fewe compendiously
That thou the better maiest on hem thinke
Whetherso it be thou wake or winke
For the wordes little greue
A man to kepe, whan it is breue.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose

The more the said breve cometh unto light and knowledge the more falsities be deprehended therein.
Burnett. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 23.

This poetical schoolemayster, corector of breues and longes, caused Collyngborne to be abbreuiate shorter by the hed, and too bee deuyded into foure quarters.—Hall. Rich. III. an. 3

They determyned by some meanes easely to compasse that the duchy of Bryteyne should breuely come vndre their hure and subiecció.—Id. Hen. VII. an. 3.

Some time they can use such a compendious kynde of eloquence, that they conney and couche vp together, with a woonderful breuitie, fowre folies and fiue lyes in lesse than as many lynes.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 849.

And as touching the situations of the cities, townes, castles, and countreys, as well of Mahometans as also of Gentiles adioyning the same, whereby I passed from Moscow vnto Astracan, I omit in this breuiat to rehearse.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i p. 345.

Metrodorus in his booke entituled the abridgement or breviarie of those roots that are to be cut up or gathered, gave counsell to give this hearb to women.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c 20.

His tablet sent she, and therewith
This breuiat, by a page.
"Of you I aske not backe my loane,
But take it, and your gage."
Warner. Albion's England, b xii. c 77.

But as short things most vigour have, and we Find force the recompence of brevity,
So was it here.—Cartwright. On the Death of Lord Bayning.

In speculation no man can be ignorant of human life's brevity and uncertainty, but most men are so negligent and stupid, as not to regard it sufficiently, not to employ this knowledge to any good purpose.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

Among a great number of Roman missals and breviaries, remarkable for the beauty of their cuts and illuminations, will be found the Mosarabic missal and breviary, that raised such commotions in the kingdom of Spain.
Johnson. Account of Harleian Library.

The same little breviates of infidelity have, to my knowledge, been published and dispersed with great activity, and at a considerable expense, among the middling and lower ranks of men in this country.
Porteus. Charge to the Diocese of London.

This argument is stated by Saint John with his usual elegant brevity and simplicity: "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."
Id. The Religious Observance of Good Friday

BREW, v. }
BREW, n. }
BRE'WAGE. }
BRE'WER. }
BRE'WERY. }
BRE'WING, n. }
BRE'WSTER. }

A.S. Briwan; Dut. Brouwen; Ger. Brauen, coquere. Broth was in England anciently, and in Scotland still is, called brewis. Brew as now principally applied is—

To boil, seethe, ferment malt, and other ingredients, so as to produce beer; of apples and pears, to produce cyder or perry.

(Met.) To excite or raise any boiling, heating passion, as anger, jealousy; to excite or raise a ferment, storm, or plot.

& I salle telle that tale, or I ferrer go.
How faanes brewes bale with him, and many mo.
R. Brunne, p 55.

They wolde non halpeny ale, in none wyse drynke
Bote of the best and brounest that brewesters selleu.
Piers Ploughman, p. 347.

And who so wicked ale breweth,
Ful ofte he mote the worse drinke.—Gower. Con. A b 11

Let euery man of whatsoeuer craft or occupation he be of, whether bruer, baker, tayler, vitailer, marchaunt, or husbandman, referre his craft and occupation, vnto the commō wealth, and serue hys bretheren as he would doe Christe himselfe.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 86.

Whose pryde and riches be the spurres vnto all this tumult where in good studies and letters, gospell and Cryste shal be neglected & at last a new derkenes & fyercer furies withe the miserable mutacios of kingdoms nowe begune & in brewing.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

As if in brewinge spyced wynes
thou shouldst bestow muche paine,
And sauce thy meate with foystie oyles,
thy geese woulde the disdayne.
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 4.

He going to their stately place
Did finde in euery dish
Fat beefe and brewis, and great store
Of daintie fowle and fish.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 24.

Among whom was one William Murle a rich maultman, or bruer of Dunstaple, who had his two horses traped with golde following him, and a pair of gilt spurs in his bosome.
Stow. Hen. V. an. 1414.

Well; to shut up all, let them of their Bonner's "beef," and "broth," make what brewesse they please for their credulous guests.
Bp. Hall. Postscript to Defence of Humble Remon.

As for the rest within Languedoc and the province Narbon, I am not able to avouch any thing for certaintie, such a brewing and sophistication of them they make.
Holland. Plinie, b. xiv. c. 6.

And after the malmesey, or some well-spic'd bruage, and better breakfasted, than he whose morning appetite would have gladly fed on green figs between Bethany and Jerusalem; his religion walks abroad at eight, and leaves his kind entertainer in the shop trading all the day long without his religion.—Milton. The Liberty of Unlicens'd Printing.

Whilst black pots walk round with laughing ale
Surcharg'd; or brew'd in planetary hour,
When March weigh'd night and day in equal scale;
Or in October tunn'd, and mellow grown,
With seven revolving suns. J. Philips. Cerealia.

He was conveyed from the palace of contempt to the dungeon of horrour, and thence led by a brewer of his capital through the applauses of an hired, frantick, drunken multitude to lose his head upon a scaffold.
Burke. Remonstrance on the Policy of the Allies.

I anticipate the day of his [Santerre] arrival. He will make his public entry into London on one of those pale horses of his brewery.—Id. On a Regicide Peace.

BRIBE, v. }
BRIBE, n. }
BRI'BING. }
BRI'BER. }
BRI'BERY. }

The origin of this word remains yet unaccounted for. Nicol interprets a bribe to be panis mendicatus; and Cotgrave calls it "a peece, lump, or cantil of bread given to a beggar." Fr. Briber, to beg his bread; also to ravine, devour, eat greedily; Sp. Bribar, to beg.

Mr. Tyrwhitt says—To briben, is to beg, perhaps, to steal; and he cites from the Rolls of Parliament, the words "have stolen and bribed cygnets." In P. Ploughman, (p. 405) "Briboures, pilors, (i. e. pillers) and pikeharness," are classed together. In Lidgate (Tragedy, 152,) still more plainly—

"Who saveth a thefe when the rope is knet,
With some false turn the bribour will him quite."

Such seems indeed to have been the common usage. See especially the quotations from Froissart, Fabyan, and the Bible. From the common corruption of Be-r by hasty pronunciation into Br, a very satisfactory etymology presents itself. A bribour or briber, is a be-reaver or be-river, a be-ribber or be-robber; a briber or robber: and to bribe is to rob, or take away. Bribery (Bible, 1551) is in our common version extortion. Bribe, that which is taken or received, extorted or exacted; and consequ ntially that which is given: and briber has, by usage, been transferred, from the taker or extortioner, to the giver or payer; and the v. to bribe, has undergone a similar change. To bribe, then, is—

To give, or pay, a fee, a perquisite; to make a donation, (extorted, required, expected, or desired) usually as hire, for an undue or corrupt return, for undue services or favours, for undue influence, partiality, or preference; or otherwise, to obtain a right wrongfully withheld or denied; or an adjudication of such right.

Briboures, in the quotation from Chaucer, (Freres Tale,) Mr. Tyrwhitt thinks should perhaps be written briberies.

And for ther n' is no thefe without a louke,
That helpeth him to wasten and to souke
Of that he bribes can, or borwe may.
Chaucer. The Cokes Tale, v. 4415.

Certaine he knew of bribours many mo,
Than possible is to tell in yeres two.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 6949.

And so befell, that ones on a day
This sompnour, waiting ever on his pray,
Rode forth to sompne a widewe, an old ribibe
Feining a cause, for he wold han a bribe.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 6960.

And soone after the Jewys were thus punyshed, many houses of religion within the cytie and nere there aboute, were serched for goodes of alyaūtes and moche found; whereof a parte was brought vnto the lordes, but yᵉ more part was stolen & brybed.—Fabyan, an. 1263.

Within they are ful of bribery and excesse.
Bible, 1551. Matt. c. 23

A place where pride, oreruns the honest minde,
Where riche men joynes, to rob the shiftles wretch;
Where bribing mists, the judges eyes do blinde,
Where parasites, the fattest crummes do catch.
Gascoigne. A Remembraunce.

The Erle of Suffolke (I cannot sale) either corrupted with bribes, or to muche affectionate to this vnprofitable mariage, condiscended and agreed to their mocion.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 22.

Suche knightes and squyers of Fraunce as were there, knewe nat wheder to sende their varlettes to forrage, they durst nat (without they went I great routes,) for the bribours of the countrey who watched for them at the passages, and often tymes slewe of them.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 10.

Well, sayd yᵉ kynge, it is behoueable that yᵉ countrey be delyuered of them, and that they be payde as theues and brybours sholde be payde, yf I gete them, they shal be hanged.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 61.

It was sinne to eate with vnwashed handes, or an vnwashed table, or out of an vnwashed dishe: but to eate of that purified dishe, that whiche came of bribery, theifte and extortion, was no sin at all.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 29.

There have been known great personages, who being once permitted to put forth their hands to take bribes and money unjustly, lost all the honour which they had won the rest of their life time.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 10.

Or now by this means there could no man rob nor steal, there was no bribing nor corruption by gifts, no man might defraud in contracts and bargains, nor embezzell any more.
Id. Ib. p. 381.

My charge is exceeding great, my bribes are very little, my bishoprick, deanery, and other commendams do not clear unto me above one thousand pounds a year at the uppermost.—Cabbala. The Lord Keeper to the Duke, p. 55.

It is no small happinesse to any state, where their Governours are chosen by worthiness, and such elections are ever from God, whereas the intrusions of bribery and unjust favour or violence, as they make the common-wealth miserable, so they come from him which is the author of confusion.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Death of Moses

P. See, now I keep the secret and not you!
The bribing statesman—F. Hod, too high you go.
P. The brib'd elector—F. There you stoop too low
Pope. Epilogue to Satires.

The philosopher proceeds to show how the most vicious men might be devout, so far as victims could make him, but that his offerings were regarded by the gods as bribes, and his petitions as blasphemies.—Spectator, No 207.

Say, whence this change? less galling is the chain
Though Walpole, Carteret, or a Pelham reign?
If senates still the pois'nous bane imbibe,
And every palm grows callous with the bribe.
P. Whitehead. Honour. A Satyr.

Four wives, with liberty of changing them at pleasure, together with the persons of all his captives, was an irresistible bribe to an Arabian warrior.
Paley. Evidences, s. 3. pt. ii

The Roman law, though it contained many severe injunctions against bribery, as well as for selling a man's vote in the senate or other public assembly, as for the tattering of common justice, yet, by strange indulgence, in one instance, it tacitly encouraged this practice; allowing the magistrate to receive small presents, provided they did not in the whole exceed a hundred crowns in the year.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 10.

BRICK, v. }
BRICK, n. }

Dut. Briecke; Fr. Briquer, to set or lay bricks; to work, build, or fortifie with bricks, (Cotgrave.) Low. Lat. Brica. Menage derives the word from the Lat. Imbricare; i. e. imbricibus tegere. Imbrices are also called, ab imbre, quod accipiant arceantque imbres, because they receive and keep off the rain. (Vossius.)

Brick is used prefixed to layer, kiln, &c.

So that ye gene the people no more strawe to make brycke wythall, as ye did in tyme passed: lette theym go and gather theym strawe theym selues and the nombre of bricke which they were wont to make in tyme passed, lye vnto their charges also, and mynyshe nothynge therof.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 5.

& also made dyches, all alonge yᵉ said walle as well wtin as without, & with the earth, that they drewe out & cast vp, they made brique.—Nicoll. Thucydides, p. 64.

Being enterd the port, we found there three small barkes which we rifled and found in one of them 57 wedges of siluer, each of them weighing about 20 pound weight, and euery of these wedges were of the fashion and bignesse of a brickbat.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 735.

——— Will ye walk out, sir.
And if I do not beat thee presently
Into a sound belief, as sence can give thee,
Brick me into that wall there for a chimny piece,
And say I was one o'th' Cæsars, done by a seal-cutter.
Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife and have a Wife, Act iv. sc. 1.

——— Then as if he would have sold
His tongue, he prais'd it, and such wonders told,
That I was fain to say, "If you had liv'd, sir,
Time enough to have been interpreter
To Babel's bricklayers, sure the tower had stood."
Donne, Sat. 4.

The Greekes have a kind of wall which they make of hard pebbles or flint couched even and laid in order by the line and levell, like as we do in bricke-walls.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 22.

Frogs and toads that croak'd the Jews
From Pharoah and his brick-kilns loose.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

The same observation might be made on the retailers of small cole, not to mention broken glass or brick-dust.
Spectator, No. 251.

The most unfurnish'd with the means of life,
And they that never pass their brick-wall bound,
To range the fields and treat their lungs with air,
Yet feel the burning instinct. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

BRI'CKLE. Dut. Brokel; breke-lick, from breken, to break.

That may be broken; fragile, frail, brittle; (which last is the word now used, and which is also from the same source.)

Suche as dridde their endevour to break his bondes, and to shake his yoke from them, those he shall spyte of their teeth rule with an yron rod, and as a brickell earthern pot in pieces al to frush them.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1598.

Whan this blessyd kynge Edwarde had receyued deuine monyssion that he should chaunge this transetory and brychell life for ye life euerlastynge, he sykened in the Cristenmas weke.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 214.

Olde Ould will I reade, whose pleasant wit doth passe
The reast, as far as stubborne steele
excells the brickle glasse.
Turbervile. The Lover to Cupid for Mercie.

For this man that of earthly matter maketh brickle vessels, and graven images, knoweth himself to offend above all others.—Bible. Wisdom, xv. 13.

BRIDE, n. }
BRIDE, v. }
BRI'DAL, n. }
BRI'DAL, adj. }
BRI'DALTY. }
BRIDE-GROOM. }

Mr. Tooke considers bride to be the past part. of the A. S. Bredan, fovere, to nourish, to cherish. The bride then is any one (sc. woman) nourished, cherished. Somner observes that Chaucer writes it Brade. Bridegroom is the person by whom the nourished, cherished one is attended, served, protected.

Groom, notwithstanding the introduction of the letter r, for which he cannot account, Tooke is persuaded, is the past part. of the A. S. verb Gyman, to take care of, to guide, to guard, to attend. In the A. S. we have Bridgum; Ger. Brautigam; Dut. Bruede-gum; Dan. Breedgom; Sw. Brudgumme: all without the r. See Tooke, and also Somner.

Bride, a woman newly placed under the protection of a husband, newly espoused or married; who has newly entered into the nuptial state.

Bridegroom, the (protecting) husband newly espoused to the bride.

Here now of Hardeknoute, how he ended his life.
Thi a duke of Danes he gaf his doubter to wife,
The bridale was holden at the maner of Lambithe.
R. Brunne, p. 86.

And ich sawe how mede was married. meting as it were
And al the riche retynaunce. that roteth hem on falsly-vynge,
Were byd to that brudale. Piers Ploughman, p. 27.

Whan thou art bedun to bridalis: sitte not at the mete in the first place, lest peraventure a worthier than thou be bedun of him.—Wielif. Luke, c. 14.

And Venus laugheth upon every wight
And with hire firebrond in hire hond aboute
Danceth before the bride and all the route.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9602.

Thē deuised we some doctor to make a sermō at our masse in our mothes mind & preache to our prayse wt some fond fatasy deuised of our name & after masse muche feasting ryotous & costly, & finally like mad men, made mē meri at our deth, & take our burying for a brideall.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 335.

For it chaunceth by many, that after the heat of loue is once past, their followeth great hate, which thing oft times maketh wonder & talke among the people, when they heare tell, how so great louers within 3 or 4 daies fal at debate, and begin to diuorce ere the bride cake be eatē.
Vives. Instruction of a Christen Woman, b. i. c. 16.

He yt hath the bryde, is the brydegrome. But the frende of the brydegrome, whyche standeth by and heareth him reioyseth greatly of the bridegromes voyce, Thys my ioye is fulfylled.—Bible, 1551. John, c. 3.

And when the golden glorious sun goes down
Would she put on her star-bestudded crown,
And in her masking suite, the spangled sky
Come forth to bride it in her revelry.
Drayton. K. John to Matilda.

When she will grace the bridal dignitie,
It will be soon to all young monarchs known,
Who then by posting through the world will trie
Who first can at her feet present his crown.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 4.

The swiftest of thy pinions take,
And hence a sudden journey make
To help 'em break their bridal cake.
T. Randolph. Ellis, vol. iii.

Acc. At Quintin, heo
In honour of this bridaltee,
Hath chalieng'd either wide countee.
B. Jonson. Love's Welcome.

Such various flowry wreaths th' assembly weare,
As shew'd them wisely proud of nature's pride;
Which so adorn'd them, that the coarsest here
Did seem a prosp'rous bridegroom, or a bride.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 6.

Alph. Come then, let 's in, and end this nuptial,
Then to our coronation with all speed:
My vertuous maid, this day I'le be your bride-man.
Beaum. & Fletch. A Wife for a Moneth, Act v. sc. 1.

Let 's sing about, and say, hey-trol,
Troll to me the bridall boll,
And divide the broad bride-cake
Round about the brides-stake.—B. Jonson. Love's Welcome.

How dar'st thou disobey, when I command?
Mind, mind her not, nor be disturb'd at tears,
A counterfeited qualm of bridal fears.
Lansdown. The British Enchantress, Act i. sc. 2.

He, only he, can tell, who match'd like me,
(If such another happy man there be)
Has by his own experience tried,
How much the wife is dearer than the bride.
Lyttelton. An irregular Ode.

So wept Aurelia, till the destin'd youth
Stepp'd in, with his receipt for making smiles,
And blanching sables into bridal bloom.
Young. Complaint, Night 5.

BRIDGE, v. }
BRIDGE, n. }

The origin of this word has not been sufficiently accounted for. Ihre considers the Sw. Brygga to be the diminutive of Bro, pons; properly denoting aliquod stratum, i. e. any thing strewed, spread, stretched. Spelman, that brig or brug is so called because it is usually constructed e tabulis; brug also signifying tabulatum. Skinner suggests, A. S. Ofer, over, and Rige, the back; or ig, water. It is (probably) the A. S. Rige, hrieg, and the common prefix be. In A. S. we find Hrieg, brieg; in Sw. Rygg, brygga; in Ger. Ruck, bruck; in Dut. Rugge, brugge; in Eng. Ridge, bridge.

Be-ridge, bridge, (ber contracted into br,) is—

That which reaches, stretches, or extends, (sc. from bank to bank, across a river, from side to side, point to point;) any thing, built, raised and stretched or extended across.

Bysyde Euerwyk hys ost agen hym he drow,
In stude, that me clupede Stamford brugge tho,
And now me clupeth yᵗ Bataile brugge, vor the bataile that was tho.—R. Gloucester, p. 305.

On the brigge were alle the vamward & the rere,
Under tham the brigge gan falle doun in to the riuere.
R. Brunne, p. 204.

Albeit it was a very hard matter to make a bridge, by reason of yᵉ brodenesse, swiftnesse, and depenesse of the streame, yet notwythstanding he thought eyther to goe that waye to worke, or els it was not for hym to passe at all wyth hys army.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 94.

Though he found it very difficult to lay a bridge cross so broad, so deep, and rapid a river, yet he determined to attempt it, & if he failed, not to pass over at all.
Bladen. Ib. b. iv. ut supra.

Xerxes, the libertie of Greece to yoke,
From Susa his Memnonian palace high
Came to the sea, and over Hellespont
Bridging his way, Europe with Asia joyn'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

The former union now returnes againe,
This isle shall once more kisse the maine,
Joyn'd with a flowry bridge of loue on which the Graces dance.—Beaumont. An Epithalamium.

——— Why halt ye thus, ye Britons? Why
Decline the war? Shall a morass forbid
Your easy march? Advance; we'll bridge a way,
Safe of access. J. Philips. Blenheim.

Your greatest conquerors have burnt their ships or broke down the bridges behind them, as being determined either to succeed or die in the engagement.—Spectator, No. 295.

Stupendous task! in vain stood tow'ring hills
Oppos'd; in vain did ample Irwell pour
Her tide transverse: he pierc'd the tow'ring hill,
He bridg'd the ample tide, and high in air,
And deep through earth, his freighted barge he bore.
Mason. The English Garden, b. iii.

Descending now (but cautious, lest too fast)
A sudden steep, upon a rustic bridge
We pass a gulph, in which the willows dip
Their pendant boughs, stooping as if to drink.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

BRI'DLE, v. }
BRI'DLE, n. }
BRI'DLER. }
BRI'DLING. }

A. S. Bridel, bridlian; Dut. Breydel, breydelen; Fr. Brider; It. Brigha; Sp. Brida. Skinner, from the Dut. Be-ryden, be-riddlen, (A. S. Be-ridan,) to ride. Brdle, (ber into br,) then will merely be—

That with which we ride, (sc.) to guide or manage the horse.

To bridle, (lit. Gow.—met. Chaucer,) to hold in, to restrain, to moderate. It is also—

To hold up the head, as a horse when he feels the bridle; when pulled up by it.

If ony man offendith not in word, this is a parfyt man. For also he mai lede aboute al the bodi with a bridel: for if we putten bridelis into horses mouthis for to consente to us, and we leden aboute al the bodi of them.—Wiclif. Jas. c. 3.

Thou art at ease, & hold the well therin
For also sure as redde is euery fire
As great a craft is to kepe well as winne
Bridle alway well thy speach and thy desire
For worldly ioy holdeth not but by a wire.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

He loketh up and down, til he hath found
The clerks hors, there as he stood ybound
Behind the mille, under a leveselI
And to the hors he goth him faire and well,
And stripeth of the bridel right anon.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4061.

Where some plaide, and some songe,
And some gone and some ride,
And some pricke her horse side,
And bridlen them nowe in nowe out.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And if her list to riden oute
On pilgremage, or other stede,
I come, though I be not bede,
And take hir in myn arme alofte,
And set hir in hir sadle softe,
And so forth lede hir by the bridell.—Id. B. b. iv.

By the tyme that the chylde doth come to xvii. yeres of age, to the intent his courage be brydled with reason, it were nedefull to rede vnto hym some workes of philosophy.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 11.

For suche as haue had the rule aboute hym, haue nat doone their duetie, but haue suffred hym to rynne on the bridell, and to ryde nyght and daye excessyuely in traucylynge of his body out of measure.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 189.

After this solempne feaste and glorious pompe he kepte greate counsailles there, as well for the orderynge of the countree in tyme to come, as for the brydellynge and punyshinge of suche as there had misgouerned them selfes.
Hall. Rich. III. an. 1.

When youth, not bridled with a guiding stay,
Is left to random of their owne delight,
And welds whole realmes by force of soveraign sway,
Great is the daunger of unmaistred might.
Sackville. Ferrex & Porrex, Act iii. sc. 1.

In the turning one might perceive the bridle-hand something gently stir: but indeed so gently, as it did rather distil virtue than use violence.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

The prelates which boast themselves the only bridlers of schism, God knows have been so cold and backward both there and with us to repress heresy and idolatry, that either through their carelessness or their craft all this mischief is befaln.—Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 7.

Fir'd with the name, which I so oft have found
The distant climes and different tongues resound,
I bridle-in my struggling muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.
Addison. A Letter from Italy.

This declaration gave great satisfaction to the whole assembly which immediately bridled up, and appeared in all its beauties.—Tatler, No. 102.

She showed a little dislike at my raillery; and by her bridling up, I perceived she expected to be treated hereafter not as Jenny Distaff but Mrs. Tranquillus.—Id. No. 104.

All the circumstances of the life of our Prince, seem to have conspired to make him the check and bridle of tyranny.
Spectator, No. 516.

He bridles-in the monsters of the deep:
The bridled monsters awful distance keep;
Forget their hunger, while they view their prey;
And guiltless gaze, and round the stranger play.
Young. The Last Day, b. i.

BRIEF, n. }
BRIEF, adj. }
BRI'EFLY. }
BRI'EFNESS. }

Dr. Jamieson gives instances of the use of brief as a verb. It is common among English lawyers as, to brief the pleadings.

See BRAVE.

A brief, breve or breviary, is a short, concise, compendious writing; appointing or describing something to be done—in a brief style, in a few words; or containing shortly or briefly in an abridged or compendious form, the substance of something larger or more expanded.

For whilom thou wrote him tille, & cald him in thi breefe,
Thi kynde, faythfulle & leale of Gascoyn noble duke,
Therto thou set thi seale.—R. Brunne, p. 259.

——And cam with hus letteres
Baldely to the bushope, and hus breef had
In countreyes thr cam confessions to hure.
Piers Ploughman, p. 403.

Besydis this it is yt very breif cõpendious some and rehercall of the storye of the hole worde, euen from the firste monarchye to the laste, setting before our eyes the cleare examples of the good and euil princes and rulers.
Joye. Expos. Daniel. Epist. Ded.

To bee briefe, my men became weake and sicke, and if we had stayed any longer time out, I doubt whether the greatest part of vs had euer come aboord againe.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 674.

He is on our syde, he holdeth with vs, hee speaketh for vs, hee excuseth vs, hee maketh our cause good. briefly hee obtayneth all thinges for vs.—Barnes. Workes, p. 347.

We hadde not requyred this audyence (lordes Lacedemonians) if this people here hadde answeredde briefly to the interrogation made vnto them.—Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 86.

Takyng his enterannce at the first conception of Johan the Baptist, and makyng relacion of verye muche matter touchyng the natiuitie, and concernyng the babehoode, yea and certayne poyntes furthermore concernyng the childhood of Jesus, making also rehersall of many parables and miracles whiche the other euāgelistes for loue of briefnes had let passe no any thing spoken of.—Udal. Pref. to Luke.

To whom in brief thus Abdiel stern replied:
Apostat, still thou errst, nor end wilt find
Of erring. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

——Yee who appointed stand
Do as you have in charge, and briefly touch
What we propound, and loud that all may hear.—Id. Ib.

But Valla leaves it cleerly out and with his briefnesse utterly maimes the simile which, (to my understanding being so excellent) I could not but with thus much repetition and labour inculcate the sence of it.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

As for Tibullus's reports,
They never pass'd for law in courts;
For Cowley's briefs, and pleas of Waller,
Still their authority was smaller.
Swift. Cadenus & Vanessa.

Because I did more particularly design from the text to speak of the temporal benefits and advantages which redound to men from religion, therefore I shall content myself to shew very briefly how a religious and virtuous life doth conduce to our future happiness.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Thomson, who had been rewarded for his attendance by the place of secretary of the briefs, pays in the initial lines a decent tribute to his memory.—Johnson. Life of Thomson.

We ought to be thankful to Providence even for that brief respite from the miseries and desolations of war.
Porteus. Charge to the Diocese of London.

In these prayers might be briefly expressed some of the principal duties of a christian life, which, by being constantly repeated would be insensibly and deeply impressed both upon their memory and their hearts.
Id. Civilization of Negro Slaves.

BRI'ER. } A. S. Brer. Benson gives the BRI'ERY. } A. S. Abryran, pungere, to prick. And Somner says Abryrd, (i. e. abryr'ed, the past part.) contrite, broken, bruised, pricked (as it were with briers.) Applied to—

The thorns or prickles; the plant itself.

But that that is brynginge forth thornes and breris is repreuable and next to curs, whos endyng schal be unto brennyng.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 6.

But that grounde which beareth thornes and bryers, is reproued, and is nye vnto cursynge whose end is to be burned.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Thise ben the new shepherdes, that let hir shepe wetingly go renne to the wolf, that is in the breres and do no force of hir owen governance.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Thus still I toyle, to till the barraine land,
And grope for grappes among the bramble briers,
I striue to saile and yet I strike on sand,
I deeme to liue, yet drown in deepe desires.
Gascoigne. A Louer often warned.

It taketh no rote in a briery place, ne in marice, neither in the sande that flecteth awaye, but it requireth a pure, a trymme and a substauncial grounde.—Udal. James, c. 1.

I wonder he hath soff'red been
Upon our common heere,
His hogges doe root our younger treen,
And spoyle the smeeting breere.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 2.

If we thought ye would through malice, conspiracie, or discention, leaue vs your friendes in the briers and betray vs, wee could as well sundry wayes foresee and prouide for our owne safegards, as any of you, by betraying vs can doe for yours.—Stow. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

How much more comfortable it is to walk in smooth and even paths, than to wander in rugged ways, overgrown with briars, obstructed with rubs and beset with snares.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 30.

But, Venus, quite abandon'd to despair,
Her locks dishevell'd and her feet all bare,
Flies through the thorny brake, and briary wood,
And stains the thicket with her sacred blood.
Fawkes. The Death of Adonis.

—— Some harsh, 'tis true,
Pick'd from the thorns and briers of reproof,
But wholesome, well-digested. Cowper. Task, b. vi.

BRIGA'DE, v. } It. Brigata; Fr. "Brigader; to accompany or associate one another; to troop, or keep company together," (Cotgrave.) See BRIGUE. Dachat thinks it is derived from the Ger. Brecken, to break.
BRIGA'DE, n.
BRI'GADIER.

The brigade supposes a great body of troops, from which it has been detached; broken away.

The verb is in use in common speech.

There stood a hill not far whose grisly top
Belch'd fire and rowling smoak:
—— Thither wing'd with speed
A numerous brigad hasten'd. Milton. Par. Lost, b. i.

Cupid, survey thy shining train around
Of favourite nymphs for conquest most renown'd,
Then say what beauteous general wilt thou choose,
To lead the fair brigade against thy rebel foes?
Hughes. Cupid's Review.

In the present state of the French army, is the crown responsible for the whole of it? Is there any general who can be responsible for the obedience of a brigade?
Burke. Sub. of Speech on the Army Estimates.

BRI'GAND. } Fr. Brigand, brigandine, brigantine; It. Brigante, brigantino; Sp. Bregante, bergantin. Skinner thinks with reason that, as soldiers were formerly called brigans, the true etymology is brigade, (qv.); and indeed, he adds, there is little difference between soldiers and robbers. Brigades, it may be added, were parties detached, broken away from the main body, partly for foraging and plundering. "In old time," says Cotgrave, "when those kind of soldiers marched, they held all to be good prize that they could purloin from the people; and thereupon this word now signifies also—
BRI'GANDAGE.
BRI'GANDER.
BRI'GANTINE.
BRI'GANDIER.

"A thief, purse-taker, highway robber."

Brigandine and brigander,—armour worn by the brigands, consisting of many jointed, scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body. Gower writes Brigantaille.

Brigantin or brigandine,—a vessel used by the brigands or pirates; a low, long, and swift vessel.

The churche laie in aduenture
Of armes and of brigantaille;
Stode no thyng then upon battaile;
To fight or for to make cheste
It thought them then not honeste.—Gower. Con. A.

And at their comming, himself wt the Duke of Bukingha, stode harnesed in old lifaring brigãders, such as no mã should wene yt thei wold vouchsafe to haue put vpõ their backes, except that some sodaine necessitie had cõstrained thẽ.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 65.

He promysed with a fyve hundred speares, and a thousande brigans afote, to come into the fronter of Genes, and to passe ouer the ryuer, whether their ennemyes woldo or natte.—Bernars. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 177.

And so soon as Jak Cade had thus ouer cõmyn the Staffordes, he anone apparaylled hym with the knyghtes apparayll, and dyd on hym his bryganders set with gylt nayle, and hys salet and gylt sporis.—Fabyan, an. 1450.

In stede of a scepter they haue a crosyers staffe: they haue theyr brigandyne, theyr souldiers girdle, and to be shorte, al that complete harnes which that valiaunt warriour Saincte Paule describeth vnto them in sondry places.
Udal. Mark, Pref.

They haue also armed horses with their shoulders and breaste defenced, they haue helmets and brigandines.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 62.

True it is that fiue or six & twenty that were in the brigantine discouered these ships when they were nere them, which seeing themselues pressed for want of leisure to weigh their anker, cut their cable.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. ii. p. 805.

His vyage was with diligence and speede as appertained, not wastfully spent in riot and pleasures: himselfe with his iron brigandine, marching before the enseignes on foote, not decked, not trimmed, but soldier like, and vnlike the name that went of him.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 59.

Great Neptune grieued vnderneath the load
Of ships, hulkes, galbes, barks, and brigandines,
In all the mid-earth seas was left no road
Wherin the Pagan his bold sailes vntwines.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Borlogne, b. i. s 79.

What is then to be done? Shall we constraine our youth to go aboord unto the brigantine or barke of Epicurus, to saile away and flie from Poetry by plastring and stopping their eares with hard and strong waxe, as Ulysses sometimes served those of Ithaca.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 16.

[They] being better fitted to brigandize than open fight in the field, are weaponed with long pikes, and armed with habergeons made of shaved and smoothed hornes, which further-wise are wrought close into linnen jackes.
Id. Ammianus, p. 24.

The reason of such laws is evident, it was not at all for the publ[ic] good to suffer peasants and mechanics to neglect their occupations, and to run up and down the woods and forests, armed: which in time, through their libertines and domestic distresses, draws them on to robbery and brigandage, nor to permit the populace, in towns and cities, to have, and carry arms at their pleasure, which would give opportunity and encouragement to sedition and commotions.
Warburton. Alliance between Church and State, b. iii. c. 3.

BRIGHT. } Goth. Bairhts, bairhtyan; A.S. Beorht, beorhtian; manifestare, clarere, clarescere: to be or make clear.
BRI'GHTEN.
BRI'GHTLY.
BRI'GHTNESS.
BRI'GHTSOMENESS.

Evident, clear, manifest; luminous, shining, splendid, conspicuous, illustrious.

Bright is prefixed to many words; and may be so to more.

Att north gate of London heo buryede this gode knygt
And buryde with hym in hys cheest that swerd that was so brygt.
R. Gloucester, p. 50.

A brightnesse com fro heuen, & on Roberd light
Thre tymes alle euen, that alle seuh it with sight.
R. Brunne, p. 103.

Corsede caytyfs, knyght hode was hit nevere
To bete a body ybounde, with eny brigth wepne
Piers Ploughman, p. 214.

And ich shal letta this lorde, and hus light stoppe
As we thorw bryghtnesse be blent. Id. Ib. p. 354.

Therefore if al thi body shal be bright, and haue no part derknesis; it schal be al bright, and as a lanterne, of brightnesse it schal geue light to thee.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 11.

For yf all thy body shall be lyghte. But yet hauynge no parte darke: then shall all be full of lyght, euen as when a candell doeth lyght the with his brightnes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Til whan the shadow is ouerpassed,
She is illumined agein as fast,
Through the brightnes of sonne beames,
That yeueth to her againe her lemes.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

The ground thereof was all gold and the flowers were al of sattyn sewer so that by the brightsomeness of the gold, the flowers appeared so freshly that they semed as they were growyng in dede.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

There were two honors lost: yours, and your sonnes,
For yours; may heauenly glory brighten it.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

—— In solitude
What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
Or all enjoying, what contentment find?
Thus I presumptious; and the vision bright,
As with a smile more bright'ned thus replied.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

—— Thus below
A well-joyn'd board he laide it, and close by,
The brightly-headed shaft.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

But the cause why they shew lesse is their altitude: like as the fixed starres, which by reason of the sunnes brightnesse are not seene in the day time.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 14.

It happened to be a freezing night, which had purified the whole body of air into such a bright transparent ether as made every constellation visible; and at the same time gave such a particular glowing to the stars, that I thought it the richest sky I had ever seen.—Tatler, No. 100.

Thus, through what path soe'er of life we rove,
Rage companies our hate and grief our love,
Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come?
Prior. Solomon, b. iii.

Let mighty Spenser raise his reverend head,
Cowley and Denham start up from the dead;
Waller his age renew, and offer'ngs bring,
Our monarch's praise let bright-ey'd virgins sing.
Dryden. Art of Poetry, c. 4.

Come then, my soul, be this thy guest,
And leave to knaves and fools the rest;
With this thou ever shalt be gay,
And night shall brighten into day.—Cotton. Night Piece.

However, this was only a transient cloud; they were hid but a moment; and their constellation blazed out with greater brightness, and a far more vigorous influence, some time after it was blown over.
Burke. On the Cause of the present Discontent.

BRIGUE. } Fr. Brigue; It. Briga, an alter-
BRIGU'ER. } cation; I believe, from A. S. Brice, a rupture—as we say, a breach of the peace, a rupture of friendship, (Skinner.) And, to brigue—
To contest or contend, to canvass, to strive.

Ye knowen wel that min adversaries han begonne this debat and brige by his outrage.—Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

Which two words, as conscious that they were very brigue and severe, (if too generally taken, therefore) he softens them in the next immediate words by an apology.
Fuller. Moderation of the Church of England, p. 324.

Our adversaries, by briguing and caballing, have caused so universal a defection from us, that the greatest part of our society hath already deserted to them.
Swift. Tale of a Tub, Introd.

BRILLIANCY. } Fr. "Bril, a glitter, sparkle, twinkle. Briller, to glitter, twinkle, sparkle as a star, or like a good diamond." Cotgrave should have said—like a beryl, (qv.)
BRI'LLIANT, n. }
BRI'LLIANT, adj. }
BRI'LLIANTLY. }

Brilliant, a glittering, splendid, sparkling stone; the adj. glittering, splendid, sparkling, shining, illustrious.

In deference to his virtues, I forbear
To show you what the rest in order were:
This brilliant is so spotless, and so bright;
He needs no foil, but shines by his own proper light.
Dryden. The Character of a good Parson.

This snuff box—on the hinge see brilliants shine!
This snuff box will I stake, the prize is mine.
Pope. The Basset Table. An Eclogue.

Some in a brilliant buckle bind her waist,
Some round her neck a circling light display.
Gay. Araminta. An Elegy.

One of these is most brilliantly displayed, and charged with Adam and Eve, the serpent with a human shape to the waist, the tree of life, the holy lamb, and a variety of symbolical ornaments.'
Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii.

A circumstance intervened, during the pendency of this negociation, to set off the good faith of the company with an additional brilliancy, and to make it sparkle and glow with a variety of splendid facts.—Burke. On Fox's E. India Bill.

In ev'ry eye ten thousand brilliants blaze,
And living pearls the vast horizon gaze.
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. v.

—— Link'd in reins,
In traces brilliant overlaid with gems,
Fit for heroes more of that surpassing race
The precious burden drew.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. iv.

BRIM, v. }
BRIM, n. }
BRIM, adj. }
BRI'MFUL. }
BRI'MFULL. }
BRI'MFULNESS. }
BRI'MLESS. }
BRI'MMER. }

A. S. Ryman, be-ryman, dilatare, amplificare extendere; to extend, to amplify. Brim (sc. Be-rim) is the extent of the capacity of any vessel,—of any thing. (See Tooke.) It is applied generally to—

The edge, brink, or margin; the line at the utmost extent of continuity.

Whan hi beth fur from the albei,
Hi maketh ham nakid for to piei,
And gath dune in to the brimme
And doth ham sleomek for to swimme.
An old Satirical Poem. Hickes, vol. i. p. 233.

So losse of goodes shall neuer trouble me,
Since God which giues can take when pleaseth him;
Ne losse of fame or slaundred so to be,
That makes my wittes to break aboue their brimme,
And frettes my harte, and lames me every limme.
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

Then should I hereafter not once so much as dare to set pen to paper for feare of controlment and check, which howe grieuous it is to a yong man nowe (as it were) but tasting with him the liquor the brim of learninges fountaine, and saluting the Muses at the doore and threshold, neyther is our Ladyship ignorant, and I my selfe presume to know.
Turbervile. To Lady Warwick.

A bright tinne dish most pleased him, which hee presently tooke vp and clapt it before his breast; and after made a hole in the brimme thereof and hung it about his necke, making signes that it would defend him against his enemies arrowes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 247.

For there shal be poured in your lappes backe againe a good measure brimful, a measure turned and shaken together euery where, that all the lappe may be full, and no corner thereof empty or voyde.—Udal. Luke, c. 6.

So are his branches seas, and in the rich Guiana,
A flood as proud as he, the broad brim'd Orellana.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 19.

Virgin, daughter of Locrine
Sprung of old Anchises line,
May thy brimmed waves for this
Their full tribute never miss
From a thousand petty rills,
That tremble down the snowy hills.—Milton. Comus.

Not to speake of the insulse, and ill-laid comparisons, this cited place lies upon the very brim of another corruption, which had they that quoted this passage, ventur'd to let us read, all men would have readily seen what upon the testimony had bin of, where it is said, that it is not lawful without a bishop to baptize, nor to offer, nor to do sacrifice.
Id. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

Also in cups that are filled brimful the middle part in the top swell most.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 65.

O thou undaunted daughter of desires!
By all thy power of lights and fires;
By all thy brimfill'd bowls of fierce desire;—
* * * * * *
Leave nothing of myself in me.
Crashaw. The Flaming Heart.

—— The Scot, on his vnfurnisht kingdome
Came pouring like the tyde into a breach,
With ample, and brim fulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assayes.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act I. sc. 2.

But where friends fail us we'll supply
Our friendships with our charity;
Men that remote in sorrows live,
Shall by our lusty brimmers thrive.—Cotton. Wonder.

In imitation hereof, the antient potters invented the brimming of their vessels, by turning over some of the ductile matter when the work was on the wheel.
Evelyn. On Architecture.

Thus said, a double wreath Evander twind:
And poplars black and white his temples bind,
Then brims his ample bowl: with like design
The rest invoke the gods, with sprinkled wine.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

Kneeling down upon the ground, he took up with his hat, which by cocking up the brims he turned into a kind of cup, such a proportion of water that he quenched his thirst with it.—Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 4. Dis. 11.

I have heard my father say, that a broad brimm'd hat, short hair, and an unfolded handkerchief, were in his time absolutely necessary to denote a notable man.
Spectator, No. 150.

Before the world or any part of it had being, God was brimfull of glory, infinitely happy in the enjoyment of himself, being all joy and bliss, all honour and glory, yea, all things desireable to himself.—Bp Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 140.

They [the Jews] wear little black brimless caps, as the Moors red.—Addison. State of the Jews.

Fat Comus tost his brimmers o'er,
And always got the most;
Jocus took care to fill him more
Whene'er he miss'd the toast.—Parnell. Anacreontic.

Bacchus to arms! and to resist the dart,
Each with a faithful brimmer guard his heart.
Lansdowne. Bacchus disarmed.

But since, gay thron'd in fiery charlot sheen,
Summer has smote each dewy dappled dale;
She to the cave retires, high arch'd beneath
The fount that laves proud Isis' towery brim.
Warton, Son. 2.

BRIM, v. }
BRIM, adj. }
BRI'MMING, n. }

A. S. Bremman, furere, fremere. See BREME.

To be hot, furious, violent, fierce, outrageous: vehement, rampant, prevalent.

Thise thre kynges geynsaid it hym,
& Kynwolf to tho thre bare him so brym.—R. Brunné, p. 9.

Tancred went his way, & Richard was fulle brim.
Id. p. 154.

But thornes sharpe, mo than inow.
There were, and also thistles thicke,
And briers brimme for to pricke.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

The noise of people up start than atones,
As brimme as blaze of straw bet on bre.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

The Gospell—at that tyme was so brymme, that it was tyme without all clokyng stedfastly to professe the same.
Udal. Galathians, c. 2.

I wis I am not (haggerly): yeat that thou
Deest holde me in disdaine
Is brimme abroad, and made a gybe
To all that keepe this playne.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv.

They stand lightly to the first brimming, but by reason that they are subject to cast their pigs they had need to be brimmed a second time.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

And for the same reason they take the sow to be a prophane and unclean beast for that ordinarily she goeth a brimming and admitteth the boar, when the moon is past the full: and look how many drink of her milk, they break out into a kinde of leaprosie or dry skirf all over their bodies.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1[illegible]0.

BRIMSTONE. } Brynston, as written by
BRI'MSTONY. } Piers Ploughman. "Sulphur, (q.d.) Brenne-stone, lapis ardens;" burning stone, a stone that burns, because it is kindled by fire; (Gr. Πυρ.) Sulfur is also so called, quia igne accenditur. See Vossius.

Brymston boliaunt breuning out casteth bit
Al hot in hete hevedes, that entren in ny the walles.
Piers Ploughman, p. 334.

Loke how that fire of smal glades, that ben almost ded under the ashen, wol quicken ayen whan they ben touched with brimstone, right so ire wol evermore quicken ayen, whan it is touched with pride that is covered in manner herte.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And hereupon it is (as I take it) that brimstone taketh the name in Greek θειον for the resemblance of that smell which those things yeeld that have been smitten with lightning: which no doubt have a fiery and piercing scent.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 578.

Dol. And so we may arrive by Talmud skill,
And profane Grecke, to raise the building up
Of Heben's house, against the Ismachite,
King of Thogarma, and his Habergions
Brimstony, blue, and fiery.
B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act iv. sc. 5.

Most readers, I believe, are more charmed with Milton's description of Paradise, than of Hell; they are both, perhaps, equally perfect in their kind, but in the one the brimstone and sulphur are not so refreshing to the imagination, as the beds of flowers and the wilderness of sweets in the other.
Spectator, No. 418.

BRINDED. } Is not in our older lexicogra-
BRI'NDLED. } phers: probably it is brenned, or browned; marked or streaked with brown; and brindled, is the diminutive.

1. W. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 1.

—— Now half appeared
The tawnie lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts, then springs as broke from bonds,
And rampant shakes his brinded mane.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The cattle in her homestead were three sows,
An ewe called Mable, and three brinded cows.
Dryden. The Cock & the Fox.

Her leafy jav'lin at her son she cast,
And cries, "The boar that laws our country waste!
The boar, my sisters! Arm the fatal dart,
And strike the brindled monster to the heart."
Addison. Ovid. Met. b. iii.

Or, growling horrid, as the brindled boar
Grins full destruction, to the monster's heart
Let the dart lighten from the nervous arm.
Thomson. Autumn.

Peace crown'd the olive, to her breast
Two smiling twin born infants prest;
At her feet couching, war was laid,
And with a brinded lion play'd.—Churchill. Duellist, b. ii.

BRINE. } Dut. Bryn; A. S. Bryne. Skinner
BRI'NISH. } thinks from Brym the salt sea. Ju-
BRI'NY. } nius says, perhaps so called, quasi pyrina, ἀπο του πυρος; quia nimia salsugo os, instar ignis, adurat. It may be so called because it burns or brens; and the A. S. Brennan; Old Eng. Bren or Brin; present an obvious etymology. Applied to—

A biting saltness; to the sea.

Thus day and night ytost with churlish gale
Of sighes, in sea of surging crime I hale,
Not knowing how to scape the scouring tide.
Turbervile. To his absent Friend, &c.

Love only, according to the temper of it, melting itself into those briny tokens [tears] of passion.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

And sighing so, he sate in solitarie wise,
Conueying flouds of brynish teares, by conduct of his eyes.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of the Green Knight.

Hee was besmeared and berayed all over with the brine and pickle of the beforesaid salt fish, which made him both hideous to see to, and also to stinke withall most strongly.
Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 30.

The flying navy Lydia so beheld,
Her eyes with tears, her heart with passion swell'd,
In sighs to these she gave continual vent,
And those in brinish streams profusely spent.
Sherburne. Forsaken Lydia.

And in the fountaine shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that cleerenesse,
And made a brine pit with our bitter teares.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iii. sc. 1.

Through the black night that sits immense around,
Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine
beems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn.
Thomson. Winter.

His [Duke of Bedford's] ribs, his fins, his whalebone, his blubber, the very spiracles through which he spouts a torrent of brine against his origin, and covers me all over with the spray,—every thing of him and about him is from the throne.
Burke. A Letter to a noble Lord.

BRING. BRI'NGER. BRI'NGING, n. } Goth. Briggan; A. S. Bringan; Dut. Brenghen; Ger. Bringen; Sw. Bringa.

To remove, or cause the removal of, any thing from one place to another, either by bearing or carrying, leading or drawing.

It is equivalent to the Lat. ferre, vehere, trahere, ducere, as, to bring or bear, to bring or carry, to bring or draw, to bring or lead. With English prepositions subjoined it is equivalent also to the compounds of those Latin words, many of which, particularly of the verb ducere, we have adopted in our own language. As—

To abduce, to bring or lead from.
To adduce, to bring or lead to.
To conduce, or conduct, to bring or lead with.
To deduce, to bring or lead down from.
To educe, and to educate, to bring or lead out.
To induce, to bring or lead into.
To introduce, to bring or lead within.
To obduce, to bring or lead over.
To produce, to bring or lead forth.
To reduce, to bring or lead back.
To seduce, to bring or lead away from.
To traduce, to bring or lead over or across.
Circumduction, a bringing or leading around; and Diduction, a bringing or leading asunder, are also found.

And as in the Latin the difference in the meaning depends upon the preposition prefixed, so in the English it depends upon the preposition subjoined. The English usage of the words borrowed from the Latin is almost wholly metaphorical.

Alas! alas! the luthur wate, that fylest me thus one,
That thus clene me bryngust a doun, wyder schal y be brogt.
R. Gloucester, p. 34.

With fulle riche offeryng he wirshipped S. Thomas,
His praier did him bryng out of his hard cas,
Thanked God & him so wele for him had schaped,
That his anguys grim so lightly was escaped.
R. Brunne, p. 201.

I have herd say, man sal take of twa thinges,
Slike as he findes, or alike as he bringes.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4127.

Tho there was no brocage in londe,
Whiche nowe taketh euery cause on honde,
So may men knowe, how the floreyn
Was moder first of malangin
And bringer in of all werre.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

When children were broughte vnto him [he] receiued them louingly, and embraced them in his armes, Mat. 9. and when his disciples blamed the bringers, he called them vnto hym, saying: suffer children to come vnto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heauen.
Frith. Workes, p. 93.

For ere the sixe yeares that he hath to spend
Can change their moones, and bring their times about,
My oyle-dride lampe, and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age, and endlesse night.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 3.

My father, and the gent. are in sad talke, and we'll not trouble them: Come bringe away thy pack after me.
Id. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

And thence to France shall we conucy you safe,
And bring you backe: Charming the narrow seas
To giue you gentle passe.—Shakespeare, Hen. V. Ch. 2.

Nature should bring forth
Of it's owne kinde, all foyson, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.—Id. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

Now faire Hippolita, our nuptiall houre
Drawes on apace: foure happy daies bring in Another moon: but, me thinkes how slow
This old moon wanes.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act i. sc. 1.

Troy. Ajax hath tane Æneas; shall it be?
No by the flame of yonder glorious heauen,
He shall not carry him: Ile be tane too,
Or bring him off.—Id. Troil. & Cres. Act v. sc. 6.

Hel. Yet I pray you:
But with the word the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaues as well as thornes,
And be as sweet as sharpe.
Id. All's Well that End's Well, Act iv. sc. 4.

Bast. What you haue charg'd me with,
That I haue done,
And more, much more, the time will bring it out.
Id. Lear, Act v. sc. 3.

The time was (Father) when you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it, then now,
When your owne Percy, when my heart deere-Harry,
Threw many a northward looke, to see his father
Bring vp his powres: but he did long in vaine.
Id. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob seru'd for;
A thing not in his power to bring to passe.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 3.

Let him but be testimonied in his owne bringings forth, and he shall appeare to the enuious, a schollar, a statesman, and a soldier.—Id. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

Then would I soon bring downe their foes,
That now so proudly rise,
And turn my hands against all those
That are their enemies.—Milton, Psalm 81.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
By thy conception; children thou shalt bring
In sorrow forth, and to thy husband's will
Thine shalt submit, he over thee shall rule.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Go therefore, half this day as friend with friend
Converse with Adam, in what bowre or shade
Thou find'st him from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respit his day labour with repast,
Or with repose; and such discourse bring on,
As may advise him of his happie state.—Id. Ib. b. v.

For once it was my dismal hap to hear
A Sybil old, bow-bent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage,
And in Time's long and dark prospective glass
Foresaw what future days should bring to pass.
Id. Vacation Ex.

Henry himself, on the main battle brings,
Nor can these legions of the French affright
This Mars of men, this King of earthly Kings.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

When Antony hadde gotten the supreme authority, he alewe alle his owne and his brothers bringers vp and instructors, for that they went about to reconcile thē.
Stow. The Romanes, an. 209.

Alas! when man is to influence man in order to bring about such mighty changes as these, the work goes on but slowly.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 7.

I was ever of opinion, that the honest man, who married and brought up a large family, did more service than he who continued single and only talked of population.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 1.

A man brought into maturity, and placed in a desert island, would abandon himself to despair, when he first saw the sun set, and the night come on; for he could have no expectation that ever the day would be renewed.
Beattie. Essay, pt. i. c. 2.

BRINK. Sw. Brink. Lye suggests, and Ihre approves, from the Goth. Brican; A. S. Brecan, to break.

The part where the continuity is broken, where it ends; the brim, the edge, the margin.

The lady had defaute bothe of mete & drynk,
& acho dred ther assaute, hunger was at the brynk.
R. Brunne, p. 122.

And alle men with wyues and children ledden forth us withouten the citie, and we kneliden in the see brinke and we preieden.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 21.

Another time wold she sit and thinke
And cast her eyen downward fro the brink,
But whan she saw the grisly rookes blake,
For veray fere so wold hire herte quake,
That on hire foet she might hire not sustene.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 1169.

The wyne, whiche he was wonte to drinke
He toke then of the welles brinke.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

But when they came to the sea side againe, they went vp a little hill standing hard by the brinke, whereon as they thought they sawe the hill of Jerusalem.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 105.

Into this wild abyss the warie fiend
Stood on the brink of Hell and look'd awhile
Pondering his voyage. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

And on the dark-green grass, beside the brink
Of haunted stream, that by the roots of oak
Rolls o'er the rocky channel, lie at large,
And sing the glories of the circling year.
Thomson. Summer.

If a man will throw himself in the way of danger, and venture to the very brink of vice, he must expect that the slightest temptations will get the better of his virtue, already half subdued.—Portcus, vol. i. Ser. 4.

How often has public calamity been arrested on the very brink of ruin by the seasonable energy of a single man. Have we no such man amongst us?
Burke. Letter to W. Elliot, Esq.

BRISK, v. BRISK, adj. BRI'SKLY. BRI'SKNESS. } Fr. Brusque; It. and Sp. Brusco. The Italians, says Menage, call sharp wine, vino brusco; whence M. Ferrari believes Brusco to have been formed from Labrusca, a wild vine. See BRUSK.

"Brusque, lively, quick. Vin brusque, wine of a quick, sharp, or smart taste," (Cotgrave.)

——— See, here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood glows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season.
Milton. Comus

——— Half afraid he first
Against the window beats; then, brisk, alights
On the warm hearth; then hopping o'er the floor
Eyes all the smiling family askance.—Thomson. Winter.

Ralegh so spedily and effectually repaired his crazy mast, and so briskly ply'd his sails, that he overtook his consorts next day, and on the eighth of September they all made the Island of Tercera.—Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

It must be confessed there are some advantages to be attained by academical disputation. It gives vigour and briskness to the mind thus exercised, and relieves the langour of private study and meditation.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 13.

Forth from his lips, prepar'd at all to rail,
Torrents of nonsense burst like bottled ale,
Though shallow, muddy; brisk, though mighty dull;
Fierce without strength; o'erflowing, though not full.
Jenyns. The Modern Fine Gentleman.

Come, bounteous May! in fullness of thy might,
Lead briskly on the mirth-infusing hours,
All-recent from the bosom of delight,
With nectar nurtur'd, and involv'd in flow'rs.
Thompson. A Hymn to May.

Nevertheless he could not or would not finish several subjects he undertook; which may be imputed either to the briskness of his fancy, still hunting after new matter, or to an occasional indolence, which spleen and lassitude brought upon him.—Johnson. Life of Smith.

First to the lively pipe, his hand addrest,
But soon he saw the brisk-awakening viol,
Whose sweet entrancing voice he lov'd the best.
Collins. The Passions.

BRI'SKET. Fr. Bricket, brechet, from Breche (a brack or breach) from Brechen, to break. See BREAST.

The breast.

Mar. He that undoes him [the deer]
Doth cleave the brisket bone.
B. Jonson. Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 2

The Black Prince was a professed lover of the brisket; not to mention the history of the sirloin, or the institution of the order of Beef-eaters, which are all so many evident and undeniable marks of the great respect, which our warlike predecessors have paid to this excellent food.
Tatler, No. 148.

BRI'STLE, v. BRI'STLE, n. BRI'STLY. } A. S. Bryst, diminutive, Bristl; Dut. Borstel; Ger. Burst-haar. Skinner suggests from the verb, to brust or burst; because the bristle bursts through the skin.

To bristle, is to rise up, stand up; stiff as a bristle.

Upon the cop right of his nose he hade
A wert, and theron stode a tufte of heres
Rede as the brustles of a sowe's eres.
Chaucer. The Prologue.

Then fume we and rage and set vp the bristels, & bend our selues to take vengeaunce.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 129.

And yet the wife maye not bristle against her husbande because he seeketh at her handes to be more loued than feared.
Udal. Ephesians, c. 5.

From thence were waylings heard and lions wrathful
low'd did grone,
Resisting in their bands, and neere to night they make their mone,
Both brustled groining bores, and beares at mangers yelling yawle. Phaer. Virgile. Æneidos, b. viii.

From hence were heard, (rebellowing to the main,)
The roars of lyons that refuse the chain,
The grunts of brustled boars, and groans of bears.
Dryden. Virgil. Ib.

And lowring on me with the goggle eye,
The whetted tuske, and fur'wed forehead hie,
His crooked shoulder brustlelike set vp,
With frothie lawes, whose fome he chaw'd and sup'd
With angrie looks that flamed as the fire.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 427.

Is 't not enough that I must go
Into another clime,
Where feather-footed time
May turn my hopes into dispair,
My youthful dawn to bristled hair
But that you add this torment too?—Cotton. The Picture.

——— All his brissels, pusht
From forth his rough necke; and with flaming eyes
Stood close, and dar'd all.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

The brisly boar, who with his snout up plough'd
The spacious plains, and with his grunting loud,
Rais'd rattling echoes all the woods about,
Leaves his dark den. Drayton. Noah's Flood.

In Elis first I breath'd the living air,
The chace was all my pleasure, all my care.
None lov'd like me the forest to explore,
To pitch the toils, and drive the brustled boar.
Maynwaring. Ovid. Metam. b. v.

Crusted with pendants curling with the breeze,
The upright masts high brustle in the air,
Aloft exalting proud their gilded heads.
Glover. On Sir Isaac Newton.

In the stiff awkwardness of foolish pride,
The swelling turkey apes his stately step,
And coils the brustling feathers round his head.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 1.

While pent from mischief, far from sight remov'd,
The brustly herd, within their fatt'ning styes,
Remind him to prepare, in many a row,
The gaily blooming pea, the fragrant bean
And broad-leav'd cabbage, for the ploughman's feast.
Id. Ib.

BRITTLE, adj. } See Brickle. A. S. Brytan,
Brittleness. } frangere, comminuere:—
That may be (easily) broken; fragile, frail.

The bot ye lyckeneđe to our body that brotel ys of kynde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 163.

And we han this tresour in brotil vessels, that the worthynesse be of Goddis vertu and not of us.—Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 4.

Bicause I know the great vnstablenesse
Brittle as glasse, vnto myselfe I saie
Trusting in other as great brutelnesse
As inconstant, and as vntrue of faie,
The some be true, I wot rigt few are they.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide, p. 197.

I rede thē to breake their bondes, and to follow right by the plasne and open way, and to be content, and not too ambitious. for it is now euill climing, the boughes be brittle.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 376.

Neuertheleese, we remembrynge the brytilness of your prouyse and surpertynge though not wholy beleuyng so much vnstedfastness thought it right expedient and necessarie to put our saide realme in a redynes for resistyng of your sayde enterprises.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

Farewell, thou pretty brittle piece
Of fine cut crystal, which one was,
Of all my fortune and my bliss,
The only glass. Cotton. A Vindication.

Fearing much by the fresh example they had of late, the fraultie and brittleness of high fortunes.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 286.

For no man takes or keeps a vow
But just as he sees others do;
Nor are they oblig'd to be so brittle,
As not to yield and bow a little.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

So that unluckily striking his basket of brittle ware, which was the foundation of all his grandeur, he kicked his glasses to a great distance from him into the street, and broke them into ten thousand pieces.—Spectator, No. 585.

And now the best of brittle ware
His sumptuous table grac'd:
The gentle emblems of the fair,
In beauteous order plac'd.
Cunningham. The broken China.

A man who believes himself made of glass, shall yet reason very justly concerning the means of preserving the brittleness from flaws and fractures.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. I. c. 1.

BROACH, v. } A. S. Breccan, to break;
Broach, s. } Dut. Breken; It. Brocciare.
Bro'acher. } See Junius and Tooke. See also Abroach.

Broches, the n. is used in Piers Plouhman, as we now use matches, a bit of wood broken or split off. As a consequent application,—

A broach is any thing which (being so broken or split off) will pierce through, stick through, penetrate. Thus a broach of eels, is a stick of eels; so many eels broched, spitted or stuck through. A spit, a pin, are also so called:—that part of certain ornaments, by which it is stuck on; and subsequently the whole ornament.

"Fr. Brocher, to spit; to broche a horse is to spur him, to strike him with spurs, almost to stick him with spurring," (Cotgrave.)

To broach a vessel, is (perforare) to bore through, to break into, to pierce through.

To broach a doctrine is to break it, to break it open, to disclose, to publish it.

A broche of brennyng fure was putte thurghe an horne, that was putt into K. Edward Second a body.
R. Gloucester, v. Glossary, p. 628.

Vor broches, & ringes, & rimmes al so,
& the calis of the weued [altar] me seolde ther to.
Id. Ib. p. 489.

The Inglis armed stout toward the Scottis drouh,
Ther stedes brocched thei fast. R. Brunne, p. 277.

Ther lances all forth led, & ilk man broched his stede.
R. Brunne, p. 305.

Hewe fire at the flynt four hundred wynter,
But thou haue towe to take it, with tinder broches
All thy labour is loste. Piers Ploughman.

O Diomede thou hast both broche and belte
Which Troilus gaue me in tokening
Of his true loue.—Chaucer. Complaint of Creseide.

For he that rappes a royall on his cappe,
Before he put one penny in his purse,
Had neede turn quicke and brock a better tappe,
Or els his drinke may chance to grow the wurse.
Gascoigne. Memories.

[He] assembled together all his lordes and other of hys priuate counsayl, by whose myndes it was concluded and determined, that he shoulde manfully and courageously perceauer and procede in thys broched and begonne enterprice.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

I then well perceiued thabilliment royall of the Frenche kyng, his garment was a chemew, of clothe of siluer, cuipond with cloth of golde, of damaske cantell wise, and garded on the bordours with the burgon bendes, and ouer that a cloke of brocked satten.—Id. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

I found that absent Troylus was forgot,
When Dyomede had got both brooch and belt,
Both gloue and hand, yea harte and all God wat,
When absent Troylus did in sorrowes swelt.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

And some failed not to take the childe and bynde it to a broch, and lay it to the fyre to rost, the father & mother looking on.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 259.

Hezekiah surely had more corruption twenty yeeres before his recovery out of sicknesse, then at that time, and yet it wrought not so, that we reade of, as it did then; not that the barrell was then fuller, but that now it was broached lower, and a greater vent given, and so it came more gushing out, dregs and all.—Goodwin. Tryall of a Christian's Growth.

But he will say, that all this old wine savours of the cask; therefore we will spend no more time in broaching of it. Taste of the new.—Spelman. The Apology.

And who so the brooch beareth on his breast,
It is eke of such virtue and such kind,
That thinke upon what thing him liketh best,
And he as blive shall it have and finde.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

There was never any heresy so damnable, nor schism so dangerous, ever brewed in hell, or broached on earth, but it hath been swallowed down by some or other only upon this account, because it hath been commended and presented to the world under the colour of piety and religion, whereof the broachers of it have been strict and zealous professors.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 136.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Let no man therefore say, that the scripture is not plain in those things in which we pretend it is, because in those very things the church of God hath understood it one way, and Arius, Socinus, or some such broacher of heresy another.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

But by reason of his nonconformity, and the many errors he [V. Power] had broached, his calling was question'd, and the orders being well scan'd, were found spurious and counterfeit.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Yet when pale seasons rise, or winter rolls
His horrours o'er the world, thou may'st indulge
In feasts more genial, and impatient broach
The mellow cask.—Armstrong. Of Preserving Health.

My father was hugely pleased with this theory of John de la Casse, archbishop of Benevento; and (had it not cramped him a little in his creed) I believe would have given ten of the best [illegible] of the Shandy estate to have been the broacher of it.—Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. v. c. 18.

BROAD, adj. } Goth. Braids; A. S. Bradan,
Bro'aden. } to broaden, to expand, to dilate.
Bro'adly. } See Breadth.
Bro'adness. } Expanded, large, unlimited,
Bro'adside. } unrestricted, unreserved, unconcealed; and hence, (extending the met.) clear and open; gross and rude.

Broad is much used prefixed.

From south to north he ys long eigte hondred myle
And foure hondred myle brod from est to west to wende.
R. Gloucester, p. 1.

The brigge was brode & long, both of tre & stones.
R. Brunne, p. 204.

Thenne was ther a whight, with two broad eyen.
Piers Ploughman, p. 362.

Entre ye by the streit gate, for the gate that ledith to perdicioun is large, and the way is brood, and thei ben many that entren by it.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

Entre in at the strayte gate: for wide is the gate, and broade is the waie that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thei steiden upon the broodnesse of erthe, and enuyrownyde the castels of seyntis.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 20.

Hire mouth ful smale, and therto soft and red;
But sikerly she hadde a fayre forehead,
It was almoost a spanne brode I trowe.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 155.

And thus tymeliche as I maie
Full ofte, whan it is brode daie,
I take of all these other leue,
And go my way. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

It was no dream: for I lay broade awaking.
Wyat. The Lover sheweth how, &c.

Wyll. Content am I, for I am not malicious; but on this condition,
That you talk no more so brode of my master as here you have done.—Edwards. Damon & Pithias.

He was descended lineally, from great Alphæus floud,
That broadly flowes through Pylos fields.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

He take my father grossely, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blowne, as fresh as May,
And how his audit stands, who knowes, saue heauen.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 3.

If we that are the aids of Greece, would beat home those of Troy,
And hinder broad-eyd Jove's proud will, it would abate his joy.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

But Phœbe lives from all, not only fault,
But as from thought, so from suspicion free.
"Thy presence broad-eyes our delights for pure,
"What's done in Cynthia's sight is done secure."
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 3.

Whenever she [the mole] comes up into broad day she might be in danger of being taken, unless she were thus affected by a light striking upon her eye and immediately warning her to bury herself in her proper element.
Spectator, No. 121.

With broaden'd nostrils to the sky upturn'd,
The conscious heifer snuffs the stormy gale.
Thomson. Winter.

He would rather go sociably to hell, than in the uncomfortable solitude of precise singularity to heaven, the jollity of the company made him overlook the broadness and danger of the way.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 6.

From vaster hopes than his he seem'd to fall,
That durst attempt the British admiral,
From her broadsides a ruder flame is thrown
Than from the fiery chariot of the sun.
Waller. Instructions to a Painter.

To explore a road which is entirely unknown to us, by a feeble and dubious light is a totally different thing from endeavouring to trace it out again by the same light, after it has been once shown to us in broad and open day.
Portens, vol. I. Ser. 7.

Dumorier has dropped singular hints. Custine has spoken out more broadly.—Burke. On the Present State of Affairs.

BROCA'DE. } Sp. Brocado; It. Brocato;
BROCA'DED. } Fr. Brocart. Menage, calls it a stuff. Cotgrave, brochée d'or, d'argent, ou le soyé. See BROACH.
Satin striped or purfled with gold.

This day, black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care;
Some dire disaster, or by force, or slight;
But what or where, the fates have wrapp'd in night,
Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China jar receive a flaw
Or stain her honour, or her new brocade:
Forget her prayers, or miss a masquerade
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 2.

A furbelow of precious stones, and has buttoned with a diamond, brocade waistcoat or petticoat, are standing topicks.
Spectator, No. 15.

The silver knot o'erlooks the Mechlin lace,
And adds becoming beauties to her face;
Brocaded flowers o'er the gay mantua shine,
And the rich stays her taper shape confine
Gay. Elegies. Panthea.

Such seem to have been the ancient manufactures of silks, velvets, and brocades, which flourished in Lucca during the thirteenth century.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 3.

BROCK. } A. S. Broc, a badger. Skinner
BRO'CKISH. } suggests, from to break; because this animal breaks and bruises with most severe biting; whence we say, to bite like a badger.
Brockish, as used by Bale, seems formed from it to denote;—beastly, brutal.

But neyther of Paule not yet of Peter haue the fore warnynges auayeled, but those brockishe beores haue gone freely forewarde without checke thi nowe of late dayes.
Bale. English Votaryes, pt 1.

O brockyshe Comorreane, how darest thū presume to father thy filthynesse vpon the authour of all puryte, and vpon hys chosen vessell of electyon.—Id. Apology, p. 65.

Or with pretence of chasing thence the brock,
Send in a curre to worry the whole flock.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act I. sc. 4.

BROGUE. Dr. Jamieson says, a coarse and slight kind of shoe made of horse leather, much used by the Highlanders, and by those who go to shoot upon the hills; and he derives it from the Ir. Gael. Brog, a shoe. But whence brog?

His armes thus leagu'd I thought he slept, and put
My clowted brogues from off my feete, whose rudenesse
Answer'd my steps too lowd.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

As for the threat of making us eat our brogues, we need not be in pain, for if his coin should pass, that unpolite covering for the feet would no longer be a national reproach; because then we should have neither shoe nor brogue left in the kingdom.—Swift. Drapier's Letters, Let. 4.

In Sky, I first observed the use of brogues, a kind of artless shoes stitched with thongs so loosely, that though they defend the foot from stones, they do not exclude water.
Johnson. Journey to the Western Isles.

BROGUE. A word in vulgar use, but of unknown origin. See the quotation from Swift.

There is an old provincial cant in most counties in England, sometimes not very pleasing to the ear: and the Scotch cadence, as well as expression, are offensive enough. But none of these defects derive contempt to the speaker; whereas, what we call the Irish brogue is no sooner discovered, than it makes the deliverer, in the last degree ridiculous and despised.
Swift. On Barbarous Denominations in Ireland.

Whether the muse—the style of Cambria's sons,
Or the rude gabble of the Huns,
Or the broader dialect
Of Caledonia she affect,
Or take, Hibernia, thy still ranker brogue?
Lloyd. Two Odes.

BROID, v. } See BRAID or BREID, and BRO'IDER. } EMBROIDER.
BRO'IDERY. } To knit, to plight, to wreath,
BRO'IDERERS. } to interweave.

Hire yelwe here was broided in a tresse,
Behind hire back, a yerde long I gesse.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1052.

Of rubies, saphires, and of perles white
Were all his cothes brouded up and doun
For he in gemmes gritly gan delite.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,386.

She rose vp from the place, where she had lien flat before the Lord; and called her mayde, &c. broyded and plated her heare.—Bible, 1551. Judith, c. 10.

A spoyle of diuers coloures for Sisara, a spoyle of dyuerse coloures wt brodered workes, dyuerse coloured broudered work for the necke for a praye.—Id. Judges, c. 5.

Then came in an other bende of horse men, freshly and well appareled in cloth of golde, in siluer, in goldsmithes worke, and brouderie, to the nomber of three score, with trappers accordyngly to their garmentes.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1.

Some painters merily and in sport, but not seemly and with reuerence, depaint how he was in the royall palace and court of the Lydian Queen Omphale, in a yellow coat like a wench making wind with a fanne, and setting his mind with other Lydian damsels and waiting maids, to braid his haire and trick up himselfe.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 318.

The citizens to the number of 600 rode in one liuery of redde and white, with the cognisance of their mysteries brodered vpon their sleeues.—Stow. Edw. I. an. 1300.

The golden broidery, tender Milkah wove,
The breast, to Kinna sacred and to Love,
Lie rent and mangled: and the gaping wound
Pours out a flood of purple on the ground.
Tickell. Kensington Gardens.

Let others doat on meaner things,
On brodered stars and azure strings:
To claim thy sov'reign's love, be thou thy country's friend.
Mason. To the Hon. W. Pitt, Ode II.

And many a hand, guided by love,
O'er the stretch'd sampler's canvass plain,
In broidery's various colours strove
To raise his form to life again.—Cooper. Ver Vert, c. 4.

There mote he likewise see a ribbald train
Of dancers, brouderers, slaves of luxury,
Who cast o'er all those lords and ladies vain,
A veil of semblance fair, and richest dye,
That none their inward baseness mote descry.
West. On the Abuse of Travelling.

BROIL, v. } Broil or brawl. (See BRAWL
BROIL, s. } or BRABBLE.) Fr. Brouiller,
BRO'ILER. } embrouiller; It. Imbrogliare.
BRO'ILING, s. } To confound, to mingle, to disturb, to trouble, to disorder, to squabble, to quarrel, to wrangle, to rail.

To broil, (sc.) on a gridiron, Fr. Bruler; which Menage thinks is from the Gr. Βρυζειν, spumam ejicere, (formed apparently for the purpose of the etymology from Βρυαζειν,—Βρυειν, to shoot or spring forth,) through a supposed Lat. word also, Brusare, brusulare, bruler. Le Duchat writes Peruro, perussi, perustum, perustare, perustulare, bruler. Skinner thinks that brouiller is from bruel; but there appears not any reason to consider them (sc. Broil, brawl,) as two words.

Noise, agitation, and confusion, are included in all the applications of the word, however written.

He coude route, and sethe, and broile, and frie.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 386.

For God is iust vnto hym as vnto vs, and therefore would he purge hym as well as vs, & agayne he is as merryfull vnto vs as vnto him, and will as wel forgeue vs as hym, without broyling on the coales in purgatory.—Frith. Workes, p. 55.

If thy meat offring be a thing broyled vpon the gredyron, of floure myngled with oyle it shal be.
Bible, 1551. Leviticus, c. 2.

The barck that broylde in rough and churlish masse
At length doth reach a port and place of ease.
Turberville. After Misaduentures come Good Hope.

But that thou wilt in winter shippes prepare,
And trie the seas in broile of whorling windes.
Surrey.-Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

The Britishe affaires in the meane season, because that all discorde was not pacified and appeased, beganne agayne nowe to flowe out and to trouble, and set all thynges in a newe broyle and busynes.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 6.

They eate all thir meate broyled on the coales and dressed in the smoake.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 307.

Thus I thought good, according to my humble bounden dutie, and for the seruice of your maiestie and quietnesse of this realme, to certefie your maiestie the truth of the whole matter; hoping in a short time that your maiestie will send some good order to qualifie these broyles; for their is great hatred and malice among vs.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 716.

So were the burgesses of Gaūt, suche as were there, who were righte gladde to move forthe the mater, so that there might be a newe brewlynge in Flanders.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. I. c. 331.

Lette the other company drawe towards Newcastle vpon Tyne, and passe the ryuer: and enter into the Byssshoprike of Durham, and burne and exyle the countrey: we shall make a great breuil in Englande or our ennemyes be prouyded.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 130.

Normandy is a patient sufferer of mischiefs, though it be no large region, it doth tolerate sedition very long, and by restoring of peace ariseth into a fertile state of substance, letting out the broyle-maker into France with a free passage.
Stow. Hen. I. an. 1104.

The clergyman that in such a time as this, when the mouth of hell is open against us, shall exasperate this raging humour, and give it true nourishment to feed on; what doth he but turn broiler and boutefeu, make new libels against the church, and by that means perswade credulous, seducible spectators, that all are true that have been made already.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 544.

Homer illustrates one of his heroes, tossing to and fro in his bed, and burning with resentment to [by] a piece of flesh broiling on the coals.—Spectator, No. 161.

There is no preserving peace, nor preventing broils and stirs, but by punctually observing that ordinary rule of equity, that in cases of doubtful debate and points of controverted practice, the fewest should yield to the most, the weakest yield to the strongest, and that to the greatest number should be allowed at least the greatest appearance of reason.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 29.

He [Bolingbroke] therefore at Pope's suggestion retired merely to be at leisure from the broils of opposition, for the calmer pleasures of philosophy.
Goldsmith. The Life of Bolingbroke.

I will own that there is a haughtiness, and fierceness in human nature which will cause innumerable broils, place men in what situation you please.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

BROKE, v. } Spelman seems to guide us
BRO'KAGE. } to the etymology of this word.
BRO'KER. } He calls abrocamentum (which BRO'KERAGE. } may be rendered brockerage),
BRO'KERLY. } vox forensis, i. e. of the market,
BRO'KERY. } a mercantile word. He explains it to signify, "The buying of goods by wholesale, in whole bags or packages, before they are delivered or conveyed to the mart or market; and afterwards the separating (distractio) of the same into portions or allotments." If he had said disruptio instead of distractio, he would have led us immediately to the English word, to break, as the true etymology. Junius also thinks it worthy of consideration whether broker may not be so denominated from to break, as from A. S. Bryttan,—in exiguas partes dissecare,—Brytta was the name given to the person who distributed or divided into small parts.

The A. S. Bric-an or Bruc-an; Bric-e, the occupation or exercise of a thing; Brucinge, a function, the execution of some office or charge; Dut. Bruycken; Ger. Brauchen; Sw. Bruka, seem all to be consequential usages: but Wachter thinks the Ger. Brauch is formed from Werk, by a transposition of letters and change of labials. It might, by no unusual course of corruption, be formed thus: A. S. Be-wyrc-an, by transposition of letter r, Be-wryc-an, or Be-ryc-an, and (by the common hasty pronunciation of Ber) Bryc-an. But Spelman and Junius appear the sounder expositors.

A broker, one who breaks goods bought by wholesale or in large packages, who deals by retail, a retailer of goods sent or consigned to him by wholesale or in large packages; who sells as agent in parts or portions; an agent; one who acts between seller and buyer, who is employed by both parties, who makes his gains by so doing.

To broke, and a broker, were used in contempt, as to trade, and a trader are now. He is a mere trader, i. e. he regards merely his own interest; an usurious dealer, a guileful dealer or a bargainer.

Muche is such a mayde to love. here moder for saketh
More than that mayde is. that is ymaried by brocage
As by assent of sondry bodyes. and siluer to bote
More for coueitise of catel. than kynde loue of the mariage.
Piers Ploughman, p. 208.

He wooeth hire by menes and brocage,
And swore he wolde ben hire owen page.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3375

This much my desire shortly
I entremete me of brocage
I make peace, and marriage.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Brokers of loue, that deceiuen,
No wonder is though thei receiuen
After the wronge that thei diserten.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For as the soothe mote be knowe,
To Juno it was done vnderstonde,
In what manere hir husbonde
With false brocage has taken vsure
Of loue. Id. Ib.

And yet some there are who haue not spared to report that I receiued great summes of monie for the first printing of these posies, whereby (if it were true) I might seeme not onelie a craftie broker for the vtterance of gurish toies, but a corrupt marchaunt for the sale of deceitfull wares.
Gascoigne. To the Reuerende Deuines.

Some of the late doctours of the olde churche haue taught vs, that a man must make his confession by a bille of his handes and receive absolution by a trusheman, or by a broker.—Jewel. A Defence of the Apologie, p. 137.

Wid. He does indeede.
And brokes for all that can in such a suite
Corrupt the tender honour of a maide.
Shakespeare. All's Well, Act. III. sc. 5.

And should he know, (I shame he should)
Of this your brokage base,
He would acquaint you what it weare
Best soueraign to disgrace.
Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 41.

Then after that was I an usurer,
And with extorting, cozening, forfeiting,
And tricks belonging unto brokery
I filled the jails with bankrupts in a year.
Marlow. The Jew of Malta.

We had determin'd, that thou shouldst ha' come,
In a Spanish suite, and ha' carried her so; and he
A brokerly slave, goes, puts it on himselfe.
B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act iv. sc. 7.

My employment, which is that of a broker, leading me often into taverns about the Exchange has given me occasion to observe a certain enormity, which I shall here submit to your animadversion.—Spectator, No. 372.

One year the fraud succeeded; wealth immense
Flowed in upon him, and he blest his wiles;
The next, the brokers spurn'd th' adulterate mass,
Both on the Avon and the banks of Thame.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

The compensation which they allow in this plan to their ministers for their brokerage is, that if (after deducting all the charges, which they impose) the amount of the sales should be found to exceed two shillings and twopence for the current rupee of the invoice account, it shall be taken by the Company.—Burke. Rep. of a Com. on the Affairs of India.

BROKEN. } The past tense and past part. of the verb, to break. Tindall
BROKENLY. } uses broke as a noun, where the BROKENNESS. } modern version uses breach.

A tradesman is said to have broke, when he is a bank-rupt, or in the condition of a bank-rupt.

And thei token the relifs of broken metis twelve coffyns ful and of the fischis.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 6.

These shoulders they sustaine the yoake of heavy care
And on my brused broken backe, the burden must I beare.
Gascoigne. Anatomye of a Louer.

He singeth brokking as a nightingale.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3377.

If a man mayme his neighbour, as he hath done, so shal it be done to his neayne: broke, for broke, eye for eye, and tooth for tooth.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 24.

And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him, breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth.—Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

The spirit of the Lord God [is] vpon me, therefore hathe the Lord anointed me: he hath sent me to preache good tidings vnto the poore, to bind vp the broken hearted, to preache liberte to the captives, and to them that are bounde, the opening of the prison.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Isa. lvi. 1.

Then first from her mad mouth the foaming runnes,
And in the horrid cave were heard at once
Broke winded murmurs, howlings, and sadd groanes.
May. Lucan, b. v.

The Pagans worship God not entirely altogether at once, as he is one most simple being unmixed with any thing, but as it were brokenly, and by piece-meals, as he is severally manifested in all the things of nature, and the parts of the world.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 523.

Here in particular, it is the brokenness, the ungrammatical position, the total subversion of the period that charms me.
Gray. To Mason, Let. 27.

BRONZE, v. } Hicks, (Gram. Franco Theo- BRONZE, n. } tisca, p. 93) and (after him) Tooke, think that the Italians have their Bronzo, and the French and English their Bronze, from the verb, to bren or brin; A. S. Brennan, to burn, (q. d.)—

Metal of a burned, brown, or bronze colour.

His peers shine round him with reflected grace,
Now edge their dulness, and now bronze their face.
Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo Henly stands,
Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

The canker'd coin with verdigris incrust,
Or grace the polish'd bronze with reverend dust.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad.

BROOD, v. } A. S. Brædan, fovere. See
BROOD, n. } BREED.
BRO'ODY. }

A brood, — that which, the number which, is bred (at once), which is nourished, cherished, fostered.

To brood,—to nourish, to cherish, to foster; to watch over, to protect, to continue in a state of care and watchfulness, as a mother over her young.

My sonne this I finde writte,
There is yet one of thilke brood,
Whiche only for the worldes good,
To make a treasoure of money,
Put all conscience awaye.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Thou sickle foule what means this foolish paine,
To flie to Crickle, to hatch thy chickens there!
A mother thou mayst hap returne againe,
Medees will destroy thy brood I fear,
For she that spared not to spoile hir owne,
Will she stand friend to fowls that are unknown.
Turberville. Of a Nightingale, &c.

Come now, all ye terrours, sally,
Muster forth into the vally,
Where triumphant darkness hovers
With a sable wing, that covers
Brooding horrour.—Crashaw. Steps to the Temple, Ps. 23.

The thriftee earth that bringeth out
And broodeth vp her breed,
The shifting seas whose swelling waues
On shrinking shores do feede,
Shall fail, and faile, ere I be false.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 11.

—— As about the flood
Caister, in an Asian meade, flockes of the airie brood
(Cranes, geese, or long-neckt swans) here, there, proud of their pinions, flie.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The peacocks will breake them (the eggs) if they can meet with them, because they cannot misse and spare the peahens companie whiles they are broodie and sitting.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 60.

When we landed, we perceived the island to be strangely overcast with fogs, which no brightness could pierce, so that a kind of gloomy horror sat always brooding over it.
Spectator, No. 501.

As I was walking this morning in the great yard that belongs to my friend's country house, I was wonderfully pleased to see the different workings of instinct in a hen followed by a brood of ducks.—Ib. No. 121.

Fairest flower of Roderic's stem,
Gwyneth's shield, and Britain's gem,
He nor heaps his brooded stores,
Nor all profusely pours —Gray. A Fragment.

When Time was drown'd in sacred sleep,
And raven Darkness brooded o'er the deep,
Reposing on primeval pillows
Of tossing billows,
The forms of animated nature lay.
Jones. The Hymn to Bhavani.

But as human society is a perpetual flux, one man every hour going out of the world, another coming into it, it is necessary, in order to preserve stability in government, that the new brood should conform themselves to the established constitution, and nearly follow the path which their fathers, treading in the footsteps of theirs, had marked out to them.
Hume. Ess. Of the Original Contract.

BROOK, v. Dut. Bruycken; A. S. "Brucan, to enjoy, to use, to occupy; also to brook, to digest," (Somner.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to enjoy, to use. "Broken hole my tresses:" keep safe the tresses of my hair. See TO BROKE.

To brook is, to render or become submissive or subservient, (as a horse when broken, a broken spirit;) to yield or submit to, to bear or suffer; to subject, to tame; to subserve, (to preserve.)

For sin he said that we ben jangleresses,
As ever mote I brouken hole my tresses,
I shal not sparen for no curtesie
To speke him harm, that sayth us vilanie.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,182.

But for men speke of singing, I wol say,
So mote I brouken wel min eyen tway,
Save you, no herd I never man so sing,
As did your fader in the morwening.
Id. The Nonnes Prestes Tale, v. 15,366.

With fowles of baser sort
how can you brooke to flie,
That erst your nature did to hawkes
of stately kinde apply?
Turberville. To his Friend that refused, &c

Surely there cannot bee nothyng so bitter, but wysedome would brooke it for so great a profyte.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 78.

And that the nymph Calypso (ouer-ronne
With his affection) kept him in her caues,
Where men, nor ship, of pow'r to brook the waues,
Were neere his conuoy to his countries shore.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

For such a tempest of wind arose as ye like in many yeeres had not beene seene, whereby no shippe could brooke the sea.—Stow. Queen Mary, an. 1558.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble minde abrooke
The abiect people, gazing on thy face,
With enuious lookes laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy prowd chariot-wheeles,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 4.

His opening and closing the debate, his taking on himself that great enterprize at the thought of which the whole infernal assembly trembled, his encountering the hideous phantom, who guarded the gates of hell, and appeared to him in all his terrors, are instances of that proud and daring mind which could not brook submission even to Omnipotence.—Spectator, No. 309.

Foe to restraint, unpractis'd in deceit,
Too resolute, from nature's active heat,
To brook affronts, and tamely pass them by.
Churchill. Night.

BROOK, n. } Dr. T. H., (in Skinner,) de-
BRO'OKY. } rives the A. S. Broca, from the verb, Breacan, frangere, to break; because the bubbling water breaks through the earth. (See Tooke, ii. 248.) See the quotation from Beaum. & Fletch.

Oth' go shulle ete barliche brede, and of the brok drynke.
Piers Ploughman, p. 155.

At Trompington, not far fro Cantebrigge,
Ther goth a brook and over that a brigge.
Upon the whiche brook there stant a melle:
And this is veray sothe, that I you telle.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3920.

With knightly force and violence he entered the sayd cytie, and slewe the fore named Lucius Gallus neare vnto a broke there at that day rynnynge, and hym threwe into the sayde broke; by reason whereof, longe after it was called Gallus or Wallus brooke, and this daye the strete where sometime ran the sayde brooke, is now called Walbrooke.
Fabyan, c. 65.

Whilst from the most tempest'uous nooks,
The chilliest blasts our peace invade,
And by great rains our smallest brooks
Are almost navigable made. Cotton. Eclogue.

She cannot scape, for underneath the ground,
In a long hollow the clear spring is bound,
Till on your side where the morn's sun doth look,
The struggling water breaks out in a brook.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act iii. sc. 1.

But see, the shepherds shun the noon day heat,
The lowing herds to murm'ring brooks retreat,
To closer shades the panting flocks remove;
Ye gods! and is there no relief for love.
Pope. Pastorals. Summer.

—— For purest wool
Phœnicia's hilly tracts were most renown'd,
And fertile Syria's and Judæa's land.
Hermon, and Seir, and Hebron's brooky sides.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

BROOM, n. } A. S. Brom; Dut. Brem. Per-
BRO'OMY. } haps from the Dut. Brennen, sonitum edere: because the seeds of this plant, when ripe, burst from the pods with a considerable noise. Applied to—

The plant, and the instrument made of its small branches.

There lacked no floure to my dome
Ne not so much as floure of brome.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

And returning vnto the same, he founde it in dede sweped cleane with bromes, but altogether emptie.
Vdal. Luke, c. 11.

He made carpenters to make houses and lodgynges, of great tymbre, and set the houses lyke stretes, and couered them with rede and brome so that it was lyke a lyttell towne.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 133.

I am sent with broome before
To sweep the dust behind the doore.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. sc 2.

Straight a broom-staff was prepared,
Which Don Hill no little scar'd;
But he resolv'd, if Dick did baste him,
That his patience should out last him.
Cotton. Legend of the Guitar-master.

I found the husband changed colour at the question, and, before I could answer, asked me whether we did not call hops broom in our country.—Tatler, No. 150.

The youth with broomy stumps begin to trace
The kennels edge where wheels had worn the place.
Swift. The Morning.

In yonder green wood blows the broom:
Shepherds we'll trust our flocks to stray,
Court Nature in her sweetest bloom,
And steal from care one summer-day.
Langhorn. The Wilding and the Broom.

BROTH. "The third person singular of the indicative of Briwan, coquere. That which one briweth. Hence the old English saying of a man who has killed himself with drinking, he has fairly drunk up his broth. The It. Brodo, is the past part. of the same verb. That which is brewed, brod." (Tooke, ii. 420.) See BREW.

And the angell of God said vnto him: take the fleshe & the swete kakes, and put them vpō this rocke, & powre out the broth.—Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 6.

When they exceede, and haue varietie of dishes, the first are their baked meates (for roste metes they vse little) and then their brothes or pottage.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 496.

I am sure by your unprejudiced discourses that you love broth better than soup.—Spectator, No. 308.

BRO'THEL. } From Bordell, or Burdell;
BRO'THELING. } by transposition of the letter r.
BRO'THELRY. } See BORDELL.

Both Simon Magus and his whore Selenes, whych at Cyrus a cytie of Phœnicee had maynteyned the brothell howse or steus, were admytted of the Romaines for their execrable sorceryes, to be worshypped for Goddis wyth yearely sacryfyces.—Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

And the places dedicate to clennes & chastitie, lefte only to these apostates & brothells to liue there in lechery.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 258.

He falle to the talke of as fyne brothelry, as anye craftes man in that art myght vtter.—Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

They [the monkes] wrought off great wickednesse, and made those endwares little better than brodelhouses, especially where nunries were far off.
Hollinshed. Desc. of England, c. 13.

His owne souldier if he had any courage or edge,—it is dulled and worne away in tipling and brotheling houses and following the princes example.—Savile. Tacitus. Hist. p. 88.

An ancient fabric rais'd t' inform the sight,
There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight:
A watch-tower once; but now, so fate ordains,
Of all the pile an empty name remains:
From its old ruins brothel-houses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys.
Dryden Mac Flecknoe.

Ah! let not those the fatal sentence give,
Whom brothels blush to own, yet courts receive.
Whitehead. Ann Boleyn to Hen. VIII.

BRO'THER. } Goth. Brother; A. S. Brother; Dut. Broeder; Ger. Bruder; Sw. Broder. "I believe," says Skinner, "that all are derived from the verb to breed, simul fotus, (i. e.) educatus,—of the same brood."
BRE'THREN.
BRO'THERHOOD.
BRO'THERLESS.
BRO'THERLY, adj.
BRO'THERLY, ad.

Brothers or brethren are children bred from the same parents; more laxly, from the same stock or parentage originally. (See FRATERNAL.) Also applied to—

Those who are united or conjoined as closely as brothers; who are distinguished by the same characteristic qualities.

Edred was the kyng anon after Edmond ys brother,
Vor ys tueye sones so gonge were, that me ne mygte abbe non other.—R. Gloucester, p. 278.

Thys acord was vaste ymade thoru stronge treuthe ynou
Vaste yplygt ys eyther syde, that non ne wyth drou.
So that thys tueye bretheren gode frend were.—Id. p. 388.

The kyng & his brother, that hight Alfrede,
Gadred folk togider, ale men that had nede,
& com to the batalle with full egre herte.
R. Brunne, p. 21.

But of the charite of britherhood we hadden no nede to write to ghou, ghealif han lerned of God that ghe loue togidre, for ghe doen that unto alle britheren in alle Macedonye.—Wiclif. Tessal. c. 4.

But as touching brotherly loue ye nede not that I write vnto you, for ye are taught of God to loue one another. Yea, & that thyng verely ye do vnto alle the bretheren whyche are thorowe out al Macedonia.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Thin is affection of holinesse,
And min is love, as to a creature:
For which I tolde thee min a venture
As to my cosin, and my brother sworne.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1160.

Rich. Welcome good Clarence, this is brotherlike.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 1.

I assure thee, (and almost with teares I speak it) there is not one so young, and so villanous this day liuing. I speake but brotherly of him.—Id. As You like It. Act i. sc. 1.

Once more my Lord of Winchester I charge you
Embrace, and loue this man.
Gard. With a true heart,
And brother; loue I doe it, i. e. brotherly love.
Id. Hen. VIII. Act v. sc. 1.

So weepe the wounded balsam; so
The holy frankincense doth flow.
The brotherless Heliades
Melt in such amber teares as these.
Marvell. The Nymph on the Death of her Fawn.

His younger son on the polluted ground
First fruit of death, lies plaintive of a wound
Given by a brother's hand.—Prior. Solomon, b. iii.

With what he begg'd his brethren he relieved;
And gave the charities himself receiv'd.
Dryden. The Character of a good Parson.

Your letter to us we have receiv'd as a signal mark of your favour and brotherly affection.—Spectator, No. 52.

All are not such. I had a brother once—
Peace to the mem'ry of a man of worth,
A man of letters, and of manners too!
Of manners sweet as virtue always wears,
When gay good-nature dresses her in smiles.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

He is to be commended as having fewer artifices of disgust than most of his brethren of the blank song.
Johnson. Life of Akenside.

When such a questionable shape is to be admitted for the first time into the brotherhood of Christendom, it is not a mere matter of idle curiosity to consider how far it is in its nature alliable with the rest.
Burke. On Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

Her sighs were not for him: to her he was
Even as a brother—but no more; 'twas much,
For brotherless she was, save in the name
Her infant friendship had bestow'd on him.
Byron. The Dream.

[His letters represent in a very pleasing light] his zeal to promote the interests of religion in general, and the Church of England in particular; not by warm and violent counsels, but by methods of tenderness and brotherly kindness towards those who embraced a different interest.
Porteus. Life of Abp. Secker.

BROW, v. } A. S. Bræwe, bruwa; Dut. Brauwe or browe, the edge. It is applied to—
BROW, n. } Any thing which overhangs or overlooks: as the brow of a hill; the eye brow,—in Ger. Aug-brauwe.
BROW'LESS.
BRO'WBEAT, v.

To brow-beat, is to beat down or overawe with frowning, threatening, overhanging brows.

Browless, bare-faced.

And like a griffon loked he about,
With kemped heres on his browes stout.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2136.

Florent his wofull heede vplifte
And sawe this recke, where that she sit,
Which was the lothest wighte,
That euer man caste on his eie:
Hir nose baas, hir browes hie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Alas! what stable frute may Adam's childeren fynde
In that they seke by sweate of browes, and travill of their mynde. Surrey. Ecclesiastes.

——— This have I learn't
Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts
That brow this bottom glade. Milton. Comus.

And, harke! the high brow'd hills aloud begin to ring
With sound of things that forth prepared is to sing.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

Cleare vp thy browes, and raise thy fainting eyes,
See how my glitt'ring palace open lies
For weary passengers, whose desp'rate case
I pitie and prouide a resting place.
Beaumont. The World, &c. A Dialogue.

And in very truth we must entertain our friends and guests with courtesie, mirth, a smiling countenance, and affectionate love: and not to brow-beat them, nor yet put the servitors in a fright, and make them quake and tremble with our frowning looks.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 107.

These will appear in a different light from others, who with rude and boisterous language abuse and revile the unfortune prisoner; who browbeat his witnesses as soon as they appear, though ever so willing to declare the whole truth.—Emlyn. State Trials, Pref.

——— In that dayes feates,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prou'd best man i' th' field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oake.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

Our wits were at an ebb, or very low,
And to say truth, I think they cannot flow,
But yet a gracious influence from you
May alter nature in our brow-sick crew.
Suckling. Prologue of the Authors.

At morn the nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her brow the various wreath;
The flowers less blooming than her face,
The scent less fragrant than her breath.
Prior. The Garland.

——— The swain
Disaster'd stands; sees other hills ascend,
Of unknown joyless brow; and other scenes,
Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain.
Thomson. Winter.

So browless was this heretick that he was not ashamed to tell the world, that all he preached was sent him immediately from heaven.—Addison. Life of Mahomet, p. 84.

For one may see with half an eye,
That gravity can never lie;
And his arch'd brow, pull'd o'er his eyes,
With solemn proof proclaims him wise.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. ii.

You then, who are initiated into the mysteries of the blindfold goddess, inform me, whether I have a right to eat the bread I have earned by the hazard of my life, or the sweat of my brow.—Burke Vindication of Natural Society.

From Sion house, whose proud survey
Brow-beats your flood, look cross the way,
And view, from highest swell of tide,
The milder scenes of Surry side.—Green. The Grotto.

BROWN. } A. S. Brun; Dut. Bruyn; Ger. Braun, (from Brennen, to burn. Wachter.) Sw. Brun, (from Brennan, to burn. Serenius and Ihre.) Fr. Brun; It. Bruno; all from the A. S. Brennan, to burn. (See AUBURN.) And—BRO'WNISH.
BRO'WNY.
BRO'WNESS.

Brown means burned (subaud. colour.) It is that colour which things have that have been burned.

Lengore man he was somdel, thanne hys bretheren were,
Vayr man & thyeke ynow, & broune here.
R. Gloucester, p. 429.

Normandie alle doun, mykelle ther of is brent
& slayn black & broun of alle that he mot hent.
R. Brunne, p. 197.

And next him daunced dame Fraunchise
Arayed in full noble gise,
She was not browne ne dunne of hewe
But white as snowe yfallen newe.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

To taste (sometimes) a baite of bytter gall,
To drinke a draught of sower ale (some season)
To eate browne bread with homely handes in hall,
Doth much encrease men's appetites by reason.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew.

Now like I brown (O lovely broun thy hair)
Only in brownness beauty dwelleth there.
Drayton. King John to Matilda

His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

I expect to see my lucubrations printed on brownes paper than they are at present; and if the humour continues, must be forced to retrench my expensive way of living, and not smoke above two pipes a day.—Tatler, No. 101.

A brownish grey iron-stone, lying in their strata is poor but runs freely.—Woodward. On Fossils.

A solemn darkness spreads the tomb,
But terrours haunt the midnight gloom;
Me thinks a browner horrour falls,
And silent spectres sweep the walls.
Cotton. The Night Piece.

BROWSE, v. } Minshew and others say from the Gr. Βρωσκειν, to feed. Skinner seems to consider the Fr. Brouser, and It. Brucare to be immediately from the Fr. Brosse, a bush; (q.d.) to nibble the bushes. It is probably no more than, to bruise, Fr. Briser, from the A. S. Brisan, conterere, to brise, or bruise (sc.) with the teeth: to browse the bark of trees or shrubs, the young shoots, the herbage.
BROWSE, n.
BRO'WSING, n.

To crush, to fret, to chaw, to eat, to feed upon.

Clo. There is cold meat i' th' cave, we'l browse on that
Whilst what we have kil'd be cook'd.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii sc. 6.

As in a forest well compleat with deere,
We see the hollyes, ashes, every where,
Rob'd of their cloathing by the browsing game.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b ii. s. 1.

Greene must this browse be in any wise when it is gathered, and not seere or withered.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 31.

The park for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and brouzings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land.
Howell. Letters, b i. s. 2. Let. 8.

When they came to the north part of the island, where Governor Lane had built his fort, they found it razed, and the ground rooms of the dwelling houses, which had been also erected about it, inhabited by deer, and overgrown with melons, or such like sort of fruit, which those animals brouz'd upon.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

Sheep, goats, and oxen, and the nobler steed,
On browse, and corn, and flow'ry meadows feed.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam b xv.

At proper distance drive stiff oaken stakes,
Which interwove with boughs and flexile twigs,
Frustrate the nibbling flock or browsing herd.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

The full lips, the rough tongue, the corrugated cartilaginous palate, the broad cutting teeth, of the ox, the deer, the horse, and the sheep, qualify this tribe for browsing upon their pasture either gathering large mouthfulls at once, where the grass is long, which is the case with the ox in particular, or biting close, where it is short, which the horse and the sheep are able to do, in a degree that one could hardly expect.—Paley. Natural Theology, c 2.

BRU'IN. A Bear, so called by Mr. Gayton, in his Notes upon Don Quixote, b. iv. c. 5, p. 196.—Probably from the Fr. Bruire, to roar, (Dr. Grey, On Hudibras.) See quotation following.

For as an Austrian archduke once
Had one ear . . . .
. . . . In battle par'd,
Close to his head: so Bruin far'd.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

So watchful Bruin forms, with plastick care,
Each growing lump, and brings it to a bear
Pope. Dunciad, b. i.

BRUISE, v. }
BRUISE, n. }
BRU'ISER. } Fr. Briser; Dut. Bruzen; A. S. Brysan, conterere, to brise, —as it was anciently written. See BROWSE.

To beat or press together, so as to destroy the continuity of the parts.

To bray, or pound; to crush.

And he that schal falle on this stoon schal be broken, but on whom it schal falle it schal also brisen him.
Wielif. Matt. c. 21.

A bruysed reed he schal not breke, and he schal not quench smokynge flax til he cast out doom to victorie.—Id. Is. c. 11.

A bruised reede shall he not breake, and flax that begynneth to burne, he shall not quenche, tyll he sende forth judgment vnto victorie.—Bible, 1551. Is.

After the whiche agremēt endyd and perfyghted with a shorte term, ye sayd Antulphus beyng in his disporte of huntyng, fell from his horse or with his horse, by vyolence whereof he was soo brayseyd that he dyed shortlye after, when he had rulyd the Longobardis, Lumbardis, or Italyons, viii yeres.—Fabyan, c. 153.

The number of which aduersities and troubles entring, and deepeve sinking into the kinges minde with his sore bruse and hurt ensuyng of the wound taken at the battaile beyde Merton, shortened his dayes, so that he dyed when he had reigned in great vexation and trouble of the Danes, viii yeres.—Grafton, an. 872.

I can march all day in massy steel,
Nor yet my arms unwieldy weight do feel.
Nor wak'd by night with bruise or bloody wound,
The tent my bed, no pillow but the ground.
Drayton. Henry to Rosamond.

——— Hast thou friends here
Able to quench my anger, or perswade me,
After I have beaten thee into one main bruise,
And made thee spend thy state in rotten apples,
Thou canst at length be quiet
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 3.

The night fell out so very dark and tempestuous, and the ways were so full of hills and dales, rocks and precipices, that many of the soldiers were much bruised by falls, one of them so mortified, that he lost his life in the march
Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

This place was therefore called the Lovers Leap: and whether or no the fright they had been in, or the resolution that could push them to so dreadful a remedy, or the bruises which they often received in their fall, banished all the tender sentiments of love, and gave their spirits another turn; those who had taken this leap were observed never to relapse into that passion.—Spectator, No. 223.

The means, that simple nature has supplied them with, are by no means adequate to such an end, many scratches, many bruises undoubtedly would be received upon all hands, but only a few, a very few deaths.
Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

This gauntlet, we understand,
From annals, time out of mind,
Have given due weight to each hand
Of the bruisers of mankind.—Brookes, Air 31.

Like a new bruiser on Broughtonic sand,
Amid the lists our hero takes his stand.
Warton. Newmarket. A Satire.

BRU'IT, v. }
BRUIT, n. }
BRU'ITER. } Fr. Bruit, from Bruire, (see BRUIS,) to make a noise; which Menage derives from the Lat. Rugire, to roar, to bellow. Ray says, to Bruit, (in Shropshire, to brit,) is to divulge, and spread abroad; and Tooke, that Bruit means (something) spread abroad, divulged, dispersed; from the A. S. Bruttan, to distribute:—but this is merely a consequential usage of the A. S. Bruttan, to break, to break to pieces, and hence to disperse. See BRUTE.

A bruit, a noise, spread, conveyed, reported; a report, a rumour, a fame.

By thys meanes the same was shortly bruted throughout all Irelande, and euery man was willynge to take his parte and submyt themselfes to him, callyng him of al handes kyng.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 1.

Beholde, the noise of the brute is come, and a greate commotion out of the north countrey to make the cities of Judah desolate [and] a denne of dragons.
Geneva Bible, 1561. Jeremiah, x. 22.

When euery man was prest and ready to geue the assaute, a sodeyne rumoure roase in the army that a peace was by the commissioners taken and concluded, which brute as it was pleasaunte and mellifluous to the Frēchmen, so it was to the English nacio bitter, soure and dolorous.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 6.

While that by fate his state in stay did stand,
And when his realm did flourish by advice,
Of glorie then we bare som fame and brute.
Surrey. Virgile. Eneis, b. ii.

For so muche as the people that heare speakynge of thynges passed (though that it be of their countreys and of their owne ancesters) they suffre the brayte to spreade abrode & ronne as one reporteth it vnto thē, wythoute enquyrynge any further of the trouthe.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 18.

Brulerers,—prophesiers or soothsayers.
Tyndall. An Exposicion of certayne Words.

Hee [Edgar] commaunded Ethelwold, an earle, and also his secretarie, to go looke upon her, and so to prouide, that if she were according to the common bruted fame, she mought bee his wife.—Stow. The West Saxons, an. 959.

Now, Sir, what think you of Mr. St. Johns trial in the Star chamber? I know that the bruit ran, that he was hardly dealt withall, because he was imprison'd in the Tower; seeing his disuasion from granting a benevolence to the king was warranted by law.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

Let it be bruited all about the town,
That he is coarse, indelicate, and brown.—Churchill. Times.

BRUMAL. Fr. Brumal; It. Brumale; Lat. Bruma; so called, quod brevissimus tunc dies; and thus formed, Brevissimus, brevimus, brevima, brevma, bruma. See Vossius and Varro, b. v.

G. Douglas says, "Thay short dayes, that clerkes clepe brumale," (Virg. b. viii. Prol.)

Winterly.

For at that time, which happeneth about the brumal solstice, it hath been observed even unto a proverb, that the sea is calm, and the winds do cease, till the young ones are excluded, and forsake their nest, which floateth upon the sea and by the roughness of winds might otherwise be overwhelmed.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 10.

BRUNT. Brun-ed, brun'd, brunt; i. e. burnt. To beare the first "brunte of the feelde," is to bear the heat of the feelde, the hot or burnt part of it. See Skinner and Tooke.

The lord admirall perceyuynge that, sent to hys father the erle of Surrey hys Agnus dei that honge at hys brest, that in all haste he woulde loyne battayle, euen wyth the brunt or brest of the vant garde.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

The shote of arbiasters begā on both sydes, which ouer threwe many an horse and man, and specially ye fore rydars yt put themselfe in prese with theyr loge and sharp launcys to wynne the firste brunte of the feelde.
Fabyan, vol. i. c. 163.

He alleageth also against me, that I say M. More is sore deceaued, and set on the sand euen at the first brunt, and in the beginning of hys voyage, and that I would wish M. More a little more witte.—Frith. Workes, p. 67.

In daunger of distresse
this knight was euer woont
To yeelde himselfe to perils prest,
and bide the greatest broont.
Turbervile. An Epitaph and Woful Verse

He shewed vnto Meherdates that the first brunt of the barbarians was fierce and hote, but by delay and lingring became cold, or turned into treason.
Grenewey. Tacitus. Annales, p. 158.

——— His pupillage
Man-entred thus, he waxed like a sea,
And in the brunt of seuenteene battailes since,
He lurcht all swords of the garland.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from bruise or wound,
Like feather bed betwixt a wall
And heavy brunt of cannon ball.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

So wing'd, in war, or darkness, on the deep,
Two ships adverse the mediate ocean sweep!
With horrid brunt joins each encount'ring prow;
Loud roars the rifled surge, and foams below.
Brooke. Constantia.

BRUNE'TT. Fr. Brunet, brownish — somewhat brown; a nut-brown girl, (Cotgrave.)

As you are by character a profest well-wisher to speculation, you will excuse a remark which this gentleman's passion for that brunette has suggested to a brother theorist.
Spectator, No. 396

BRU'SH, v. }
BRUSH, n. }
BRU'SHER. }
BRU'SHY. }
BRU'SHINESS. } Fr. Brosse, brosser, a bush, and also a brush; Ger. Burste, verricului setaceum; from Borst, seta, a bristle, Dut. Borstel, a bristle, and also a brush. See BRISTLE.

A brush is perhaps so called, because made of brustles or bristles.

To brush is to rub with a brush, to sweep with one; to rub or sweep.

And for so moche as they haue shaken so lowsy bagges of beggerye with so earneste a stomake, lete them not doubt of it, but the stinking dust therof shall be turned to them agayne, brushe it of their syde gownes if they can.
Bale. Apology, fol. 16.

And that shalt thou doe, in case thou brushe awaye the brambles of doubtefull questions, and deuide and dystribute the worde of God wyth vprighte iudgemente, propoundyng onely those thynges, that properlye belong to the matter of saluation and of godlines.—Udal. 2 Timothy, c. 2.

100. brushes for garments (none made of swine haire,) for gifts, and otherwise to be sold.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 363.

Cal. As wicked dewe, as ere my mother brush'd,
With rauens feather from vnwholesome fen
Drop on you both. Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

They heard and yeelded willingly. brusht off the dunte and on Put other vests. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

——— In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar, though from off the boughs each morn
We brush mellifluous dewes, and find the ground
Cover'd with pearly grain.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 429.

Yorke. Of Salisbury, who can report of him,
That winter lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all brush of time
And like a gallant, in the brow of youth
Repairs him with occasion.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 3.

Some spread their sailes, some with strong oars sweepe
The waters smooth, and brush the buxome waue,
Their breasts in sunder cleaue the yealding deepe,
The broken seas for anger foame and raue.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xv. s. 12.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, "That critics were like brushers of noblemen's cloathes."—Bacon. Apophthegms.

Considering the brushiness and angulosity of the parts of the air, a more than ordinary motion or compressive rest may very well prove painful to the soul, and disharmonious to her touch.—H. More. Immort. of the Soul, b iii. Ax 31.

As for the gentle whispers and touches of divine grace, the monitory dispensations of Providence, the good advices and wholesome reproofs of friends, with the like means of reclaiming sinners: these to persons settled on their lees, or fixed in bad custome, are but as gusts of wind brushing an old oak, or as waves dashing on a rock, without at all shaking or stirring it.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

Honeycomb seized all her gally-pots and washes, and carried off his handkerchief full of brushes, scraps of Spanish wool, and phials of unguents —Spectator, No. 41.

I concluding it to be blood, presently suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 343.

With vain traditions stop the gaping fence,
With every common hand pull'd up with ease:
What safety from such brushwood-helps as these?
If written words from time are not secur'd,
How can we think have oral sounds endur'd.

Dryden. Religio Laici.

Bound for holy Palestine,
Nimbly we brush'd the level brine
All in azure steel array'd. Warton. The Crusade.

So I with brush in hand and pallet spread,
With colours mix'd for a far diff'rent use,
Paint cards and dolls, and ev'ry idle thing
That fancy finds in her excursive flights.

Cowper. Task, b. iv.

The frugal housewife trembles, when she lights
Her scanty stock of brush-wood blazing clear,
But dying soon, like all terrestrial joys. Id. Ib. b. iv.

BRUSK. Is perhaps, brisk, lively, sharp, rough. See BRISK.

We are sorry to hear that the Spanish gentlemen, who have been lately sent to that king, found (as they say) but a brusk welcome; which makes all fear, that there may be a rebullition in that business.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 382.

BRU'STLE. Skinner says, from the A. S. Brastlian, crepitare, from Berstan, to burst, quia disrupta crepant; or as Dr. T. H. ingeniously conjectures, (q. d.) to bristle, to erect the bristles.

Brastlian, crepitare, is probably Be-rastlian, to rustle, to make a rustling noise. Hackluyt uses "the brustling and the bustling of a tyde," as equivalent expressions. See BUSTLE.

When he is falle in suche a dreme,
Right as a ship against the streme
He routeth with a slepie noyse,
And broustleth as a monkes froyse,
When it is throwe into the panne.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

On the 19th of July we fell into a great whirling and brustling of a tyde, setting to the northwards: and sayling about half a league we came into a very calm sea which bent to the southwest.

Hackluyt. Voyages. John Davis, vol. iii. p. 99.

BRUTE, n. BRUTE, adj. BRU'TAL. BRU'TALLY. BRUTA'LITY. BRU'TALIZE. BRU'TELY. BRU'TENESS. BRU'TIFY. BRU'TISH. BRU'TISHLY. BRU'TISHNESS. } Lat. Brutus, of unsettled etymology. Vossius says it may be contracted from Προβατον, ovis, or απο της βαρυτητος, i. e. a gravitate. The root is apparently northern. The A. S. Brytt-ian, to bruit; the Lat. Brutus, as the Fr. Brouter, to brutt or browse, may have been originally applied to browsing, or grazing animals; the brute earth, the earth bruted, brutted, or grazed upon; or (as the Fr. Bruit, now is,) it may have been originally used to denote, when applied to animals, noisy; the noisy, roaring, bellowing class of animals: dumb only, as to articulate speech; loud, as to inarticulate utterance. (See BRUIN.) When applied to other things, (e. g. the earth,) it was used to denote some quality in common with these animals: their want of understanding, their stupidity, sluggishness, dulness, heaviness. And hence extended, both in ancient and modern usage, (met.) to that which has the distinguishing, characteristic, qualities of a brute.

To that which is stupid, irrational, ignorant, grossly sensual; to that which is inhuman, savage, cruel, ferocious.

Neuerthelesse man abydeth not in suche honoure, but is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becometh lyke vnto them.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 49.

And therefore he had yet another ferefull vision, which is here rehersed of himself, and he was punished, put out of his kingdome, lost his mynde, made lyke a brute beste.

Joy. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

Are brutal things, transferred so to men?
Or men become more sauage than the beast?
We see the dogge, that kennels in his den,
(For onely foode) obey his lordes behest.

Gascoigne. Commendatory Verses.

O Rome, what dost thou? why regardest thou not these lawes of ye Lacedemonians, which with their friendly customes doth mocke thy brutall vices —Golden Boke, c. 23.

Judge, good Chrysten reader, whether it be possible that he be anye better then a beaste, out of whose brutishe beastely mouthe, cometh such a fylthie forme of blasphemys againste Christes holy cerimonies and blessed sacramentes, sent into his churche out of hys owne blessed bloudy syde.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 402.

They haue few bookes and lesse learning, and are for the most part very brutish in all kind of good sciences, sauing in some kind of silke works, and in such things as pertaine to the furniture of horses, in the which they are passing good —Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 359.

But thus much I say unto you magistrates: If you will not maintaine schooles and vniversities, yee shall have a brutality. Therefore now a sute againe to your highnesse. So order the matter that preaching may not decay. For surely if preaching decay, ignorance and brutishnesse will enter againe —Latimer. Serm. p. 113. an. 1550.

There wanted yet the master work, the end
Of all yet don; a creature who not prone
And brute as other creatures, but endu'd
With sanctitie of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene
Govern the rest. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Redouble then this miracle, and say
How cam'st thou speakable of mute, and how
To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind, that daily are in fight? Id. Ib. b. ix.

These Epicureans are not any way worthy the name of Philosophers, who contrariwise tread and trample under foot all the parts of true philosophy, discovering in their writings, as well as throughout all their lives, meer beastly brutality —Holland. Plutarch, p. 907.

Brutish that contest and foule
When reason hath to deal with force.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The vulgar expositor (as there is nothing more violent and boisterous than a reverend ignorance in fear to be contradicted) rushes brutely and impetuously against all the principles both of nature, piety, and moral goodness; and in the fury of his literal expounding overthrows them all.

Id. Tetrachordon.

——— Thou dotard vile
That with thy brutenesse spendst thy comely age,
Abandon soone, I read, the captive spoile
Of that same outcast carcas.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

As the Syrians, were first blinded and then led into the midst of Samaria: so are the idolaters first bereaved of their wits and common sense, and afterwards are carried brutishly into all palpable impiety.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Golden Calf.

A brute arrives at a point of perfection that he can never pass. In a few years he has all the endowments he is capable of, and were he to live ten thousand more, would be the same thing he is at present.—Spectator, No. 111.

Now who can this surprising fact conceive,
Who this event fortuitous believe,
That the brute earth, unguided, should embrace
The only useful, only proper place,
Of all the millions in the empty space?

Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

And he, from whom the nations should receive
Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave,
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires.

Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

A rich man had nothing to please him, but a new toy, a puff of applause, success at a horse-race, at bowls, at hunting; in some petty sport and pastime, which can yeild but a very thin and transitory satisfaction to any man not quite brutified and void of sense.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms,
And, sunk in pleasures, and in brutish ease,
They in their shipwreck'd state themselves obdurate please.—Roscommon. Ode upon Solitude.

If one be under a disease that wine inflames and increases, and the physician forbids it as deadly, yet the patient will judge only by his palate, whether wine be good for him; were it not a kind of brutishness worthy of the evil that attends it.—Bates. The Danger of Prosperity.

He turns his eyes upon his carnal frame,
And sees it, all, a seat of filth and shame;
Fellow'd with brutes, with brutes to take his bed,
Like brutes to propagate, be born, and fed.

Brooke. Redemption.

We cannot teach brute animals to use their eyes in any other way than in that which nature hath taught them; nor can we teach them to communicate to us the appearances, which visible objects make to them, either in ordinary or in extraordinary cases.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 14.

The play [Mariamne] was acted at the other theatre; and the brutal petulance of Cibber was confuted, though perhaps not shamed, by general applause.—Johnson. Life of Fenton.

So much was he altered by a long succession of hardships, that he passed entirely without notice; and in the evening, when he was going up to the prætor's chair, he was brutally repulsed by the attending lictors.

Goldsmith. The Story of Alcander & Septimius.

In this kind of government human nature is not only abused, and insulted, but it is actually degraded, and sunk into a species of brutality.—Burke. Vind. of Nat. Society.

Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
In human mould, should brutalize by choice
His nature. Cowper. Task, b. i.

A plain historical account of some of our most fashionable duellists, gamblers, and adulterers (to name no more), would exhibit specimens of brutish barbarity and sottish infatuation, such as might vie with any that ever appeared in Kamschatka, California, or the land of Hottentots.

Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 3.

BRUTT. BRU'TTING, n. } Fr. Brouter, to browse, from the A. S. Brytt-ian, to bruise. See BRUTE.

To browse.

The virtue of the Cophee was discovered by marking what the goats so greedily brutted upon.—Evelyn. Acetaria.

Of all the foresters this [horn-beam] preserves itself best from the bruttings of the deer.—Id. b. i. c. 6. s. 2.

BUB, v. BUB, n. BU'BBY. } Dut. Bobbelen, bullire, ebullire. Dr. Jamieson would rather derive it from the Sw. By, a gust, a squall. The Gloss. to G. Douglas calls it, a word formed from the sound. See BUBBLE.

Double bub; strong, foaming, bubbling liquor.

Bubby, seems to be merely the cry, Bu bu, common to children when in need of their mother's milk. See BABE, and BOY.

We passed on so far forth till we saw
Rude Acheron, a lothsome lake to tell,
That boyles and bubs vp swelth as blacke as hell
Where grieslie Charon at their fixed tide
Still ferries ghosts vnto the farther side.

Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 268.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit;
He loves cheap port, and double bub;
And settles in the hum-drum-club.—Prior. Cameleon.

Then soon he mends his own apparel,
Eats boil'd and roast, and taps his barrel;
Drinks double bub, with all his might.

Somerville, Fab. 14. c. 3.

BU'BBLE, v. BU'BBLE, n. BU'BBLER. BU'BBLY. } Dut. Bobbelen, bullire, ebullire, to rise in boils, blebs, or blobs. "The bairne has a bubbley nose," (Grose.)

A bubble is applied (met.) to that which will burst as easily as a bubble;—to a puff, (met.) and thus to a cheat, a delusion, a fraud. And hence, consequentially—

To bubble is to cheat, to delude, to defraud.

Which scriptures of God, whē as without blusteryng of worldly eloquence they issue furth caulmely and smothely, yet because they bubbled out of the priuy hid cause of godly wisedome, they haue heauenly violence to remoue the blyndnesse of mannes mynde, howe long soeuer it hath continued, and to open those lyes wherewith God is seen, whom to haue seen is felicitie.—Udal. John, c. 9.

How can your prayse decay, whose actes & monumentes are consecrated to immortalitie, as thinges not builded vpon the sand of ambicious seking nor (like bubles in the same water) puffed vp with an vncertain blast of worldly vanitie.

Id. Luke, Pref.

Like boyling liquour in a seething pot,
That fumeth, swelleth high, and bubbleth fast,
Till ore the brimmes among the embers hot,
Part of the broth and of the scum is cast.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. viii. s. 74.

Broaching with bloody point his breast before;
Doun from the wound trickled the bubbling gore,
And bid pale death come in at that red gaping door.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 11.

O worldly pompe, how contemptible art thou, because thou art euer vaine and slippery? Rightly thou mayest be compared to a bubble in the water, that in a moment so proudelie settest vp thyselfe, and sodainlie thou shalt be brought into nothing.—Stow. Will. Conq. an. 1087.

Why then doth flesh, a bubble-glas of breath,
Hunt after honour and aduancement vaine,
And reare a trophee for deuouring death,
With so great labour and long lasting paine,
As if his dayes for euer should remaine?

Spenser. The Ruins of Time.

——— Like boiling water
That foams and hisses o'er the crackling wood,
And bubbles to the brim; ev'n then most wasting
When the most it swells.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act i. sc. 1.

Haste to thy Twickenham's safe retreat,
And mingle with the grumbling great:
There, half devour'd by spleen, you'll find
The rhyming bubbler of mankind.
Pope. Horace, b. i. Epist. 4.

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time,
That rise, and fall, that swell and are no more,
Born, and forgot, ten thousand in an hour.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 2.

All other professions and employments [besides stock-jobbing] were utterly neglected; and the people's attention wholly engrossed by this and other chimerical schemes, which were known by the denomination of bubbles.
Smollet. Hist. of England, an. 1720.

BU'BUKLES. This word is Shakespeare's, or rather Fluellyn's; used in describing Bardolph's nose.

One Bardolph, if your majestie know the man: his face is all bubukles and welkes and knobs.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 6.

BU'CCANEER. Fr. "Boucan, a wooden grid-iron, whereon Cannibals broyle pieces of men and other flesh," (Cotgrave.) Menage considers the words Boucan, Boucaner, to be Carribbee Indian; and that hence Boucanier or Buccanier, applied to pirates or freebooters, living like wild Indian Cannibals, is derived.

Then many a painful step he takes
O'er hills and vales, through woods and brakes:
No sturdy desperate buccaneer
Ever suffered hardships more severe.
Somerville. Fables, c. 5.

BU'CK, n. } A. S. Bucca; Fr. Bouc; It. Buck, v. } Becco; Ger. Dut. and Sw. Bock, is an animal, striking, (butting) with the horns, from Ger. Bocken, to strike, (Wachter.) Martinius also mentions the Ger. Bocken; Fr. Buquer, among other conjectures. (In v. Hircus.)

The male of various animals, as, the deer, the rabbit, the goat.

For it is ympossible, that synnes be don awaye bi blood of bolis and of buckis of geet.—Wielif. Ebrewis, c. 10.

He priketh thurgh a fair forest,
Therein is many a wild best
Ye bothe buck and hare.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas.

And many a hart and many an hinde
Was both before me and behind
Of fawnes, sowers, bucks, does,
Was full the wodde, and many rowes.—Id. Dream.

Somer is cume: for euery spray now springs,
The hart hath hong his old hed on the pale;
The buck, in brake his winter coate he flings;
The fabes flete with new repaired scale
Surrey. Description of Spring.

And alway the first bucking tume of the shepe, Jacob put the staues before the shepe in the gutters, that they mighte conceiue before the staues. But in the latter buckynge tyme, put them not there.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 30.

Whiche thing doen, therle folowed at the back, the ragged route and mischeuous multitude, as a man, that draue the deare before hym into the buckestall, or the sely coneis into the secret hay.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 12.

———The males he left without
His loftie roofes, that all bestrowd about
With rams, and buck-goates were.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

The swarthy smith spits in his buck horne fist,
And bids his men bring out the five-fold twist.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of catching cold, when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side learning how to season it, or put it in crust.—Spectator, No. 482.

We have two instances in the reign of Ed. IV. of persons executed for treasonable words; the one a gentleman, whose favourite buck the king killed in hunting, whereupon he washed it, hornes and all, in the king's belly.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 6.

BU'CK, v. } Dut. Buycken; Ger. Beuchen;
Bu'CK, n. } Fr. Burt; all, says Wachter, (after Bu'CKET. } Huet,) from the Lat. Buo. Spelman guides us to a less distant source; the A. S. Bugan; Ger. Beugen, to arch, to bend. He explains, Baucca quasi buca; Sax. Buc; which Somner interprets—

A vessel for the purpose of washing,—like a hollow semicircle. Bucket is the diminutive.

To buck is to use a buck, (sc.) for washing; and thus to wet, wash, or soak.

Buck the noun is applied by Shakespeare, both to things washed, and to the water, in which they are washed.

And bouketh hem at hus brest and beeteth hit ofte.
And whit warme water of hus eyen, worketh hit be white.
Piers Ploukman, p. 281.

Into a studie he fell sodenly,
As done these lovers in hir queinte geres,
Now in the crop, and now down in the breres,
Now up, now doun, as boket in a well.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1535.

But on the sudden stop'd and silent stood
As lovers often muse, and change their mind
Now high as heaven, and then as low as hell;
Now up, now down as buckets in a well.—Dryden. Ib.

Abowte the xviii. yere of the reygne of this Phylyp fell such plēte of water, yt the grouide was therwith so bucked and drowned, that corne and other frutes, by reason therof, greatly decayed and scanted.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 243.

And vpon yt ensuyd such excessyues of rayne that corne was therewith drowned in y^e erthe, and so bukkyd with water, that the yere ensuynge whete was at xl d. a bussheli.
Id. an. 1369.

As in treasons or mutinies, wise states-men find it safest to kill the serpent in the egge; so in motions of spirituall alterations one spoonfull of water will quench the fire at the first, which afterwards whole buckets cannot abate.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Altar of the Reubenites.

Fal. You shall heare. As good luck would haue it, comes in one Mist. Page, giues intelligence of Ford's approach: and in her inuention, and Ford's wiue's distraction, they conuey'd me into a bucke-basket.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives, Act iii. sc. 5.

———Whether beare you this?
Ser. To the landresse forsooth!
M. Ford. Why, what haue you to doe whether they beare it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.
Id. Ib. Act iii. sc. 3.

Nothing is stol'n: my muse, though mean
Draws from the spring she finds within;
Nor vainly buys what Gildon sells,
Poetic buckets for dry wells.—Green. The Spleen.

Defend me therefore, common sense, say I,
From reveries so airy, from the toil
Of dropping buckets into empty wells,
And growing old in drawing nothing up!
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

BU'CK, n. Perhaps no more than a corrupt English pronunciation of beaux. Bucks and belles, are beaux and belles.

What with ill-natured flings and rubs
From flippant bucks, and hackney scrubs,
His toils through dust, through dirt, through gravel,
Take off his appetite for travel
Lloyd. The Temple of Favour.

BU'CKLE, v. } Ger. Buckel; Dut. Boec-
Bu'CKLE, n. } kel; Fr. Boucle, from the Ger.
Bu'CKLING. } Bug-en; A. S. Bug-an, flectere, to bend; "fibula enim flexu facilis est," (Skinner.)

In the passage from Shakespeare, the verb Buckle is interpreted by the Commentators, "to bend, to yield to pressure."

To buckle is to fasten or close, as with a buckle; to keep close; to keep closely engaged in; to adhere to, as in close combat.

To be in buckle, (Spectator,) is to be close in stiff curl; met. (Churchill,) stiff as such curls.

Nailing the speres, and helmes bokeling.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale.

Richesse a girdle had upon
The bokell of it was a stone
Of vertue great, and mokell of might.—Id. R. of the R.

Than on the left syde a shylde is buckled, to kepe of all arowe shot.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 6.

There came without any delai an houge army of men partely glad to helpe their price and to do him seruice, and partely to buckle with the Frenchmen, with whome the Englishmen very willingly desyre to cope and fight in ope battaill.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

If the vnaduysed wilfulnes and hastines of the soldiers be brideled by the captaine: if there be no buckling together of the two armies, sauing only by such souldiers and mē of armes as haue geuen their othe afore to do as they ought to do and none otherwise: nor without a signe to bee geuen by commaundment of the capytayne whan they shall buccle together in fight.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Saynt Pye strake him in the sight of the helme a soror stroke, so that therwith he was so vnhelmed, that y^e bocle behynde brake, and the helme fell to the groude.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 168.

Notwithstandyng, I add thys muche more vnto it, that they made not buttons nor shoe buckles at those solempnytees.—Bale. Apology, fol. 61.

Others made readie their harnesse and buckled themselues to their weapons as though they were going to field.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 170.

And as the wretch, whose feauer-weakned joynts,
Like strengthlesse hinges, buckle vnder life,
Impatient of his fit, breakes like a fire
Out of his keepers armes: euen so, my limbes
(Weak'ned with greefe) being now inrag'd with greefe,
Are thrice themselues.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

Wrestling may be compared with the violent buckling and conflict pell-mell in the medley.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 553.

Another informs me of a pair of silver garters buckled below the knee, that have been lately seen at the Rainbow Coffee-house in Fleet-street.—Spectator, No. 16.

The wearer of it [a wig] goes, it seems, in his own hair when he is at home, and lets his wig be in buckle for a whole half year, that he may put it on upon occasion to meet the judges in it.—Id No. 129.

——— Then advance
In garments buckled on their spacious chests,
A people destin'd in eternal verse
Ev'n thine sublime Mæonides to live.
Glover. Leonidas, b. iv

Should the prim plausible be seen,
Observe his stiff affected mien;
'Gainst nature, arm'd by gravity,
His features too in buckle see.—Churchill. Ghost, b. iii.

BU'CKLER, v. } Fr. Boucher; It. Brocchiero,
Bu'CKLER, n. } Broccolero; Dut. Bokeler. "All," says Skinner, "I believe to be from the word buckle, fibula, because the shield, mediante fibula, is bound and fastened to the arm." Kilian derives Bokeler, bocken-leer, from Bock, Eng. Buck, and leer, a contraction of Dut. Leder, Eng. Leather, (q.d.) corium sive pellis hirci, because shields are covered with the hides or skins of beasts, especially of bucks, (hædorum). The Latin Scutum, he observes, is, απο του σκυτεος, i. e. a corio, sive pelle. And the Gr. Θυρεος, is applied equally to a hide or a shield.

To buckler is to protect or cover with a buckler, to guard, to defend.

And by his side a sword and a bokeler.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 112.

In these assaultes I feele my febled force
Begins to faint, thus, wered still in woes
And scarcely can my thus consumed corse,
Hold vp this buckler to beare of these blowes.
Gascoigne. Shield of Loue, &c.

Which in my mind I promise you how gayly so euer it glyter in ones eye for a florish, yet who fight therwith shal find it neither sharpe or sure, if it fall on a good buckler and not on a naked man.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 206.

Warw. But that the guilt of murther bucklers thee,
And I should rob the deaths-man of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my soueraignes presence makes me milde,
I would, false murd'rous coward, on thy knee
Make thee begge pardon for thy passed speech.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 2

The bucklers were excogitated and divised, for the keeping off the blows and strokes, but the declining of strokes was before bucklers.—Cudworth. Intel. Syst. p. 677.

Let the reader only peruse the description of Minerva's ægis, or buckler, in the fifth book, with her spear, which could overturn whole squadrons, and her helmet, that was sufficient to cover an whole army drawn out of a thousand cities.—Spectator, No. 309.

Wilt thou not place me in that glorious hour
Close to thy buckler? Gratitude will brace
Thy pupil's arm to manifest the force
Of thy instruction. Glover. Leonidas, b. ii.

BU'CKRAM, n. } Fr. Bourgrain; It. Buche-
Bu'CKRAM, adj. } rame; Dut. Bockerael. Skinner thinks from Fr. Bourre, flocks of wool, hair, &c. and grain, wherewith cloth is died, as scarlet-grain: (met.)—
Stiff, starched.

Jam. ——— Nor thou honest:
One, that not long since was the buckram scribe
That would run on men's errands for an asper.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act iii. sc. 3.

They vse neither cloakes, hattes, nor cappes. But they weare jackets framed after a strange manner, of buckeram, skarlet, or baldakins.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 54.

Cade. Well, hee shall be beheaded for it ten times: Ah thou Say, thou Surge, nay thou buckram lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our jurisdiction regall.

Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 4.

Why what unfashion'd stuff you tell us
Of buckram dames, and tip-toe fellows!
Go, child, and when you're grown maturer,
You'll shoot your next opinion surer.

Brooke. Love & Vanity.

BUCO'LICK, n. Buco'lick, adj. Buco'lical. } Fr. Bucolic; It. Buccolico; Sp. Bucolica; Lat. Bucolicus; Gr. βουκολος, a herdsman, from βους, an ox, and κολον, food.

Applied to Pastoral Poetry in general.

For what thing can be more familiar than his bucolickes? nor no warke soo nyghe approcheth to the cõmune dalyance & maners of chyldré, and the praty cõtrouersies of the simple shepeherdes therin contcyned, wonderfully reioyceth the chylde that hereth it wel declared, as I know by mine owne experience.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 10.

Parte of their names I thynke to specifie,
First olde Quintilion with his declamations,
Theocritus with his bucolicall relacions.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

The Pollio of Virgil, with all its elevation, is a composition truly bucolick, though rejected by the criticks; for all the images are either taken from the country, or from the religion of the age common to all parts of the empire.

Johnson. Rambler, No. 37.

BUD, v. Bud, n. Bu'dding, n. } Dut. Botter, trudere, trudere gemmas, gemmare. Fr. "Bouter, to thrust, put, force, push[forward," (Cotgrave.)

A bud is that which is thrust or pusht forth, (sc.) from the stem or branch.

To bud (met.) is to throw or thrust forth, the first emotions, the first risings, the first appearances.

To bud, in Horticulture, is to insert into one tree the bud of another.

Ye myght, quod I, vpõ good Friday euery yere this xl. c. yere tll within this v. yere, yᵗ the Turkes haue taken the towne, haue sene one of the thornes yᵗ was in Cristes crowne, bud and bring forth flowers in yᵉ seruice time, if ye would haue gone to the rodes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 133.

And beholde the rod of Arõ of the house of Leui was budded, and bare blossomes and almondes

Bible, 1551. Numeri, c. 17.

Wherefore King Henry foreselyng all these thinges concluded with the Frenche King, to the intent that he beyng delyuered of all outwarde enmitie, might the more quicklye prouide for the ciuile and domesticall commocions which he perceyued well to bee buddyng out.

Grafton. Hen. VII. an. 7.

Alas, (quod she) behold, each pleasaunt greene
Will now renew his sommers liuery,
The fragrant flowers, which haue not long bene seene,
Will flourish now, (ere long) in brauery:
The tender buddes, whom colde hath long kept in,
Will spring and sproute, as they do now begin.

Gascoigne. A Louing Lady beyng Wounded, &c.

The Bishops looked for nothing lesse, than for such answers from the Earle of Argyle; and therefore they made them for their extreme defence, that is, to corrupt, and by buds to stirre up the Queen Regent against us

Knox. History of the Reformation, p 118.

——— You intend not
To kick against the world, turn Cynic, Stoic,
Or read the logic lecture, or become
An Areopagite; and judge in cases
Touching the commonwealth; for as I take it,
The budding of your chin cannot prognosticate
So grave an honour.—Ford. The Broken Heart, Act i. sc. 1.

The usual way with the nursery gardeners, is to bud their stocks in summer; and such of them as miscarry, they graft the succeeding spring.

Miller. Gardener's Dictionary, in v. Cerasus.

Noble objects are to the mind, what sun-beams are to a bud or flower; they open and unfold, as it were, the leaves of it; put it upon exerting and spreading itself every way, and call forth all those powers, that lie hid and locked up in it.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Let him [a teacher] with a discreet and gentle hand, nip or prune the irregular shoots, let him guard and encourage the tender buddings of the understanding, till they be raised to a blossom, and let him kindly cherish the younger fruits.

Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. ii. c. 1.

——— He that saw
His patrimonial timber cast its leaf,
Sells the last scantling, and transfers the price
To some shrewd sharper, ere it buds again.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

These tender embryos [of leaves and flowers] are, in the first place, wrapped up with a compactness which no art can imitate: in which state they compose what we call the bud. This is not all. The bud itself is enclosed in scales, which scales are formed from the remains of past leaves, and the rudiments of future ones. Neither is this the whole. In the coldest climates a third preservative is added, by the bud having a coat of gum or rozin, which being congealed, resists the strongest frosts.—Paley. Nat. Philosophy, c. 20.

BU'DGE, v. Bu'dger. } Perhaps immediately from the Fr. "Bouger, to stir, flit, remove, part from," (Cotgrave.) Bouger, Skinner suggests, is from the It. Volgere, from the Lat. Volvere, to roll, or turn. Menage directs us to the Ger. Wegen, be-wegen, to move; A. S. Wag-ian, to wag.

To move, to stir, to trudge; to get out of the way.

The vice-admiral of the hulkes being a head, would neither strike flag nor saile, but passed on without budging, whereupon our admirall lent him a piece of ordinance, which they repayed double, so that we grew to some little quarrel.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 769.

Yet Percie, as he was a most courageous knight,
Ne'er budg'd till his last breath, but in the field was slain.

Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 22.

Auffid. We hate alike:
Not Affricke ownes a serpent I abhorre
More then thy fame and envy: fix thy foot.
Mar. Let the first budger dye the others slaue,
And the gods doome him after.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 8.

If the customers or guests are to be dunned, all the burden lies upon my back, he'd as lief eat that glass as budge after them himself.—Goldsmith. The Vicar of Wakefield.

BUDGE, adj. Bu'dgeness. } Budge, Mr. Warton says, is fur; and Serenius, lambskin, pellis agnina, perhaps from Bock, which in Ger is the name given to the ram as well as to the goat, deer, &c. The word appears to have been applied to the dress or habit of those, from whom was expected, or who professed to preserve, great austerity of life; and thus to have acquired its application, viz.—

Rigid, severe, harsh, austere.

Com. O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoic fur,
And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub,
Praising the lean and sallow abstinence.—Milton. Comus.

If they mean, as more probably their meaning was, that rough garment spoken of Zach. xiii. 4, we may then behold the pitiful store of learning and theology, which these deceivers have thought sufficient to uphold their credit with the people, who, though the rancour that leavens them have somewhat quickened the common drawling of their pulpit elocution, yet for want of stock enough in scripture phrase to serve the necessary uses of their malice, they are become so liberal, as to part freely with their own budge gowns from off their backs, and bestow them on the magistrate as a rough garment to deceive.—Id. Art. of Peace, vol. i. p. 355.

A Sara for goodnesse, a great Bellona for budgenesse
For myldnesse Anna, for chastitye goodly Susanna.

Stanyhurst in Warton. English Poetry, vol. iii.

BU'DGET. Fr. Bougette; It. Bolgia; Dut. Boegett, boegiet, boegie. Vossius (de Vitiis, l. i, c. 2,) thinks it is from the Lat. Bulga. It is more probably from the Ger. Bug-en, bog-en; A. S. Bug-an, flectere in concavum vel convexum; to bow, to bow out, to hollow out. Cotgrave describes it to be—

"A little coffer or trunk of wood, covered with leather, wherewith the women of old time carried their jewels, attires, and trinkets, at their saddle bows, when they rode into the countrey: now the gentlemen call so both any such trunk, and the box or till of their cabinets, wherein they keep their money: also a little male, pouch, or budget."

Then if thou couet coyne enough to spend,
Learne first to spare thy budget at the brinke;
So shall the bottome be the faster bound.

Gascoigne. Memories.

This being espyed afarre off, our souldiors hot set upon their passage, stayed onely for this, that the masters of the works promised to frame bridges of budgets or bottles made of beasts hides that were slaine.—Holland. Amm. p. 274.

Diogenes, when he saw one make means to drink out of the ball of his hand, cast away the dish or cup that he carried in his budget.—Id. Plutarch, p. 207.

But oh th' important budget! usher'd in
With such heart-shaking music, who can say
What are its tidings? Cowper. Task, b. iv.

This day (Dec 7, 1796) Mr. Pitt produced his annual estimate of the public revenue and expenditure, with a demand of supplies, commonly called the budget.

Fox. Speeches, vol. vi. p. 237.

BUFF, v. Buff, n. Bu'ffet, v. Bu'ffet, n. Bu'ffeting, n. } Fr. Buffe, buffeter; It. Boffetto; Sp. Bofetada. Skinner and Junius think from Puff, to blow; in Fr. Bouffer. In Ger. Puffen is flare, flare cum sono, pulsare, facere ut sonet; whence, (Wachter continues,) puff is the sound from a blow, whether of a stick or fist. In Sw. Puff is a blow. Menage and Le Duchat observe, that Soufflete and Buffete are equivalent. "Soufflete, often puffed, or blown; also to cuff, box or clap on the ear," (Cotgrave.)

To strike, to beat, to thump.

He boffatede me aboute the mouthe.

Piers Ploughman, p. 402.

Whanne he hadde seid these thingis oon of the mynystris stondynge nygh gaf a buffe to Jhesus and seide, answerist thou so to the Bisschop.—Wiclif. Jon c. 28.

And leest the greetnesse of reuelaciouns entraunce me in pride, the pricke of my fleche an aungil of sathanas is ghoun to me that he bufete me.—Id. Corynth. c. 12.

And lest I should be exalted out of measure thorow yᵉ aboundaunce of reuelacions, ther was giuen vnto me vnquietnes of the fleshe, the messenger of Satan to buffet me.

Bible, 1551. Ib

Than thei spittin in his face, and smeten him with buffetis, othere gaven strokis with the pawme of her hondis in his face.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

Then spat they in his face and buffeted hym with fistes. And other smote hym with the palme of their handes on the face.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For as sayth Seint Barnard, while that I live I shal have remembrance of the foule spitting that men spitten in his face, of the buffettes that men yave him.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Moreouer comyng into a schole, and fynding not Homer's workes ther he gaue the master a buffet with his fyste.

Goudyng. Justine, Ded. l.

Fitz. Bavely run, Red hood,
There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From ought but a block.

B. Jonson. Loues Welcome at Welbeck.

Nathelesse so sore a buff to him it lent
That made him reele, and to his brest his bever bent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c 5.

The 28th day of April, diuers yoong men of yᵉ citie picked quarrels to certaine strangers, as they passed by yᵉ streetes, some they did strike & buffeted, and some they threw into the chanel.—Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1515.

By good right therefore, the fight with fists goeth first: wrestling followeth in the second place: and running commeth in the last for that buffetting representeth the charging of the enemy, and the avoiding of the recharge.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 553.

His wayward mates th' Æolian bag unbind,
Expecting treasures, but outrush'd a wind;
The sudden hurricane in thunder roars,
Buffets the bark, and whirls it from the shores.

Broome. Epistle to Fenton.

Those planks of tough and hardy oak, that used for years to brave the buffets of the Bay of Biscay, are now turned, with their warped grain, and empty trunnion holes, into very wretched pales for the enclosure of a wretched farmyard.—Burke. Letter to Lord Auckland.

BUFF, n. Buff, adj. Bu'ffalo. Bu'ffle. Bu'fflehead. } Buff, buffle, or buffalo. Fr. Bufle; It. and Sp. Bufalo; Dut. and Ger. Buffel; Lat. Bubalus; Gr. Βουβαλος. The Fr. Bufle, (bœuf sauvage,) is perhaps immediately from the Fr. Bœuf. See Beef.

Buff is also applied to a leather made of the skin of the animal; and to the colour of that leather. Bufflehead,—having the head of a buffle or buffalo, a large, thick, ill-formed head, (Skinner.)

To stand buff, is, perhaps, to stand sturdy as a buff or an ox.

I did see them farre off not able to discerne them perfectly, but their steps shewed that their feete were clouen, and bigger then feete of camels, I suppose them to be a kind of buffes which I read to bee in the countreyes adiacent, and very many in the firme land.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 133.

Item, ten or twelve good shirts of male being very good or else none, that may abide the shot of an arrow, and two buff jerkins.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 362.

Neither had the Greeks any experience of those neat or buffles called Uri and Bisontes: & yet the forrest of India be full of wild bulls & kine.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 10.

So fell this buffle-headed giant by the hand of Don Quixote.
Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, vol. iii. p. 3.

One thing, 'tis true, we ought to tell,
He liv'd and dy'd a colonel;
And for the good old cause stood buff,
'Gainst many a bitter kick and cuff.
Butler. Hudibras's Epitaph.

This goodly goose, all feather'd like a jay,
So gravely vain, and so demurely gay,
Last night t' adorn the court, did overload
Her bald buff forehead with a high commode.
Halifax. On the Countess Dowager of ———.

Far as the sickening eye can sweep around,
'Tis all one desert, desolate and grey,
Graz'd by the sullen buffalo alone.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. i.

The first, if I remember, is a sort of buff waistcoat, made antique fashion, very plain and without the least ornaments.
Goldsmith. Some Particulars relative to Charles XII.

A house there is (and that's enough)
From whence one fatal morning issues
A brace of warriors not in buff
But rustling in their silks and tissues.
Gray. A Long Story.

Though fools, like you, may think me rough,
And scorn me, 'cause I am in buff,
Yet your contempt I glad receive,
'Tis all the fame that you can give.—Smart, Fab. 16.

BUFFET, n. Hickes says, "Bufet. Gall. Abacus, in quo pocula et alia ad mensam reponuntur. Compositum est ex Francicis vel Sax. Beod, mensa; et fat vel vat; Sax. Fat fat, vas." Cotgrave calls it—

A high standing cupboard.

But hark! the charming clocks to dinner call,
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall:
The rich buffet well coloured serpents grace,
The gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.
Pope. The Use of Riches.

BUFFOON, v. }
BUFFOON, n. }
BUFFOONERY. }
BUFFOONING, n. }
BUFFOONLY. }

Fr. Bouffon; It. Buffone; Sp. Buffon. Wachter thinks from the Fr. Bouffen, Ger. Puffen, to puff, to blow. Salmasius, because they (scurræ) puffed out their cheeks in mimo to receive buffs or blows that they might sound the louder. Ferrarius, because they received the buffs or blows of others, (and for the amusement of others,) upon their cheeks puffed out. Du Cange, because they amused the spectators by buffing or cuffing each other. See Wachter in v. Puffen, and Menage in v. Bouffon.

Bouffoner, Cotgrave says, is to buffoonize it, to play the fool, jeaster, buffoon; basely to get a living by jests or jeasting.

A buffoon, Junius says, is a shrewd and crafty court fool, a fool of plesaunce, such as kings and great men love to entertain.

Who, in the great duke's court, buffoons his compliment,
According to the change of meats in season,
At every free lord's table
Ford. The Fancies Chaste and Noble, Act iii. sc. 1.

He giveth counsel unto Kings and Princes that be lovers and favourers of literature, to abide rather the reading and hearing of military narrations, and stratagems at their feasts and banquets, yea, and scurril talk of buffoons, pleasants, and jesters, then any questions propounded or discussed, as touching matters of poetry.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 487.

Such men become fit only for toys, and trifles, for apish tricks, and buffoonly discourse.
Goodman. Winter Evening's Conference, pt. i.

The first, are those buffoons that have a talent of mimicking the speech and behaviour of other persons, and turning all their patrons, friends, and acquaintance, into ridicule.
Tatler, No. 268.

Be pleased, therefore, once for all to let those gentlemen know, that there is neither mirth nor good humour in hooting a young fellow out of countenance, nor that it will ever constitute a wit, to conclude a tart piece of buffoonery with a what makes you blush?—Spectator, No. 443.

Amp. This must either be a dream, or drunkenness, or madness in thee: leave your buffooning and lying, I am not in the humour to bear it, sirrah.
Dryden. Amphitrion, Act iii.

But in the present state of men's minds and affairs do not flatter yourselves that they will piously look to the head of our church in the place of that pope, whom you make them forswear; and out of all reverence to whom you bully, and rail, and buffoon them.
Burke. Second Letter to Sir H. Langriche.

No more my titles shall my children tell,
The old buffoon will fit my name as well;
This day beyond its term my fate extends,
For life is ended when our honour ends.
Goldsmith. Prologue of Laberius.

They [pantomimes] were at first introduced upon the stage, as Scaliger supposes, to succeed the chorus and comedies, and divert the audience with buffoon postures and antic dances.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. vii. Let. 24.

BUG. }
BU'GBEAR. }
BU'GARO. }

In Sw. Puke is diabolus; Isl. Puke, dæmon. Scot. Pouke; Eng. Pucke or Pug, (See PUCK.) Applied to—

Some ugly object or spectre to terrify children, or any persons easily terrified or frightened.

He neither learneth, nor worketh any lõger for payne of ye rod or for fear of bugges or pleasure of apples, but doth all thynges of his oune courage.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 10.

Euen so veryly shall ye fulfill the law of Christ, and not with smyting your bretheren and putting stomblyng blockes before theyr weake feete, and killyng theyr consciences, and making them more afrayde of shadowes and bugges, then to breake theyr fathers commaundments, and to trust in wordes of winde and vanitie more then in theyr fathers promise.—Id. Ib. p. 186.

Matrimony hath euer been a blacke bugge in their sinagoge and churche.—Bale. Votaryes, Pref.

And here by the way it is to be noted that the taking of this carak wrought two extraordinary effects in England first that it taught others, that caracks were no such bugs but that they might be taken.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 123.

Yet were they but fooles and madde menne, to thinke, that either so mighty a prince could be feared with bugges and rattles.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 733.

As silly children dare not bend their eye,
Where they are told strange bug beares haunt the place,
Or as new monsters while in bed they lie
Their fearefull thoughtes present before their face.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xiii. s. 18.

There being nothing so extravagant and outrageously wild, which a mind once infected with atheistical sottishness and disbelief, will not rather greedily swallow down, than admit a Deity, which to such is the highest of all paradoxes imaginable, and the most affrightful bug bear.
Cudworth. Intellect. System, p. 106.

What has this bugbear, death, that's worth our care?
After a life in pain and sorrow past.
After deluding hope and dire despair,
Death only gives us quiet at the last.
Walsh. Sonnet. Death.

Jocky my love, nay don't you cry;
Take you abroad! indeed not I;
For all the bugaboes to fright ye—
Besides the naughty horse will bite ye.—Lloyd. Chit-Chat.

——— Then might the drunkard
Reel over his full bowl, and, when 'tis drain'd,
Fill up another to the brim, and laugh
At the poor bugbear death. Blair. The Grave.

BUG. Big, sometimes so written. Not an uncommon expression in the North. He is quite bug; i. e. great, proud, swaggering.

Hunt. Dainty sport toward Dalyell: sit, come, sit, sit and be quiet; here are kingly bugs words.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc. 2.

But when her circling nearer doun doth pull,
Then gins she swell, and waxen bug with horn,
But loose her light, parts clad with darknesse dull
She shows to us.
More. Song of the Soul, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 2. s. 63.

BU'GLE, or BU'LL. }
BU'GLE-HORN. }

See BULL. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, that Bugle-horn is a drinking-vessel made of horn, and that he has been told, that in some part of the North a bull is now called a bugle. (See the quotation from Bible.) Skinner thinks that Bugle-horn is Buculæ cornu. Lye, that Bugle is the Bonasus; and Bugle-horn, the horn of the Bonasus. Junius, that Bugle-horn may be derived from the English, to bow; A. S. Bigan or Bugan; (sc.)

A crooked horn.

Janus sits by the fire with double berd,
And drinketh of his bugle horn the wine.
Chaucer. The Frankeines Tale, v. 11,565.

These are the beastes which ye shall eat of oxen, shepe, & gootes, hert, roo, and bugle, wylde goote, vnicorne, &c.
Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 14.

Vulcan now makes his anvil ring,
Dick whistles loud, and Maud doth sing;
And Silvio, with his bugle horn,
Winds an imprime unto the morn.
Cotton. The Morning Quatrains

So stoutly Boreas his loud bugle blew
Doun to the dales the trembling deer withdrew.
Fawkes. Virgil. Æn. b. vii.

The bugle-horn inspire, whose clam'rous bray
Shall rouse from sleep the rebel rout, and tune
To temper fair the labours of the day.
Smart. The Hop Garden.

BUILD, v. }
BU'ILDER. }
BU'ILDING, n. }
BU'ILT, n. }

A. S. Byldan, is to confirm, to establish, to make firm, and sure, and fast; to consolidate, to strengthen; and is applicable to all other things as well as to dwelling places. Huts and hovels are merely things raised up Buildings should be confirmed, established, strengthened structures. See Tooke.

The Dut. Beelden; Ger. Bilden, are used somewhat more widely; viz. to form or fashion, to express or represent the form or image; the shape.

To build is used to denote—

To establish, to construct upon a basis or foundation; to base, to found; to construct (any edifice).

The Englysse and the Saxons, that alone tho were,
Grete townes and castles bygonne builde and rere,
That hil adde er yeast adoun. R. Gloucester, p. 256.

Nywe abbeyes he made vaste thys gode Athelstone,
And ther nas of olde house in the lond non,
That he ne amendede myd som lond, other myd byldynge.
Id. p. 271.

And yet these bilderes wiln beggen, a bagge ful of whete
Of a pure pore man, that may onethe paye
Half his rent in a yere, and half ben byhynde.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And I sey to thee thou art Peter and on this stoon I schal bilde my chirche and the gatis of helle schulen not have myght agens it.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 16.

Jhesus seith to hem redden ye nevere in scripturis, the stoon whiche the bilderis reproveden, this is maade into the heid of the cornere.—Id. Ib. c. 21.

Jesus sayde vnto them; did ye neuer reade in the scriptures: the stone which the bylders refused the same is set in the principal parte of the corner.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And whanne he went out of the temple oon of hise disciplis seide to him maistir bihoold what maner of stoones and what maner buildingis. And Jesus answerde and seyde to him seest thou all these grete byldingis ther schal not be left a stoon on a stoon which schal not be distryed.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 13.

And as he went out of the temple, one of his disciplis sayd vnto hem, master, se what stones, and what byldynges are here. And Jesus answered and sayde vnto hym. Seyst thou these great byldinges. There shall not be lefte one stone vpon another, that shall not bee thrown downe.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Thought I by saint Thomas of Kent
This were a feble foundement
To builden on a place hie
He ought him little to glorifie
That hereon bilte, God so me save.
Chaucer. The Third Book of Fame.

The bird that sometime built within my breast,
And there as then chiefe succour did receiue;
Hath now elsewhere built her another nest
And of the old hath taken quite her leave.
Vncer. Auctors. To his Loue hauing forsaken him, &c.

After that ye went to hym into the towne desyryng him to se your newe buyldynges, and he obeyed in euery thynge to you, and drank of your wyne: and is this ye grete loue that ye shewed him to put him to dethe?
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 84.

Hence it is that the building of our Sion rises no faster, because our tongues are divided; happy were the church of God, if we all speak but one language; whiles we differ, we can build nothing but Babel; difference of tongues caused their Babel to cease, but it builds ours.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of Babel.

Thrason was the first builder of towne walls: of towers and fortresses, the Cyclopes, as Aristotle thinketh: but the Tyrinthians, according to Theophrastus.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

And as the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 60.

To draw up stones of such prodigious weight,
And raise th' amazing heaps to such a height,
What huge machine, what forceful instrument
Did your blind builder of the world invent.
Blackmore. Creation, b. iv.

Odes, once printed cannot well be altered when the author has already said, that he expects his works should live for ever: and it had been very foolish in my friend Horace, if some years after his Exegi Monumentum, he should have desired to see his building taken down again.
Prior. Postscript.

The French builders, clearing away as mere rubbish whatever they found, and like their ornamental gardeners, forming every thing into an exact level, propose to rest the whole local and general legislature on three bases of three different kinds.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

BULB, v. BULB, n. BU'LBOUS. } Gr. Βολβος; Lat. Bulbus; Fr. Bulbe. Lennep doubts whether the Gr. Βολβος should be deduced (through βολος) from Βαλλειν, jacere, (to throw forth,) or from ολειν, (with β prefixed,) whence, he remarks, ολλυμι,—perdere, proprie volvendo, præcipitando,—and also the Lat. volvere. Ολω, he forms thus, Ολλυω, ολλω, ολω. The reason of the name, he is of opinion, must be sought a rotunditate, whether acquired a volvendo, or a projiciendo. (See also Martinius and Vossius.) A bulb is—

Any thing round; particularly applied to a round root.

A stone———
——— wherein are all
The mouldings of a round-turn'd pedestal,
Whence bulbing out in figure of a sphere,
The whole above is finish'd in a small
Pellucid spire crown'd with a crystal ball.
Cotton. Wonders of the Peake.

For this ridiculous round root [of the mushroom] called the bulb, which maketh us so good sport, and is grown into a by-word, little though it be, escapeth not by that meanes from thunder, but because it hath a property clean contrary unto it.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 577.

Garden plants and hearbes be not all commendable in one and the same respect. For of some the goodnesse lieth onely in their bulbous and round root: of others contrariwise in their head aloft.—Id. Plinie, b. xix. c. 4.

But these are things of most prodigious hopes,
They 're Jesuit bulbs tied up with ropes,
And these the devils, grafts for further popes.
King. Orpheus & Eurydice.

Or sow the bulbous turnip; this shall yield
Sweet pasture to the flocks or lowing herds,
And well prepare thy land for future crops.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

BULGE, or BILGE, v. BULGE, n. } The glossarist to Gawin Douglas says: Bilge, now Bulge, the sides of a ship or any such like standing out, from Ger. Buly (bulga), or from bauch (venter). Dr. Jamieson says, it seems naturally allied to the Sw. Goth. Buly-in, to swell. (See BOWGE, and BULK.) Bilge is applied to—

That which bulges or bellies out; to the whole expanse, or bulk of the ship's bottom. A ship is said to bilge, when after striking upon a rock, &c. she opens her bulge or belly so as to admit the water.

But as we came out at the sayd Goldemore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certain rockes, that lye to the northward of the said gate, and was like to be bilged and lost.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 310.

There I went a land in our boat & found three or four fisher-boats, and brought one of them off. The rest bulged themselves.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 579.

The next morning, at day-break, she [the Wager] struck on a sunken rock, and soon after bilged, and grounded between two small islands, at about a musquet-shot from the shore.—Anson. Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 2.

The rest in storms of sounding whirlwinds fly,
Toss the wild waves, and battle in the sky;
Fatal to man! at once all ocean roars,
And scatter'd navies bulge on distant shores.
Broome. The Complaint.

——— Till borne adrift
Against some icy mountain's bulging sides
They reel and are no more.
Armstrong. Imitations of Shakespeare.

BULK. BU'LKY. BU'LKINESS. } R. Brunne (see in v. Bull) and Chaucer write it Bouke. Dark bulk in Surrey, is bilgis derne in G. Douglas. Dut. Beuck, venter, truncus corporis; Ger. Bauch; A. S. Buce, from A. S. Bug-an; Ger. Bug-en, to bow; arcuare in concavum vel convexum, to arch or bow either concavely or convexly. See BULGE.

That which bows, bulges, or bellies out; the greatest circumference, expanse, magnitude, size, mass or body.

The clotered blood, for any leche-craft,
Corrumpeth, and is in his bouke ylaft,
That neyther veine blood, ne ventousing,
Ne drinke of herbes may ben his helping.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2784.

In the dark bulk they closde bodies of men
Chosen by lot, and did enstuff by stealth
The hollow womb with armed soldiers.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Vpon the whiche, after he hadde hangyd a shorte season, he was cutte down, beynge alyve, and his bowellys rypped out of his bely and cast into the fyre there by him, and lyued tyll the bowcher put his hande into the bulke of his body; insomuch that he sayd in the same instant, "O Lord Jhesu, yet more trouble," & so dyed to the great compassion of moche people.—Fabyan, p. 672.

Long stoode I in a dumpe,
my hart began to ake
My liver leapt within my bulck
my trembling hands did shake.
Turbervile. Pyndara's Answer, &c.

It so fortuned that he [the Duke of Burgundy] was walking late one night, he found a country fellow dead drunke, snorting on a bulke, he caused his followers to bring him to his palace, and there stripping him of his old cloathes, and attiring him after the court fashion, when he awaked, he and they were all ready to attend upon his excellency, persuading him he was some great duke.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 274.

Minerva made me so renowned; and that most tall strong peere
I slue, his bigge bulke lay on earth, extended here and there,
As it were covetous to spread the center every where.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

But that which is devoid of bulk and magnitude, is likewise devoid of local motion.—Cudworth. Intel. Syst. p. 775.

Notwithstanding some papers may be made up with broken Lints and irregular sketches, it is often expected that every sheet should be a kind of treatise, and make out in thought what it wants in bulk.—Spectator, No. 124.

Oh! that such bulky bribes as all might see,
Still, as of old, encumber'd villainy!
Could France or Rome divert our brave designs
With all their brandies, or with all their wines.
Pope, Epist. 3.

Money is the best measure of the altered value of things in a few years: because its vent is the same, and its quantity alters slowly. But wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money; because of its bulkiness, and too quick change of its quality.
Locke. Considerations of Money, s. 15.

General reasonings seem intricate, merely because they are general; nor is it easy for the bulk of mankind to distinguish in a great number of particulars, that common circumstance in which they all agree, or to extract it, pure and unmixed, from the other superfluous circumstances.
Hume, pt. ii. Ess. 1.

It is well known, that an unbounded freedom is now indulged to the publication of the most licentious opinions; and that these are not, as formerly, confined to bulky volumes of infidelity, or to dull and phlegmatical reasoners.
Portens, vol. i. Ser. 8.

BULL. BU'LLARY. BU'LLIAN. BU'LLIST. BU'LLETIN. } Fr. Bulle; It. Bulla; Sp. Bolla; Mid. Lat. Bulla; Ger. and Dut. Bulle. It has its name, (says Wachter,) from its seal, which was of a round shape, in many cognate languages called Boll, (in English Ball,) from Bol-en, to roll, to turn. Meursius gives a barbarous Greek word, Βουλλα, sigillum, a seal. For the various kinds of bulls or seals, see Spelman, in v. Bulla, Du Cange and Menage.

A bull is also applied to that which expresses something in opposition to what is intended, wished, or felt; and so applied from the contrast of humble profession with despotic commands of Papal bulls. See the quotation from Milton.

Bulletin is a diminutive of bull.

The pape Celestyn, of none aviseinent,
With letter bulled fyn assoyled to Scotland sent.
R. Brunne, p. 265.

The pape his bulle sent hider vnto the legate,
& comanded him to preache thorgh alle the lond,
The Sarasens do grete wreche, the Cristen for to schond.
Id. p. 226.

The were merchauns murye, some wepte for loye
And preyde for Piers Ploughman, that purchas'd hem this bulle.—Piers Ploughman, p. 149.

So proued he his authority & not with a bull frō Peter sealed with cold lead, either with shadowes of the Old Testament falsly expounded.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 126.

Sir, we haue laboured so moche to thē of our craftes, that they be well enclyned to haue peace, so that our lorde the Duke of Burgyon wolde pardon them and to graunt vs our aūcyent fraunchesses according to the tenours of our charters and bulles.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 15.

But that such a poem should be toothless, I still affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself. For if it bite neither the persons nor the vices, how is it a satyr? and if it bite either, how is it toothless? so that toothless satyrs are as much as if he had said toothless teeth.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

And wheras the Papist boasts himself to be a Roman Catholic, it is a mere contradiction, one of the Pope's bulls, as if he should say, Universal particular; a Catholic schismatick.—Id. Of true Religion, &c.

You love toothless satyrs; let me inform you, a toothless satyr is as improper as a toothless sleek-stone, and as bullish.
Id. Animad. upon the Remonst. Defence.

The whole bull is extant in the bullery of Laertius Cherubinus, tom. i. p. 12, printed at Rome, 1617.
South, vol. v. Ser. 5.

All things in this his fulminating bull are not of so innoxious a tendency. His doctrines affect our constitution in its vital parts.—Burke. Reflect. on the French Revolution.

The Pope was pleased with the narrative, and by a formal bull, conferred upon the crown of Portugal all the countries which should be discovered as far as India, together with India itself.—Johnson. Introduction to the World Displayed.

I am inclined to prefer the pithy and sententious brevity of these bulletins of ancient rebellion, before the loose and confused prolixity of the modern advertisements of constitutional information.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

BULL, n. BULL, v. BU'LCHIN. BU'LLOCK. } Dut. Bolle; Ger. Boll, from A. S. Bellan; Ger. Bellen, mugire, boare, to roar or bellow, as a bull, ox, or cow. (See Somner.) In A. S. Bulgian, is, to bellow; and Mr. Tyrwhitt remarks that a bull in some parts of the North is now called a boogle. (See BUGLE.) Bull-beggar, Dr. T. Hickes thinks, is bold-beggar.

Bull, used as a prefix, denotes great size or strength, large, ugly.

Hengist sende in to hys contre aftur more power sone
Tho carf he bole hyde smale al to a thong
Thoru out, wil he wolde laste, & tho was he soudel long.
R. Gloucester, p. 110.

For ten mark men sold a litille bulchyn,
Litille lesse men told a bouke of a mouton.
R. Brunne, p. 174.

For it is ympossible, that sinnes be don awei bi blood of bolis and of buckis of geet.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 10.

Annibal perceluinge the daunger that he and his armye were in, commaunded in the deepe of the nyghte, wham nothyng was sterynge, to be brought before hym about two thousande great oxen and bullies, whiche a lyttel before his men had taken in foragynge, and caused fagottes made of dry sticks to be fastened vnto theyr hornes and set on fyre.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 10.

The wolfe and the lambe shall fede together, and the lyon shall eate hay like a bullock.—Bible, 1551. Isa. c. 45.

And to my lord for to bewray my minde,
Methinks they be a race of bulbeefe borne,
Whose hartes their butter mollyfieth by kinde.
And so the force of beefe is cleane outworne.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande, an. 1572.

Kine commonly take at the first seasoning; but if it chance that they miss and stand not to it, the twentieth day after they seeke the fallow, and goe a bulling againe.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 45.

When I marked further what haste they made to go to the battle again I began to laugh at myself, and thought that the fear in which you put me was with a vizor only, which you had taken upon you, and so made me afraid, as children be afraid of bear-bugs and bull-beggars.
Strype. Life of Sir T. Smith, Appendix.

And better yet than this, a bulchin two years old,
A curl'd pate calf it is, and oft could have been sold.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

The Baalites might lay ready their bullock upon the wood, and water in their trench; but they might sooner fetch the blood out of their bodies, and destroy themselves, than one flash out of heaven to consume the sacrifice.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Nadab & Abihu.

—— And him Merione
Charg'd with a glittering dart, that took his bul-hide orbic shield,
Yet pierc't it not, but, in the top, Itaclfe did peece-meale yeald. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

And choose to sit and talk with thee
(As thy great orders may decree)
Of cocks and bulls, and flutes and fiddles,
Of idle tales and foolish riddles.
Prior. On Beauty. A Riddle.

There is to be a scene of Hockley in the Hole, in which is to be represented all the diversions of that place, the bull-baiting only excepted, which cannot possibly be exhibited in the theatre, by reason of the lowness of the roof.
Spectator, No. 31.

He said, and threw the trembling weapon pass'd
Through nine bull-hides, each under other plac'd,
On his broad shield, and stuck within the last.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

Others are apt to think that these Mohocks are a kind of bum-beggars, first invented by prudent married men, and masters of families, in order to deter their wives and daughters from taking the air at unseasonable hours.
Spectator, No. 347.

Nor shall the rascal rabble here have place,
Whom kings no title gave, and God no grace;
Not bull faced Jonas, who could statutes draw
To mean rebellion, and make treason law.
Dryden. Absolom & Achitophel.

All the harmless part of him is no more than that of a bull-dog, they are tame no longer than they are not offended.
Spectator, No. 438.

BU'LLET. See BULL. Fr. Boulet. Something rounded; a small boll or ball.

Fansie (quoth he) farewell, which made me follow drommes,
Where powdered bullets serues for sauce to euery dish that comes.
Gascoigne. The Green Knight's Farewell to Fansie.

The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.
Shakespeare. The Passionate Pilgrim.

The 4th of Januarie, a ship before Greenwich (the court being there) shot off her ordinance, one piece being charged with a bullet of stone, which passed through the walles of the court and did no more hurt —Stow. Q. Mary, an. 1557.

Sir Arthur Georges had his left leg shot through with a musket ball, who, without remembring any pain it gave him observes the bullet burnt both his silk stocking and buskin.—Oldys. Life of Raleigh.

So when I throw a bullet into water, I find it sinks: and when I throw the same bullet into quicksilver, I see it swims: but if I beat out this bullet into a thin hollow shape like a dish, then it will swim in the water also.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 2.

One observation was, that the wind of a common bullet, though flying never so near, is incapable of doing the least harm, and indeed, were it otherwise, no man above deck would escape —Johnson. Life of Sheffield.

BU'LLION. Fr. Billon. Junius calls it, Ornamentum pectoris. Bullions on bridles, Bullæ in frænis. Skelton speaks of them as ornaments to a book. Hall,—as ornaments of dress. And as applied to the metals, gold or silver, it seems merely to be a ball, mass, or lump—a piece uncoined. See also the quotation from Locke.

To beholde how it was garnisshed and bound,
Encouerde ouer with golde of tissue fine
The claspes and bullions were worthe a m. pounde.
Skelton. The Crown of Laurel.

After thé came vi. disguised in white satyne and greene embroudered and set with letters and castels of fine gold in bullion —Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 2.

Their apparell all tissue cloth of gold and silver, and goldsmith's worke, great chains of baldrickes of gold and belts of bullion.—Id. Ib. an. 5.

As yet we cannot tell what we should term our labours, from or bullion, only it belongeth to your majesty to make them fit either for the forge or the mint; current by the stamp or counterfeit by the anvil
Lyly. Alexander & Campaspe, Epilogue.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign countries.
Locke. Further Considerations

The spangles of wit which he [Prior] could afford he knew how to polish, but he wanted the bullion of his master, [Butler]—Johnson. Life of Prior.

BULLITION. Lat. Bullire, ebullire; Fr. Bouiller, to boil. See BOIL, and EBULLITION.

There is to be observed in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are as the bullition; the precipitation to the bottom.—Bacon. Physiol. Remains.

BU'LLY, v. }
BU'LLY, n. }
BU'LLYING, n. } Skinner has three conjectures, Burly, Bulky, and Bull-eyed. It is more probably from Bulla, the Pope's Bull.

To arrogate, to threaten, to domineer, to bluster; (sc.) as the Pope in his Bulls, or as those invested with authority by them.

I kisse the durtie shooe, and from my heart-string I loue the louely bully —Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 1.

For the last fortnight, there have been prodigious shoals of volunteers gone over to bully the French, upon hearing the peace was just signing —Tatler, No. 26.

The blustering bully, in our neighbouring streets,
Scorns to attack the female whom he meets.
Prior. Epistle to Mrs. Manley's Lucius.

For this what wonders, goodness, have I wrought!
How bully'd, begg'd, how treated, and how fought.
P. Whitehead. State Dunces.

Be equally ashamed of dogmatical prejudice, and sceptical incredulity for both are as remote from the spirit of true philosophy, as bullying and cowardice from true valour.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 2.

I undertook the affair, disarmed my antagonist, and soon after had the pleasure of finding that the lady was only a woman of the town, and the fellow her bully and a sharper.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield.

BU'L-RUSH, a stronger and larger kind of rush.

His coat of goats haire, his girdel of bulrushes, and a wild eglentine in his hand.—Golden Boke, M. 3. 1.

The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within the reeds a trembling wood.
Dryden. Meleager & Atalanta.

A slender fir, ten cubit length I found
Fall'n from a mould'ring bank and stript it round,
This for the mast, with bulrush ropes I ty'd;
A pole to steer the rudder's use supply'd.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. iv.

BU'LWARK, v. }
BU'LWARK, n. } Fr. Boulevart; It. Bolevardo; Sp. Baluarte; Ger. and Dut. Bolwerke; Sw. Bolwarke. Wachter thinks that it is from Bolen, jaculari, to throw. Skinner thinks that it is from Boll, a globe, and work; (q. d.) a circular work. Junius observes that in Dutch there is Bolwerck or Blockwerch, and also Block-huys; as if originally constructed of blocks, i. e. trunks of trees, &c. A bulwark, is—

A work carried round, as a defence or fortification; a defence, protection, or security.

And made also by workmen that were true,
Barbicans, and bulwerkes strong and new.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

The aungell of the Lorde bulwerketh rounde about ye godly.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

The armie to the nombre of xxx. of the ladies part, & xv. c. Englishmen passed through Brabant, & came the x daie of August beyng S. Laurẽce daie, before a little stádyng on the higher side of the riuer Muse called Brymuoyst strongly bulwerked.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 4.

Moch more my soule is troubled by the blastes
Of these assawtes, that come as thick as hayle,
Of worldly vanities that temptation castes
Agaynst the bulwerke of the fleshe frayle.—Wyat. Ps. 6.

Whan Kynge Edwarde herde of the pryde of the Scottes, and knew of their scornful ryme he was sore displeased and encouraged his knyghtes in suche wyse that they wanne the dyche of the town, and after in processe with greate labours and daunger the bulwerkes.—Fabyan, an. 1296.

Where those rough ireful tides, as in her streightes they meet,
With boist'rous shocks and roars each other rudely greet:
Which fiercely when they charge and sadly make retreat
Upon the bulwarkt forts of Hurst and Calshoot beat.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

The Frenchmen within the towne, being dispoiled of these two places, yet spared not to shoote off from their wals and bulwerkes, doing what they could, and namely from the castle, and greene bulwarke, they did much hurte to the Englishmen with their shotte.—Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1544.

And yet no bulwark'd town, nor distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen;
No mountains rise, nor oceans flow between.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

Prayers are the bulwarks of piety and good conscience, the which ought to be placed so as to flank and relieve one another, together with the interjacent spaces of our life.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

—— Like the mural strength,
Of some proud city, bulwark'd round and arm'd
With rising tow'rs to guard her wealthy stores,
Immovable, impenetrable stood
Laconia's serry'd phalanx. Glover. Leonidas, b. viii.

BUM, v. }
BUM, n. }
BU'MBLE, v. }
BUMP, n. }
BUMP, v. } Bum, bumble, or bump, (see BOMB and BOOM.) Dut. Bommen, bombannen, resonare.

Applied to the noise of the bittern; of a bee; also to the noise which some things make when fallen, or struck upon, or against, another; to the blow or stroke; to the consequence of such fall, blow, or stroke; (sc.) a swelling or lump.

For an example of Bumble in Chaucer, and Bump in Brown and Dryden, see BITTERN.

For Tyndall dydde yet at the lastwyne make some bumlyng aboute a colour for the matter, with a long processe of historicall faith and feelynge faith
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1058.

—— Fox furr'd Mecho—
Hath rak'd together some four thousand pound,
To make his smug girl bear a bumming sound
In a young merchant's ear.
Marston. Scourge of Villany, b. i. s. 4.

Which Archbishop being loath to remoove, the other sette his buttocke in his lappe, but hee haulde vnneth touched him with his bumme, when the bishops and other of the clergie and laitie stept to him, pulled him, threw him to the ground, and began to lay on him with fistes and battes.
Stow. Hen. II. an. 1176.

But the last and simplest of all lines is the right; for of the round line that part which is within, doth crook and curb hollow, the other without doth bump and bunch.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 836.

Nurse. Yes madam, yet I cannot chuse but laugh, to thinke it should leaue crying, & say I: and yet I warrant it had vpon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young cockrels stone.—Shakespeare. Rom. & Jul. Act i. sc. 3.

For if his holiness would thump
His reverend bum 'gainst horses rump,
He might b' equipt from his stable
With one more white, and eke more able.
Prior. An Ep. to F. Shepherd, Esq.

BUMBA'ILIFF. A Bound-bailiff. (See Blackstone, b. i. c. 9.)

Tw. Go Sir Andrew: scout mee for him at the corner of the orchard like a bum-baylie.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 4.

Wit. The rogue has no manners at all, that I must own; —no more breeding than a bum-bailiff, that I grant you.
Congreve. Way of the World, Act i.

When we look into the true nature of his authority, he appears to be nothing more than a chief of bumbailiffs, sergeants at mace, catchpoles, jailors, and hangmen.
Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

BUMBA'ST. See BOMBAST.

BU'MPER. Perhaps Bombard or bumbard, (qv.)

They, whom such vast fatigues attend,
Want some soft minutes to unbend,
To show the world, that now and then
Great ministers are mortal men.
Then Rhenish rummers walk the round,
In bumpers every king is crown'd.
Dryden. Sir G. Etherege, Ep. 7.

Love is enjoin'd to name his favourite toast
And Hare's the goddess that delights him most,
Phœbus approves, and bids the trumpet sound,
And Bacchus in a bumper sends it round.
Lansdowne. Written on a Drinking Glass.

Pray get a pure snug room, and I hope next term to help fill your bumper with our people of the club.
Spectator, No. 264.

Let gen'rous Britons, brave and free,
Still boast their punch and honesty.
Life is a bumper fill'd by fate,
And we the guests, who share the treat.
Blacklock. Prologue to Hamlet.

BU'MPKIN. }
BU'MKINLY. } "I know not," says Skinner, "whether from the Dut. Boomken, arbuscula, the diminutive of Boom, arbor, a beam. A foolish fellow, in Latin," he adds, "is called a stock or a log, (stipes et lignum.)" Dr. T. H. thinks it is—quasi pumpkin; one who feeds on the vilest food, viz. pumpkins. It is applied to—

A clumsy, ignorant clown.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears:
The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears.
But here, attir'd beyond our purse we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine:
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

This bumpkin had it seems been told
The story of the cup of gold,
Which fame reports is to be found
Just where the rainbow meets the ground.
Winkle. The Boy & the Rainbow.

BUNCH, v. } Fr. Bigne, which Menage says
Bunch, n. } has been derived from the Gr.
Bu'nchy. } Βουνος, acervus, a heap. Serenius gives the Goth. Bunke, a heap: Bunga ut, to project, to be prominent. Perhaps the same word as Bench; any thing rising or protuberant. It is applied to—

A rising or swelling; to any things united or collected together so as to resemble a heap or cluster—as a bunch of grapes; a bunch of keys.

This leper loge take for thy goodly bour
And for thy bed, take now a bunch of stro.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

And euer I think on Esop's tale, that whē the lion had proclaimed that on pain of deth there should none horned beast abide in that wood, one that had in his forehed a bonch of flesh, fled away a great pace.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 71.

But he [Beckett] passed on vntil he came to the vttermost gate of the court, which being fast locked, there he had bene stayed: had not one of his servaunts called Peter, fynding there a bunch of keyes hanging first prouyng one key and then another, at last chaunced vpon the right key, and so opened the gate and let him out.
Grafton. Hen. II. an. 10.

Thus speaking an unshapen bunchy speare with bark unpilde,
Sir Pandare whirlyng threw.
Phaer. Virgile. Eneidos, b. ix.

Here hath M Hardinge wel multiplied, and encreased his lyes, and hathe brought vs foorthe a whole bunche of them altogether.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 143.

And Arne, where the vine trees are with vigorous bunches bow'd. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Qu. O thou did'st prophesie, the time would come,
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottel'd spider, that foule bunch-back'd toad.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

It has the resemblance of a champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end.
Woodward. On Fossils.

When one approach'd who bore much sober grace,
Order and ceremony in his face;
A threatening rod did his dread right hand poize,
A badge of rule and terrour o'er the boys:
His left a massy bunch of keys did sway,
Ready to open all to all that pay.—Otway. Windsor Castle.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs.—Gree. Museum.

When Tom, an' please your honour, got to the shop, there was nobody in it but a poor negro girl, with a bunch of white feathers slightly tied to the end of a long cane flapping away flies—not killing them.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. ix. c. 6.

BU'NDLE, v. } A. S. Byndel; i. e. Bondel,
Bu'ndle, n. } bond-dæl is compounded of two participles, bond and dæl, (deal):—
A small part or portion bound up, (Tooke.)

And when Paul had gathered a bondel of styckes, and put them in the fyre, there came a vyper out of the heate and leapt on his hande.—Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 28.

And yf any man ryse to persecute the, and to seke thy soule, the soule of my lord be bounde in a bondel of life with the Lord thy God. And the soules of thine enemys be alonge in the mydel of a sling.—Id. 1551. 1 Samuel, c. 25.

Yet a man is risen to pursue thee and to seek thy soul, but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God, and the souls of thine enemies them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling.
Id. Modern Version. Ib.

I haue gathered as it were a little bundle of flowers to thētent, that such as haue learned Greeke might haue whereby to be admonished, and they which haue not learned Greeke, whereby to be instructed.—Goldyng. Justine, p. 9. Pref.

In the palace treasury at Westminster, I have seen a bundle of books, written as is supposed, by Dr. Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and this Dr. Clerk, Bishop of Bath and Wells.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

So closely treasur'd in the bosom lies
The bundled myrrh, so sweet the scented gale
Breathes all En-gedi's aromatic vale.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry. Solomon.

Some ludicrous schoolmen have put the case, that if an ass were placed between two bundles of hay, which affected his senses equally on each side, and tempted him in the very same degree, whether it would be possible for him to eat of either.—Spectator, No. 191.

Down came my wife and daughters, drest out in all their former splendour: their hair plastered up with pomatum, their faces patched to taste, their trains bundled up in a heap behind, and rustling at every motion.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 4.

Every school boy can have recourse to the fable of the rods, which when united in a bundle, no strength could bend, but when separated into single twigs, a child could break with ease.—Id. Essay 9.

BUNG. } The Dut. Bonde, bomme; Fr.
Bu'nghole. } Bonde, bondon, may be from the A. S. Bind-an, to bind, to fasten, and thus to close or stop up. But the English Bung does not seem allied to them. Perhaps from the Fr. Bigne, a bump or knob.

Thus also ought the lids and bungs of the vessels to be ordered, with an addition besides of masticke and pitch.
Holland. Plinie, b. xiv. c. 21.

One of the pipes of sackes that is in the Swallow, which hath two round compasses vpon the bung, is to be presented to the Emperour: for it is special good.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 309.

Ham. To what base vses we may returne Horatio. Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

BU'NGLE, v. } Of unknown etymology.
Bu'ngle, n. } In Fr. Bouganner.
Bu'ngler. } To do or perform any thing
Bu'ngling. } imperfectly, awkwardly, clumsily, unskilfully.

I thought it rather better to seke the edification of the playne vnlearned by playne turnyng of wordes, then by tedious circumlocution to make a paraphrase vpon a paraphrase, and by that meanes, not oneive to leaue the simple vulgare people vntaught or neuer the better, but also in vayne sekynge after curiositie to be iustly laught to scorne, for bungling at the thyng that is farre aboue my capacitie.
Tdal. Prologue to Ephesians.

For if ye take heede vnto him, ye shall sone perceiue that he is eué but a very bungler.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1089.

Neither can there be any deed so perfect that could not be amended, when a blind bungler wondreth at his glorious woorkes, a cunning workman yt hath a cleare iudgement perceaueth that it is vnpossible to make a woorke that coulde not be made better.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 392.

What a disgrace it were bungerlie to botch vp a rub garment by clouting it with patches of sundrie colours.
Hollinshed. Chron. of Ireland, Epist. Ded.

Or being blind, (as fittest for the trade,)
Go hire thyself some bungling harper's boy.
Drayton, Idea 67.

This opinion is further confuted by those ἁμαρτήματα (as Aristotle calls them) those errors and bungles which are committed, when the matter is inept and contumacious.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 150.

But how should any signpost dawber know
The worth of Titian or of Angelo?
Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty, shows a master's hand.
Dryden. To Mr. Lee on his Alexander.

For to denominate them even monsters, they must have had some rude kind of organical bodies; some stamina of life, though never so clumsy; some system of parts compounded of solids and liquids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar motions and functions.
Bentley, Ser. 8.

I would, however, earnestly exhort my friend, the metaphysician, to believe himself a free agent upon the bare authority of his own feelings, and not to imagine that nature is such a bungler in her trade, as first to intend to impose upon him, and then inadvertently give him sagacity to see through the imposture.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 2.

I always had an idea that it [the rising at Ravenna] would be bungled; but was willing to hope.
Byron. Diary, Feb. 24, 1821.

BUNN. Fr. "Bignets, little round loaves or lumps made of fine meal, oyl or butter, and raisins," (Cotgrave.) See Fr. Bigne, in v. Bunch.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear:
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth
Or bunne and sugar to the damsel's tooth.
Gay. Pastorals.

BU'NNIANS. Fr. Bigne, a bump or swelling. Cotgrave interprets the adj. Bigne, club, or crump-footed.

What if from Van's dear arms I should retire,
And once more warm my bunnions at your fire.
If I to Bow-street should invite you home,
And set a bed up in my dining room,
Tell me, dear Mr. Congreve, would you come?
Rowe. An Imitation of Horace, b. iii. Ode 9.

BUNT. } Bunts are perhaps bent or broken
Bu'nter. } bits. And if this be correct, a bunter may have been originally applied—

To one who picks up bits of any thing about the streets or ways, and then to any low woman.

The bunt of a sail, ni fallor, says Skinner, is the bent of a sail, that part of the sail which is pregnant with wind, which receives the wind in its full bosom.

Having not flint evermore readie at hand to smite and kindle fire withall, they make shift for to rub and grate one wood against another, and by this attrition there flie out sparkles which lighting upon some timber, made either of drie rotten touchwood, or of bunts and withered leaves, very quickly catch fire, and burne not out.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 40.

See how she's dressed, as fine as hands and pins can make her, while her two marriageable daughters, like bunters in stuff gowns, are now taking sixpennyworth of tea at the White Conduit-house.—Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 2. On Dress.

BUOY, v. } Dut. Boeye; Fr. Bouée; Sp.
Buoy, n. } Boya. Dr. T. H. derives it
Bu'oyant. } from the Fr. Bois, lignum; (sc.)
Bu'oyancy. } the wood or block floating above the anchor, and fastened to it by a cable. And thus, by consequence—

To buoy or boy is to float, to raise or rise up to the surface; to bear up, to support, to sustain, to elevate.

And when our boat returned to the ship, two of them leapt into the sea and swamme vnto the buoy, and beheld it a great while; then they tooke a cane of an arrow, and tyed to the sayd boy a very faire and shining sea-oyster of pearles, and then returned to the shore, neere to the watering place.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 411.

The sea, with such a storme as his bare head
In Heil-blacke-night indur'd, would haue buoy'd vp
And quench'd the stelled fires:
Yet poore old heart, he holpe the heauens to raine
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 7.

In his [Meric Casaubon] wonderful delivery from drowning, when overset in a boat on the Thames near London, two watermen being so drowned, and he buoyed up by the help of his priests coat.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Ah, think not, mistress! more true dulness lies
In folly's cap, than wisdom's grave disguise:
Like buoys that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iv.

Next plung'd a feeble, but a desperate pack,
With each a sickly brother at his back:
Sons of a day! just buoyant on the flood,
Then number'd with the puppies in the mud.
Id. Ib. b. ii.

Thus useful, thus necessary, is the air to the life of the animated creatures; and no less is it to the motion and conveyance of many of them. All the winged tribes owe their flight and boyancy to it.—Derham. Phys. Theo. b. i. c. 1.

When the great soul buoys up to this high point,
Leaving gross nature's sediments below,
Then, and then only, Adam's offspring quits
The sage and hero of the fields and woods,
Asserts his rank, and rises unto man.
Young. The Complaint, Night 8.

As when the merchant, to increase his store,
For dubious seas adventurous quits the shore;
Still anxious for his freight, he trembling sees
Rocks in each buoy, and tempests in each breeze.
P. Whitehead. An Occasional Prologue.

To those bright climes, awakening all her powers,
And spreading her unbounded wing, the muse
Ascending soars on, through the fluid space,
The buoyant atmosphere.—Mallet. The Excursion, c. 2.

BUR. Fr. Bourre, of unknown etymology. "The down or hairy coat, wherewith divers herbs, fruits, and flowers are covered," (Cotgrave.)

That which sticks or adheres, as such down, rough, or hairy coat does to any thing on which it falls.

For thorw smoke and smothre smerteth hus syghte
Tyl he be biereyde oth' blynde. and the borre in hus throte
Knoweth and corseth that crist gyue hym sorwe
That sholde brynge yn bettere wode. oth' blowe til hit brente. Piers Ploukmon, p. 337.

Hauing no hold but the very Scripture, whereunto they cleaue as burres so fast that they can not be pulled away saue with very syngyng them out.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 287.

I could not tell how to rid myselfe better of the troublesome burre, then by getting him into the discourse of hunting.—The Returne from Parnassus, Act ii. sc. 6.

By the rough burbreeding docks
Ranker than the oldest fox.
Drayton. The Muses Elysium, Nymphal 3.

Notable is the bur likewise and worthy to be observed, I meane that which sticketh to our clothes as we passe by, the flower lieth close and groweth within the said bur, and never appeareth without foorthe.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 17.

But O! that hapless virgin, our lost sister,
Where may she wander now, whither betake her
From the chill dew, among rude burs and thistles?
Milton. Comus

Lord bless me, Mrs. Brown, your hand;
And you, my dear, take hold of hers,
For we must stick as close as burrs,
Or in this racket, noise, and pother,
We certainly shall lose each other.—Lloyd. Chit Chat.

BU'RBOLTS. i. e. Birdbolts. Mr. Gifford says;—blunt, pointless arrows; for with such birds were brought down.

Beat. He set up his bils here in Messina, and challeng'd Cupid at the flight: and my vncle's foole reading the challenge, subscribd for Cupid, and challeng'd him at the burbolt.—Shakespeare. Much Ado about Nothing, Act i. sc. 1.

I saw a little devil fly out of her eye like a burbolt which sticks at this hour up to the feathers of my heart.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act ii. sc. 1.

BU'RDEN, or
BU'RTHEN, v.
BU'RTHEN, s.
BU'RDENING, s.
BU'RDENOUS.
BU'RDENSOME.
BU'RDENSOMENESS.

A. S. Byrden, or Byrthen, from the A. S. Byr-an, to bear, to carry.

That which is borne or carried; the weight which is borne or carried, sustained or supported; the load (borne).

To burden, is to impose a weight or load; to load, to oppress.

Burden, in musick, Fr. Bourdon; It. Bordone.

He bar a borden ybounde. with a brod lyste.
Piers Ploughman, p. 119.

But that light thing of oure tribulacioun that lastith now but as it were bi a moment, worchith in us ouer measure an euerlastynge burthen into the highnesse of glorie.
Wiclif. 2 Corynth. c. 4.

Burdens that been importable;
On folkes shoulders thinge they couchen
That they nill with their fingers touchen
And why woll they not touche it whye
For hem ne liste nat sikerly
For sadde burdons that men taken
Make folkes shoulders aken.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

This sompnour bare to him a stiff burdoun.
Was neuer trompe of half so gret a soun.
Id. Prologue, v. 675.

His wife bare him a burden a ful strong,
Men might hir routing heren a furlong.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4163.

For as I can be content to confesse the lightness wherwith I haue bin in times past worthi to be burdened, so would I be gladde, if now when I am otherwise bent, my better endevors might be accepted.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas, Prefatory Address.

He caused a proclamation to be made yt al souldiers should declare their debts (wherewyth he perceiued manye of them sore burdened) & though their debt did rise through theire oune disordre & excesse, yet he was determined to discharge euery man.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 293.

If that my booke be burthenouse
shift the of it betyme
Least thou ass-lyke vnloden the
with greater note of cryme.
Drant. Horace, b. i. Ep. To Asella.

There is buryed a bodye, which albeit were alyue, yet were it grosse and heauye, and by the reason of that bourdayenouse to the soule, gouernour of the same, but there shall ryse agayne not a naturall, but a spirituall bodye, which to the soule be no let, whither soeuer it moue.
Udal. 1 Corinthians, c. 15.

But I am farre from defending the multitude or burdensomenesse of ceremonies.—Whitgift. The Defense, p. 108.

Whilst in her cries, that fild the vale along
Still Celand was the burthen of her song.
Browne. Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

Heavie burdens and loades be stirred and removed with more ease in water.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 103.

And like some boistrous wind arising from the north,
Came that unwieldy host; that, which way it did move,
The very burthenous earth before it seem'd to shove
And only meant to claim the universe its own.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

Cæsar now by this time having giuen the head unto licenciousnes more and more, became burdonous and offencive to all good men.—Holland. Amenianus, p. 14.

He had built at his own expence, to prosecute them, a strong handsome ship, which was namid the Bark Ralegh, of two hundred ton burden.—Oldys. Life of Ralegh.

As exercise becomes tedious and painful when we make use of it only as the means of health, so reading is apt to grow uneasy and burdensome when we apply ourselves to it only for our improvement in virtue.—Tatler, No. 147.

Thus Demosthenes, finding that ship money was levied irregularly, and that the poor bore the same burden as the rich in equipping the galleys, corrected this inequality by a very useful law, which proportioned the expence to the revenue and income of each individual.
Hume. Of some remarkable Customs, Ess. 10.

The Druids were kept entirely distinct from the body of the people; and they were exempted from all the inferiour and burthensome offices of society, that they might be at leisure to attend the important duties of their own charge.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. i. c. 2.

BU'RDEN. Fr. Bourdon; It. Bordone.
A club, a staff.

I found him [Daunger] cruell in his rage,
And in his hond a great bourdoun.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Then Daunger on his feet gon stond'
And hent a burdon in his hond. Id. Ib.

The villaine wroth for greeting him so sore,
Gathered himselfe together soone againe,
And with his yron batton which he bore,
Let drive at him so dreadfully amaine,
That for his safety he did him constraine
To give him ground, and shift to every side,
Rather than once his burden to sustaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

BU'REAU. Fr. "a thick and a coarse cloath, of a brown russet, or dark mingled colour; also the table that's within a court of audit, or of audience (belike, because 'tis usually) covered with a carpet of that cloath; also the court itself," (Cotgrave.)

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails,
To writing of good sense. Swift.

The second notification was that of the king's acceptance of the new constitution; accompanied with fanfaronades in the modern style of the French bureaus, things which have much more the air and character of the saucy declarations of their clubs, than the tone of regular office.
Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs.

BURG.
BUR'GAGE.
BU'RGESS.
BURGH.
BU'RGHER.
BU'RGHOLDER.
BU'RGHMOTE.
BU'RGHOMASTER.
BU'RGRAVE.

Goth. Bairgan; A. S. Beorgan, boryan, byrgan; to defend, to keep safe, to fortify, to strengthen. See BOROUGH, and BORSHOLDER.

A burg meant formerly a fortified town. And see the quotation from Harrison.

Somner calls it a city, a fort, a fortresse, a tower, a castle; and Burh-bote—A repairing, renewing or amending of cities, castles, forts, and the like.

Sone after the wyntere, whan the somer bigan,
The kyng & his meyne went to burgh Konan.
R. Brunne, p. 15.

Now thei saile & rowe to Wales to Lenlyns,
A burgeis of Bristowe charged was with wynes,
He ouertoke ther schip, & asked whether thei ware?
Id. p. 236.

Noth' in cote noth' in caytyf hous. was Crist ybore
Bote in a burgeises hous. the beste of all the toune.
Piers Ploughman, p. 234.

True burghers and bonde. to naught hue bringeth ofte
And all the comune in care and covety-ge. Id. p. 48.

A large man he was with eyen stepe,
A fairer burgeis is ther non in Chepe:
Bold of his speche, and wise and wel ytaught,
And of manhood him lacked righte naught.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 756.

The stiresman so well him ladde,
That thei be comen saufe to londe,
Where thei gone out vpon the stronde
In to the burgh, where that thei fonde
The kynge. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

By presumpcion wherof, he sent into al gode burghes, cyties, and townes of his lande, secrete and strayte comyssions, chargynge the rulers, that they, vpon a certayne day, that is to say, vpon the daye of Seynt Brice, at an houre assygned, in euery place of his lande, the Danys shulde be sodeynly slayne.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 198.

Also that where before tymes the kynges of Englonde vsed to sende out commyssions vnto burgeyses of cities and townes, to chose of theyre fre lybertie such knyghtys of the shyre as they thought moste welefull for the cõmon weale of yᵉ sayd shyre & lande, nowe King Rycharde wolde appoynte yᵉ personys, and wyll them for to chose such as then he named, wherby his singular causys were preferryd & the comon causys put by.—Fabyan, an. 1398.

Who compt the quiet burgher but an asse,
That liues at ease contented with his owne,
Whiles they seeke more and yet are ouerthrown.
Gascoigne. Fruits of Warre.

After that, four dukes, four marquesses, four landgraues, four burgraues.—Bale. Votaryes, pt. ii. p. 13.

He sent vnto the Beotians withall diligence and commanded, that they shoulde come towardes hym incõtinently, with the greatest bende that they coulde vnto Tripodisque. Whiche is a burgage in the territory of Megare vnder the mountaigne of Geranis.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 112.

And albeit euery of the foresayd cities sent one of their burgomasters vnto the towne of Hague in Holland, to treat with the English ambassadours, it was in the end found out, that they had not any authority of negociating or concluding at al.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 157.

The chiefe man likewise of euerie denarie or tithing was in those dates called a tithing man, in Latine decurio, but now in most places a borsholder or burgholder, as in Kent; where euerie tithing is moreouer named a burgh or borrow; although, &c.—Harrison. Description of England, c. 4.

The members [of Parliament] are of three sorts: First, &c. Thirdly, those of cities, burroughs, and towns, called burgesses.—Spelman. Of Parliaments.

—— Where's your faction!
Shrewdly the bishop guess'd of your adherents,
When not a petty burgess of some town,
No not a villager hath yet appear'd,
In your assistance.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc. 4.

As those great burghers of the forest wild
The hart, the goat, and he that slew the child
Of wanton Mirrah, in their strength do know
The due observance nature doth me owe.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

Protogenes, historians note,
Liv'd there a burgess, scot and lot,
And, as old Pliny's writings show,
Appelles did the same at Co.
Prior. Protogenes & Appelles.

A borough, as we have formerly seen, is usually distinguished from other towns by the right of sending members to parliament, and when the right of election is by burgage tenure, that alone is a proof of the antiquity of the borough.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 6.

In vain an expiring interest in a borough calls for officers, or small livings, for the children of mayors, and aldermen, and capital burgesses. His court rival has them all.
Burke. Thoughts on the present Discontent.

Hence charter'd boroughs are such public plagues;
And burghers, men immaculate perhaps
In all their private functions, once combin'd,
Become a loathsome body only fit
For dissolution, hurtful to the main.—Cowper. Task, b. iv

The king sent a notification of these proceedings to each burgmote, when the people of the court also swore to the observance of them, and confederated, by means of mutual strength and common charge, to prosecute delinquents against them.—Burke. Abridgement of Eng. Hist. b. ii. c. 7.

BU'RGENET. Fr. Bourguinette, perhaps from the A. S. Byrg-an, to protect, to defend.

A defence or protection, (sc.) for the head; a helmet.

The glorious day that I thy rich glove wan,
And in my course a flame of light'ning beat,
Out of proud Hertford's high plum'd burgonet.—
Drayton. The Baron's Wars.

Then leauing talke, he by his weapon speakes,
And driues a blow, which Blackenbury breakes
By lifting vp his left hand, else the steele
Had piere'd his burgonet, and made him feel
The pangs of death. Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

BU'RGLARY.
BU'RGLAR.
BU'RGLARER.
BURGLA'RIOUS.

Formed from Burgi latrocinium; the robbing or plundering of a house. See the quotation from Blackstone.

Surely, neither charity, nor justice can dissuade me from resisting; the laws of God and man will allow me to defend my own; and if in this resistance the thief, or burglayer miscarry, his blood will be upon his own head.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience.

In the same prince's reign, Sir William Brain was sent to the Tower, only for procuring the pope's bull against certain burglarers that robbed his own house.
State Trials. Garnet, an. 1606.

So that to break open the closet of a man's breast, to ransack his mind, to pilfer away his thoughts, his affections, his purposes, may well be deemed a worse sort of burglary or theft, than to break open doors, to rifle trunks, or to pick pockets.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 21.

Love is a burglarer, a felon
That at the windore eye does steal in
To rob the heart; and with his prey,
Steals out again a closer way. Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

The definition of a burglar, as given us by Sir Edward Coke, is "he that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house with intent to commit a felony."
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 24.

In burglary do they insist, that the jury have nothing to do but to find the taking of goods, and that if they do, they must necessarily find the party guilty, and leave the rest to the judge; and that they have nothing to do with the word felonie in the indictment?
Burke. Power of Juries in Prosecutions, &c.

As for the entry, any the least degree of it, with any part of the body, or with an instrument held in the hand, is sufficient; as, to step over the threshold, to put a hand or a hook in at a window to draw out goods, or a pistol to demand one's money, are all of them burglarious entries.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 16.

BURL. } In Pliny, (b. xxv.) mox desquamatur Cimolia—is rendered by Holland,
Bu'rler. } "they fall anone to burling it with Cimolia." And see the quotation from Holland's Plutarch, in v. Beclaw. Skinner thinks it is from the Fr. Bourre. (See Bur.) To burl then will be—

To clear away or take off the burrs, the down or hairy coat, the shreds, knots, threads, &c.

To come then to the mysterie of fullers craft, first they wash and scoure a peece of cloth with the earth of Sardinia, then they perfume it with the smoke of brimstone, which done, they fall anone to burling it with Cimolia.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 17.

——— Then up-hung
On rugged tenters, to the fervid sun
Its level surface, reeking it expands;
Still brightening in each rigid discipline,
And gathering worth; as human life, in paine,
Conflicts, and troubles. Soon the clothier's shears,
And burlers thistle, skim the surface sheen.
Dyer. Fleece, b. iii.

BURLE'SQUE, v. } A word recently introduced into our country, (Skinner.) Fr. Burlesque; It. Burlesco;—from Fr. Burler; It. Burlare; Low Lat. Burdare. See Bourd.
Burle'sque, n.
Burle'sque, adj.

Cotgrave says, "burlesque; jesting, or in jest, not serious; also mocking, flouting." See the quotation from the Spectator.

And which is worst, the noblest sort on't,
And to the world the most important
Of th' whole poetical creation,
Burlesque, had never been in fashion.
Cotton. Upon the Great Frost.

The dull burlesque appear'd with impudence,
And plead by novelty in spite of sense.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 1.

Burlesque is therefore of two kinds, the first represents mean persons in the accontrements of heroes; the other describes great persons acting and speaking, like the basest among the people.—Spectator, No. 249.

It is a dispute among the criticks, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras.—Id. No. 249.

In which time he [Denham] did translate one of Virgil's Æneids and burlesqu'd it, but whether he ever published it I know not.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

They burlesqued the prophet Jeremiah's words, and turned the expression he used into ridicule.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Who is it that admires, and from the heart is attached to national representative assemblies, but must turn with horrour and disgust from such a profane burlesque, and abominable perversion of that sacred institute!
Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

I believe no man living could have imagined it possible, except for the sake of burlesquing a subject, to propose remedies, so ridiculously disproportionate to the evil, so full of uncertainty in their operation, and depending for their success in every step upon the happy event of so many new, dangerous, and visionary projects.
Id. On a late State of the Nation.

He has written some very agreeable pieces, of the burlesque kind, in Iambics, with much delicacy, wit, and humour, and I will add too, even eloquence; for every species of composition, which is perfect in its kind, may with propriety be termed eloquent.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. vi. Let. 21.

BURLETTA. From the It. Burlare. See Burlesque.

The new burletta 's now the thing
Pray did you never hear me sing?
"Never indeed." Cambridge. Intruder.

BU'RLY, n. } A burly man; a large, lusty man, (q.d.) a boorlike man: agricolæ similis. Applied to—Bu'rly, adj.
Bu'rliness.

Any thing large, distended, unwieldy, clumsy, boisterous.

Thanne Jupiter right faire and amiable
God of the sterres in the firmament,
And norice to all thing generable,
Fro his father Saturne farre different
With burly face, and browes bright and brent.
Chaucer. Test. of Creseide.

He was of visage lovely, of bodye myghtie, strong and cleane made: howe be it in his latter dayes wyth ouer liberall dyet, somewhat corpulente and boorely and nathelesse not uncomelye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 36.

Againe they whiche troubled as yet with worldly lustes and desyres, cum rushing in with noyse & hurly burly, do greue and greatlye disquiet hym.—Udal. Mark, c. 3.

In allegynge Dauid, I approue a doctryne and no dyffynicyon, the grounde of a vow after the sacred Scriptures, and not the name of it, as it hath bene hurley burlyed in antichristes kyngdom.—Bale. Apology, fol. 48.

——— Deepe the Xanthus on his waves,
Shall hoyse thee bravely to a tombe, that in her burly breast,
The sea shall open, where great fish may keep thy funerall feast,
With thy white fat.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Nor let the spacious mound of that great Mercian king,
(Into a lesser roomth thy burliness to bring)
Include thee. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

The girl, I found, had good sense, and told me with a smile, that notwithstanding it was her own petticoat, she should be very glad to see an example made of it; that she wore it for no other reason, but that she had a mind to look as big and burly as other persons of her quality.
Tatler, No. 116.

And some ascribe th' invention to a priest,
Burly and big, and studious of his ease.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

BURN, v. } Goth. Brinnan; A.S. Bernan, byrnan; Dut. Bernen, burnen; Ger. Brennen; Sw. Brænna. See To Bren.
Burn, n.
Bu'rner.
Bu'rning.

To be, or cause to be, on fire, destroyed by fire; heated, kindled.

(Met.) To be inflamed, with passion or desire; i. e. to feel the passion of anger, love, hate, &c. to a heating or burning excess.

He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning dart,
And doth slay with leaden colde again the others hart,
Whote glemes of burning fire, and easy sparkes of flame,
In balance of unegal weight he pondereth by aime.
Surrey. Description of the Fickle Affections, &c.

For with a beck you shall me call;
And if of one, that burns alway,
Ye haue pitie, or ruth at all,
Aunswere him faire with yea or nay.
Wyat. The Lady to answere directly with Yea or Nay.

Herewith I feele the droppes of sweltring sweate,
Which trickle downe my face enfureed so.
And in my body feele I lykewise beate,
A burning heart which tosses too and fro.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew.

Nether was it a mystery, that the burners being without the ouen were brent, the good men being so safe in the middis of the fyre, for suche burners shall fede the fyre of hell, when thei whom thei burned shall reste in ioye.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

Notwithstandinge, it is not so longe sithence the selde reuerend fathers were themselues the burners, and persequutours of the Gospel—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 730.

So that it is unpossible to separate good workes from fayth, even as it is impossible to separate heat and burning from fire.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 42.

In yonder walls be mines of gold, quoth he!
He's a poor slave that thinks of any debts;
Harfleur shall pay for all, it ours shall be.
"This air of France doth like me wondrous well;
Let's burn our ships for here we mean to dwell."
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

White beets only stamped, although there come no oile unto them, healeth any burne or scalding, if the place be therewith anointed.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 3.

The persuasion that health may thereby be recovered, engages a man not onely to take down the most unsavoury potions, but to endure cuttings and burnings.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Cowley observing the cold regard of his mistress's eyes, and at the same time their power of producing love in him, considers them as burning-glasses made of ice.
Spectator, No. 62.

A child, who has been burnt with a red-hot coal, is careful to avoid touching the flame of a candle; for as the visible qualities of the latter are like to those of the former, he expects, with a very high degree of assurance, that the effects produced by the candle operating on his fingers, will be similar to those produced by the burning coal.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 2. 7.

BURN, v. } Fr. Brunir, to burnish, to furbish, to polish, and also to make brown, (Cotgrave.) It. Brunire; Sp. Brunir; Dut. Bruyneren; infuscare, polire metalla. The Fr. Brunir, Junius says, is to make brown, (i. e. to give a burned colour. See Brown and Bronze.) Whence to burnish metal is to rub it till it has fuscum nitorem, till it is brown and bright. Skinner says, that Brunir, to polish (sc. armour) is, he believes, from the verb to burn, because arms carefully polished shine so intensely as to appear to burn. Gower and Chaucer write to burn.
Bu'rnish, v.
Bu'rnish, n.
Bu'rnisher.

To burn or burnish (generally) is—

To brighten or give brightness, to polish: to rub off the rust, to polish up for use: to be or become bright, splendid, conspicuous; to shine forth.

And downward from an hill under a bent,
Ther stood the temple of Mars armipotent
Wrought all of burned stele, of which th' entree
Was longe and streite, and gastly for to see.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1985.

And Phebus died hath hire tresses grete,
Like to the stremes of his burned hete.
Id. The Doctoures Tale, v. 11,972.

And euermore, as it is tolde,
An harnois as for a lustie knight,
Whiche burned was as siluer bright
Of swerde, of plate, and eke of maile,
As though he shulde do bataile,
He toke also with hym by ship.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

There swam a shepe before her eyen,
Whose fleece of burned gold was all. Id. Ib.

Upon the top an ern ther stood,
Of bourned gold ryche and good,
Iflorysched with rich amail.
Launfal, in Ritson. Romances, v. 1.

Lyke as the larke vpon a somer's day,
Whan Titan radient burnisheth his bemes bright
Mounteth on hye, with hir melodius laye,
Of the sun shyne enchaufed with the lyght,
So am I suppryued with pleasure and delyght
To see this houre nowe, that I may saye
Howe ye are welcome to this court araye.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

His old rustic rules newe burnished, and his olde Romish rags new patched by a newly confyrmed auctoritie, must they embrace in paine of death.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Some had their armynge sweardes freshly burnished and some had the conningly varnyshed.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

As touching the legs of those which be whole houfed, they be all full as long when they first come into the world as ever they will be: well may they shoot out bigger and burnish afterward, but (to speak truly and properly) they grow no more in length.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 43.

The judge of torments and the king of teares,
He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire:
And for his old faire robes of light, he weares
A gloomy mantle of dark flames.
Crashaw. Sospeto d'Herode, b. i.

Blushes, that bin
The burnish of no sin,
Nor flames of aught too hot within.
Id. Wishes to his (supposed) Mistress.

This our burnisher (another tool used by chalcographers) and polisher performes.—Evelyn. Sculptura, b. i. c. 1.

A slender poet must have time to grow,
And spread and burnish as his brothers do.
Dryden. Prol. to Circe.

Of Churchill's race perhaps some lovely boy,
Shall mark the burnish'd steel that hangs on high,
Shall gaze transported on its glittering charms,
And reach it struggling with unequal arms.
Tickell. On the Prospect of Peace.

On the heath the heifer strays
Free;—(the furrow'd task is done,)
Now the village windows blaze
Burnish'd by the setting sun.—Cunningham. Evening.

That our disgrace might want no sort of brightening and Burnishing; observe who they were that composed this famous embassy.
Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

BU'RROW, v. } A. S. Beorgan, byrgan, to de-
Bu'rrow, s. } fend, to protect, to strengthen.
Bu'rrowy. } See Borough. See Tooke.

A defended or protected place, (for rabbits, &c.; to which warren is synonymous.)

To burrow, to form burrows or places of protection or security, (sc. under ground.)

Foxes han borwis or dennes, and briddis of the eir han nestis, but mannes sone hath not where he shal reste his hede.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 8.

Also the fowls that were there, were very good meate and great store of them, they haue burrowes in the ground like conies, for they cannot flie.

Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 805.

—— As I have seen
A nimble tumbler on a burrow'd greene
Hend cleane awry his course, yet give a checke
And throw himselfe upon a rabbet's necke.

Browne. Pastorals, b. ii.

Sir, this vermin of court reporters, when they are forced into day upon one point, are sure to burrow in another; but they shall have no refuge; I will make them bolt out of all their holes.—Burke. Speech on American Taxation.

As when hawks, herons, or other birds build in my trees, or coneys or other creatures make their nests or burrows in my land, and have young ones there; I have a qualified property in those young ones till such time as they can fly or run away, and then my property expires.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 25.

BURSE. } Dut. Beurs; Ger. Borse; Fr.
Bu'rsar. } Bourse; It. Borsa; Sp. Bolsa;
Bu'rsary. } Lat. Bursa; from the Gr. Βυρση,
Bu'rsarship. } corium, (Voss. de Vit. lib. ii. c. 2.) i. e. a hide or skin;—the material of which that now called a purse or burse, was made. Per synecdochen, (Wachter observes) materia pro forma. See also Menage in v. Bourse. Holland renders vesica, a burse or skin. It is also applied to—

A place for money or mercantile transactions. Bursar, i. e. Purser, (qv.)

Furthermore hee affirmeth, that they be not the right stones of a beuer, when they are seene without a twofold burse or skin, which no liuing creature hath besides.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 2.

Tattelius——
Tramping the bourse's marble twice a day,
Tells nothing but stark truths I dare well say.

Bp. Hall. b. vi. Sat. 1.

As for his [Hales] justness and uprightness in his dealings, all that knew, have avouched him to be incomparable; for when he was bursar of his Coll. and had received bad money, he would lay it aside, and put good of his own in the room of it to pay to others.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Not the plotting of an headship, (for that is now become a court business) but the contriving of a bursership of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c.—Hale. Remains, p. 276.

It has been considered as of so much importance, that a proper number of young people should be educated for certain professions, that sometimes the public, and sometimes the piety of private founders, have established many pensions, scholarships, exhibitions, bursaries, &c. for this purpose.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

BURST, v. or } A. S. Burstan, berstan,
Burst. } beorstan, rumpere; Dut. Bor-
Burst, s. } sten, bersten; Ger. Bresten,
bersten; Sw. Brista, to break open or asunder. It seems to be peculiarly applied — when the thing broken incloses or surrounds something else; as to burst a bladder; the bottle burst. It is also used without any such restriction.

To break open or apart, to rush, to gush forth. Met. to burst with envy; the passions burst forth.

From the Lat. Rumpere, we have borrowed the compounds, abrupt, &c. corrupt, &c. disruption, eruption, irruption, and also the uncompounded rupture:—the disease peculiarly so called, Boyle denominates — "burstness or rupture," (Works, vol. vi. p. 376.)

Tho the smytyn of lance was ydo, to the suerde hii nome,
And slou to grounde vaste ynou, and barste mony a scelde
That longe yt was ar other alf mygte wynne feld.

R. Gloucester, p. 437.

An engyn had thei ther in, & profred for to kast,
The gerde brast in tuyn, to help mot it not last.

R. Brunne, p. 326.

And this Judas hadde a feeld of the hire of wickednesse, and he was hanged and to brast the myddil and alle hise entrails weren shed abrood.—Wiclif. Acts, c. 1.

And the same hath nowe possessed a plot of groũde with the rewarde of iniquitie, and when he was hanged brast asonder in the myddes and all hys bowels gushed out.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

And er that Arcite may take any kepe,
He pight him on the pomel of his hed.
That in the place he lay as he were ded,
His brest to bresten with his sadel bow.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2693.

In which ther ran a romble and a swough,
As though a storme shuld bresten every bough.

Id. Ib. v. 1982.

The sone with drewe his lyght, the erth trembled and quaked and the rocks braste in sonder.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

Whanne the kynge of Englande arryued in the Hogue Saynt Wast, the Kyng yssued out of his shyppe, and the first fote that he sette on the grounde, he fell so rudely, that ye blode brast out of his nose.

Bernars. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 122.

Dion. —— O, the sacrifice
How ceremonious, solemne, and vn-earthly
It was i' th' offring!
Cleo. But of all, the burst
And the ear-deaf'ning voyce o' th' Oracle,
Kin to Ioue's thunder, so surpriz'd my sence,
That I was nothing.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 1.

When the Cardinal reported this message to the Pope, he was struck with so sensible an affliction that he burst into tears.—Tatler, No. 5.

For this purpose we agreed to meet him with our usual smiles, to chat in the beginning with more than ordinary kindness, to amuse him a little; and then in the midst of the flattering calm to burst upon him like an earthquake, and overwhelm him with a sense of his own baseness.

Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 15.

—— Of grief
And indignation rival bursts I pour'd;
Half execration mingled with my prayer;
Kindled at man, while I his God ador'd.

Young. The Complaint, Night 3.

BU'RY. } Dut. Berghen; Ger. Bergen;
Bu'rial. } A. S. Byrgan, sepelire:—
Bu'rver. } To put into a place of protec-
Bu'rying. } tion, safety, or defence. Hence also—to hide, to secrete, to conceal; to put or keep in secresy, or concealment.

To bury the dead,—to place or deposit in a place of security; to inter; to place in a grave, in a sepulchre.

Burial, A. S. Byrgel, is the diminutive of Byrig or Burgh, a defended or fortified place, (Tooke.) See Burgh. Formerly applied to the place, now to the act, of burying.

The morwe after Seynte Marye day the latere ded was,
In the abbey of Cam yboured was, thys kyng.
And Henry, hys gonge sone, was at hys buryng.

R. Gloucester, p. 382.

An buryels al nywe ymad. Id. p. 204.

Whan he was asoyled of the pape Sergie,
He died and was buried in Rome solumplie.

R. Brunne, p. 1.

Ryght so by the rode quath ich. rouhte the nevere
Wher my body yburied were. by so ge hadde my goodes.

Piers Ploughman, p. 202.

Anothir of hise disciplis seide to him, Lord suffre me to go first, and birie my fadir: but Jhesus seide to him, sue thou me, and lete the dede men birie ther dede men.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 8.

The earth schook, and stoones weren cloven, and birials weren opened, and many bodies of sayntes that hadden slept risen up.—Id. Ib. c. 27.

Cecil him toke and buried him anon
By Tiburce and Valerian softely,
Within his burying place, under the ston.

Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,877.

But sens thus sinfully ye me beguile
My bodie mote ye seen within a while
Right in the hauen of Athenes fletyng
Withouten sepultre and burying
Though ye ben harder then is any stone.

Id. Legend of Phillis.

Thus they suaged somwhat his yre, and so passed that night, and the next morwyng Richarde Staffordе was buried in the churche of the vyllage thereby, and at his burying were all those of his linage, barons, knightes, and squyers, that were in that armye.

Bernars. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 12.

They shal ordeyne mẽ also to be dead buryers, euer goyng thorowe the lande, and appoynte them certain places to burye those in, whiche remayne vpon the felde, that the land may be cleansed.—Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 39.

—— O yet more miserable,
Myself my sepulcher, a moving grave,
Buried, yet not exempt
By priviledge of death and burial
From worst of other evils, pains and wrongs.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

I observed, indeed, that the present war had filled the church with many of these uninhabited monuments, which had been erected to the memory of persons whose bodies were perhaps buried in the plains of Blenheim or in the bosom of the ocean.—Spectator, No. 26.

I have determined to revise my speeches, lest for the want of this remaining labour, all the pains they cost me should be thrown away, and they, with their author, be buried in oblivion.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. v. Let. 5.

BUSH. } Fr. Bois; It. Bosco; Sp.
Bu'shed. } Bosque; Ger. Busch; Dut.
Bu'shment. } Bosch; Sw. Buske, a wood.
Bu'shy. } From Boσκειν, to feed, because there cattle feed; as nemus, from νεμειν, (Wachter and Junius.) Skinner prefers to derive it from the Lat. Arbuscula. Formerly applied to—

A whole wood, (sylva, nemus,) but now to a low tree or shrub with thick, small bows or shoots: to any thing similar, as a bushy wig.

Bushment was used anciently as ambush and ambushment are now. See Ambush, and also Busk.

Bridden ich by beelde. in bosshes maden neestes.

Piers Ploughman, p. 223.

And of deed men that they rise agen han ye not red in the book of Moyses on the bugsh hou God spak to him and seye, Y am God of Abraham and God of Isaac and God of Jacob?—Wiclif. Mark, c. 12.

Ther as by aventure this Palamon
Was in a bush, that no man might se,
For sore afered of deth was he.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1519.

His heade is the most fine golde; the lockes of his here are bushed, browne as the evening.

Bible, 1551. Ballettes, c. 5.

His head is as the most fine gold, his locks are bushie and black as a raven.—Id. Modern Version.

To binde a bushe of thornes amongst sweete smelling floures,
May make the posie seeme the worse, and yet the fault is ours:
For throw away the thorne, and mark what will ensew?
The posie then will shew itselfe, sweete, faire and fresh of hew.—Gascoigne. Councell to Duglasse Dixe.

Tyl at last in the nether ende of the hal, a bushement of the Duke's seruantes and Nashefeldes and other longing to the Protectour, with some prentises and laudes that thrust into the hal amonge the prese, began sodaincly at meunes backes to crye owte as lowde as their throtes would giue: Kyng Rycharde, Kynge Rycharde and threwe vp their cappes in token of ioye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 64.

Fynally he concluded that he wolde make a bushement with a certayne nombre of knyghtes; and lye awayte to take the vytayle yt was brought to the hoost from ye porte of Russilian.—Fabyan. Philippe III. an. 1273.

Whereupon feyning a mistrust for the slaughter in the last ouerthrowe, she gaue backe so longe till she had brought Cyrus into a strayt, and there enuironing him with a bushement of souldiers layd before in the mountaynes for the same purpose, she slewe 200,000 Persians and the King himselfe.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 6.

The feldes whist, beastes, and fowles of diuers hue
And what-so that in the brode lakes remainde,
Or yet among the bushy thickes of bryar,
Laide down to slepe by silence of the night
Gan swage their cares, mindlesse of trauels past.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

These blazing starres the Greeks call Cometas, our Romanes Crinitas: dreadfull to be seene, with bloudie haires, and all over rough and shagged in the top like the bush of haire upon the head.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 25.

Moreover a goodly broad bushi tail they [the squirrels] have, wherewith they cover their whole body.—Id. Ib. b. viii. c. 38.

Here (queen of forests all, that west of Sercrn ly)
Her broad and bushy top Dean holdeth up so high,
The lesser are not seen, she is so tall and large.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 7.

If Lindamor, you would take notice of those and some other toils and hardships that attend a gardener's trade, you would, I doubt not, confess, that his employments, like his bushes, bring him thorns as well as roses.

Boyle. Occas. Reflect. s. 5. Ref. 4.

As the two armies romped together on these occasions, the women complained of the thick bushy beards and long nails of their confederates, who immediately took care to prune themselves into such figures as were most pleasing to their friends and allies.—Spectator, No. 434.

Amid the falling gloom of night,
Her startling fancy found
In every bush his hovering shade,
His groan in every sound.—Mallet. Edwin & Emma.

Close unto the passage, op'ning into Greece,
That post committed to the Phocian guard,
O'erhangs a bushy cliff. Glover. Leonidas, b. x.

BU'SHEL. Fr. Boisseau; Mid. Lat. Bussellus. Menage derives (nescio quam bene, says Skinner,) from Bosse, tuber. See Bosse.

A measure of quantity, equal to eight gallons.

A bousel of bred corn. brouht was thr ynne
For ich wolle sowe hit myself.—Piers Ploukman, p. 131.

Whan that thou wendest homeward by the mell,
Right at the entree of the dore behind
Thou shalt a cake of half a bushel find,
That was ymaked of thin owen mele,
Which that I holpe my fader for to stele.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4241.

For this I fynde of Haniball,
That he of Romaynes on a daie,
Whan he hem fonde out of araie,
So great a multitude alough,
That of golde rynges, whiche he drough
Of gentill handes, that ben deade,
Bushelles full three, I rede
He fylled. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

In the countrey wheat was solde for foure shillings the quarter, mault for four shillings and eyght pence, and in some place a bushell of rie for a pound of candles which was four pence.—Stow. Queen Mary, an. 1558.

Please to desire Mr. Morphew to send me in a bushel of coals on the credit of my answer to his Czarian majesty; for I design it shall be printed for Morphew, and the weather grows sharp.—Tatler, No. 232.

BU'SK. Now written Bush. See Boske.

Siirith, that I of told, that the lond had lorn,
That a suynhird slouth vnder a busk of thorn,
Had a kosyn, hight Egbriht. R. Brunne, p. 14.

For there is neither buske nor hay
In May, that it nill shrouded bene
And with the new leues wrene.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

BU'SK, v. } Dr. Jamieson thinks from the Busk, n. } Ger. Butzen, bussen; Dut. Boetsen; Sw. Puts-a, ornare, decorare; and he observes that in Ger. Butz frauw, is a well dressed woman; and that hence it means—

1. To prepare, to make ready; 2. To tend, to direct one's course.

Bush, n. "Fr. Busque or Buste. The long, small (or sharp pointed), and hard quilted belly of a doublet." Also a piece of steel or other material to keep the dress of the body firm to the shape.

And many of the Danes princly were left,
And busked westward, for to robbe eft.—R. Brunne, p. 39.

Thy selve and thy sonnes three. and suthen goure wyves
Buske gow to that bot. a bydeth ther ynne
Tyl fourty dayes be fulfilled.—Piers Ploukman, p. 177.

Be we neuer so lef and dere,
Out of this world all schul we meue
And whon we buske vnto ur bere
Ageyn ur will we take ur leve.
Ritson. Ancient Songs, p. 45.

Ye might haue busked you to Huntly banks
Your pryde was pevysh to play suche prankes.
Skelton. Against the Scottes.

The commons renyed ther taxes to pay
Of them demaunded and asked by the Kynge
With one voice importune they plainly sayd nay
They buskt them on a bushment themselfe in baile to bring.—Id. Dethe of Northumberlande.

No fowler that had wylie witte
but will forsee such hap,
That birds will alway buske and bate
and scape the fowlers trap.
Turberville. Of the diuers Passions, &c.

Her face was maaked, her locks were curl'd,
Her bodie pent with buske,
And which was needless, she more sweet,
Her raiment scented muske.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii.

——But heard you nam'd,
Till now of late busks, perrewigs,
Makes, plumes of feathers fram'd.—Id. Ib. b. ix.

Off with that happy busk, which I envy,
That still can be, and still can stand so nigh.
Donne, Elegy 19.

BU'SKIN. } Dut. Broseken, broskin; Fr.
Bu'skined. } Botine, brodequin; It. Borzacchino; Sp. Borzegui, botin. Kilian informs us that Le Duchat, in his notes on Rabelais, derives it from the Gr. Βυρσα, a hide or skin. (See Burse.) Skinner and Menage may be referred to, but to little advantage. The Fr. Botine; Sp. Botin, is a small boot; a summer boot, Cotgrave calls it. See the quotation from Melmoth.

Some cunning man maye teach thee for to ryde
And stufle thy saddle all with Spanishe wooll,
Or in thy stirrops haue a toye so tyde,
As both thy legges may swell thy buskins full.
Gascoigne. Councell to Mast. Bartholomew.

The lyons skyn about his backe was of cloth gold of damaske, wrought and fryzed with flatte golde of damaske for the heeres, and buskyns gold on his legges.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

For writing of the Troiane warr
and Greekes fayre buskinde legge,
He doth not fetche his matter downe
from ladye Ledaes egge.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetrye.

Now were the skies of storms and tempests cleared
Lord Æolus shut vp his windes in hold,
The siluer mantled morning fresh appeared,
With roses crown'd, and buskin'd high with gold.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. viii. s. 1.

His buskins (edg'd with silver) were of silke,
Whiche held a legge more white than mornings milke,
Those buskins he had got and brought away
For dancing best upon the revell day.
Brown. Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

In happy chains our daring language bound
Shall sport no more in arbitrary sound,
But buskin'd bards henceforth shall wisely rage,
And Grecian plans reform Britannia's stage.
Tickell. On the Prospect of Peace.

The buskin was a kind of high shoe worn upon the stage by the actors of tragedy in order to give them a more heroical elevation of stature.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. ix. Let. 9.

BUSS, v. } It. Basciare; Fr. Baiser; Sp.
Buss, n. } Besar; Dut. Boesen; Lat. Basiare, of unknown etymology. Written by Chaucer and others bass.

To kiss; to touch with the lips.

For lippes thinne not fat, but euer lene,
Thei serue for naught, they be not worth a bene
For if the basse been full, there is a delit.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

Lende me youre praty mouth, madame,—
I wis dere hert to basse it swete,
A twyse or thryse or that Y die.
Ritson. From Harleian MS. Temp. Hen. V.

And thys good minde, good Lord, will I keepe styll and neuer let it fall out of my hart al the while that I lye bassing with Besse.— Sir T. More. Workes, p. 857.

He, little looking that she should complain,
Of that, whereto he fear'd she was inclin'd;
Bussing her oft, and in his heart full fain,
He did demand what remedy to find.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

But he that brings him home againe,
A busse! yet not a busse alone doubtlesse shall haue,
But lik a friend I will entreate him passing braue.
Turbervile. Of Ladie Venus, &c.

Come, grin on me, and I will thinke thou smil'st,
And busse thee as thy wife: Miseries loue,
O come to me.—Shakespeare. King John, Act iii. sc. 4.

After much buss and great grimace,
(Usual, you know, in such a case)
Much chat arose what had been done,
What might before next summer's sun.—Prior. The Mice.

BUSS. Mid. Lat. Bussa; Dut. Buise, a larger sort of ship after the likeness of a box, (which Busse also signifies) with wide hull and broad prow, (Spelman.) The name is still common in the north.

Herfor kyng Richard wrathes him & sais,
"Dight vs thider ward our busses & galais,
Mi sister I wille out wyn or I ferrer go."
R. Brunne, p. 149.

Two busses were forfaren, that in the tempest brak,
The godes attached waren to the kyng of Cipres Isaac.
Id. p. 158.

This mode of fishing (by busses or decked vessels from 20 to 80 tons burden) seems not so well adapted to the situation of Scotland as to that of Holland.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 5.

In the year 1759, when the duty was at fifty shillings the ton, the whole buss-fishery of Scotland, brought in only four barrels of sea sticks (i. e. herrings caught and cured at sea.)
Id. Ib.

BUST. } Fr. Buste. The whole bulk or body
Bu'sto. } of a man, from his face to his middle, (Cotgrave.)

But die, and she'll adore you—then the bust
And temple rise—then fall again to dust.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 2.

With honour thus by Carolina plac'd,
How are these venerable bustoes grac'd!
O queen, with more than regal title crown'd
For love of arts and piety renown'd!
Swift. Epigram on the Busts at Richmond

Nature! 'tis thine with manly warmth to mourne
Expiring virtue, and the closing urn;
To teach, dear seraph! o'er the good and wise!
The dirge to murmur, and the bust to rise.
Cawthorn. Elegy to the Memory of Captain Hughes.

BU'STLE. } The old word to Buskle may
Bu'stler. } be from Busk in the second
Bu'stling, n. } usage given by Dr. Jamieson, (see Busk,) and Bustle, a different writing of it. Skinner thinks that Bustle or Brustle is from the A. S. Brastlian, crepitare; to rustle.

To be active, to make haste, to move or stir about in a hurry, tumult, or confusion.

Wherefore now began the bisshopes to buskle and bere rule both in the seculare pour & pompe ouer the peple and playd the kinges about 160 yere before Crystis birth.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 2.

Now tel me thā if thou wer goynge out of an howse—whither arte thou goynge out—onely whā thy fote is on ye vttermost yuch of the threshold thy body half out of the doore, or else whan thou beginnest to set the firste foote forward to goe out, in what place of the house so euer ye stand whan ye buskle forward.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 81.

If at day breake with candle lightes
thou buskle not at booke,
If thou to sum good exercyse,
or studie do not looke,
In loue or malice shalt thou plunge,
yea, thoughe thou be awake.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

And you shall passe by a bustling of a tyde that shoules out of the chanel that way, but you need not fear any thing for you shall have no lesse than eight fathom water, and being past the said bustling but a minion shot you shall loose the ground and be in the channel.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 625.

That as from hollow bustling winds, engendered stormes arise,
When dust doth chiefly clog the wayes, which up into the skies
The wanton tempest ravisheth; begetteth night of day;
So came together both the foes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

And down he busl'd, like an oake, a poplar, or a pine,
Hewne downe for shipwood, and so lay. Id. Ib.

The good man bustled through the crowd accordingly, but when he came to the seats to which he was invited, the jest was to sit close, and expose him, as he stood out of countenance to the whole audience.—Spectator, No. 6.

The fight you must believe, brought doun the lady's coach door, and obliged her with her mask off to enquire into the bustle, when she sees the man she would avoid.—Id. No. 454.

While winding now, and intricate,
Now more develop'd, and in state,
Th' united stream, with rapid force,
Pursues amain its downward course,
Till, at your feet absorb'd, it hides
Beneath the ground its bustling tides.
Jago. Labour & Genius.

Forgive him, then, thou bustler in concerns
Of little worth, an idler in the best,
If, author of no mischief and some good,
He seek his proper happiness by means
That may advance, but cannot hinder, thine.
Cowper. Task, b. vi

BU'SY, v. }
Bu'sy, adj. }
Bu'siless. }
Bu'sily. }
Bu'siness. } Dut. Besigh; Fr. Besogne, besogner; It. Bisogno, bisognare. "A. S. Bysgian, occupare, to occupy or employ," (Somner.)

To be or cause to be busy—implies (by usage,) to be or cause to be fully occupied or employed; to be actively engaged; to be employed or engaged beyond due measure; to be too actively meddling.

And herof made he bokes
Ge busilicke bokes. Piers Ploukman, p. 191.

But I wole that ghe be without bisynesse, for he that is withoute wyf is busi what thingis ben of the Lord, hou he schal plese God, but he that is with a wyf is bisi what thingis ben of the world hou he schal plese the wyf, and he is departid.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 7.

But whanne thou goist with thin aduersarye in the weye to the prince: do busynesse to be dyleuerid from him, leat peraventure he take thee to the domesman.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 12.

And he sente hem in to Bethleem: and seide go ye, and axe ye busily of the child and whanne ye han foundun telle ye it to me: that I also come and worschipe him.

Id. Matt. c. 2.

On euery bough the birdes heard I sing
With voice of angell, in her ermony
That busied him, her birds forth to bring.

Chaucer. The Assembly of Foules.

No wher so besy a man as he ther n'as,
And yet he semed besier than he was.

Id. The Prologue, v. 323.

Though I sekenesse haue vpon honde
And longe haue had, yet wolde I fonde
To write, and do my besinesse,
That in some partie so as I gesse,
The wise man maie be aduised. Gower. Con. A.

As at another time, when Christ was so feruently busied in healing the people, that he had no leisure to eat, they went out to hold him, supposing that he had bene beside himself.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 25.

This sayd Mömolus, with the forenamed Bladascus and other of that affynytie, shulde set a fyre an olde temple within the cytie, and when the people of the cytie were besyed to quench ye fyre, the sayd Momolus with his adherentes to open the gates, and so to let in Lyndegylaus and his knyghtes.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 123

The Frenche kynge and his counsaille, and the duke of Normandy wer sore besied, what for the voyage of the Croysey that he had taken vpon hym, and for the warres that the kynge of Naueirre made in the realme.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 218.

Nor (be) such preaching of reformacion & amendmēt of ye world meete maters for him to meddle wt, which with opē heresies & plain pestilēt errours busily goeth aboute to poyso & infect the world.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 299.

The other may be better called a vacation from seryouse busynesse, whiche was some tyme embraced of wise men and vertuous.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 26.

——— She, busied, heard the sound
Of rustling leaves: but minded not, as us'd
To such disport, before her, through the field,
From every beast. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

——— Despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch.—Id. Ib. b. xi.

——— I forget:
But these sweet thoughts, doe euen refresh my labours
Most busie lest, when I do it. [i. e. busiless]

Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. i.

As for the greatest God, and the whole world, men should not busily & curiously search after the knowledge thereof, nor pragmatically enquire into the causes of things, it being not pious for them so to do.—Cudworth. Intell. Syst. p. 76.

She knows all that passes in every quarter, and is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busy-bodies, dependants and poor relations of all persons of condition in the whole town.—Spectator, No. 437.

When a subject is proposed to your thoughts, consider whether it be knowable at all, or no; and then whether it be not above the reach of your enquiry and knowledge in the present state: and remember that it is a great waste of time, to busy yourselves too much amongst unsearchables.

Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 18.

Let us look around us, and observe how the greater part of those we meet are employed. In what is it that their thoughts are busied?—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 12.

The persons who have worked this engine the most busily, are those who have ended their panegyricks in dethroning his successor and descendant.

Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

It seldom happens that men of a studious turn acquire any degree of reputation for their knowledge of business.

Porteus. Tracts. Life of Abp. Secker.

BUT or Bŏt, i. e. be-out, distinguished from būt, to boot, though the different manner of writing the two words is not preserved in old writers. "A. S. Butan, buton are used precisely as S. But, without. "One of them shall not fall on the ground, butan eowrun fæder, without your father," (Matt. x. 29.) "Have ye not read how the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and synt butan lahtre, and are without blame," (Matt. xii. 5.) Even where rendered besides, it has properly the same meaning. "They that had eaten were about five thousand men, butan wifum and cildum, besides women and children;" (Matt. xiv. 21,) i. e. women and children being excepted, left out, or not included in the numeration," (Jamieson in v. Bot.)

Būt, says Mr. Tooke, is the imperative Be-utan of the A. S. Beon-utan, to be out. The meaning of this but and of without is exactly the same. Tooke observes, that not any one word in any language will answer to our English but; because a similar corruption in the same instance has not happened in any other language.

Mr. Steevens acknowledges the existence of the two words but and bot. But, he observes, is the A. S. Butan; butan leas, absque falso, without a lie. In ancient writings, he adds, this preposition is commonly distinguished from the adversative conjunction but; the latter being usually spelt bot.

Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, that this preposition occurs frequently in Gawin Douglas, but that he had not himself noticed it in Chaucer. He had overlooked it. In the examples from Chaucer, "I nam but a compilatour;" "That I may have nat, but my meate." Mr. Tooke remarks, that we should now say, "I am but a compilator;" "That I may have but my, &c." and this omission of the negation is, in his opinion, one of the most blameable and corrupt abbreviations of construction in our language. But denotes—

Be out, without, put or take out, except, unless.

Ther he rerede his heued toun, that London I clepud is:
Ac so ne clepude he yt noig, bute the Nowe Troi.

R. Gloucester, p. 23.

A moneth it was ther aftur, that Colo syk lay,
And deide, as God wolde, with inne the eigtethe day,
And other eir nadde he non, bute Seynt Helene the gode.

Id. p. 84.

And alle dukes of Bruteyne, & the Englyss kynges echone,
I come were to thys parlement, bote kyng Oswy one.

Id. p. 219.

Ne that no man ys wurthe to be yeluped kyng,
Bote the heye kyng of heuene, that wrogte al thyng,
That hath heste of water, and of erthe al so.—Id. p. 322.

He seid vnto tham alle, that purueied suld it be,
That in alle the loud suld be no kyng bot he.—Id. p. 26.

To Thomas the kyng bisouht, the bishop to assoill,
Bot Thomas wild nouh, bot thorgh grace of the apostoile.

R. Brunne, p. 26.

What therefore schulen we seie, the lawe is synne? God forbede, bŭt I know not synne, but bi lawe, for I wiste not that coueityng was synne, but for the lawe seide thou shalt not coueite.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 7.

What shal we say then, is the lawe synne, God forbyd; bŭt I knewe not what synne meante but by the law, for I had not knowen that luste had meant, except the lawe had sayd, thou shalt not luste.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Forsake I wol at home mine heritage,
And as I said, ben of your court a page,
If that ye vouchesafe that in this place,
Ye graunt me to haue such a grace,
That I may haue nat but my meat and drinke,
And for my sustinaunce yet wol I swinke

Chaucer. Legend. Of Ariadne.

I nam but a leude compilatour of the labour of old Astrologiers, and haue it translated in mine English only for thy doctrine: and with this sword shal I slene enuy.

Id. Of the Astrolable.

Ther was also a nonne, a prioresse
That of hire smiling was ful simple and coy;
Hire greatest othe n'as but Seynt Eloy.

Id. The Prologue, v. 120.

This golden cart with firy beames bright
Foure yoked stedes full different of hew,
But bait or tiring through the spheres drew.

Id. The Testament of Creseide.

But meat or drinke she dressed her to lie
In a darke corner of the hous alone,
And on this wise weping she made her mone. Id. Ib.

That she is deade thei speken all.
But plainly howe it is befall
The matter in so littell throwe,
In soothe there might no man knowe.
But thei that weren at the dede. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

This Demephon and Anthemas,
Her purpose tolden, as it was,
Thei setten all still and herde,
Was none but Nestor him answerde. Id. Ib.

For thilke honour, which Aaron toke,
Shall none receue, as seith the boke,
But he be cleped, as he was. Id. Ib. b. ii.

Tulley before hym affyrmed, that a man may not be an orntour, heaped with praise, but if he haue gotten the knowledge of all thinges, and artes of greatest importance.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 14.

Hail holy light, ofspring of heav'n first-born,
Or of th' eternal coeternal beam
May I express thee unblam'd? since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light,
Dwelt from eternity. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

BŬT, (boot,) is the imperative bot, of the A. S. Botan, to boot, i. e. to superadd, to supply, to substitute, to atone for, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something else. (See Tooke, vol. i.) Dr. Jamieson denies that there is any such word as Bot-an. The verb, he says, is Bet-an. But Boetan, or Botan exists with the usual prefix ge, (sc.) ge-boetan. (See to Boot.) In Luke viii. 9 and 14, Wiclif uses but, the Modern Version and. In the Version of the Psalms in the Book of Common Prayer, (Ps. cxv. 5, 6, 7,) and is the conjunction used; in the Bible Version but. But and And are here equivalent, and but denotes—

Add, superadd, subjoin: put, place, give, instead of, in lieu of.

Bote to segge asortlyche, ther nas ver ne ner,
Of prowesse ne of cortesye, in the worl ys per.

R. Gloucester, p. 281.

So that king Philip was annyd thor alle thing
That there was of him word non, bote al of Richard the king.—Id. p. 487.

Bot the most partie algate was slayn,
That with life fled I trowe thie were fulle fayn.

R. Brunne, p. 31.

An abbot of Glastebert, Edward his name is said,
He did make a toumbe, Edgar in to lay,
Bot it was ouer litelle, in all maner way. Id. p. 36.

Bot the fals Edrick hid his quaintise,
That Edmond with Knoute mette in non wyse.—Id. p. 47.

Bot of that wikkednes, that men suld haf wroken,
Was neither more nor lesse of ther penance spoken.

Id. p. 77.

The londes wild he nouht geld, that he of Roberd wan,
Bot haf tham he wilde, & hoide for any man.—Id. p. 99.

Bot thei be of thi faith, els do thei wrong,
Thei stand alle to gode graith, whan thou ert tham among.

Id. p. 193.

But hise disciplis axiden him what this parable was.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 8.

And his disciples asked him, saying, what might this parable be.—Bible. Mod. Vers. Ib.

But that, that fel among thornes ben these that herden, and of bisynessis and richessis & lustis of lyf thei gon forth and ben strangled: & bryngen forth no fruit.

Wiclif. Luk, c 8.

And that, which fell among thornes, are they, which when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.—Bible. Mod. Vers. Ib.

As lene was his hors as is a rake,
And he was not right fat, I undertake;
But loked holwe, and therto soberly.

Chaucer. Prologue, l. 291.

I woll not tellen eke how they all gon
Home til Athenes whan the play is don:
But shortly to the point now wol I wende,
And maken of my longe tale an ende.

Id. The Knightes Tale, l. 267.

Now harkeneth, quod the miller, all and some;
But first I make a protestatioun,
That I am dronke, I know it by my soun:
And therefore if that I mispeke or say,
Wite it the ale of Southwerk, I you pray.

Id. The Miller's Prologue, l. 3139.

But yet is a wonder thinge,
Whan that a riche worthie kynge,
Or lorde, what so he bee,
Woot aske and claime propertie
In thynge, to whiche he hath no right,
Būt onely of his great might. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

That what I thought to speke or do
With tarying he held me so,
Til whan I wolde, and might nought,
I not what thyng was in my thought:
Or it was drede, or it was shame,
But euer in ernest or in game,
I wote there is long tyme passed,
But yet is not the loue lassed,
Whiche I vnto my lady haue.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And now hee feasts them whom he formerly threatened, and turnes their fear into wonder; all unequall love is not partiall: all the bretheren are entertained bountifully, but Benjamin hath a five fold portion.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Joseph.

And yet there were in his time most famous and worthie painters whom he had advaunced, whose works when he beheld, he would praise them all, howbeit, not without a but, for his ordinarie phrase was this; here is an excellent picture but that it wanteth one thing.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 10.

If they [a man's vertues] be like a clear light, eminent, they will stab him with a but of detraction.

Feltham, pt. i. Res. 50.

2 Phy. Be of good comfort, souldier,
The prince hath sent us to you.
Leu. Do you think I may live?
2 Phy. He alters hourly, strangely.
1 Phy. Yes, you may live: but———,
Leo. Finely butted, doctor.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act I. sc. 5.

As for oure God, he is in heauen, he doeth whatsoeuer it pleaseth hym.
Theyr images are but syluer and golde, euen the worcke of mens handes.
They haue mouthes, and speak not: eyes haue they, but they se not.
They haue eares, & heare not: noses have they, but they smell not.
They haue handes and handle not, fete haue they, but they cannot go, neither cā they speake thorow their throte.
They that made them, are lyke vnto them, and so are all suche as put theyr truste in them.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 115.

——— Thus with the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of ev'n or morn,
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine;
But cloud in stead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

BUT. } To abut, (qv.) Mr. Tooke
BUTTING, n. } thinks is from the "A. S. Boda, the first outward extremity of any thing." The preposition, utan, out, with the prefix be, appears to lead more obviously to this "outward extremity." See BUTT, (as a ram.)

To but is—to be on, to touch on, the outward extremity; to be or touch upon the confines or borders; to border upon.

And Antioche is a citie whiche was in olde tyme of so great fame and power that so muche parte of all the country of Syria as reacheth vnto Cicilie & butteth upō it, had the name geuen it thereof.—Udal. Luke, Pref. p. 6.

The sea and land (quoth she) my sonnes you get,
You find a way how you may them divide:
The Pontique flood betweene you both is set,
For bounds of both it buts on either side.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 176.

And Barnsdale there doth butt on Don's well-water'd ground. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

Here are true riches, large possessions indeed; such as are not stinted to a little money, to a piece of ground, or to a kingdom, or territory upon earth, but extend themselves over the whole creation, without buttings or boundings on any side.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 20.

BUT, n. or } (As a ram.) Bout, Spelman
BUTT. } says, is the end of a thing, and
BUT, v. } Abbouter is to thrust forth the end. (See ABUT and BUT, to abut.) Cotgrave, that the Fr. "Bout is the end, head, point, tip, or top, the extreme or utmost part (in length) of any thing; bouter, to thrust, put, force, push forward," (sc.) the end or head. It is applied to—

The action of the ram in thrusting or pushing forward; of the warlike engine, so called,—to any thing hard, knobby, or obtuse, like the head of a ram; thus the but-end, a butt or block. Also to—

Any thing projected; brought or placed forward, (sc.) as a mark; an object to aim at. Met. a butt for wit.

Butt's length,—the distance or shot between the butts: from the butt.

Round about the charet rode cccc. men of armes, all in blacke harneys & their horses barded blacke with the but of their speres vpward.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 10.

And for all his strength, [he] put hym by strong strokes from the barriers, and with the but end of the spere strake the Almaine that he staggared, but for all that the Almayne strake strōgly and hardly at the duke.—Id. Hen. VIII. an. 6.

Lalus. Sweete Lirope, I have a lamb
Newly weaned from the dam,
Of the right kind it is notted,
Naturally with purple spotted,
Into laughter 'twill put you
To see how prettily 't will butt you.
Drayton. The Muses Elysium. Nymphal.

At the last, when the skirmish was very hot, and evening now come on, one exceeding strong ram among other engines was brought forward which with pushes thick and threefold butted upon that round tower, at which in the former siege, I said, the citie by a breach was layed open.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 151.

Like to a ram that buts with horned head,
So spurr'd he forth his horse with desp'rate race.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. vii. s. 88.

They were never espied till that the foremost were within the outer court, and the whole company in the church-yard, not two pair of buts length distant from the town.
Knox. History of the Reformation, p. 90.

So as this regard be had of exchange, that the upper end of the bord, which grew to the head of the tree, bee fitted to the nether hinge or hooke of the dore; and contrariwise the butt end, serve the higher.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 11.

But such as he beheld hang off from that increasing sight,
Such would he bitterly rebuke, and with disgrace excite,
Base Argives, blush ye not to stand, as made for buts to darts. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

It is commonly said, that trees in the forest fully growne, which have stood many a yeare, and namely such as are ready to be fallen and laid along for timber, prove harder to be hewed and sooner wax drie, if a man touch them with his hand before hee set the edge of the ax to their butt.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 1.

There are at this present time three hundred salters, and three salt springs, in the town of Wick, whereof the principal is within a butshoot of the right ripe (or banke) of the river.—Hollinshed. Desc. of England, c. 12.

I mean those honest gentlemen that are always exposed to the wit and raillery of their well wishers and companions, that are pelted by men, women, and children, friends and foes, and in a word, stand as butts.—Spectator, No. 47.

He sweeps the forest oft; and sobbing sees
The glades mild opening to the golden day;
Where, in kind contest, with his butting friends
He wont to struggle, or his loves enjoy.
Thomson. Autumn.

"Virtue and social love," he said,
And honour from the land were fled,
The patriots now like other folks,
Were made the butt of vulgar jokes.
E. Moor. The Trial of Selim.

BU'TCHER, v. } Fr. Bouche, from the Lat.
BU'TCHER, n. } Bucca, whence also Boucher
BU'TCHERING, n. } and Boucherie; butchers,
BU'TCHERLY. } those who prepare things
BU'TCHERY. } which serve ad buccam alendam. Of this opinion are Caseneuve and others. See in Menage, who himself seems to prefer Buccea, a morsel; but Buccea is itself from Bucca. To butcher, as now applied, is—

To slay or slaughter; to kill, to put to death, to murder.

To punyshen on pillories, and on pynyng stoles
As bakers and brewers, bouchers and cokes
For thoes men doth most harme, to the mene puple.
Piers Ploughman, p. 42.

Al thing that is seeld in the bocherie ete ghe axynge no thing for conscience.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 10.

And he lyued tyll the bowcher put his hande into the bulke of his body.—Fabyan. Rich. III. an. 1486.

The parson shereth, the vicare shaueth, the parish priest polleth, the frier scrapeth, and the pardoner pareth, we lacke but a butcher to pulle of the skinne.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 186.

He slewe with his owne handes King Henry the sixt being prisoner in the Tower, as menne constantly saye, and that without cōmaundement or knowledge of the Kyng, whiche would vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office to some other then his owne borne brother.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 37.

He was firste hanged vpon a tree lyke as an oxe is hāged in the bochery, and there dismēbered.
Fabyan. Philippi de Valoys, an. 17.

——— A third murmur
Pierced mine unwilling eares.
Org. That Ithocles
Was murthered, rather butchered, had not bravery
Of an undaunted spirit, conquering terror,
Proclaimed his last act triumph over ruin.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. 2.

And therefore wonder not (I say) that now the devil rageth in his obedient servants, wily Winchester, dreaming Duresme, and bloody Bonner with the rest of their bloody butchery brood.—Knox. History of the Reformation, p. 55.

The second is a butcher's daughter, and sometimes brings a quarter of mutton from the slaughter-house over night against a market day, and once buried a bit of it in the ground, as a known receipt to cure warts on her hands.
Tatler, No. 21.

But among all our methods of moving pity or terrour, there is none so absurd and barbarous, and what more exposes us to the contempt and ridicule of our neighbours, than that dreadfull butchering of one another, which is so very frequent upon the English stage.—Spectator, No. 44.

I see ye come, and havock loose the reins,
A general groan the general anguish speaks,
The stately stag falls butcher'd on the plains,
The dew of death hangs clammy on his cheeks.
Lovibond. On Rural Sports.

The butcheries of Julius Cæsar alone, are calculated by somebody else; the numbers he has been a means of destroying have been reckoned at 1,200,000.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

BU'TLER. } Fr. Boteillier, a butler, a
BU'TLERAGE. } bottleman, a yeoman of the BU'TLERESS. } bottles, a bottlemaker; Sp. Botiller, a bottler, (of wines or BU'TLERSHIP. } other liquors.) Generally—
BU'TLERY. } One who has the care or management of wines and other liquors.

Bedwer the botyler kynge of Normandye,
Nom al so in ys half a nayr companye
Of on syuryte, verto seruy of the botelerye.
R. Gloucester, p. 101.

I am neither Enocke ne Hely
Ne Romulus ne Ganemede
That were bore vp as men rede
To heauen with dan Jupiter
And made the goddes boteler.
Chaucer. Second Books of Fame.

Cupide Is botiler of bothe;
Whiche to the leefe, and to the lothe,
Yeueth of the swete, and of the soure:
That some may laugh, and some loure.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And restored the chiefe buttelar vnto hys buttlarshyppe agayne and he reached the cuppe into Pharaos hande.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 40.

——— And then was spred
A table which the butler set with bread.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

And euery one, so kindly come, he gaue
His sweet wine cup; which none was let to haue
Before this leuenth yeare, landed him from Troy;
Which now the butleresse had leaue t'employ.
Id. Ib. b. iii.

This letter, notwithstanding the poor butler's manner of writing it, gave us such an idea of our good old friend, that upon the reading of it there was not a dry eye in the club.
Spectator, No. 517.

It seems my entertainer was all this while only the butler, who in his master's absence, had a mind to cut a figure, and to be for a while the gentleman himself, and to say the truth, he talked politics as well as most country gentlemen do.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 19.

Prizage, by charter of Edward I., was exchanged into a duty of 2*s.* for every ton imported by merchant-strangers, and called butlerage, because paid to the king's butler.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

BUTT. A. S. Butte, bytte; Dut. Botte, butte; Ger. Bütte; Fr. Botte; It. Botte. In Barb. Lat. and Gr. Butta and BOYTTIS, vas vinarium, (Du Cange.) Wachter derives from the Ger. Beit-en, capere, to take or hold. See BOTTLE.

A vessel of large capacity; varying as to the exact number of gallons.

The kyng [Edw. IV.] much greued and troubled with his brother's querimonye, and continual exclamation caused hym [Clarence] to be apprehended, and caste into the Towre, where he being taken, and adiudged for a traytor, was priuely drouned in a but of Malueseye.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 17.

BU'TTER, v. } Fr. Beurre; It. Butirro,
BU'TTER, n. } burro; Lat. Butyrum. Pliny
BU'TTERY, adj. } (xxviii. 9) says that Butyrum
BU'TTERY, n. } took its name e bubulo; the BU'TTERFLY. } Gr. Βουτυρον, being compounded of Βους, bos, and τυρος, aliquid coagulatum; (sc.)

A coagulated substance procured from the milk of kine.

To butter is to cover, rub or spread over—this substance.

Butter-fly, (A. S. Butter-flege; Ger. Butter-fliege; Dut. Butter-vliege,) Junius thinks is so called from its buttery softness.

Buttery, Skinner thinks, may be the place where butter is kept: or generally, a repository or store-room, from the Fr. Bouter, to put. It seems to have been a store-room for butter, bread, and some few other articles, and to have been distinguished from pantry, larder, &c.

Bothe bred and ale boiere melke and chese.
Piers Ploughman, p. 112.

For when he speaketh of my lucre in good faith he maketh me laugh, and so I wene he maketh many mo too, that knowe well (God bee thanked) that I haue not so muche lucre thereby that I stande in so great peryll of chokyng with lucre, as Tyndall standeth in daunger of choking (God saue the man) with the bones of buttred beere.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 423.

To hand the ball doth cause the coine to wast,
It melts as butter doth against the sunne:
Naught saue thy payne, when play doth cease, thou hast,
To study then is best when all is donne.
Turberville. To his Friend P. &c.

And the maior of Oxford kept the buttery barre, and Thomas Wiat was chiefe curer for Sir Henry Wiat his father.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 25.

I know what's what. I know on which side
My bread is buttered.
Gun. Buttered? Dutch again:
You come not with the intention to affront us.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act II. sc. 1.

It is said, that a certain dame or good wife of Lacedemon went upon a time to visit Berronice, the wife of Deiotarus, but when they approached near together, they turned away immediately one from the other: the one, as it should seem, abhorring the smel of rank butter, and the other offended with the perfume of a sweet oyntment or pomander.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 909.

Sub. Yes, in your master's house.
You, and the rats, here, keep possession.
Make it not strange. I know, yo' were one, could keepe
The buttry hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings.
B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act I. sc. 1.

There is little reason to doubt, but that the same soul which before acted the body of the silkworm doth afterwards act that of the butterfly, upon which account it is, that this hath been made by Christian theologers an emblem of the resurrection.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 868.

Being settled at Durham, he [Richard Fox] forthwith, out of a great vast hall in the castle there, did take as much away as made a faire buttery and a pantry, even to the pulpits or galleries on each side of the hall.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

This person [Hen Cornish] was an assistant to the butler to put on (or enter) bottles in the buttery book.
Id. Fasti, vol. II.

A pye which still retains his proper name,
Though common grown, yet, with white sugar strow'd,
And butter'd right its goodness is allow'd.
King. Art of Cookery.

These wise traders regulate their beauties as they do their butter, by the pound.—Spectator, No. 33.

My name in sure recording page
Shall time itself o'erpow'r,
If no rude mice, with envious rage,
The buttery books devour.
Smart. On taking a Batchelor's Degree.

On each side of the rump of birds is observed a small nipple, yielding upon pressure a *butter*like substance, which the bird extracts by pinching the pap with its bill.
Paley. Theology, c. 13.

A hairy caterpillar is transformed into a butterfly. Observe the change. We have four beautiful wings, where there were none before: a tubular proboscis, in the place of a mouth with jaws and teeth; six long legs, instead of fourteen feet.—Id. Ib. c. 19.

BU'TTOCK. Dr. T. H. derives from Bout, (see To But,) and A. S. Hoh; in Eng. Hough or Hock.

Skinner calls it, a remarkable projection of the muscles, subserving to an extension of the thigh.

Over the buttok to the haunch bon.
Chaucer. The Millers Tale, v. 3801.

Whereupon Hanon toke Dauid's seruantes & shaued thē, and cut of their cootes harde by their buttockes and sent them awaye.—Bible, 1551. 1 Chronicle, c. 19.

They of a third kind, besides that they be otherwise ill-favored ynough, carie a lothsome and odious smell with them: they are sharp rumped and pin buttockt also.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 6.

The Troglodites, a people bounding upon Æthiopia, who live onely upon the venison of elephants flesh, use to clime trees that be neere their walke, and there take a stand: from thence (letting all the heard to passe quietly under the trees) they leape downe on the buttockes of the hindmost.
Id. Ib. b. viii. c. 8.

His body large and deep, his buttocks broad
Give indication of internal strength:
Be short his legs, yet active.—Dodsley. Agriculture.

BU'TTON, v. } Fr. Bouton; It. Bottone,
BU'TTON, n. } from Fr. Bouter; It. Buttare, to drive forth, to thrust forth, to protrude. See To But.) The noun is applied to—

The bud of a plant; that which is thrust forth, (sc.) from the stem or shoot; to any thing placed upon something else, and projecting or protruding from it—as a coat button, a door button, by which the door or coat is fastened or closed.

For in their sight, and woefull parents armes,
Behold a light out of the button sprang
That in tip of Iulus cap did stand.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. II.

——— His bonet buttoned with gold,
His comelie cape begarded all with gay,
His bumbast hose, with linings manifold.
Gascoigne. Woodmanship.

But the danger was, that if she should be admitted to her defence, yet the princess eares would be buttoned and deafe, altho she should confesse.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 161.

——— For so the shaft she plies
That on the buttons made of gold which made his girdle fast,
And where his eurets double were, the fall of it she plac't.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

He wore a garland of roses and myrtles on his head, and on his shoulders a robe like an imperial mantle, white and unspotted all over, excepting only, that where it was clasped at his breast, there were two golden turtle doves that buttoned it by their bills, which were wrought in rubies.
Tatler, No. 120.

At the same time we have a sett of gentlemen, who take the liberty to appear in all publick places without any buttons on their coats, which they supply with several little silver hasps; tho' our freshest advices from London make no mention of any such fashion; and we are something shy of affording matter to the button-makers for a second petition.—Spectator, No. 175.

When I ask, I'm not to be put off, madam, no, no, I take my friend by the button.—Goldsmith. Good-natur'd Man.

Men who all spirit, life and soul,
Neat butchers of a button-hole,
Having more skull, believe it true
That they must have more courage too.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

BU'TTRESS, v. } (See To Butt.) A but-
BU'TTRESS, n. } tress, says Lye, is nothing else than that which is erected on the outside of any thing, for the purpose of supporting it.

The kernels beth of Crystendome, that kynde to save.
And boteraced wit by levye. Piers Ploughman, p. 129.

Our papystes take thys xxx chaptre of Numeri for a myghty staye and most stronge buttasse of vpholdynge the fantasyed vowes of theyr monkerys and massynge prest hode.
Bale. Apology, p. 155.

And all the buttercases of stone, that held their towres upright;
They tore away, with crows of iron; and hop't to ruine all.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

Who fears, in country towns a house's fall,
Or to be caught betwixt a riven wall?
But we inhabit a weak city, here;
Which buttresses and props but scarcely bear:
And 'tis the village masons daily calling,
To keep the world's metropolis from falling.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

Then another question arises, whether this house stands firm upon its ancient foundations, and is not, by time and accidents, so declined from its perpendicular as to want the hand of the wise and experienced architects of the day to set it upright again, and to prop and buttress it up for duration.—Burke. Reform of Representation.

After this are you surprised, that parliament is every day and every where losing (I feel it with sorrow, I utter it with reluctance) that reverential affection, which so endearing a name of authority ought ever to carry with it; that you are obeyed solely from respect to the bayonet; and that this house, the ground and pillar of freedom, is itself held up only by the treacherous underpinning and clumsy buttresses of arbitrary power.—Id. On American Taxation.

BU'XOM. } (See Bosom.) A. S. Bog-som,
BU'XOMLY. } boc-sum, buh-sum; in old English,
BU'XOMNESS. } Bough-some, i. e. easily bended or bowed to one's will; obedient. (See the quotation from Verstegan.) And further applied—

To that which is easily bended or bowed, obedient, compliant, yielding;—easily moved; that which is pliant, flexible, agile, brisk, lively, jolly.

For holy churche hoteth alle manere puple
Under obedience to bee, and buxum to the lawe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 158.

And natheles he hem en poynede boxsomnesse do
To the herchebyssop of Kanterbury.—R. Gloucester, p. 234.

And natheles he bygan yu herte to boxsumnesse amende,
And thogte on the vayre grace, that houre louerd hym sende. Id. p. 318.

They conne with their sweteneesse the cruell hart raulsh and make it mecke, buxome, and benigne, without violence meuing.—Chaucer. The Testament of Love.

And they with humble herte ful buxumly
Kneling upon hir knees ful reverently
Him thonken all.—Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9062.

For all reason wolde this,
That vnto him, which the head is
The membres buxom shall bowe. Gower, Prologue.

Achilles herd his moder telle,
And wist nought the cause why
And netheles full buxomly
He was redy to that she bad,
Wherof his moder was right glad.—Ib. Con. A. b. vii.

But on the other part, if thou by vertuous ruling and buxumnes, giue him cause to loue thee, thou shalt be mistresse in a merie house, thou shalt reioyce, thou shalt be glad, thou shalt blesse the day that thou wert maried vnto him, and all them that were helpyng thereunto.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 2.

For I assure you all, that beside her noble parentage of the whiche she is descended (as all you know) she is a woman of most gentlenes, of most humilitie, and buxumnes, yea and of al good qualities, appertainyng to nobilitie, she is without comparison.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 20.

For many han unto mischiefe fall,
And bene of ravenous wolves yrent
All for they nould be buxome & bent.
Spenser. Shepheard's Cal. Sept.

Buksomnesse or boughsomnesse. Pliablenesse or bowsomenesse, to wit, humbly stooping or bowing doune in sign of obedience. Chaucer writes it buxomnesse.
Verstegan. A Restitution of Decayed Intelligence.

The first I encounter'd were a parcel of buxom bonny dames, that were laughing, singing, dancing and as merry as the day was long.—Tatler, No. 273.

Their buxom health of rosy hue;
Wild wit, invention ever new,
And lively cheer of vigour born.
Gray. Ode on a Prospect of Eton College.

Thrice happy soil! where still serenely gay,
Indulgent Flora breath'd perpetual May;
Where buxom Ceres bade each fertile field
Spontaneous gifts in rich profusion yield.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 3.

BUY. } Goth. Bugyan; A. S. Bycgan, to BU'YER. } bigg or buy, generally used where
BU'YING, n. } money or security for money is given in exchange for something else; and thus distinguished from bartering or exchanging goods for goods, wares for wares.

It is opposed also to the verb to sell; as to procure, acquire, or obtain by payment or purchase.

Wiclif uses the genuine English compounds agenbier and agenbying, for redeemer and redemption.

Thise sent this men & said, that ther conseile so chee,
Thei wild tille vs be laid, in gode lufe & pee,
That our merchants mot go forto bie & selle.
R. Brunne, p. 287.

——— Treuthe sent hym a lettere
And bad hym byone baldly, what him best lykede
And sitthen sellen hit a geyn, and save the wynnynges.
Piers Ploughman, p. 148.

And now he buyeth hit ful bitere.—Id. p. 259.

But whanne the even-tyde was come, his disciplis camen to him and seiden, the place is desert, and the time is now passed, let the puple go into townes to bye hem mete.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 14.

When euen was come, hys dyscyples came to hym saying; this is a desert place, and ye day is spente: let the people departe, yt they may go into the townes, and bye them vytailes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thei camen to Jerusalem, and whan he was entrid into the temple he bygan to caste out sellers and biggers in the temple.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 11.

And they came to Jerusalem. And Jesus went into the temple, and began to caste out the sellers and byers in the temple.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This Moises whom thei denyeden scylinge, who ordeynyde thee prince and domesman on us, God sent this prince and aghen*bier* with the hond of the aungel that apperide to hym in the buysche.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 7.

For there is no departyng, for alle men synnyden and han nede to the glorie of God, and ben iustifyed freely bi his grace bi the aghen*bigyng* that is in Christ Jesu.
Id. Romayns, c. 3.

But o thing or ye go, if it may be,
I wolde prayen you for to lene me
An hundred frankes for a weke or tweye
For certain bestes that I muste beye.
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,302.

Thus then the gouernours of the sayd citie, commaunded all the sayd ships to be sequestred into their owne hands, to the intent that they should not be sold, nor the couetous people to haue the aduauntage in the buying of them.
Golden Boke, l. c. 26.

Ye kinge calliyd a conuocacion of the temporalte & spiritualte at Paris, were to meynteyne his warrys, was grauntyd to hym of all thynge boughi & solde, except vytaile, the iiii. peny, so yt all thing that was solde by retayle, the seller should pay ye exaccion, & that which was solde by great, the byer shulde paye the sayde exaccion.—Fabyan, an. 1371.

When any generall dearth of victuals falleth out in England by reason of the scarcitie of corne, things necessary may there [in London] be prouided and bought with less paine vnto the sellers and with less hindrance and losse vnto the buyers, then in any other place of the realme.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. I. p. 127.

According to which manner and custome, all buyings and sellings at this day which passe with warrantise, are usually perfourmed by interposition of the ballance, which serveth to testifie the realitie of the contract and bargaine on both parts.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 3.

Quoth Matthew, "I know, that, from Berwick to Dover,
You've sold all your premises over and over,
And now, if your buyers and sellers agree,
You may throw all your acres into the South Sea."
Prior. Down-Hall. A Ballad.

For the law presumes that he, who buys an office, will by bribery, extortion, or other unlawful means, make his purchase good, to the manifest detriment of the public.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 3.

Such arts awhile, th' unweary may surprise,
And benefit th' impostor; but ere long,
The skilful buyer will the fraud detect
And with abhorrence reprobate the name.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

BUZZ, v. Buzz, n. Bu'zzer. Bu'zzing, n. } Skinner thinks a sono fictum. Junius, that it is from the Ger. Biesen, busen, fremere, stridere. To make a humming confused noise; to utter a low, continued, uninterrupted noise in the same elevation of sound: a murmuring whisper.

They should sit euen still sadlye, and gape by dal against y^e^ sunne, by night against the mone, till either some blind bettle, or some holy bubie bee come flye in at their mouthes, & buzze into their breastes an vnholesome hope of fleeblowen errours and mothe eaten heresies.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 582.

And though the Jewes and the heathen were so foolishe thorough their vnbelief, to bable many words, yet were they neuer so madde, as to mumble and buz out woordes that they vnderstoode not.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 221.

In faith, quoth he, & some that say thē make me to doubt much, whether the bees in their hyues vsed to say matyns among thē. For euen such another buzzing thei make.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 208.

The bee through flowry gardens goes
Buzzing to drink the morning's teares,
And from the early lily bears
A kiss, commended to the rose.—Sherburne. Sun Rise.

In the night they [bees] rest untill the morning, by which time, one of them awaketh and raiseth all the rest with two or three bigge hums or buzzes that it giveth, to warne them as it were with sound of trumpet.
Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 10.

Her brother is in secret come from France,
Keepes on his wonder, keepes himselfe in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his eare
With pestilent speeches of his father's death.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

Happy, O gnat, though thus made nought,
We wretched lovers suffer more,
Our sonnets are thy buzzings thought,
And we destroy'd by what w' adore.
Carlwright. The Gnat.

In which time the king's desire still increasing for the change of his wife, it was buzz'd into his eares, that he should try the minds of all the chief persons in the nation how they stood affected to the change.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. Reg. Pole.

Faint, underneath, the household fowls convene;
And, in a corner of the buzzing shade,
The house dog, with the vacant greyhound, lies,
Out-stretch'd and sleepy.
Thomson. Summer.

Cynthia, farewell—the pensive muse,
No more her feeble flight pursues,
But all unwilling takes her way
And mixes with the buzz of day.—Lloyd. To the Moon.

Thus perish the miserable inventions of the wretched runners of a wretched cause, which they have fly blown into every weak and rotten part of the country, in vain hopes that when their maggots had taken wing, their importunate buzzing might sound something like the publick voice.
Burke. On American Taxation.

BU'ZZARD, n. Bu'zzard, adj. } Lye thinks it is from the verb to buzz; from the buzzing noise it utters. The name of—
A common species of hawk.

Yea, and suche blynde buzzardes and beastes as wyll be able to abyde no truthe.—Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

These beastly buzzardes are not ashamed both to say & write, y^t^ in their miters they beare the figure of both Testaments, whose veritie they impugne we tooth & nayle.
Id. Image, pt. ii.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzard love, to flie
At what, and when, and how, and where I chuse:
Now negligent of sport I lie
And now as other fawkners use,
I spring a mistresse. Donne. Love's Diet.

It is common to a proverb to call one who cannot be aught or who continues obstinately ignorant, a buzzard.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. iii. c. 5.

BY. In A. S. Be, written also Bi, big; Goth. Bi; Ger. Bei, prepositio late dominans, (says Wachter:) so much so that according to him it is equivalent to almost every preposition in the Latin language. Skinner is satisfied with prope, juxta.

"By (in the A. S. written Bi, be, big) is the imperative Byth, of the A. S. verb Beon, to be. And our ancestors wrote it indifferently either be or by. 'Damville be right ought to have the leading of the army; but by cause they be cousin-germans to the admirall thei be mistrusted,' (1568. See Lodge's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 9.) This preposition is frequently, but not always, used with an abbreviation of construction. Subauditur, instrument, cause, agent, &c.; whence the meaning of the omitted word has been improperly attributed to by. With (when it is the imperative of weorthan) is used indifferently for by (when it is the imperative of beon,) and with the same subauditur and imputed meaning. As 'he was slain by a sword; or he was slain with a sword.' By was used (and not improperly, nor with a different meaning) where we now employ other prepositions, such as for, in, during, through." (See Tooke, i. 403.) Be-on, and by-an, differ little in their pronunciation, and as little in their usage. See By, infra.

By days and by nights: i. e. being, biding, during days and nights.

By his first wife, his first wife being (the bearer, the mother of her five sons.)

Death was by man: man being the cause of death.

To slepe by the morwe or morning: morning being, being come.

We said our sentences by rowe: row being (sc.) the order of our sitting and saying.

By Mary of heaven: Mary of heaven being (witness.)

By aught that I can see: aught, any thing, that I can see, being (to cause me to think otherwise.)

I am well comforted by that ye are willing to go—i. e. ye are willing to go—that being (the case) I am well comforted.

In the expression, to pass by;—by seems superfluous, except for the sake of emphasis. Mark vi. 48, the Common Version reads—"He would have passed by them." Wiclif—"He wolde passe hem:"—By denotes more emphatically the especial persons being, or who were, passed.

The heye men of the lond schulle come bi fore the kyng
And alle the gonge men of the lond lete bi fore hym bryage.
The strengeste me schal bi choye and bi lot also
Chese out, and sende into other lond, here beste forto do.
R. Gloucester, p. 111.

Ther paullons had thi sette beside the water of Done,
Febright gadred partie, & gared him fulle sone.
Listen now, how Jhesu Criste, for his mykelle mercy
Agayn the fals paiens the Cristen stode he by.
R. Brunne, p. 16.

Furst religious of religion. here ruele to holde,
And under obedience to be. by dayes and by nyghtes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 158.

And hath fyve faire sones, by hus furste wyf.—Id. p. 173.

——— By Marie of hevene
Thou shalt fynde fortune. faile at thy moost neede.
Id. p. 193.

For deeth was bi a man, and bi a man is aghenrisyng fro deeth.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 15.

Awake thou coke, quod he, God yeve thee sorwe,
What aileth thee to slepen by the morwe?
Chaucer. The Manciples Prologue, v. 16,965.

But by my mother sainte Venus
And by her father Saturnus
That her engendred by his life.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Be doughty Artours dawes,
That held Englonde yn good lawes,
Ther fell a wondyr cas,
Of a ley that was yette,
That hyght Launval, and natte yette;
Now harkeneth how hit was.
Launfal. Ritson. Romances, vol. i.

Ten yere sech feat he helde,
In the worschepe of Marí myld,
And for hym that dyed on the rode.
Be that his good began to stake
For the gret festes that he dede make,
The knyght gentyll of blode.—St. Cleges. Weber, vol. i.

Hys name was called Geynleyn,
Beyete he was of syr Gaweyne,
Be a forest syde.
Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson. Romances, vol. ii.

Thanne seyde Artour the kyng,
Thys ys a wonder thyng,
Be god and seynt Denys,
Whanne he that wolde be a knyght,
Ne wat noght what he hyght,
And ys so fayr of vys.
Id. Ib.

But me thyngeth thou art to ying,
For to done a good fyghtynge,
Be awght that y can se.
Id. Ib.

Teandelayn was hys name,
Well swyde sprong hys fame,
Be north and be southe.
Id. Ib.

Ho that wyll wyth hym fyght,
Be hyt be day other nyght,
He doth hym lowe lowte.
Id. Ib.

Ther com a mayde ryde,
And a dwerk be here syde,
All beswette for hete.
Id. Ib.

Then sayde we our sentences by rowe as wee sat from the lowest vnto the highest in good order.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1221.

Sir, (quoth Sir Thomas) ye do me more honour than I am worthy, I shall gladly obey you as it is reason, and shall aquyte me in this vyage to the best of my power: than the lorde Neuell sayd, sir, I am well comforted by that ye ar wylling to go.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 338.

What words have past thy lips, Adam severe,
Imput'st thou that to my default, or will
Of wandring, as thou call'st it, which who knows
But might as ill have happ'ned thou being by.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

BY. The preposition, supplies a few compounds, as by-past, by-gone, by-stander; i. e. past by, gone by, a stander by. We have however a long list of words compounded with bye, of which a different account must be given. Spelman, in his Icenia, or Topographical Description of Norfolk, supposes a certain district to have been colonized by the Danes; and one reason which he assigns is, that within the small compass of it, there are thirteen villages whose names end in by, a Danish word signifying villa, seu habitatio. Hence he adds our by-law, in Dan. By-lage, from by, villa, and lage, lex; in A. S. Byan, to inhabit, to dwell. A bye-law then is the law which each bye or villa may have established for itself,—for its own peculiar and especial regulation, independent of the general laws of the state or whole community. And thus by has become applied—

To any thing peculiar and especial; to any thing adapted or intended for private and partial ends or purposes; to any thing within our especial privity, knowledge, or possession; to any thing accessary or collateral, not in the direct and main way. See By the Bye.

——— O thinke what you haue done,
And then run mad indeed: starke-mad: for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 3.

But I who ever shun'd by precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or forc'd examples 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-past'd perils in her way.
Id. A Lover's Complaint.

A man gives me a blow, and instantly I feel resentment; but a bystander informs me that the man is afflicted with the epilepsy, which deprives him of the power of managing his limbs.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 2, 3.

BY. In composition, denoting peculiar, private, &c.

——— —

And he with the esquires of his body and the bande of horsemen that they called Agama was guyded by another by-pathe farre off from the place where his enemys kept theire watche.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 116.

And she must recapitulate my shame,
And give a thousand by-words to my name.
Drayton. Elenor to Duke Humphrey.

Himselfe lay in a by-room farre above
His bed made by his barren wife, his love.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey b. iii.

He would force the company to arise and depart with his unmeasureable prating of the battle of Leuctres, and the occurrents that ensued thereupon insomuch as he got himself a by-name and every man called him Epaminondas.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 170.

Because he would have it knowne that the sight was upon the said river, he devised another by-worke to expresse the same, which all the art of painting otherwise could not performe: for he painted an asse upon the banke, drinking at the river, and a crocodile lying in wait to catch him; whereby any man might soone know it was the river Nilus, and no other water.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 11.

And by a by-glancing at Claudius raigne, [he] cast vpon his mother all the lewd actions of his gouernment, affirming that she was dead for the common good of the estate.
Grenewey. Tacitus. Annales, p. 203.

Thinking that the revenge and exemplary punishment of him was but accessary and by matter.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 412.

What others now count qualities and parts
She thought but complements, and meer by-arts,
Yet did perform them with as perfect grace
As they who do arts among virtues place.
Carteright. On the Death of Mrs. Ashford.

Thus much we thought good to speak of him in by-talk, because an honest player of comedies should match with a shameless and impudent orator of the people.
North. Plutarch, p. 736.

Robert, eldest sonne to the Conquerour, vsed short hose, and thereupon was surnamed Court-hose, and shewed first the vse of them to the English.
Camden. Remains. On Apparell.

——These?
And your three motiues to the battaille? with
I know not how much more should be demanded
And all the other by-dependancies.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 5.

You owe money here besides Sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, foure and twentie pounds.
Id. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 3.

There was likewise a law to restraine the by-lawes, or ordinances of corporations, which many times were against the prerogative of the king, the common-law of the realme and the libertie of the subject, beeing fraternities in euil.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 215.

The archbishops and bishops, next under the king, have the government of the church and ecclesiastical affairs: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places for any by-respects; but only for their learning, gravity and worth: their lives and doctrine ought to be exemplary.
Id. Advice to Sir George Villiers.

The Aga speedily sent for [his disgrac'd slave] to him, and brought her to court, together with her pretty by-blow, the present Padre Ottomano.—Evelyn. Hist. of Padre Ottomano.

Our plays, besides the main design, have underplots or by concernments of less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot.
Dryden. On Dramatic Poesy.

Neglected heaps we in by-corners lay
Where they become to worms and moths a prey;
Forgot, in dust and cobwebs let them rest,
Whilst we return from whence we first digrest.
Id. Art of Poetry. The Epic.

Custom likewise has obtained, that we must form an under-plot of second persons, which must be depending on the first, and their by-walks must be like those in a labyrinth, which all of them lead into the great parterre, or like so many several lodging chambers which have their outlets into the same gallery.—Id. Preface to Œdipus.

Which expressions import a most constant and carefull attendance upon the duty, that we do not make it voopoyov, or by business in our life (a matter of small consideration or indifference, of curiosity, of chance,) to be transacted drowsily or faintly, with a desultorious and slight endeavour, by fits as the humour taketh us.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 6. p. 72.

I afterwards entered a by-coffee house that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror, engaged very warmly with a laceman, who was the great support of a neighbouring conventicle.—Spectator, No 403.

The other day I took a walk a mile or two out of town, and, strolling wherever chance led me, I was insensibly carried into a by-road, along which was a very agreeable quickset of an extraordinary height which surrounded a very delicious seat and garden.—Tatler, No. 45.

For thus out of hope, by the light of understood Scriptures, to penetrate the sense of the obscurer ones, we occasionally so improve our knowledge and readiness in the clearer passages, that our by-acquists do richly recompence our frustrated (or rather unsucceeding) pains.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 268.

Let us rather mention with honour the names of as many of them, as we can reasonably suppose to have been led into this design by sincere motives of advancing the glory of God, and the salvation of souls, without aiming at by ends or any temporal advantages.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 4. p. 169.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity; no man's power shall scare him from doing his duty, no man's importunities shall weary him, no man's flattery shall bribe him, no by-views of his own shall mislead him.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 3. p. 97.

At the same time we were crumbled into various factions, and parties; all aiming at by-interests without any sincere regard for the public good.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 4. p. 130.

It is by no means an argument of the obscurity of the Scripture expression, unless we would know certainly, that these men were honest and upright in their searches, acted with no by-designs, had no vain end, which they proposed to themselves, of heading a party, or baffling received opinions.
Id. vol. iii. Ser. 10. p. 250.

I agree with him fully in the last; and if I were forced to allow the first, I should still think with our old coarse bye-word—that the same power, which, furnished all their restorateurs, sent also their present cooks.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

BY AND BY. No attempt has yet been made to account for this phrase.

In the first example, from R. Brunne,—"The chartre was read ilk point bi and bi;" the expression seems to be elliptical;—each point by (sub. point) and by (sub. point) by point and by point; each point by itself. In the second, "William had taken the homage of barons bi and bi:" of barons, bi baron, and bi baron; each baron by himself, distinctly, separately. So in the third example, "He assayed tham bi and bi, and retreied them ilk one." He, (P. Edward, son of Henry III. when planning his escape from Simon de Montford,) he assayed them (the horses) by one and by one; and tried each one again,—till they stood stone still, and were unable to pursue him, when he had mounted the last and fleetest of them. The same manner of explanation will apply to the quotations from Chaucer, and justify Mr. Tyrwhitt's interpretation "separately, distinctly," not only in the line "these were his words by and by," (R. R. 4581,) but also in the two passages from the Canterbury Tales, to which he refers.

By and by, then may be, by one and by one; being one,—separately or successively after the other; distinctly, apart, both in space and time.

In the quotation from Stow, we approach to our modern usage, for there it is clearly equivalent to the old word, anon; in one (sub. instant, moment, minute,) that is, immediately, instantly.

The chartre was red on hi, in Westmynstere & schewed,
Ilk poynt bi and bi, to lerid and to lewed.
R. Brunne, p. 301.

Whan William was coruned kyng so solemply
And had taken homage of barons bi and bi,
He turned ouer the se vnto Normandi.—Id. p. 73.

He assayed tham bi and bi, and retreied tham ilkone
And stoned tham alle wery, standand stille as stone.
Id. p. 219.

And so befell, that in the tas they found,
Thurgh girt with many a grevous blody wound,
Two yonge knightes ligging by and by,
Bothe in on armes, wrought ful richely.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1016.

His doughter had a bed all by hireselve,
Right in the same chambre by and by.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4141.

Now wool I shortly here reherce
Of that I have saied in verce
All the sentence by and by
In wordes fewe compendiously.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Sir, we are all like to be vtterly undone and destroyed for your sake, our houses shall by and by be thrown downe vpon our heads, to the vtter spoyl of this borough with the shot of the tower all ready bent and charged towards us.
Stow. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

First we learn to bear it, then we come to like it, by and by we contract a friendship with it, then we dote upon it, at last we come enslaved to it in a bondage, which we shall hardly be able or willing to shake off.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16. p. 167.

BY THE BYE. In this expression the latter bye seems to be the same bye as in by-law, &c. and of course to admit a similar explanation. In Lord Bacon; "there is upon the by to be noted," i. e. upon the way, in passing, indirectly, this being a collateral and not the direct or main object of pursuit. In B. Jonson; "those who have saluted poetry on the by;" on their way, in passing; poetry being the collateral and not the direct or main object of their pursuit.

By the bye then is by the way, in passing, such being a collateral and not main object.

In this instance, there is (upon the by) to be noted, the percolation, or suing of the verjuyce through the wood
Bacon. Natural History, § 77.

Come, do you thank, I'ld walk in any plot,
Where Madame Sempronia should take place for me
And Fulvia come i' the reere, or o' the by?
That I would be her second, in a businesse,
Though it might vantage me all the Sun sees?
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iii. sc 2.

Poetry in this latter age, hath prov'd but a meane mistresse, to such as have wholly addicted themselves to her: or given their names up to her family. They who have but saluted her on the by, and now and then tendred their visits, she hath done much for.—Id. Discoveries.

Mark the manner of it: Cobham had told this at least two months before to his Brother Brook, "You are fools, you are on the bye, Raleigh and I are on the main; we mean to take away the King and his cubs."
State Trials. James I. 1603. Sir W. Raleigh.

Speak modestly in mentioning my services:
And if ought fall out in the by, that must
Of meer necessity touch any act
Of my deserving praises, blush when you talk on't.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act iii. sc. 1.

No man begins to make any tolerable figure till he sets out with the hopes of pleasing some one of us. No sooner he takes that in his head, but he pleases every one else by the by.—Tatler, No. 10.

The Pervigilium Veneris (which by the bye, does not belong to Catullus) is very well versified, and in general all Parnell's translations are excellent.
Goldsmith. Life of Dr. Parnell.

BYE. See ABIE. To buy or pay for, (sc.) dearly, cruelly, sorely.

——O hatefull wretch,
O henyous traitour both to heaven and earth,
Thou, Porrex, thou this damned dede hast wrought,
Thou, Porrex, thou, shalt dearly bye the same
Sackville. Ferrex & Porrex.

BYSS. } Gr. Βυσσος; Lat. Byssus; of
BY'SSINE. } eastern origin. See Vossius, and the quotation from Pliny.

Bisse, fine white, whether it be silk or lynen.
Tyndall. Table for expounding Wordes in Genesis.

And it is ghoun to hir that scho keuere hir with whyt bisyn schynynge, for whi [q. whyt] bissen is iustifyngis of seyntis.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 19.

The line called byssus [is] the fine lawne or tiffanie whereof our wiues and dames at home set so much store by for to trim and decke themselves.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1

C

C, (says Ben Jonson) is a letter which our forefathers might very well have spared in our tongue. It has no sound peculiarly its own. It has the simple power of K, as in cable, crust; the simple power of S, as in certain, cease, whence; or the compound power of Ts, as in chance, church.

CAB. A Hebrew measure, about three pints.

In the famine of Samaria the fourth part of a cab of pigeon's dung was sold for five pieces of silver.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 3.

CABA'L, n.
CABA'L, v.
CA'BALA, n.
CA'BALISM.
CA'BALIST.
CABALI'STICAL.
CABALI'STICK.
CABALI'STICALLY.
CABA'LLER.

From the Hebrew. It. Cabala; Sp. Cabala; Fr. Cabale. "A hidden science of divine mysteries," says Cotgrave, "which the Rabbies affirm was revealed, and delivered together with the law unto Moses, and from him derived, by successive relation, unto posterity: (yet is it, in truth, no better than a vain rabble of their own traditions,) or, a crew of rogues."

To a crew of rogues, it appears to be applied, because they are united or associated for dark and mysterious purposes; with secret and concealed designs: persons, plotters, complotters.

Vigorous impressions of spirit, extasies, &c. cabbalisms.
Spenser. On Prodigies.

I am no cabalist to lodge by number,
Yet that this church is so with pillers fill'd,
It seemes to me to be the lesser wonder,
That Sarums church is every houre pill'd.
Sir J. Harington. Epigram. A Salisbury Tale.

Rabbi Elias, from the first chapter of Genesis, where the letter aleph is six times found, cabalistically concludes that the world shall endure just six thousand years: aleph in computation standing for a thousand.
Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 123.

I know no reason but that all well-willers to truth and godlinesse should heartily thank me for my present cabbalistical enterprize, I having so plainly therein vindicated the holy mystery of the Trinity from being (as a very bold sect would have it,) a mere pagan invention.
H. More. Conjectura Cabbalistica, Ep. Ded.

Base rivals, who true wit and merit hate,
Caballing still against it with the great,
Maliciously aspire to gain renown,
By standing up, and pulling others down.
Dryden. Art of Poetry, c. 4.

Lord Clifford was made lord treasurer; Lord Arlington and Lord Lauderdale had both of them the garter: and, as Arlington was made an earl, Lauderdale was made a duke: and this junta, together with the Duke of Buckingham, being called the cabal, it was observed, that cabal proved a technical word, every letter in it being the first letter of those five, Clifford, Ashby, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1672.

Add hereunto, that our Saviour spake this to the Jews; and that therefore the parable must be expounded agreeably to the ancient cabala or tradition received among them concerning the state of separate souls.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 3

A wonder less to be admired, than the power expressed by God in so immense a work, [as the world] which nevertheless some modern philosophers (whose opinions I find some cabalists to countenance) suppose to be not the only production of God's omnipotence.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 20.

And it is plain to him that hath carefully read St. Paul's Epistles, and is acquainted also with the writings of Philo, that the holy apostle well understood that cabalistical theology of the Jews, and retained so much of it, as by the direction of the divine spirit in him, he found to be sound, good, and genuine.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Then Drances took the word, who grudg'd long since,
The rising glories of the Daunian Prince,
Factious and rich, bold at the council board.
But cautious in the field, he shunn'd the sword;
A close cabalier, and tongue-valiant lord.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. ix.

At his request I sought for ancient city,
That lay conceal'd in cabalistic ditty;
So did we all—for when his letter came,
Some friends were chair'd around the focal flame.
Byron. Answer to a Letter.

CA'BALLINE. Gr. Καβαλλης, a name, says Vossius, applied to the meaner sort of horses, from the Doric Καββαλλειν, pro καταβαλλειν, to throw or cast down.

Lat. Caballus; It. Cavallino; Fr. Cabalin, of or belonging to a horse. Beaumont alludes to the fable of Pegasus.

The Muses would muse any should it misuse
For it makes them to sing like a nightingale,
With a le'tle trim note, having washed their throat
With the caballine spring of a pot of good ale.
F. Beaumont. The Ex-ale-tation of Ale.

CA'BBAGE, n.
CA'BBAGE, v.

"Dut. Kabuys kool; brassica capitata; Ger. Kabis kraut; Gal. Chous cabus; It. Cabuzzo," (Kilian.) Junius suggests the Gr. Κολον, cibus; Skinner and Lye, the Lat. Caput; and Tooke the Gr. Καβη, food. Skinner and Lye appear to be right. The name was probably given to particular kinds of cole, to distinguish them from others that do not cabbage or head. Fr. Caboche, the head, is also cabbage. It. Capuccio.

Cato highly commendeth the garden coules or cabbages, whereby we may know, that in his dayes gardens were in some respect.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 4.

He has receiv'd weekly intelligence,
Upon my knowledge out of the Low Countries,
(For all parts of the world) in cabages,
And those dispers'd againe, to ambassadours,
In oranges, musk melons, apricotes,
Limons, pome-citrons, and such like.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act ii. sc. 1.

'Tis scarce an hundred years since we first had cabbages out of Holland, Sir Anth. Ashley, of Wiburg St Giles, in Dorsetshire, being (as I am told) the first who planted them in England.—Evelyn. Acetaria, § 11.

The learned Bartholinus, in the treatise we have often had occasion to take notice of, says, That the water, wherein cabbage had been decocted, will, when frozen, represent a cabbage; the vegetable spirits being, as he supposes, concentrated by the cold.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 651.

Altho' I before have advised the planting out of your cabbages for good in October, yet of cabbage the sugar loaf kind may be planted out in February, and will succeed as well as if planted earlier, with this difference only, that they will be later before they cabbage.—Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

CA'BIN, n.
CA'BIN, v.
CA'BINED, adj.

Fr. Cabane; Sp. Cabanna; It. Capanna; Dut. Kaban; Mid. Lat. Capanna, tugurium. All, says Skinner, from the Lat. Cavanna, cavea, a hole or cavern. Salmasius and Menage contend for the Gr. Καυανη, a stable, præsepe; in the same application. Junius observes, as in Horace, (Ep. xv. l. i. v. 28.)

Scurra vagus, nec qui certum præsepe teneret.

But præsepe here seems applied to the manger; merely (i. e.) to be used satyrice pro mensa.

A cabin is any small chamber or apartment, on shipboard or elsewhere; any small place of dwelling, as a cot or tent.

This yonge ladie wepte and cride,
To whom no comforte might availe,
Of childe she began travaile
Where she laie in a cabin close.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

This Gabriel declared vnto me, that they had saued both the ankers and our hauser, and after we had thus communed, I caused 4 or 5 of them to goe into my cabbin, where I gaue them figs, and made them such cheere as I could.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 277.

I'le make you feed on berries, and on roots,
And feed on curds and whay, and sucke the goate,
And cabbin in a caue, and bring you vp
To be a warriour, and command a campe.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iv. sc. 3.

Good night, good rest, Ah! neither be my share;
She bade good night, that kept my rest away;
And daft me to a cabin hang'd with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.
Id. The Passionate Pilgrim, st. xii.

Mor. And why he should delude you thus,
Unless he meant some villany? these ten weeks
He has had her at sea.
Lam. His cabin-mate I'll assure ye.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv. sc. 1.

Lightning was all our light, and it rain'd more
Than if the sun had drunk the sea before,
Some coffin'd in their cabins lie, equally
Griev'd that they are not dead, and yet must die.
Donne. The Storm.

Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
The nice morn, on th' Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.
Milton. Comus.

[He] observed divers of them [divers for pearls] at their return to the boats, to be ready to shake with cold, and hasten to the fires that were kept ready for them in little cabbins upon the shore.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 346.

——— The plodding hind,
That homeward hies, kens not the chearing site
Of his calm cabbin, which a moment past,
Stream'd from its roof an azure curl of smoke,
Beneath the sheltering coppice, and gave sign
Of warm domestick welcome from his toil.
Mason. The English Garden, b. iii.

CA'BINET, n.
CA'BINET, v.

Fr. Cabinet: It. Cabinetto;—Cabinet is the diminutive of cabin, and is applied to—

A casket, for depositing jewels, coins, &c. as well as to a small cabin, closet, cot, room or apartment.

The persons who meet in a cabinet or chamber for council, are called The Cabinet.

When his friends about him, shewed him many uses whereof the said coffer or cabinet might bee put into, considering that Alexander himself could not away with those delicate perfumes, being a warriour, and alurred with bearing armes, and following warfare: when, I say, his gossipps about him could not resolve well what service to put it to: himselfe made no more adoe, but said thus, I will have it to serve for a case of Homer's bookes.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 29.

When from your well-wrought cabinet you take it,
And your bright looks awake it,
Ah! be not frighted if you see
The new soul'd picture gaze on thee,
And hear it breathe a sigh or two.—Cowley. My Picture.

This is the frame of most men's spirits in the world, to adore the casket, and contemn the jewell that is cabinetted in it.—Henryt. Sermons, p. 87.

And if all that will not serve our turn, but we must press into his cabinet-secrets, invade the book of life, and oversee, and divulge to all men abscondita Domini Dei nostri, them are God's mercies unworthily repaid by us, and those indulgences which were to bestow civility upon the world, have only taught us to be more rude.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 620.

If we were admitted to search the cabinet of the beauteous Narcissa, among heaps of epistles from admirers, which are there preserved with equal care, how few should we find, but would make any one sick in the reading, except her who is flattered by them?—Spectator, No 525.

You will then see, that the same extensive capacity, which could guide all the tumultuous scenes of the camp, knew how to direct, with equal skill, the calmer but more perplexing operations of the cabinet.
Mallet. To the Duke of Marlborough.

The cabinet council, as it is called, consists of those ministers of state, who are more immediately honoured with his majesty's confidence, and who are summoned to consult upon the important and arduous discharge of the executive authority.—Blackstone. Com. b. i. c. 5. Note by Editor.

CA'BLE, n.
CA'BLED, adj.

Fr. Cable; Dut. Cabel; Gr. Καμηλος or Καμιλος. Vossius observes that if Καμηλος, a camel, is used pro rudente, for a cable, it is either because a cable recalls to mind (referat) that huge and distorted animal; or because cables were formerly wrought of camel's hair;—but there is nothing satisfactory to be found upon the etymology of this word.

The large rope, to which the ship's anchor is affixed, is called the cable.

For first though thei beginne low
At ende thei be nought mouable,
But all to broke must and cable,
So that the ship with sodaine blaste
(What men leste wene) is ouercast.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

—— Awake, get up, my men.
Aboord your shipa, and huyse vp sayl with speede.
A God me wills, sent from aboue againe,
To hast my flight, and writhen cables cut.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Which thing is the cause that our Saulour Christ said it were as harde for the riche manne to come into heauen, as a great cable or a camel to go through a needle's eye. For it is not sinne to haue riches but to loue riches
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 92.

A beechen mast then in the hollow base
They put and hoisted; fixt it in its place
With cables. Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

When Chancellor was returned, and reported these things, and how dear the English clothes were sold in those parts, and how cheap hemp and flax for cables, wax and rich furrs were sold unto them, those merchants grew into a company or society, by the assent of Queen Mary, which we call the Moscovia Company.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1567.

From its (the American aloe) roots are likewise made the strongest ropes and cables.—Derham. Phy. Theo. b. x. note y.

While they, her flattering creeks and opening bowers
Cautious approaching, in Myrinna's port
Cast out the cabled stone upon the strand.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

Should we at last be driven by dire decree
Too near the fatal margin of the sea,
The hull dismasted there awhile may ride,
With lengthen'd cables, on the raging tide.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 2.

CACHE'XY. Fr. Cachexie; It. Cachesia; Lat. Cachexia, Gr. Καχεξια, κακος, ill, and εξις, habit. Cachexy or—

Ill habit of body, a general word to express a great variety of symptoms; most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from the weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers. (Arbuthnot. On Diet.)

CA'CKLE, n. } Dut. Kaeckelen; Gr. Κακ-
CA'CKLE, v. } καζειν, which, according to
CA'CKLING, n. } Hesychius, is used to express—

The noise of a hen after laying her egg.

Absurd it is, and to no purpose, to give such carefull heed unto the crying wide throats of crows, or to the craing and cackling of hens, or to swine, when in a rage they tosse and fling straw about them (as Democritus saith) thereby to gather presages, and prognostications of wind, raine, and stormes, and in the meane time not to observe the motions, troubles, and fiering indispositions of our bodie.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 507.

Cal. Yes. 'Tis the same: I will take no notice of ye,
But if I do not fit ye, let me fry for't.
Is all this cackling for your egg?
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act I. sc. 1.

The farmer's goose, who in the stubble
Has fed without restraint or trouble,
Grown fat with corn, and sitting stull,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill;
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighbouring pool;
Near loudly cackles at the door;
For cackling shows the goose is poor.
Swift. The Progress of Poetry.

—— And there you might behold
The palace, thatch'd with straw, now roof'd with gold.
The silver goose before the shining gate
Tame fowl, and by her cackle, sav'd the state.
She told the Gauls approach.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

Homer compares the noise and clamour of the Trojans, advancing towards the enemy, to the cackling of cranes, when they invade an army of pigmies.—Tatler, No. 155.

CACODE'MON. } Gr. Κακος, evil, and δαιμων,
CACODE'MO'NIAL. } a demon.

An evil or mischievous demon or spirit.

Skelton, in his Why come ye not to court, uses the adj. cacodemoniall.

Nor was the dog a cacodæmon,
But a true dog, that would show tricks
For th' emperor, and leap o'er sticks.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

CACOE'THES. Fr. Cacoethe; Lat. Cacoethes; Gr. Κακοηθεια, κακος, ill, and ηθος, habit.

A bad habit or custom.

Juvenal terms [this distemper] a Cacoethes, which is a hard word for a disease called in plain English, "The itch of writing." This Cacoethes is as epidemical as the small pox, there being very few who are not seized with it some time or other in their lives.—Spectator, No. 532.

CACO'PHONY. Gr. Κακοφωνια, κακος, ill, and φωνη, voice, sound. Sp. Cacophonia; It. Cacofonia; Fr. Cacophonie.

An ill, harsh, or unpleasing sound, (in speech, in the voice.)

But these things shall lie by, till you come to carp at 'em, and alter rhymes, and grammar, and triplets and cacophonies of all kinds.—Pope. To Swift. April 2, 1733.

CADA'VER. } Lat. Cadaver, from Ca-
CADA'VEROUS, adj. } dere, to fall: quia absque animâ corpus esse fulcire nequit, (Vossius.) And so the Gr. Πτωμα, from Πιπτειν, to fall, (immediately from the unused πτομω.) The adj. is in common use, the n. is not so.

A fallen body; a lifeless, inanimate carcass.

And here I shall not mention that moral influence of his resurrection upon ours; by the example of his powerful rising out of the grave, to preach to us the necessity of our shaking off the grave cloths, that cadaverous, chill, noisome state of sin, και συνεγειρεσθαι τω χριστω, to rise again with him.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 529.

Nor will others be fond of comming to him, when they shall find nothing but a cadaverous man, composed of diseases and complaints, that for want of knowledg hath not discourse to keep reason company.—Feltham, pt 2, Res. 31.

Since whilst a man is truly and properly said to live, many affections belong to his corporeal part, or are performed in it, or by it, that make this automaton called his body, much, and very advantageously, differing from a mere cadaver.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 718.

But scare away the vultures for an hour;
The scent cadaverous (for, oh! how rank
The stench of profligates!) soon lures them back.
Young. On Public Affairs.

CADE, n. Lat. Cadus; Gr. Καδος.
A hollow (sc.) vessel; a cask or barrel.

Cade. Woe John Cade, so term'd of our supposed father.
Bul. Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 2.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close prest husks is freed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cades.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

The farmer's toil is done; his cades mature
Now call for vent. Id. Ib.

CA'DENCE, n. } Lat. Cadere, to fall, from
CA'DENCE, v. } Καταω, that is, deorsum,
CA'DENCY. } (Vossius.) Fr. Cadence, It.
CA'DENT. } Cadenza; Sp. Cadencia.

The Fr. Cadence, Cotgrave explains; a just falling, round going of words, a proportionable time, or even measure, in any action, or sound.

Cadence is applied by Milton to the going down, sinking or declining of the sun; by Hammond, to the manner in which Paul falls upon certain expressions,—into a certain train of thought.

And natheless hast set thy wit
Although in thy heed ful litel is
To make bookes, songes and dites
In rime or els in cadence
Chaucer. The Second Boke of Fame.

The cadence, or manner how Paul falls into those words, is worthy to be both observed and imitated: the chief and whole business of this verse being the truth, the acceptable truth of Christ's incarnation, with the end of it, the saving of sinners, he can no sooner name this word sinners, but his exceeding melting tenderness abruptly falls off, and subsumes, Of all sinners, &c.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 687.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon, and gentle airs due at their hour
To fan the earth now wak'd, and usher in
The evening coole—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Let it stampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheekes.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act I. sc. 4.

Accept this token, Carteret, of good will,
The voice of nature, undebas'd by skill,
These parting numbers, cadenc'd by my grief,
For thy lov'd sake, and for my own relief,
If aught, alas, thy absence may relieve,
Now I am left, perhaps, through life to grieve.
Philips. To Lord Carteret.

But Italy, reviving from the trance
Of Vandal, Goth, and Monkish ignorance,
With pauses, cadence, and well vowel'd words,
And all the graces a good ear affords,
Made rhyme an art.—Dryden. Ep. To Roscommon.

And St. Paul himself, though he hath no affected cadencies, and doth not strictly observe the rhetorician's rules in the choice and placing of his words, yet there is a great deal of height in his expressions, and force in his reasonings, and sometimes a very artificial way of insinuation into the minds of his hearers.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

He had, indeed, a greater and a nobler work to perform; a single sentiment of moral or religious truth, a single image of life or nature, would have been cheaply lost for a thousand echoes of the cadence to the sense
Rambler, No. 94.

CADE'T, n. A younger brother among gentlemen. (Cotgrave.)

From Capitetum, that is, petit chef. Anciently written Capdet, (Menage and Du Cange.) Du Cange (in v. Cadedus,) observes that les chefs de maison were called Capmas; that is, capita domus, heads of the house.

Richard Zouche, or Zouchæus, as he sometimes writes himself, the cadet of an antient and noble family, was born of worthie parents in the parish of Ansley in Warwickshire.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

The prosecutor alledged, that he was the cadet of a very ancient family; and that, according to the principles of all the younger brothers of the said family, he had never sullied himself with business, but had chosen rather to starve like a man of honour, than do any thing beneath his quality.
Tatler, No. 205.

CADGE, v. } In Scot. Cache, caich, cadge, to CA'DGER, n. } toss, to drive, to shog. The more modern orthography is cadge. Yorkshire id. to carry. Hearne explains catches, cassith, in R. Brunne, but it seems to signify drives. Hence Eng. Cadger, a huckster. The origin certainly is Teut. Kats-en, kets-en, cursare, cursitare, discurrere, to run, or cause to run about; Belg. Een bal kaats-en, to toss a ball, (Jamieson in v. Cache.)

Sir Edward herd wele telle of his grete misdede,
Ther power forto felle, it catchis him to spede.
R. Brunne, p. 240.

CA'DOWE, n. Holland calls the young of the crow by this name. Junius, the daw, and thinks the word compounded of ca and daw or dow. A. S. Ceo, cornix; Dut. Ka, kae, kauwes.

Moreover this bird [the crow] only feedeth her young cadowes for a good while after they are able to flie.
Holland. Pinie, b. x. c. 12.

CA'DUKE, adj. } Lat. Caducus, from Cad-
CADU'CITY. } ere, to fall; Fr. "Caduque, frail; Caduke, feeble, ruinous, ready to fall, unable to support itself. — Caducité, frailty, weakness, aged feebleness," (Cotgrave.)

Gibbon, and his castigator, Whitaker, have preserved caducity.

Every thing in this world is caduke, transitory, and momentary.—Fisher. Seven Psalmes, Ps. cxlii. pt ii.

On the third day, the weary troops beheld the sea, the solitary town of Rodosto, and their friends, who had landed from the Asiatic shore. They embraced, they wept; but they united their arms and counsels; and, in his brother's absence, Count Henry assumed the regency of the empire, at once in a state of childhood and caducity.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 61.

This is worse than the worst of Johnson's sesquipedalian words. It is also absurd. Caducity forms no contrast to childhood. And senility should have been the latinized word.—Whitaker. Review of Gibbon.

CÆ'SURE. Lat. Cæsura, from Cæs-um, past part. of Cædere, to cut: applied to—

A section, or division of a verse; of a word: to the rest or pause upon the close of such section.

No accents are so pleasant now as those,
That are cæsura'd through the pastor's nose.
Brome. A Satire on the Rebellion.

Vulgar languages that want
Words and sweetnesse, and be scant
Of true measure,
Tyran rime hath so abused,
That they long since have refused
Other ceasure.
B. Jonson. A Fit of Rime against Rime

Nais. This presence delights me,
My freedom invites me,
The season excites me
In rhyme to be merry.
Cho. And I beyond measure,
Am ravish'd with pleasure,
To answer each cesure.
Until thou be'st weary.—Drayton. Third Nymphal.

CAGE, v. } Fr. Cage; It. Gabbia; which the CAGE, n. } older etymologists, Menage, Junius, and Skinner derive from the Lat. Cavea. But all these, together with the ancient Lat. Cavere, (apud veteres — cohibere, retinere, compescere, Martin.) Tooke derives from the A. S. Cæggian, observare, to block up; and explains cage to be—

A place shut in and fastened—in which birds are confined. Also a place in which malefactors are confined.

Men loven of propre kind newe fangelnesse,
As briddes don, that men in cages fede.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,925.

O pardon me, in that my boast is true,
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

The woman seem'd some hundred yeares of age,
Her wither'd skin such store of wrinkles had,
And like an ape or monkie in a cage,
So looked she in this apparrell clad.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xx. s. 81.

Sir Paul Rycaut, says he, gives us an account of several well disposed Mahometans, that purchase the freedom of any little bird they see confin'd in a cage, and think they merit as much by it, as we should do here by ransoming any of our countrymen from their captivity at Algiers.
Spectator, No. 343.

But gaudy plumage, sprightly strain,
And form genteel, were all in vain,
And of a transient date;
For caught, and cag'd and starv'd to death
In dying sighs my little breath
Soon pass'd the wiry grate.—Cowper. On a Goldfinch.

Thus proud prerogative, not much reverd
Is seldom felt, though sometimes seen and heard,
And in his cage, like parrot fine and gay,
Is kept to strut, look big, and talk away.—Id. Table Talk.

CAJOLE, v. } Fr. Cacoller, cageoller, to court
CAJOLERY, n. } a lady in jest; to prattle or jangle, (like a jay in a cage;) to babble or prate much to little purpose,—Cotgrave; who also says that Cageoleur is one that (like a jay in a cage) jangles much, to no purpose. He evidently considers cage to be the root of cageoler, and in this he is supported by Menage.

To cajole, as now used, implies an intention to delude, to overreach, to entrap by flattery, soothing, coaxing.

But while the war went on, the Emperor [Charles] did cajole the King [Henry VIII] with the highest compliments possible, which always wrought much on him, and came in person into England to be enstalled Knight of the Garter.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1522.

Alexander the Great was constrained to heare one of those infamous cajolleries, when one of his court protested to him that the very flyes which sucked his blood became more valiant, and gave stings more courageously than other flies.
Evelyn. Of Liberty and Servitude, c. 4.

I task you for yourself, my friend,
A subject you can ne'er defend,
And you cajole me all the while
With dissertations upon style.
Lloyd. Dialogue between Author and Friend.

Besides I flatter myself, that a fair representation of the usage I have met with will be as a beacon, to caution other inexperienced authors against the insincerity of managers, to which they might otherwise become egregious dupes; and, after a cajoling dream of good fortune, wake in the aggravation of disappointment.—Smollet. Regicide, Pref.

Even if the Lord Mayor and Speaker mean to insinuate that this influence is to be obtained and held by flattering their people, by managing them, by skilfully adapting themselves to the humours and passions of those whom they would govern, he must be a very untoward critic who would cavil even at this use of the word, though such cajoleries would perhaps be more prudently practised than professed.
Burke. Letter to Richard Burke, Esq.

CAITIFF, n. }
CAITIFF, or CAITIVE, adj. }
CAITIVELY. }
CAITIVENESS. } Fr. Chétif; It. and Sp. Cativo; Dut. Kattuff. Chétif anciently signified Captif, (Menage.) From the Lat. Captivus. Junius observes that this word, in its first acceptation, denoted, captive, unhappy, wretched; and afterwards, bad, dishonest. Cotgrave fully details the various applications.

"Chetiff, caitive, wretched, miserable, unfortunate, forlorn. Also knavish, curst, shrewd, naughty, bad, lewd."

G. Douglas regularly forms Caitifely.

And sitthen thie chosen chile and caytif poverte
Let hem chewe as thie chosen.—Piers Ploughman, p. 404.

Caytiffyche, thow conscience consailedist the kyng leten,
In hus enemys honde, ys heritage of Fraunce.—Id. p. 50.

But to ech of us grace is ghouun bi the mesure of the ghyuyng of Crist. for which thing he seith, he stighynge an high ledde caitiftie caitif, he gaf ghiftis to men.
Wiclif. Effesies, c. 4.

Unto euery one of vs is geuen grace accordynge to the measure of the gyft of Chryst. Wherfore he sayth: he is gone vp on high, and hath led captiuitie captiue, and hath giuen gyftes vnto menne.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And now I am so caitif and so thral,
That he that is my mortal enemy,
I serve him as his squier poure ly.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1553.

Ne of Turnus the hardy fiers corage,
The riche Cresus caitif in servage. Id. Ib. v. 1948.

Me seemed that I was so ferre fallen into miserie and wretched hid caitifenesse, that me should no precious thing neigh, and also that for my sorowe euery wight should been heaule, and wish my recouery.
Id. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

—— A caytife most of all,
Where was it euer or this befall,
That any Lokarde in this wise
Betoke his wife for couetise! Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Which I am sure you would ful sore repent,
If I to you her deeds should open make,
And that you should so greatly damage me,
For such a wicked caitee as is she.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xxi. s. 10.

Thenceforth, as caytife cast in dungeon deepe,
Where with fresh griefe my hart did hourely blede,
As Philomel that spends her time of slepe
In mournfull tunes —Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 614.

It is a strange caitivenesse, and basenesse of disposition, of men so furiously and unsatiably to run after perishing and uncertain interests, in defiance of all the reason and religion of the world, and yet to have no appetite to such excellencies.—Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. Ad. s. 6.

Think ze na lak and schame into gour mynd,
To do sa grete outrage to strang Lucc,
In his absence thus caitifely to fle?
Douglas. Æneados, b. ix. p. 306.

Like caitif vile that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

The sculking caitiff, who beneath the spread
Of fav'ring umbrage veil'd his luckless head,
Close at his ear believes the distant peals,
And a whole host of demons at his heels.
Brookes. The Fox-Chase.

CAKE, v. } Dut. Koecke; Ger. Kuch, which
CAKE, n. } Junius thinks may be from Cochen, coquere; and Cochen, Wachter considers to be from the Lat. Coquere, which itself is of unsettled etymology. See in Vossius.

To cake is to form into a solid mass; to clot together, to adhere closely in lumpish pieces.

A cake (met.) in vulgar speech, is one who has the heaviness, the lumpishness of a cake.

He eateth butter a Frydayes, without a dispensation of our holy father the Pope, yea & cake-bread made wyth milke and egges to.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 237.

Such as with oten cakes in poor estate abides,
Of care haue they no cure, the crab with myrth they rost.
Vncertaine Auctores. The Pore Estate Best.

For the brimstone, it would hold lighted, much about the same with the nitre; but then after a little while, it would harden and cake.—Bacon. Natural History, § 369.

Those hardned people the Jews, that they say, spit at the name of Christ,—Continually hardned more and more, caked in hardness this 1600 years, &c.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 36.

Having at the same time, poured some of the liquor into a very shallow and wide-mouthed vessel, called in the shops a clear caked glass, it moved rather more than less nimbly and variously, than in the great earthen pot, (which yet was of the same shape,) and shewed us many of those vivid and self-dilating circles, that have been mentioned in the third number.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 72.

The historian above-mentioned acquaints us, that a prophetess had foretold Æneas, that he should take his voyage westward, till his companions should eat their tables; and that accordingly, upon his landing in Italy, as they were eating their flesh upon cakes of bread, for want of other conveniencies, they afterwards fed on the cakes themselves, upon which one of the company said merrily, "we are eating our tables."—Spectator, No. 351.

It is to warm them thus I blow,
For they are froze as cold as snow.
And so inclement has it been,
I'm like a cake of ice within.—Lloyd. The Satyr & Pedlar.

CALAMANCO. In the Lat. of the mid. ages, are found Camelaucum, calamaucus, calamaucum; capitis integumentum, et pilei genus ex camelorum pilis confectum; a covering for the head, or kind of cap formed of camel's hair. Whence (sc. camelus) some consider the word to be derived. It is applied to—

A kind of stuff (originally of camel's hair) formed of various materials; silk, wool, goat's hair, &c.

The habit of a draper, when he is at home, is a light broad-cloth, with calamanco, or red waistcoat and breeches; and 'tis remarkable, that their wigs seldom hide the collar of their coats.—Tatler, No. 85.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to show a gay calamanco waistcoat.
Id. No. 96.

CALAMISTRATE, v. } Fr. Calamistrer; to CALAMISTRATION. } frizzle, curl, or crisp the hair, (Cotg.) Vibratos callido ferro, (Æn. xii. v. 100.) Vibratos is explained by Servius, crispatos calamistro. And calamister is a something, either made of, or in shape resembling a reed,—calamus—with which the hair was curled, and thence derived its name. See Vossius, Martinius and Gesner.

To turn the hair round a reed, rod, or similar material, and thus, to curl it.

Which belike makes our Venetian ladies at this day, to counterfeit yellow haire so much, great women to calamistrate and curle it up, to adorne their heads with spangles, pearles, and made flowres, and all courtiers to affect a pleasing grace in this kinde.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 460.

When those curious needle-workes, variety of colours, purest dyes, jewells, spangles, pendants, lawne, lace, taffanies, faire and fine linnen, embroideries, calamistrations, oyntments, &c shall be added, they will make the veriest dowdy otherwise, a goddesse, when nature shall be furthered by art.—Id. Ib. p. 460.

CALAMITY, n. } Fr. Calamité; It. Cala-
CALAMITOUS, adj. } mità; Lat. Calamitas, proprie calamorum imminutio. Donatus (on Terence, Eun. i. 1. 34,) observes, Proprie calamitatem rustici grandinem dicunt, quod comminuat calamum, (hoc est culmum ac segetem,) because it destroys the calamus or stalk.

A calamity then, primarily, is that which destroys the standing corn; then—any injury, hurt, mischief, damage, loss, misfortune. See the quotation from Bacon.

Now remaineth to declare plentifully, such promises, not that we wil sett forth euerie one exactli but to shewe the chefe and most excellent thing, wich God wold haue vs to hope for, to comforte vs in our calamities.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

Wych endowtydly shal folowe, yf ye optinde yowr benyvolens towards me, and men perceyve that by yowr wisdome and dexteritie I shal be relevyd, and in thys my calamyte holpen.—Strype. Records, No. 32. Wolsey to Gardiner.

Also here is to be noted another heuey thretening which precheth the calamitous afflictions of ye chirche.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

Another ill accident is, drouth, at the spindling of the corn; which with us is rare; but in hotter countries common: insomuch as the word calamitas, was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalke.
Bacon. Natural History, § 669.

He with my name that kindly did him greete,
Slowly cast vp his deadly mouing eye,
That long time had been fixed on his feete,
To looke no higher than his miserie,
Thanking him more calamitie did greete.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 536.

I am not mad: too well, too well I feele
The different plague of each calamitie.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 4.

Man. His ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass it, shall willingly be paid
And number'd down: much rather I shall chose
To live the poorest in my tribe, then richest,
And he in that calamitous prison left.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Even when they are in prosperity, they ever and anon feel many inward stings and lashes, but when any great affliction or calamity overtakes them, they are the most poor-spirited creatures in the whole world.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 2.

For let such a one reflect upon the thousands, and the ten thousands of calamitous persons round about him, and tell me a reason why he should stand exempted from the same lot; why providence should be so fond of him, as to make him swim in pleasure, while others are sinking under their necessities!—South, vol. vii. Ser. 11.

To all that should improve his mind,
The voluntary dupe was blind.
Whatever calamities fell on him,
Distress was thrown away upon him.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

CALA'SH, n. Fr. Caleche. Carrus, carri, carruscus, carisca, caresca, calesca, caleche. Thus Menage.

A carriage similar to the present headed chaise.

I endeavour to make the best use I can of every thing; and therefore, though I am in despair to be the wiser for these learned instructions, yet I hope I shall be the merrier for them, when you and I take the air in the calash together.
Locke. Letter to Anthony Collins, Esq.

I intend to come up at least a week before Michaelmas; for Sir Matthew is gone abroad, I suspect a wooing, and his caleche is gone with him.
Dryden. Letter to Mr. Jacob Tonson.

CALCA'RIOUS. } Lat. Calx, calcis, lime;
CA'LCULOUS. } lapis coctus, from Χαλιξ, which denotes a stone or the fragments of stones, from which a cement or mortar is made, (Vossius.) And Scheidius observes that from Κλα-ειν, frangere, κεκλωκα, is κλωκος, which might give the contracted κλαξ, and thence καλξ.

Stony, flinty; resembling the lime stone.

Thus the volatile salt or urine will coagulate aqua vitæ, or spirits of wine; and thus perhaps (as Helmont excellently declareth,) the stones or calculous concretions in kidney or bladder may be produced.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

On the east side, in the most broken part of the precipices, is a stratum of bones of all sizes, belonging to various animals and fowls, enchased in an incrustation of a reddish calcarious rock.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 29.

CA'LCINE, v. } Fr. Calciner; It. Calcinare; Sp. Calcinar—
CALX, n. }
CA'LCINATE, v. } To reduce to a calx, to burn
CALCINA'TION. } to a stone, to dust, to powder.
CA'LCINABLE. } See CALCARIOUS, and the quotations infra from Pliny and Boyle.

——— And of the care and wo
That we had in our materes subliming
And in amalgaming, and calcining
Of quicksilver, yeleped mercurie crude.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,239.

Our fournels eke of calcination. Id. Ib. v. 16,272.

And now by occasion of speech, know thus much for all, that all things which are to be calcined [comburi] require one and the same manner of burning; to wit, within a new earthen pot, never occupied before, well luted all over with strong clay, and so set into an oven or furnace untill such time as the contents be calcined.
Holland. Pinie, b. xxix. c. 5.

And in the former of these, which is the hardening by baking without melting, the heat hath three degrees; first, it inaurateth, and then maketh fragile; and lastly, it doth incinerate, and calcinate.—Bacon. Natural History, § 87.

This is the extracting of salt without calcination, which otherwise certainly must needs consume all the active powers of any vegetable, and leave nothing but a plastick and passive virtue.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 455.

——— The essence pure
Of separate souls is of all living touch
Impassive here no gross material frame
We wear, with flesh encumber'd, nerves, and bone;
They 're calcin'd on the pile.
Fenton. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

The way, Pyrophilus, of producing whiteness by chymical precipitations is very well worth our observing; for thereby tinctures, of very differing colours as well as natures, though dissolved in several liquors, are all brought into calces or powders that are white.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 719.

I dare not lay much weight on this observation, unless I know whether the bricks were sufficiently burned, and free from pebbles, calcinable by the heat that burned the bricks.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 534.

CA'LCOGRAPHY, or } From Χαλκος, brass,
CHA'LCOGRAPHY. } and γραφειν, to grave.

Graving or writing on brass.

The histories of refining, of making copperas; of making alum, of calcography; of enamelling.
Sprat. History of Royal Society, p. 238.

CA'LCULE, v. } Fr. Calculer; It. Calculare;
CA'LCULE, n. } Sp. Calcular; Lat. Calculus,
CA'LCULATE, v. } from Calx, calcis, a stone.
CALCULA'TION. } (See CALCULOUS.) Calculi
CA'LCULATIVE. } were small stones used in CALCULA'TOR. } counting, reckoning, and computing. Hence to calcule, or to calculate, is—

To count, to reckon, or compute.

Tyndall, and other old writers, use to calk, for to calculate.

Astronomyers al so. aren at ere whittes end
Of that was calculed of the clymat the contrarye they fyndeth. Piers Ploughman, p. 291.

Ful sotilly he calculed all this
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,596.

And at laste amonge the great
Thei fallen vnto his accorde
That Phorceus, of his recorde,
Whiche was an astronomien,
And eke a great magicien,
Shulde of his calculacion
Serche of constellacion
How thei the citee mighten gette.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And therto as the secrete communication went, which by many tokens thou mayst well conjecture and gather to be true, he calked the kinges natiuitie and byrth, which is a common practice among prelates in all landes, wherby he saw whereunto the kinges grace should be inclined all his lyfe, and what should be like to chaunce hym at all tymes.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 308.

A king he was, and to king Turnus deere he calkinges kest,
But not with calking craft could he his plague betwitch that day. Phaer. Virgile. Æneidos, b. ix.

Pyrst the elecyon of their monstrouse Pope, the next yeare after was taken clerely from the common people by the clergye, and gyuen to hys owne famylyars, which anon after were called the college of calkers, cardynalis I should saye.—Bale. Votaries, pt. ii. c. 2.

But Cæsar committing this matter unto the philosophers, and best expert mathematicians at that time, did set forth an excellent and perfect kalendar, more exactly calculated, than any other that was before the which the Romans do use untill this present day, and do nothing err as others, in the difference of time.—North. Plutarch, p. 612.

The cunning man, that meant the troth to show,
Doth calculate, to see how starres were bent,
And when that he the planets well had view'd,
That she had plaid the queen, he doth conclude.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xliii. s. 111.

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death:
A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by water I should dye.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 1.

Two priests also, the one hight Bolenbroke,
The other Suthwel, clerkes in conjuration,
These two chaplaines were they that vndertooke
To cast and calke the king's true constellation
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 320.

A strange natiuitie in calculation,
As all my liues course did after well declare,
Wherof in briefe to make relation,
That other by me may learne to beware.—Id. Ib. p. 353.

The same year was that miracle seen of the sun's going back; of which wonder (as I hear) one Bartholomew Scultet, who is much commended for his skill in astronomy, hath by calculation found the very day, which answered unto the twenty-fifth of April, in the Julian year, being then Thursday.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 25.

I fear this learned man may have been somewhat misinformed by the navigators he relies on, or else that the way of allowing for refractions is not yet reduced to a sufficient certainty; for I do not find by those who have purposely gone to the top of it, [Teneriffe] that the mountain is so high as his calculation makes it.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 226.

They must have observed very little, who have not remarked, that [persons bred to trade] have in general a much better idea, by long habits of calculative dealings, of the propriety of expending in order to acquire.
Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

A seat in this house, for good purposes, for bad purposes, for no purposes at all, (except the mere consideration derived from being concerned in the publick councils,) will ever be a first-rate object of ambition in England. Ambition is no exact calculator. Avarice itself does not calculate strictly when it games.
Id. On Shortening the Duration of Parliaments.

CA'LDRON. Fr. Chauldron, from the Lat. Caldarium, from Caldus, the contraction of Calidus, hot. Menage remarks, that from the Gr. Θερμος, heat, is derived Θερμαστης, caldarium.

A vessel constructed to endure heat; to heat the contents.

Apointed in the newe moone,
Whan it was tyme for to doone,
She sat a cauldron on the fire
In which was all the hole atyre.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

He caused hym to swere, that as soone as he were deed, that he shulde take his body, and boil it in a caudron tyl the flesshe departed clene fro the boones, and then to bury the flesshe, and kepe styll the boones.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 26.

After which victory as Ptolemy passed by the villages of the Jews, he slew all their women, and caused the young children to be sod in great caldrons that the rest of the Jews might thereby think that the Egyptians were grown to be men-eaters, and strike them with the greater terror.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 7.

But standing high aloft, low lay thine eare,
And there such ghastly noise of yron chaines,
And brazen caudrons thou shalt rombling heare,
Which thousand sprights with long enduring paines
Do tosse, that it will stonne thy feeble braines.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c 3.

The devil himself would be but a contemptible adversary, were he not sure of a correspondent, and a party that held intelligence with him in our own breasts. All the blowing of the fire put under a cauldron, could never make it boil over, were there not a fulness of water within it.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

CA'LEFY. } Lat. Calefieri, to be or become hot. Calere, Vossius
CALEFA'CTION. } deduces from the Doric Καλεος
CALI'DITY. } for Κηλεος, burning.
CA'LIDUCT. }

To heat, to be, become, or cause to be hot.

But crystal will calefie into electricity; that is, a power to attract straws or light bodies and convert the needle freely placed.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

As [if] the remembrance of calefaction can warm a man in a cold frosty night.—More. Philos. Poems, c. 2. Pref.

But ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire; it will colliquate in water, or warm oyl; nor doth it onely submit unto an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Since the subterranean caliducts have been introduced.
Evelyn.

CA'LENDS, n. } The first days of the
CA'LENDAR, v. } month were denominated
CA'LENDAR, n. } Kalendæ, because on those CA'LENDOGRAPHER. } days, the nones of the month, whether they should be five or seven, (Kalentur,) are called or proclaimed, (Varro.) Interest on money was usually paid on the Calends, and the book in which was kept an account of the sums due, was called Calendarium. Now applied to—

A book, in which are stated the days, weeks, and months, with the feasts or festivals of the church, which occur during the year.

It is also used, generally, as a guide,—to the particular time, place, or manner, of doing any thing; as a register.

To calendar is used by Whitlock; i. e. to enter into, to record or register in, a Calendar.

This see clepe I the tempestuous matere
Of dispaire, that Troilus was in
But now of hope the kalendes begin
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

Goth now your way, quod he, al stille and soft,
And let us dine as sone as that ye may,
For by my kalender it is prime of day.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,156.

He teacheth them that the ceremonies of Moses lawe are abolished, with diuers other thynges, as the reste of the sabboth day, the displeasure and paine of circumcision, the comyng about of the calendes, the holy dayes, whiche thrise yerely came againe.—Udal. Ep. to the Romans. Argument.

And wost wel that kalender is she
To any woman, that wol louer be.
Id. The Prologue of Cleopatra.

With respect to Images, I hold that they are no ingredient in the Christian belief, but, long after the publication of the faith of Christ, were introduced into the world, by the permission of the church, to be as a calendar to the laity and the ignorant, that by visible representation of the sufferings of Christ, and of the pious lives and martyrdoms of the saints, the remembrance of those things might the more easily be impressed on their minds.
State Trials, Hen. V. 1413. Sir J. Oldcastle.

Sylla writeth himself in his commentaries, that he took the city of Athens on the very self-day of the calends of March; which cometh to agree with the first day of the moneth, that we call Anthesterion, on the which day by chance many things are done at Athens, in memory of Noes Flood, and of the universall destruction of the whole world, that was in old time by rage of waters, falling out even in that very moneth.—North. Plutarch, p. 394.

But the ordinance of the kalendar, and reformation of the year, to take away all confusion of time, being exactly calculated by the Mathematitians, and brought to perfection, was a great commodity unto all men.—Id. Ib. p. 612.

Besides the usual or calendary moneth, there are but four considerable, the moneth of peragration, &c.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Often martyred names, as well as names are calendar'd.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 21.

This is that eclipse which Dr. Pell sent word of to the society, that Eichstadius himself, and almost all calendographers had skipped over.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 154.

CA'LENDER, n. } Fr. Calendrer; Mid. Lat.
CA'LENDER, v. } Calendra. The origin of this word is Κυλινδρος, a cylinder, because the chief power of the calendra is placed in a cylinder. See Du Cange.

To roll upon or under a cylinder; and, consequentially—

To smoothen, to polish, to flatten the rough or rising surface.

Now Gilpin had a pleasant wit,
And lov'd a timely joke!
And thus unto the calenderer
In merry guise he spoke —Cowper. Hist. of John Gilpin.

CA'LENTURE, n. Lat. Calere; Sp. Calentar, to heat. Calentura, heat, a fever.

For some of the peculiar circumstances, which are said to attend this disease, see the examples from Dryden and Swift. It is applied (met.) to—

High, feverish, heat.

Yet since we must be old, and age endures
His torrid zone at court, and calentures
Of hot ambition, irreligion's ice,
Zeal's agues, and hydropic avarice,
Why didst thou not for these give medicines too,
And by thy doing tell us what to do?
Donne. On the Lord Harrington.

Many of them who had layn abroad in the open air were taken with a violent disease, called calenture, and died thereof: which disease is ordinary in that unwholesome air to strangers, that come there and lye abroad in the evening.
Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1585.

Charal. Thou dost strike
A deathful coldness to my heart a high heat,
And shrink at my liver like the calenture.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act iii. sc. 1.

'Tis but the raging calenture of love,
Like a distracted passenger you stand,
And see, in seas, imaginary land,
Cool groves, and flowry meads, and while you think
To wade, plunge in, and wonder that you sink.
Dryden. Conquest of Granada, Act ii.

For even the deep itself is not secure,
But belching subterraneous fires,
Increases still the scalding calenture,
Which neither earth, nor air, nor water, can endure.
Pomfret. On the general Conflagration.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamel'd fields and verdant trees.
With eager haste he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove.
And in he leaps, and down he sinks.
Swift. The South Sea Project.

CALF. See CALVE.

CA'LIBER, or } Fr. Qualibre, Calibre; Sp.
CA'LIVER, n. } Calibre. Skinner seems to CA'LIBRE, n. } approve the etymology of
CA'LIBRE, adj. } Minshew, who derives Caliber from the Lat. Æquilibrium, i. e. he observes, "equal waight, a standing waight, or equal height; because the bore or hole of a peece must be even or equall or else the peece will breake, and thereupon the boare and size of a peece or gunne is called G. and Hisp. calibre." See EQUILIBRATE, and the quotations from Brown.

It is applied to the piece or gun itself; to the bore or hole of any thing; to the concave diameter, the concave size or dimensions of it; to the size or dimensions of the convex body; the ball or bullet, &c.

To calibre or calibrate. Fr. Calibrer; to form the calibre, the equal concave or convex size or dimensions, (met.)

To the quality, state, or degree; i. e. the size or dimensions of moral character, worth, or estimation.

Then the Negroes came to the rocks hard by vs, and discharged calliuers at vs, and againe the Portugales shot off their base twise more, and then our ship shot at them, but the rockes and hilles defended them.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34.

They turned backe, and the master of the pinnesse did shoote of a caliuer to them the same time, but hurt none of them, for his meaning was onely to put them in feare.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 110.

But that and the other Spanish colonie being both destroyed by famine, he said he had liued in an house by himselfe a long time, and relieued himselfe with his calceuer vntil our comming thither.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 539.

I presse me none but good house-holders, yeomens sonnes: inquire me out contracted bachelers, such as had beene ask'd twice on the bones; such as feare the report of a caliuer, worse than a struck foole, or a hurt wilde-ducke.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 2.

The rere-ward of the enemie in which was Tirrell, and all the Spanyards, stoode firme upon the bogge on the righte hande, vnto whome, within caliuer shot, the Lord Deputie had drawne vppe our rere.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an 1601.

It is easy for an ingenious philosopher to fit the caliber of those empty tubes to the diameter of the particles of light, so as they shall receive no grosser kind of matter.
Lord. Inquiry, c. 6. s. 19.

They could not but be convinced, that declamations of this kind would rouse him, that he must think, coming from men of their calibre, they were highly mischievous.
Burke. Appeal to the Old Whigs.

CA'LICO, n. So called, because first imported from Calicut.

If thou but please to walk into the pawn
To buy thee cambrick, callico or lawn,
If thou the whiteness of the same wouldst prove
From thy far whiter hand pluck off thy glove
Drayton. Edw. IV. to Mrs. Shore.

I wear the hooped petticoat, and am all in callicoes what the finest are in silks.—Spectator, No. 292.

As, suppose an ingenious gentleman should write a poem of advice to a callico printer, do you think there is a girl in England, that would wear any thing but the taking of Lisle, or the battle of Oudenarde?—Tatler, No. 3.

CALI'CULAR. From the Lat. Calix, a cup; (from the Gr. Κυλιξ παρα το κυλισθαι, to turn, to roll.) Brown has formed this adjective. See also in v. ABSTERSION.

Formed like a cup.

Even the autumnal buds, which await the return of the sun, do after the winter solstice multiply their caliculat leaves, making little rhombuses and net work figures, as in the sycamore and lilac.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, pt. ii. c. 3.

CALI'GINOUS. } Lat. Caligare, to darken,
CALIGA'TION. } Umbra est de spissitudine aeris effecta; et dicta caligo, quod maxime aeris calore gignatur. The shade formed by thickness of air, is called Caligo, because produced by the heat (calore) of the air. Isidorus; but see Vossius and Martinius.

Thickly, closely, clouded or shaded, dark.

Their punishment [that of the rebellious angels] was their dejection and detrusion into the caliginous regions of the air.—Hallywell. Melampron, p. 13.

It is filled with such a thick and caliginous air, that the ground cannot be seen.—Ricaut. Greek Church, p. 65.

Now instead of a diminution or imperfect vision in the mole, we affirm an abolition or total privation, instead of a caligation or dimness, we conclude a cecity or blindness.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 18.

CALI'GRAPHY. } From Καλος, beautiful,
CALIGRA'PHICK. } and Γραφ-ειν, to grave or write. See the quotation from Wood.

His [Peter Bale's] works are these,—the art of brachygraphy, that is, to write as fast as a man speaketh treatably. (Lond. 1597.) The order of orthography. The key of caligraphy; that is of fair writing.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

For the Chaldee character is one of the beautifullest, and the Samaritan the uncouthest, and the most uncapable of caligraphy, of all that have been used among the different nations of the world.—Prideaux. Connection, pt. i. b. v. a. 5.

At the end is the figure of the writer Cadwin, supposed to be a monk of Canterbury, holding a pen of metal, undoubtedly used in such sort of writing; with an inscription importing his name and excellence in the caligraphic art.
Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i. Diss. 2.

CALK, v. } To calk a ship, navem resarcire,
CA'LKER, n. } from the Fr. Calage, (Skinner.)
CA'LKING, n. } "Calage, the caulking of a ship; also ockam or the towe, wherewith it is caulked," (Cotgrave.) Skinner doubts whether this calage may not be a calce, or rather a calcando, (i. e.) inculcando; cramming or stuffing in materials suited for excluding the water. Or more probably, he adds, from the A. S. Cele, the keel, (q.d.) celage or kerlage. Minshew says a calx; not certainly from the similarity of the materials, but of the use. Pliny describes the different sorts of calx or lime, good or bad for a glutinous cement. To calk is—

To cover or close the seam, to secure the bottom, of a ship from leaking, by rubbing it with a substance composed of strong, glutinous, cohesive materials.

The shippe of what burthen souer shee bee must giue a carena, as they call it in the Spanish tongue, which is in English, she must be thoroughly calked, and fortified, as well with carpenters to set knees into her, and any other tymbers appertaining to the strengthening of a shippe, as with caulking; which is to put oeeum into her sides.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 864.

The caulking of Seuill is so substantially done, that in one day one caiker doeth not thoroughly caike past one yarde and an halfe in one seame, or two yards at the most, and to that he doeth, the master caiker is at hand to ouersee him, and this done, the carenero doeth with this balast set her upright, and so shee begynneth to lade.—Id. Ib.

The ancients of Gabal, and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers, all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupie thy merchandise.
Geneva Bible, 1561. Ezek. xxvii. 9.

So here, some pick out bullets from the sides,
Some drive old okum through each seam and rift:
Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The ratling mallet with the right they lift.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 146.

CA'LKING, n. Perhaps from the old Fr. Caucher, to tread. Lat. Calcare.

A sharpened part of a horse shoe, to secure the tread.

Causing a smith to shoo three horsses for him, contrarille with the calking forward, that it should not be perceiued which waie he had taken by the tract of the horsses, for that the ground at that time was couered with snowe; he [Robert Bruse] departed out of London about midnight.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1302.

CALL, v. }
CALL, n. }
CA'LLER, n. } Dut. Kallen; Gr. Καλε-ειν.
CA'LLING, n. } Hickes says, a Cimbrico, at Calla, vocare, nostrum, to call. Perhaps from the A. S. Gyll-an, to yell.

To make a noise, to speak or utter noisily, loudly, clamorously to proclaim.

To pronounce, to mark, signify, or denote, by name; to name, to denominate.

Used with English prepositions annexed, it is equivalent to certain Latin compounds.

To call to, or upon; to invoke, to appeal to.

To call in, or together; to convoke, to summon.

To call back; to revoke, to retract.

To call forth, is, consequentially, to cause to come forth, to cause to appear, to bring forth, to produce. and is well illustrated by the quotation from the First Part of Henry IV.

That which calls upon, demands, or requires, our care and industry is our calling or vocation, our trade or employment. "In the fyancells of Margaret, eldest daughter of King Henry VII. to James, King of Scotland, &c." preserved in Leland's Collectanea, caller is used as we now use challenger.

To call any one out, is still equivalent to, to challenge.

Whan Cadwaldre salle calle with him the kyng Konon,
What tyme it salle falle, git not wot no man.
R. Brunne, p. 7.

His cote was of a cloute that Cary was yeaned.
Piers Ploughman. Crede, p. 16.

Forsothe he was a worthy man withalle.
But soth to sayn, I no't how men him calle.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 286.

After this the king called them before hym, and demaunded them the cause of ther difference. The Caller sayd, Syre, he hath taken from me my Lady Paramour, whereof I was maurte of hyr by faith. The Defender answered, Syre, I schall defend me ageynst hym upon thye cas.
Leland. Collectanea, vol. iv. p. 268.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vastie deepe.
Hotsp. Why so can I, or so can any man:
But will they come when you doe call for them.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

It may be therefore a question, whether those operations of men are to bee counted voluntary, wherein that good which is sensible prouoketh appetite, and appetite causeth action, reason being neuer called to counsel; as when we eate or drinke, or betake ourselues vnto rest, and such like.
Hooker. Eccl. Polity, b. i. § 7.

—— But when he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple colour'd bow, whereon to look
And call to mind his cov'nant day and night.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Sundry church-offices, dignities, and callings, for which they found no commandment in Scripture, they thought by the one onely stroke of that axiome to haue cut off.
Hooker. Eccl. Polite, b. iii. § 5.

If I were couetous, ambitious, or peruerse,
As he will have me: how am I so poore?
Or how haps it, I seeke not to aduance
Or rayse myself but keep my wonted calling.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Roland's sonne,
His yongest sonne, and would not change that calling
To be adopted heire to Fredericke.
Id. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 2.

Neither yet need those, who are designed to divinity itself, fear to look into those studies, or think they will engross their whole time, and that no considerable progress can be made therein, unless men lay aside and neglect their ordinary courses and necessary employments.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

There is a call upon mankind to value and esteem those who set a moderate price upon their own merit.
Spectator, No. 266.

How often have I stood,
And rais'd to the skies,
The calls, the tenders of a God,
And mercy's lowest cries.
Waits. Confession & Pardon.

CA'LLET, v. } Mulier impudica. "Per-
CA'LLET, n. } haps," says Skinner, "from Fr. Calotte;" which Cotgrave explains to be, "a coife or half kerchief for a woman; also a little light cap or night cap, worn under a hat." Perhaps, at some period, particularly used by low and mean, by lewd and riotous characters: and thus applied to such persons.

And eke a calot of leude demeaning.
Chaucer. Remedie of Loue.

Or see his wife at once
Branch his brow and breake his sconce,
Or to hear her in her spleen
Cauel like a butter queane!
Braithwait. Cures Cure. Elus.

Then Flatour sayd, ye calletes
I shall breake your palettes
Without ye nowe cease. Skelton. Elinour Running.

Contemptuous base-born callot as she is,
She vaunted 'mongst her minions t'other day,
The very traine of her worst wearing gowne,
Was better worth than all my father's lands,
Till Suffolk gaue two dukedoms for his daughter.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 3.

Leo. A callet
Of boundeless tongue, who late hath beat her husband,
And now bayts me. Id. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 3.

Mes. What is the injurie, lady?
Lad. Why the callet,
You told me of, here I have tane disguis'd.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iv. sc. 3.

CALLI'DITY. Lat. Callidus; and this from Callus, from Calx or Calcare. Callus is properly that hardness of the foot which is caused by walking or treading. And Callere (met.) is to be wise, or skilful, or crafty by much practice or experience. "Callidos, quorum, tanquam manus opere, sic animus usu conculcatur," (Cic. de Nat. Deorum, iii. 10.) So far the Lat. etymologists. Tooke has no doubt that the A. S. Sceylan, to divide, to separate, to discern, to skill; is the true etymology. And hence Callidity is—

Discernment, discrimination, skill.

—— He an only daughter rear'd,
Roxena, matchless maid! nor rear'd in vain,
Her eagle-eyed callidity, direct,
And fairy fashion taught above her sex,
And furnished with a thousand various wiles.
Smart. The Hop Garden.

CALLOUS, adj. } Lat. Callus. (See CAL-CA'LLOUSNESS. } LIDITY.) Callousness is—
CALLO'SITY. } That hardness, which is contracted in calce by walking or treading; afterwards extended to the hands or other parts of the body, (Vossius.) And then (met.) applied—

To the hardness, numbness, insensibility of the mind.

Moreover a common thing it is and ordinarie, to replant and recover many trees that have been blown downe and laid along for they will reuine, knit againe, and reuive, by meanes of the earth, even as a wound doth unite by the meane of a callous cicatrice.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 31.

Sometimes also this oke engendereth certain hard callosities like pumish stones, yea and other round balls made of the leaves folded one within another.—Id. Ib. b. xvi. c. 7.

Tiberius, the Emperor, being troubled with a fellow that wittily and boldly pretended himself to be a prince, at last when he could not by questions, he discovered him to be a mean person by the rusticity and hardness of his body: not by a callousness of his feet or a wart upon his fingers, but his whole body was hard and servile, and so he was discovered.—Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, s. 7. c. 8.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness and joy, if they entertain the thoughts of final perdition with exultation and triumph, ought they not to be esteemed notorious fools, even destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numness of soul?
Bentley, Ser. 1.

First of the train the patient rustic came,
Whose callous hand had form'd the scene,
Bending at once with sorrow and with age,
With many a tear, and many a sigh between.
Goldsmith. The Traveller Augustalis, pt. ii.

CA'LLOW, adj. A. S. "Calo, cala, calvus, glaber, depilis, bald. Kilauuo, kael, kaelauue, kalauue," (Somner.) Lye adds, Callow, usually applied to the smoothness and nakedness of unfeathered or unfledged birds. By Drayton—to the smoothness or softness of the down; and by Fletcher, (met.) to a wing newly fledged.

At every stroke (with his imperial wings)
The gentle air unto his feathers clings,
And through his soft and callow down doth flow
As loth so soon his presence to forego.—Drayton. The Owl.

Mean while the tepid caues, and fens, and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch, from the egg that soon
Bursting with kindly rapture forth disclosd
Their callow young. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

My callow wing, that newly left the nest,
How can it make so high a towring flight?
O depth without a depth! in humble breast,
With praises I admire so wondrous height.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 1.

A snake of size immense ascends a tree,
And in the leafy summit, spy'd a nest,
Which, o'er the callow young, a sparrow press'd.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

A parent bird, in plaintive mood,
On yonder fruit tree sung,
And still the pendant nest she view'd,
That held her callow young.
Cunningham. Dodo. A Pastoral.

CALM, adj. } Fr. Calme; It. and Sp. Calma;
CALM, v. } Dut. Kalm. "When I was in the CALM, n. } ship, and no wind blew; calamum vocant Kistri," J. Scaliger, quoted by Menage; who offers malacus, calamus by a transposition of letters, calmus, calme. Huet also derives the Fr. Calm, from Μαλακος, soft, gentle.
CA'LMER, n. }
CA'LMLY. }
CA'LMNESS. }
CA'LMY, adj. }

"Calme, still, quiet, peaceable, fair; gentle, unmoved; without storm, without surges." See BECALM.

For as the wylde wode rage
Of wyndes maketh the sea wrothe and wage,
And that was cauline bryngeth to nawe,
So for defaut and grace of lawe
The people is stered all at once.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

If he wyll saye that the fastyng serueth but to kepe the minde calme and quiet in prayer, from all motions of fleshly lustes, yet is might trouble the mynde. to this I say that the hunger itselfe may trouble the mynde & make it lesse quiete, then yf the flesh wer in temperate rest without it.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 372.

And therefore the same sea that harboureth these fowles thus sitting vpon their egges wil be so coarse and still to her giftis for 14 dayes that men may sewrely sayl without perel vpon her.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, Ded. pt. ii.

We gaue the headland a birth of 3 miles, notwithstanding there lay two rockes two miles to sea boord of vs, so that we were inclosed with them, and sate vpon the lagest of them, but it pleased God to make it calme and giue vs the day also, or else we had miscarried.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 366.

So often therefore as it shall fortune vs also to be in ieopardy, as often as Jesus sleepeth in our mides, let vs with godly desires pluck him by ye sleeue, let vs with our continual prayers awake him, and rouse him: & immediately shall the tempeste be tourned into calmesse.
Udal. Luke, c. 8.

Theres stormy warre, and calmed peace,
Whether prosperous as a blaste,
And flotynge on, in bryde successe)
who seeketh to make feaste,
Shall take in hande, an harde attempt.
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 3.

You heare this new alarme from yonder part,
That from the towne breakes out with so much rage,
Vs needeth much your valour and your art
To calme their fury, and their heat to swage.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, b. ix. s. 44.

A pilot's part in calms can not be spy'd,
In dangerous times true worth is onely tri'd.
Sterling. Doomes-day. The Fifth Houre.

Infernal ghosts, and hellish furies, round
Environ'd thee, some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

He [Sir Hy Wotton] would say, "It was an employment for his idle time, which was not then idly spent:" for angling was, after tedious study, "a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness; a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness"—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

Bishop Godwin saith, it doth not appear that he [Rd. Scroope] desireth to be tried by his peers; and I believe it will appear, that nothing was then calmly or judiciously transacted, but all being done in a hurry of heat, and by martiall authority.—Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

But the Grecians, whom learning had made more substantial in their worship, required moreover an habituate temper of passions that the inward calmness and serenity of the affections might perform the promises of the outward purity.—Hammond. Workes, vol. iv. p. 619.

For Jove, who might have us'd his thundering power,
Chose to fall calmly in a golden shower!
Cowley. On the late Civil War.

The affairs of Turkey were thus in great disorder: the Grand Seignior died soon after and his successor in that empire gave his subjects such hopes of peace, that they were calmed for the present.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1691.

The seventh [book P. L.] affects the imagination like the ocean in a calm, and fills the mind of the reader without producing in it any thing like tumult or agitation.
Spectator. No. 339.

For I cannot but think all controversies in matters of religion are then best handled, and with the greatest probability of success, when they are managed calmly without all particular resentments, and with all the tenderness that is possible towards those persons, whom we are endeavouring to reclaim into the way of truth.—Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull.

—— For sure the happiest meed,
To favour'd man by smiling heaven decreed,
Is, to reflect at ease on glorious pains,
And calmly to enjoy what virtue gains.
Lyttelton. To Mr. Poyntz.

Here greatness, wearied with its rooms of state,
Finds oft the secret charms of a retreat;
Within the soft recess reclines its head,
And feels the calmness of the peaceful shade.
Boyse. Nature.

CALORIFICK, adj. Lat. Calor, heat. See CALIDITY.

Able to make hot; having the power to heat.

If cold be not a positive quality, but the absence of heat, the removing of the calorifick agents will in many cases suffice to produce cold.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 594.

CA'LTROP, or } In A. S. the Carduus stel-
CA'LTHORP. } latus, or star-thistle, is called Coltræppe. The same plant in Fr. is Chausse-trape. (Chausse, the hose,) with a manifest reason for the denomination, says Junius. Chausse-trape is explained by Cotgrave also to be—

"A caltrop, or iron engine of war, made with four pricks or sharp points, whereof one, howsoever it is cast, ever stands upwards."

The Irishmen had strawed all alongest the shore a great number of caltrops of iron, with sharp pricks standing up to wound the Danes in the feet.
Holinshed. Chron. Inuasions of Ireland.

Lord, what a chaunge was here at Rome since the dayes of Cato the censor, who thought it meet and requisite, yea and gave advice that the said forum or great hall of common pleas should be paved and laid all over with caltraps under foot, to keep out lawyers and busie pleaders from thence.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

CALVE, v. } In Luke, xv. 27. A. S. "Thin
CALF, n. } fæder of sloh an fætt celf;" in CA'LVISH. } Wiclif, "Thi fadir slough a fatt CA'LVING, n. } calf." A. S. Cealf, celf, calf, cealfian, vitulum parere. Somner explains Calfian;—fœtare, vitulum edere. Kilian;—the Dut. Kalven, fœtare, fœtum edere, fœtificare. Wachter,—the Ger. Kalben, fœtare, fœtificare; and remarks, that fœtare, (to bear or bring forth,) is the primary and general signification; other usages are deduced from it. Milton uses the word in this general sense, for which he is ridiculed by Bentley, and justified by Pearce and Newton. See their notes on the passage quoted below. The calf of the leg, Skinner says, is cruris vitulus, i. e. crus minus, the smaller thigh. Calf is applied to—

The young of kine, and some other animals; as the elephant, the stag; (met.) to—

An ignorant, stupid, person.

And brynge ye a fat calf and sleygh ye: and eat we, and make we feeste.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 15.

And brynge hyther that fatted caulfe, and kyl hym, and lette vs eate and be merie.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Thereto she coude skip, and make a game,
As any kid or calf folowing his dame.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v 3269.

Ful longe were his legges, and ful leane,
Ylike a staff, there was no calf yseene.—Id. Prol. v. 594.

Their bullocke gendreth, and that not oute of tyme: their cowe calueth, and is not vnfruitfull.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 21.

Like as an hynde, whose calfe is falne vnwares
Into some pit, where she him heares complaine,
An hundred times about the pit side fares,
Right sorrowfully mourning her bereaved cares.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

——— When bright noone did flame
Forth from the sea, in sholes the sea calues came,
And orderly, at last, lay downe and slept
Along the sands. And then th' old sea god crept
Fourth from the deeps; and found his fat calues there.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

The cattel in the fields and meddowes green;
Those rare and solitarie, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upsprung;
The grassie cloda now calv'd.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. vii.

I heard of late of a cow in Warwikshire, which in six yeeres had sixteen calfes; that is, foure at once in three calvings, and twise twins; which, unto mannie, may seeme a thing incredible.—Holinshed. Descript. of Engl. b. iii. c. 1.

You seem like to Waltham's calf, that went nine miles to suck a cow; and when he came hither, the cow proved a bull: perhaps in your calvish meditation you thought, for your pains in advertising the picture-mother, to have sucked her dug.—Sheldon. Miracles of Antichrist.

Then, while calves leather-binding beare the sway,
And sheep-skin to its sleeker gloss gives way;
So long shall live thy praise in books of fame,
And Tonson yield to Lintott's lofty name.—Gay, Ep. 14.

I hate sly, sneaking, worming souls,
Whom friendship scorns and fear controuls;
Who praise, support, and help by halves,
Like heifers, neither bulls nor calues.
Lloyd. Charity. A Fragment.

CA'LVER. Of unknown etymology. Mr. Gifford thinks calvered salmon differed little from what is now called pickled salmon, as the directions for preparing it are—"to boil it in vinegar with oil and spices."

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calvered salmons, knots, godwits, lampreys.—B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 2.

Gasp. Did I ever think
That my too curious appetite, that turn'd
At the sight of godwits, pheasant, partridge, quails,
Larks, woodcocks, calver'd salmon as coarse diet,
Would leap at a mouldy crust!
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act iii. sc. 1.

Pisc. Oh no! assure yourself a grayling is a winter-fish; but such a one as would deceive any but such as know him very well indeed: for his flesh, even in his worst of season, is so firm, and will so easily calver, that in plain truth he is very good meat at all times.—Walton. Angler, pt. ii. c. 6.

CA'LUMNY, n.
CALU'MNIATE, v.
CALUMNIA'TION.
CALU'MNIATOR.
CALU'MNIATORY.
CALU'MNIOUS.
CALU'MNIOUSLY.
CALU'MNIOUSNESS.

It. Calumniare; Sp. Calumniar; Fr. Calomnier; Lat. Calumniari, which Vossius affirms is from Calutum, the (unused) supine of Calvor; i. e. frustrari aut decipere, to frustrate or deceive. Of Calvor the etymology is unsettled. Cotgrave copiously sets forth the present usage—

To calumniate, to slander, detract from; to reproach unjustly, accuse falsely, charge maliciously, appeach wrongfully; to impeach the credit, blemish the fame, indanger the fortune of another, by forged imputations."

Christ could eate and drinke, but he was counted a frende to synners and publicans: so that hatred unto the trewth dyd alwayse falsly reporte, and calumniate all godly mens doinges.—Strype. Records, an. 1554, No. 24. A breefe Treatise.

Ye see them confounded in the bokes writen avenst them of the lerned, answering to their calumpniouse false lyes.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

The bitterness of my stile was plainness, not calumniousness.—Bp. Morton. Discharge of Imputations, &c. p. 159.

Leo. Prayse her but for this her without dore forme
(Which on my faith deserues high speech) and straight
The shrug, the hum, or ha those petty brands
That calumnie doth use; oh, I am out
That mercy do's, for calumnie will seare
Vertue it selfe) These shrugs, these hums, these ha's,
When you have said shee's goodly, come betweene,
Ere you can say shee's honest.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 1.

———A man's tongue is voluble, and pours
Words out of all sorts, every way; such as you speake you heare,
What then need we vie calumnies, like women that will weare
Their tongues out.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

Nor was it modest in thee to depart
To thy eternal home, where now thou art,
Ere thy reproach was ready; or to die
Ere custom had prepar'd thy calumny.
Corbet. Elegy on Baron Effingham.

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth inuert th' attest of eyes and eares;
As if those organs had deceptious functions,
Created only to calumniate.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 2.

———For beautie, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Loue, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To enuious and calumniating time.—Id. Ib. Act iii. sc. 6.

The new regent with eight thousand souldiers arrived at Harfleur, and from thence marched to Roan; where he won the reputation of justice and uprightness, notwithstanding all the calumniations of the Duke of Somerset.
Baker. Chronicle, an. 1336.

[He is] interested, if desiring to carry an ill matter, and knowing that a bad cause will not bear a good speach, he go about to deter his opposers and hearers by a good calumniation.—Hobbes. Thucydides, b. iii.

Thinking, belike, that as the immediate invectives against her majesty, do best satisfy the malice of the foreigner, so the slander and calumniation of her principal counsellors agreed best with the humours of some male-contents within the realm.—Bacon. Observations on a Libel, 1592.

This by the calumniators of Epicurus's philosophy, was objected as one of the most scandalous of all their sayings; which, according to my charitable understanding, may admit a very virtuous sense, which is, that he thanked his own belly for that moderation, in the customary appetites of it which can only give a man liberty and happiness in this world.—Cowley. Ess. on Liberty.

Upon admission of this passage, as you yourselves have related it in your calumniatory information.
Mountagu. Appeal to Cæsar, p. 17.

For thither he assembl'd all his train,
Pretending so commanded to consult
About the great reception of thir king,
Thither to come and with calumnious art
Of counterfeted truth thus held their eares.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

The odious aspersion whereof, Binius, (from the false intelligence of some of our own,) calumniously throwes upon our Wickliffe, whom he slanders for his missing the Bishopricke of Worcester, to have fallen upon that successefule contradiction.—Bp. Hall. The Peace Maker.

This then seems to be our Saviour's sense; verily I say unto you, that for every slander or calumny that ye vent against any man, ye shall be called to a severe account; and, therefore, much more may ye expect to be so, when ye calumniate and slander the Holy Ghost, by ascribing his works to Beelzebub.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

Therefore, Sir, I hope you will allow a person, that is much more concerned to keep his religion, than himself, from being endangered by this accusation, to give you a righter apprehension than our calumniators have done of the innocentest, as well as the truest, religion in the world.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 284.

When party rage shall droop through length of days,
And calumny be ripen'd into praise,
Then future times shall to thy worth allow
That fame, which envy would call flattery now.
Young. An Epistle to Sir Robert Walpole.

CA'MBRICK. So called from Cambray, famous for this kind of very fine white linen. Fr. Toile de Cambray; It. Tela di Cambrai, (Junius.) Dut. Kammeruck; Ger. Kammerich.

Val. Come, I would your cambrick were sensible as your finger, that you might leaue pricking it for pitie.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 3.

Here you might see the finest laces held up by the fairest hands; and there, examined by the beauteous eyes of the buyers, the most delicate cambricks, muslins, and linens.
Spectator, No. 552.

Guard well thy pocket, for these Syrens stand
To aid the labours of the diving hand;
Confederate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambric handkerchiefs reward the song.
Gay. Trivia, b iii. l. 83.

CA'MEL, n.
CA'MELOT, or CA'MLET, n.
CA'MLET, v.
CA'MLIN.

Fr. Chameau; It. Camelo; Sp. Camello; Sw. Kamel; Dut. Kemel; Gr. Καμηλος. Camelus suo nomine Syriaco in Latium venit, (Varro, de Leg. l. 4.)

Camelot, or Cameline; Fr. Camelot; It. Ciambello; Dut. Kamelot; Sw. Kamlot; vestis undulata. "A word," says Kilian, "common to the French, Italian, Spanish, and other nations; so called because it is made of the hair of the camel and the goat interwoven." For a consequent application of the word,—to any thing waved or undulated, see the example from Bacon.

And eftsoone I seye to you, it is lighter a camel to passe thorough a nedlis yghe than a riche man to entre into the kyngdom of heveues.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 19.

And moreouer I saye vnto you: it is easyer for a camell to go throughe the eye of a nedle, than for a riche manne to enter the kyngdome of God.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Ye archewives, stondeth ay at defence,
Sin ye be strong, as is a great camaile,
No suffreth not that men do you offence.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v 9072.

Take on a robe of cameline. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

As for camels, they are nourished in the Levant, or east parts, among other heards of great cattaile. Two kinds there be of them, the Bactriane, and the Arabicke, and herein they differ: the Bactrians haue two bunches upon their backes; the other, but one apeece there, but they haue another upon their breast, whereupon they rest and lie.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 18.

The one [kind of beast] is called of the Æthyopians, the Nabis, necked like an horse, for legge and foot not vnlike the bœufe, headed for all the world as a camell, beset with white spots upon a red ground, whereupon it taketh the name of Camelo pardalus.—Id. Ib.

By miracle he may, reply'd the swain,
What other way I see not, for we here
Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inur'd
More than the camel.—Milton. Par. Reg. b. i. l. 340.

It seem'd like silver sprinkled here and theare
With glittering spangs that did like starres appeare,
And wav'd upon, like water chamelot.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

The Turks have a pretty art of chamoletting of paper, which is not with us in use. They take divers oiled colours; and put them severally (in drops) upon water; and stirre the water lightly; and then wet their paper, (being of some thicknesse) with it; and the paper will be waved, and veined, like chamolet, or marble.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 741.

To morrow I shall be in your livery, and perhaps try whether your Brussels camlet will resist Irish rain, as I have known it to do that of Flanders.
Sir W. Temple. Works. Lett. from the D. of Ormond, vol. i.

Rather let him his active limbs display
In camlet thin, or glossy paduasoy,
Let no unwieldy pride his shoulders press,
But airy, light and easy be his dress.
Jenyns. The Art of Dancing, c. 1.

CA'MERADE. See COMRADE.

CAMERA'TION. See CONCAMERATE.
Forming or constructing an arch: arching.

Mensula, which, quasi μεσα, seems to be locked to the pennants in guise of a wedge, and therefore by our artists nam'd the key-stone: we have shewed their use where two arches intersect, which is the strongest manner of cameration.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

CA'MIS, or CA'MUS.

Fr. Chemise; It. Camice, Camicia; Sp. Camisa; Bar. Lat. Camisia. Who, (says Wachter,) that has ears accustomed to the change of letters, can doubt that the Bar. Lat. Camisia is formed from Hemida, vestis tunica, from Ger. Heimen; Dut. Heymen; Sw. Hæmana, to cover? The quotations describe the kind of covering to which the name is applied: and see CAMISADO.

All in a camus light of purple silke
Wouen vpon with siluer, subtly wrought,
And quilted vpon sattin white as milke
Trailed with ribbands diuersly distraught.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3. s. 2.

And was yclad, (for heat of scorching aire,)
All in a silken camus, lilly white,
Purfled vpon with many a folded plight.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3. s. 26.

CAMISA'DO, n. Fr. Chemise. See CAMIS.

Fr. Camisade, a sudden assaulting or surprisal of the enemy, (so termed because the soldiers that execute it, most commonly wear shirts over their armour, or take their enemies in their shirts.) Cotgrave.

And who would not be affraide to see sutche an armie come againste him? How be it (gentle reader) be of good cheare. Al this is but a camisado, these be but visardes: they be no faces.—Jewel. Replie to Hardinge, p. 6.

Brute, for that he had not power sufficient to fight with the enemies in open field, ment to give them a camisado in the night season.

Holinshed. Chron. Hist. of England, b. ii. c. 1.

Some were for carrying on the work
Against the Pope, and some the Turk:
Some were engaging to suppress
The camisado of surplices,
That gifts and dispensations hinder'd,
And turn'd to th' outward man the inward.

Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

CA'MOUS, adj. } Dut. Camus; It. Camuso;
CA'MOUSED, adj. } Fr. Camuser, to flatten, or CA'MOUSLY. } quash down the nose, to break the bridge of the nose, to make flat-nosed, (Cotgrave.)

Skinner says, from the Lat. Camurus, incurvus; and this from the Gr. Καμπυλος, bent, and this from Καμπη, a bending, and καμπτειν, to bend.

Dr. Jamieson explains camow-nosed, hook-nosed.

Round was his face, and camuse was his nose.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3932.

Her nose some dele h-ked
And camusalye croked. Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

Large herds, and pastures! Swine, and kie, mine owne!
And though my na'se be camus'd, my lipps thick,
And my chin bristled! Pan, great Pan, was such!
Who was the chiefe of hoards men, and our sire!

B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2.

CAMP, v. } A. S. Campian, prælliari, bellare, belligerare, castrametari;
CAMP, n. } to fight, to make or wage war;
CAMPA'IGN. } to encamp, (Somner.) Ger.
CA'MPER. } Kampfen; Dut. Kampen; Fr. Camper; It. Campeggiare, Sp. Campar. As in the Gr. (says Wachter,) Μαρναμαι, dimico, is formed from Μαρη, manus, and in Lat. Pugnare, from Pugnus; so in the Ger. from Kam, the hand or fist, is well deduced Kampfen, pugnandi et certandi significatu, in the signification of fighting or contending.

Ray says, to camp, is to play at football. Sax. Camp is striving, and Campian, to strive, to contend. This word for this exercise, he adds, extends over Essex, as well as Norfolk and Suffolk. And see Moor's Suffolk Words.

In A. S. is also found Camp-stede, castra, locus pugnæ, the place of encamping or fighting. Junius says, manifestly, and Skinner, perhaps, from the Lat. Campus. Vossius presents four different etymologies of Campus; three of which he rejects, and the fourth, which he adopts from Joseph Scaliger, is απο της καμψης, i. e. equorum flexu, whence the goals, meta ipsa, were called καμπτηρες. According to the etymology of Wachter, Camp, in its first step, from Kam, the hand, would be—

The fight, the battle itself; then, the Camp-stede, or place of fighting; then, (as Cotgrave expresses it,) an hoast or army lodged; (sc. prepared and awaiting the fight;) and now also, the mere lodgment itself. See ENCAMP, DECAMP.

Campaign,—the period of encampment or of lodgment in camp; of active operations (sc.) without quitting the field.

Camper,—see in v. COMBAT, the quotation from Verstegan.

In meadow or pasture (to grow the more fine)
Let campers be camping in any of thine;
Which if ye do suffer when sow is the spring,
You gain to yourself a commodious thing

Tusser. December's Husbandry.

For they departed from Raphidim and came to the desert of Sinai and camped in the wildernes,—euen there Israel camped before the mount.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Exod xix. 2.

It is very certain that the Spanyards have refused batel, and conveyed themself out of ther camp neerer unto Naples in the night, from the place where they were encamped within hauf a mile of tharmy of Mouns.

Strype. Records, No. 23. The King's Ambass. to Wolsey.

Had our great pallace the capacity
To camp this hoast, we all would sup together,
And drinke carowses to the next day's fate.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. c. 9.

Fabius camped always in the strong and high places of the mountains, out of all danger of his enemies horsemen, and coasted still after the enemy, so that when Hannibal stayed in any place, Fabius also stayed.—North. Plutarch, p. 152.

They by faint flashes of exhausted fires,
There spyde a camp, as if from danger farre,
Well serv'd with all to which rich peace aspires,
As if for pleasure coin'd, to sport with warre,
They softly lay, (as at adorn'd retires,)
Where, (all commodious,) nought their rest might marre.

Stirling. Jonathan, b. i.

The trials of camp fight were performed by single combat, in lists appointed for that purpose between the accuser and accused, and were usual in actions both real and criminal, where no evident proof of fact appeared from witnesses, or other circumstances: the victor was acquitted, and the vanquished, if not killed upon the field, was condemned.

Sir W. Temple. Introd. to the Hist. of England.

He sent every day very liberal supplies to the prisoners; which was indeed done by the whole town in so bountiful a manner, that many of them, who being shut up had neither air nor exercise, were in greater danger by their plenty, than they had been by all their unhappy campaign.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1666.

The first time I saw him, (De Witt,) he told me I came upon a day he should always esteem very happy, both in respect of his Majesty's resolutions, which I brought, and of those which the States had taken about the disposal of the chief command in their army, by making Prince Maurice and Monsieur Wurtz Camp masters general.

Sir W. Temple. To Sir George Saville.

No more of victory the joyful fame
Shall from my camp to haughty Carthage fly;
Lost, lost are all the glories of her name!
With Asdrubal her hopes and fortunes die.

Lyttelton. Horace, b. iv.

Be wise, Vincenna, and the court forsake;
Our fortunes there, nor thou, nor I, shall make
Even men of merit, ere their point they gain,
In hardy service make a long campaign.

Young. The Love of Fame, Sat. 3.

CAMPA'IGN. See CHAMPAIN: also CAMP.

CA'MPHIRE, v. } Fr. Camphre; Lat. Camphora, which Vossius thinks CA'MPHIRE, n. } is from the Hebrew: he CA'MPHORATE, or } calls it—
CA'MPHORATED. }

The gum of an Indian tree, like a nut (nuci similis.)

And albeit the people are most lewd, yet the coûtry is exceeding good, abounding with all comodities, as flesh, corne, rice, silver, gold, wood of aloes, camphire, and many other things.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 56.

And eats chaste lettice, and drinks poppy-seed,
And smells at camphire fasting.—Bp. Hall. b. iv. s. 4.

Or live, like a Carthusian, on poor John,
Then bathe myself night by night in marble dew,
And use no soap but camphire-balls.

Massenger. The Guardian, Act iii. sc. 1.

Wash balls perfumed, camphored, and plain, shall restore complexions to that degree, that a country fox-hunter who uses them, shall in a week's time look with a courtly and affable paleness, without using the bagnio or cupping.

Tatler, No. 101.

Then having formerly tried that oil of vitriol would easily mix with common oil, we tried also, by shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, to unite them, and easily confounded them into one high coloured liquor, which seemed very uniform, and continued so (at least as to sense) for many hours.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 133.

Vin. Does every proud and self affecting dame
Camphire her face for this! and grieve her Maker
In sinful baths of milk, when many an infant starves,
For her superfluous outside, all for this (to become a bare skull,—Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy. Act iii.

CAN, v. Goth. Kunnan; A. S. Can, cunnan; Sw. G. Kanna; Dut. & Ger. Kennen. Ihre says, to experience by the senses, to feel; sensibus experiri, sentire: it is spoken of all the senses, imprimis, of the smell, as the Fr. Sentir. Wachter—first, scire, nosse, (to know, to understand,) sive intellectu, sive usu et experientiâ; second, posse, valere, to be able; a sense, (or signification,) he remarks, transferred from knowledge to power. See CUNNING.

In Scotch, to ken is still in common use. (See KEN.) In English, can is now used merely as a grammatical auxiliary.

To know, to feel, to see, to perceive; to understand; to know (sc.) how to do any thing; to be able, to have the ability or power.

Know hym wel yf thow kanst, and kep the fro hem alle
That lovyeth hure lordshipes.—Piers Ploukman, p. 26.

I can rimes of Robin Hood and Randal earl of Chester.

Id. In Ritson's Metrical Romances.

But Chaucer (though he can but lewedly
On metres and on rhyming craftily)
Hath sayd hem, in swiche English as he can,
Of olde time, as knoweth many a man.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4467.

Hir name is murmure and compleint,
There can no man hir chere peint,
To sette a glad semblant therin.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For this secrete yme lasteth euen tyl the worldes ende: and they also as helpers of Jesu Christe, be sowiers, sawe al onelye that they sowe not their owne sede, but suche as Christe deliuered vnto them. And because that sede is celestiall, it can in no wyse be ouerlayed or oppressed.

Udal. Mark, c. 4.

But than he speaketh so sauorlie thereof, that it well appereth of hys wyse wordes he neyther canneth anye skil thereof, nor neuer cae in the house.—Sir T. More, p. 301.

What knowest thou y^t we know not? What knowest thou but we can the same.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 15.

The elf was so wanton and so wood,
(But now I trowe can better good,)
She mought no gang on the greene.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. March, l. 56

Instead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tongue,
As he her wronged innocence did weet.
O! how can beauty master the most strong,
And simple truth subdue avenging wrong.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3. s. 6.

In place, there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for in evil, the best condition is not to will, the second not to can.—Bacon. Essays. Of Great Place.

It is a contradiction to imagine that Omnipotence can do that, which if it could be done, would render all power insignificant.—Tillotson, vol. ii. Ser. 99.

To ascribe to God a power of doing what can't be done is not magnifying, but mocking his power. And the reason is plain because a power of causing a thing to be, at the same time that it is not, is only a power of doing that which is nothing, that is, no power at all.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 8.

And yf we put it in aduenture, though we fayle thereof, yet Kynge Edwarde, our mayster, well canne vs moche thanke therfore.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 87

And moreouer sayd, Sir, besyde God, I ought to canne you the moost thanke of any creature lyuyng.—Id. Ib. c. 226

CAN. Often used for gan or began, in old writers.

With gentle words he can her fairely greet,
And bad say on the secret of her hart
Then sighing soft, I learn that little sweet,
Oft tempred is (quoth she) with muchell smart.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4. s. 46.

Whom till to riper yeeres he gan [some ed. can] aspire,
Hee nursed vp in life and manners wilde,
Emongst wilde beasts and woods, from lawes of men exilde. Id. Ib. b. i. c. 6. s. 23

With faire adventure, when Cambello spide,
Full lightly, ere himselfe he could recouer
From dangers dread to ward his naked side,
He can let drive at him with all his power

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 3. s. 20

And more than that, she promist that she would,
In case she might finde fauour, in his eye,
Deuize how to enlarge him out of holde.
The Fairy glad to gaine his liberty,
Can yeeld great thanks for such her curteis.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 3. s. 55

CAN, n. or } A. S. Canna, canne, crater, a
CANN. } can, (Lye.) Fr. Canne; Mid. Lat.
CA'NAKIN. } Canna; Ger. & Dut. Kanne. Wachter quotes from Stillerus:—Kan, any thing hollow with some degree of length; and observes, if this be true, can, i. e. vas oblongum, may be well derived from it. Menage derives the word from the Gr. Κανα, a cane or reed, and the Gr. from the Heb.; and remarks that the word is common to the Eastern languages. Pliny records of the Indian reeds or canes, that "they be of such a length, that between every joint they will yeeld sufficient to make boats able for to receive three men apeece for to row at their ease." Less reeds or canes, then, may have furnished—

Drinking vessels, or vessels for liquors;—now made of different materials.

And there weren set sixe stoonen cannes aftir the clensing of the Jewis holdinge ech tweyne either thre metretis.
Wiclif Joh. c. 2.

To. A false conclusion: I hate it as an vnfilled canne. To be vp after midnight, and to go to bed then is early.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 3.

——— For his discourse, 'twas ever
About his business, war, or mirth to make us
Relish a cann of wine well.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 3

And let me the cannakin clinke, clinke:
And let me the cannakin clinke.
A souldier's a man: Oh, man's life but a span,
Why then let a souldier drinke.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc 3.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 6.

CANA'L. Fr. It. & Sp. Canale, Lat. Canalis. Virgil uses canalis for a trough. Properly, says Martinius, Cannarum cavitates, the hollowness of canes. Then—

Any thing hollowed out in similitude of a cane.

To consider the great rivers, and the strange number of canals that are found in this province, and do not only lead to every great town, but almost to every village, and every farm house in the country; and the infinity of sails that are seen every where coursing up and down upon them: one would imagine the water to have shared with the land, and the people that live in boats to hold some proportion with those that live in houses.
Sir W. Temple. Upon the United Provinces, c. 3.

What airy prospects! what romantic views!
Surprise the fancy, and inspire the muse.
Through the long vista, or the casual break
Glitter the blue canal, or silver lake
Boyse. The Triumphs of Nature.

CANA'RY, n. Wine, singing birds, and also a dance common in the Canary Isles, and thence introduced into this country.

And thus he was led in scorne, after the quenes rout throughout all the townes as they passed, with trumpes and canaryes, to do hym the greatter dispyte.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol i. c. 12.

And therein she entred, and all her cõpany, with gret noyse of trumpettes, and canayre—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 80.

Boy. No my compleat master, but to ligge [jig] off a tune at the tongues end, canarie to it—with the feete, humour it with turning vp your eie.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iii. sc. 1.

Then if thou'lt have me love a lass,
Let it be one that's kind,
Else I'm a servant to the glass
That's with canary lin'd.—Brome. Resolves.

The canary bird is now so common, and has continued so long in a domestick state, that its native habits as well as its native country, seem almost forgotten.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. iv. c. 4

CA'NCEL, v. } Fr. Canceler, cancellare; It. Scancellare; Sp. Cancelar—
CA'NCELLATED, adj. }
CA'NCELLER, n. }

The Lat. Cancellus, Vossius derives from Κιγκλις, which is itself from κλειειν, claudere, obserare, to enclose, (sc.) with rails or bars. See the example from Blackstone for the present technical usage; and also CHANCELLOR.

To draw lines across, or over, to cross; to deface or efface, to erase, to obliterate, to blot out; and thus, to destroy or annul.

Canceleer appears to be applied by Drayton to the crossing, zig-zag, motion of a hawk, "when she turneth two or three times upon the wing, to recover herself before she seizeth her prey," (Gent. Recreation, quoted by Gifford.)

In that great booke of Joue's decrees in beau'n,
Compiled ere time had any wings to moue,
The wofull wight, to whom black fate is giuen,
To cancell it in vaine doth after proue;
No change of time can change the will of Joue.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 632.

Thou canst not think thy flower can always flourish
And that thy beauty will be still admired;
But that those rays which all these flames do nourish
Cancell'd with time, will have their date expir'd,
And men will scorn what now is so desir'd.
Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

Shake hands for ever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows,
That we one jot of former love retain.—Drayton, Idea 61

Then making to the flood, to force the fowls to rise,
The fierce and eager hawks, down thrilling from the skies,
Make sundry canceleers e're they the fowl can reach,
Which then to save their lives, their wings do lively stretch.—Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 20.

——— The partridge sprung,
He makes his stoop;—but wanting breath, is forced
To canceliee: then with such speed as if
He carried lightning in his wings, he strikes
The trembling bird, who even in death appears
Proud to be made his quarry.
Massinger. Guardian, Act i. sc. 1.

The tail of the castor is almost bald, though the beast is very hairy, and cancellated, with some resemblance to the scales of fishes.—Grew. Museum.

The hand writing against him may be cancelled in the court of heaven, and yet the enditement run on in the court of conscience.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

Posterity, perhaps, may pay the debt,
That senates cancel, and that courts forget;
Yet ah! what boots it when our bards expire,
That earth's last ages hang upon the lyre!
Cawthorn. Vanity of Human Enjoyments.

A deed may be avoided, by delivering it up to be cancelled, that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of lattice work or cancelli; though the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing it.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

CA'NCERATE, v. } A. S. Cancere; Fr. Cancre, It. Cancro; Sp. Cancer; Dut. Kancker.
CA'NCER, n. }
CA'NCEROUS. }

So called because in its rise and progress it is said to have some supposed resemblance to the motion of the cancer; or in its appearance to the cancer itself; or when touched to the feel of the cancer. See the quotation from Wiseman.

Cancer is the name of a tumour arising (as it is thought) from an adust or atrabilious humour. It is round, unequally hard, and (if not inflamed) of a livid or brown colour, with exquisite pricking pain: the veins appear turgid in the skin upon the surface of the tumour.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 21.

Here is a gentlewoman, who hath laboured with a cancer in her right breast these eight or nine years, in the use of variety of means to small purpose: at length nature seemed to make a separation between the cancerated and sound breast, such as you often see where a caustic hath been applied.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 647.

He adds, that the beginning of these cancerous sores is so small that what produces the pain scarce equals the bigness of a pea, and yet in a few days, nay sometimes in a few hours, it spreads so, as to destroy the whole part it invades.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 609.

As when a cancer in the body feeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds,
So does the chillness to each vital part,
Spread by degrees and creeps into her heart.
Addison. Ovid. Met. b. ii.

CA'NDENT, adj. Lat. Candere, candens. Of unsettled etymology. See CANDLE.

Heating, burning.

If a wire be heated onely at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity; as we have declared in wires totally candent.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

As soon as ever it was brought out of the candent vessel into the open air, the burning coals did hastily degenerate or fall asunder.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 482.

CA'NDID, adj. } Fr. Candide; It. Candida; Sp. Candido; Lat. Candidus. Candidus differs from albus, inasmuch as it includes brightness; whence snow recently fallen, silver polished, are properly called candida. And candidus, Vossius thinks, is from candere, as lucidus from lucere. (See CANDLE.) Candid, in this primitive sense, is rare in English. (See the first quotation from Cowley.) It is applied (met.)—
CA'NDIDATE, v. }
CA'NDIDATE, adj. }
CA'NDIDATE, n. }
CA'NDIDLY. }
CA'NDIDNESS. }
CA'NDOUR. }

Having the purity of white;—untarnished, unspotted, unsullied, sincere, innocent, upright;—undesigning.

Candour is used by Brown literally to denote whiteness. Met. it is—

Purity, fairness, sincerity, in mind or deed; purity of character; honour.

A Candidate was so called, because, when soliciting for office or honour, he wore a garment "more white than ordinarie," (candida toga.) The Romans wore a white garment in common, (alba toga,) but, when seeking or standing for offices, it was usual "to weare it more white than ordinarie, and to refresh the bright hew of it." A law was made forbidding this practice, "ne cui album in vestimentum addere liceret," (Holland, Livy, p. 155.)

Ah mild and gall-less dove,
Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love,
Canst thou in Albion still delight?
Still canst thou think it white.
Cowley Upon His Majesty's Restoration

His candid style like a clean stream does slide
And his bright fancy, all the way,
Does, like the sun-shine, in it play
Id. To the Royal Society

Without quarrelling with Rome, we can allow this purgatory, to purify and cleanse us, that we may be better candidated for the court of heaven and glory.
Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 57

Though there are some in your free state,
Some things in you, who're candidate,
That he who is, or loves himself, must hate;
Yet I'll not therefore slight you.
Brome. Song. The Indifferent.

Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever bene,
Send thee by me their tribune and their trust,
This palliament of white and spotless hue,
And name thee in election for the empire,
With those our late deceased Emperours sonnes—
Be Candidatus then and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act i. sc. 2.

Most plants, though green above ground, maintain their original white below it, according to the candour of their seminal pulp, and the rudimental leaves do first appear in that colour.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

Suppose the Spaniard for his advantage, treated of peace at Borbourg, not so fairly and candidly as he ought; we in like manner may now without hurt to ourselves treat with swords in our hands.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1598.

No man drench't in hate, can promise to himself the candidness of an upright judge: his hate will partialize his opinion.—Feltham, Resolve 62.

Writing thyselfe, or judging others writ,
I know not which th' hast most, candour or wit:
But both th' hast so, as who affects the state
Of the best writer, and judge, should emulate.
B. Jonson, Epigram 123.

——— Might I but persuade you to dispense
A little with your candour.
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act. iv. sc. 3.

For I'll be useful; and, ere I see thee perish,
Dispensing with my dignity and candour,
I will do something for thee, though it savour
Of the old squire of Troy.
Id. The Guardian, Act iii. sc. 1.

In 1560 he [John Rastell] left his Coll. (wherein he had always been accounted an excellent disputant,) his friends, and native country and went to Lovain, where and at Antwerp, he published certain books against B. Jewell, being then a candidate of the Fac. of Theology.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Cato on the contrary told them, he presented himself as a candidate, because he knew the age was sunk in immorality and corruption: and that, if they would give him their votes, he would promise them to make use of such a strictness and severity of discipline, as should recover them out of it.—Tatler, No. 162.

It [conscience] presently sees the guilt and looks through all the flaws and blemishes of a sinful action: and on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, the sincerity of his intentions, and the whole carriage of every circumstance in a virtuous performance.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

If our modern infidels considered these matters with that candour and seriousness which they deserve, we should not see them set with such a spirit of bitterness, arrogance, and malice.—Spectator, No. 187

Ye martial breasts! the pride of Scotia's plain!
On this your fair revolving annual day,
Candid receive the Muse's faithful strain,
Who thus her tribute to your worth would pay.
Boyse. On the Royal Company of Archers.

Here pause, my friend, and with due candour own
Affliction's cup not mixt for thee alone;
Others, like thee, its dire contents must drain,
And share their full inheritance of pain.
Blacklock. To the Rev. Mr. Jameson.

CA'NDLE, n. Fr. Chandelle; It. and Sp. Candela; Lat. Candela, from Candere, to burn, says Vossius, as Suadela from Suadere. But Candere is of unsettled etymology. Candle, in A. S. Candel, is in the ancient Danish language, Kindil. And Thre, after noticing that some derive from the Latin and others from the Welsh, declares himself for the Isl. and Sw. Goth. Kinda, which at this day among our country people (he remarks) signifies, to kindle, accendere notat.

That which kindles, lights, takes or holds light. Candle is used—prefixed to light, stick, &c.

An honduol heo hente of candlen longe and grete,
R. Gloucester, p. 290.

And thorw a candel cloming. In a cursed place
I el a don and for brende. forth al the rewe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 43.

He is to gret a nigard that wol werne
A man to light a candel at his lanterne;
He shal have never the lesse light parde
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prol. v. 5910.

Ne men light not a lanterne, and put it under a bushell, but sitten it upon a candlestucke to lighten the hous.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Neither do men lyghte a candle, and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candlestucke, and it lighteth al that are in the house.—Bible, 1551. Mat. c. 5.

But as touching the worshiping of images, setting up of candles before them or kneeling, &c. I assure you, I trust ye shal hear shortly in my poor diocee, that they shal know their former faults and leave it.
Strype. Records, No. 92. Hen. VIII.

If thou wouldest promise him to worship him with image service, that is to stick vp a candle before his image, or such an image as he appeared to thee in: He would answer that he were a spirite, and delighted in no candlelight, but would bid thee give a candle to thy neighbour that lacked, if thou hadst to many.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 401.

But every living thing——
Dem. 'Tis true—must perish;
Our lives are but our marches to our graves.
How dost thou now, Lieutenant?
Lieu. Faith 'tis true, Sir,
We are but spans, and candles-ends.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act iii. sc. 5.

For I am prouerb'd with a grandsier phrase,
I le be a candle holder and looke on.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 4.

He was to weet a man of full ripe yeares,
That in his youth had been of mickle might,
And born great sway in armes among his peares,
But now weak age had dim'd his candle-light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3. s. 3.

The same [Maidenhaire] beeing incorporat with the fungous excrescence growing about the candlenufe, as also with the soot found sticking to the sockets of lampe and candlesticks, causeth the haire of the eyelids to come thicke.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 11.

Here we may take notice of the candletree of the West Indies, out of whose fruit, boiled to a thick fat consistence, are made very good candles.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

By candle-light we could see little in the bottom of these eyes but lucid objects, such as the flame of the candle, which appeared tremulous, though inverted, but by day-light we could manifestly discern in them, both the motions of every neighbouring object, and the more vivid of their colours.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 53.

When he is dress'd he goes to court, comes into the drawing room, and walking bolt upright under a branch of candlesticks, his wig is caught by one of them, and hangs dangling in the air.—Spectator, No. 77.

Tom, a pert waiter, smart and clever,
Adroit pretence he wanted never,
Curious to see what caus'd this rout,
And what the doctors were about,
Sally stepped in to snuff the candles,
And take whate'er they pleas'd to want else.
Cawthorn. The Antiquarians.

CA'NDY, v. Fr. "Se candir, to candy, to grow candid, as sugar after boiling." (Cotgrave.) The Italians, (says Menage) call sugar-candy, Zucchero di Candia, as if made and imported from Candia or Crete. If this be the origin, the usages by Drayton, Carew, and Browne, will be consequential.

To give certain appearances resembling those of sugar-candy; to form or congeal into (white or) glistening substances;—into icicles.

In Beaumont;—to cover over, to overspread; as with sugar-candy.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen.
Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

——Wild he,
When I am hoarse with praising his each cast,
Give me but toast againe, that I must waste
In sugar candide, or in butter'd beere,
For the recovery of my voice.
B. Jonson. Epistle to a Friend.

Now that the winter's gone, the earth hath lost
Her snow-white robes, and now no more the frost
Candies the grass, or casts an icy cream
Upon the silver lake or chrystal stream.
Carew. The Spring.

In winter's time when hardly fed the flockes,
And icicles hung dangling on the rockes;
When Hyems bound the floods, in silver chaines,
And hoary frosts had candy'd all the plaines.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

This solace's divine contagion spread
Upon all contraries its conquering might;
With honor, this disgrace, imbellished,
This candied bitterest tortures with delight.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 16. s. 198.

Here I say nothing of Eringo roots growing in this county, the candying of them being become a staple commodity at Colchester. These are soveraign to strengthen the nerves; and pity it is, that any vigour acquired by them should be otherwise employed then to the glory of God!
Fuller. Worthies. Essex.

CANE, v. } Fr. Canne; It. and Sp. Canna;
CANE, n. } and Lat. Canna, which Menage
CA'NY. } derives from the Gr. Καννα, and the Gr. from the Heb.; and remarks that the word is common to the eastern languages. See CAN, n. See the quotation from Pliny.

To cane,—to make of, do any thing with, to strike or beat with, a cane.

Then they pricke him [the Elephant] with sharp canes, and cause him to go into a strait house, and there they put a rope about his middle and about his feet, and let him stand there three or foure dayes without eating or drinking; and then they bring a female to him with meat and drinke, and within few dayes he becommeth tame.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 259.

'Tis like light canes, that first rise big and brave,
Shoot forth in smooth and comely spaces; have
But few and faire divisions: but being got
Aloft, grow lease and straightned; full of knot,
And last, goe out in nothing.
B. Jonson. To Sir Ed. Sackville.

But yet ere long againe he doth returne,
And brings with him his iron cane and fire,
Wherewith he doth beate down and burne
All those whom he to mischiefe doth desire.
Harrington. Orlando, b. ix. s. 67.

As well reeds as canes, spread their leaves like wings round one after another, on either side upon the very joynts, and that in alternative course alwaie verie orderly, so as if one sheath come foorth of the right side, the other at the next knot or joynt above it putteth out on the left, and thus it doth throughout by turnes.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 36.

I caned this fellow for ill work he had done for me, and he swore he would be revenged on me.
Parliamentary History, an. 1690.

But in his way lights on the barren plaines
Of Scricana, where Chineses drive
With sailes and wind their canie waggons light.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

As the Roman censors used to punish knights or gentlemen of Rome, by taking away their horses from them, so I have seized the canes of many criminals of figure, whom I had just reason to animadvert upon.—Tatler, No. 162.

The great prince who, some years ago, caned a general officer at the head of his army, disgraced him irrecoverably. The punishment would have been much less had he shot him through the body. By the laws of honour, to strike with a cane, dishonours; to strike with a sword, does not Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. i. s. 2.

——Caspian ranks
From barren mountains, from the joyless coast
Around the stormy lake, whose name they bore,
Their scimitars upheld, and cany bows.
Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

The first of these writers [Lucan] in enumerating Pompey's eastern auxiliaries, describes a nation who made use of the cane-juice as a drink.
——Indians
That sucke sweete liquor from their sugar canes.
May. Lucan, b. iii.
Grainger. Sugar Cane, b. i. note.

CANICULAR, adj. } Lat. Canis; Gr. Κυων,
CA'NINE. } κυνος; κυφω το κυειν, to kiss, to lick. See Vossius.

The Canicular days are the dog-days. Canine, of or pertaining to a dog.

Now as touching grape verjuice, it should be made of the vine Psythia or Amminea, and before the canicular dates, when as the grapes be but new knit, and no bigger than eich pease.—Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 27.

Some latitudes have no canicular days at all: as namely all those which have more than 73 degrees of northern elevation; as the territory of Nova Zemola, part of Greenland and Tartary, for unto that habitation the dog-star is invisible, and appeareth not above the horizon.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13

A third kind of women were made up of canine particles; these are what we commonly call scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, that are always busy and barking; that snarl at every one who comes in their way; and live in perpetual clamour.—Spectator, No 209.

As churchmen wrangle not with jarring spite,
Nor statesmen-like caressing whom I bite,
View all the canine kind with equal eyes,
I dread no mastiff, and no cur despise.
Hamilton. On a Dog.

CA'NISTER, n. Lat. Canistrum, so called because made (originally) of split canes or reeds. See Vossius.

——Her princely guest
Was next her side, in order sate the rest,
Then canisters with bread are heap'd on high;
Th' attendants water for their hands supply.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Here loaves in canisters are pil'd on high,
And there in flames the slaughtered victims fly.
Pope. Thebais of Statius, b. i.

CA'NKER, n. } Canker is Cancer differently written; and—so
CA'NKER, v. } written—much more variously applied. Malum in-
CA'NKERED, adj. } medicabile, cancer. Ovid,
CA'NKERDLY. } Met. ii. 825, is rendered
CA'NCARDNESS. } Cancer by Addison, and CA'NKEROUS, adj. } (See CANCER.) Canker is CA'NKERY, adj. } applied—
Canker by Sandys.

To any thing that eats, gnaws, corrodes, consumes, devours, or destroys. To any thing that has the malignant, corrupt, infectious, virulent, envenomed qualities of a cancer.

Grose says that in Gloucestershire a poisonous fungus resembling a mushroom is called canker; in some counties the caterpillar; in Devonshire the dog-rose, the canker-rose; and in the North, canker'd, Scotch, cankert, is cross, ill-conditioned.

Canker is used prefixed to bloom, worm, &c.

Perilous is the canker, that catcheth the bone,
To late commeth the medicine, if thou let the sore
By long continuance encrease more and more.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 24

That which is left of the palmer worme hathe the grashopper eaten, and the residue of the grashopper hathe the canker worme eaten, and the residue of the canker-worme hathe the caterpiller eaten.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Joel, i. 4.

What a cankerd mynd this heretike hath, there can I trowe no man doubte that heareth what foolish gaudes he deuiseth vpon it of his own franticke head.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 393

It is now by ye eagre dulce sauce of the paraphrase made more liquide to runne pleasauntly in the mouth of any man whiche is not so muche infected with indurate blindnesse of herte, with malicious cancerdnes, and with to muche peruerse Judgmēt.—Udal. Preface to Luke.

And, as with age, his body uglier growes,
So his mind cankers.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1

Caulis breake forth, enuie rous'd vp from hell,
Creepes into false King Philip's cankred brest,
Who with old hate of my good hap possest,
Doth by his plots the Austrian Duke excite,
To ioyne with him to worke us all dispight.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 471.

And as a canker, slighting helpfesse arts,
Creepe from th' infected to the sounder parts:
So by degrees the winter of wan death
Congeales the path of life and stops her breath
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

The Earl of Warwick was a pransing courser,
The hauty heart of his could beare no mate:
Our wealth through him waxt many a time the worser,
So cankardly he had our kin in hate.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 401

It [dissimulation] causeth him turne tyrant to his owne,
And to his state workes swift confusion,
Aboue his cedars top it high doth shoot,
And canker-like deuoures it to the root.—Id. Ib. p. 704.

First take the glass, the god replies;
Man views the world with partial eyes.
Good gods! exclaims the startled wight,
Defend me from this hideous sight!
Corruption with corrosive smart,
Lies cankering on his guilty heart.—Gay, pt. ii. Fable 7

The advancement to office of persons only for excelling in those qualities (virtue and learning) prevents the cankers of envy and faction, that corrupt and destroy so many other governments.—Temple. Of Heroick Virtue.

——— Outrageous mix'd with these
Another species of tyrannic rule,
Unknown before, whose cancrous shackles seiz'd
Th' envenom'd soul. Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

Thus blest with all that commerce could supply,
America regards with jealous eye
And canker'd heart, the parent, who so late
Had snatch'd her gasping from the jaws of fate.
Falconer. The Demagogue.

CA'NNIBAL, n. } Cotgrave, under the word
CA'NNIBAL, adj. } Chien (dog) has appetit du
CA'NNIBALLY. } chien; a most insatiate
CA'NNIBALISM. } appetite; a stomach, which though it lay in unto vomiting, still would have more. Perhaps a canine appetite, from Lat. Canis, a dog; though by some suspected to be a corruption of Caribal, from Caribes, the name of the people among whom cannibalism was (Hackluyt) learned to be practised.

This word is not in our older lexicographers, though used by so early a writer as Hackluyt. See the example.

The Caribes I learned to be men-eaters or canibals, and great enemies to the islanders of Trinidad.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 576.

For not the Christian, or the Jew alone,
The Persian or the Turk, acknowledge this;
This mystery to the wild Indian known,
And to the cannibal and Tartar is.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 33.

But the case is much worse, for these cannibals too as well as the wild ones, not only dance about such a taken stranger, but at last devour him.—Cowley, Ess. 8.

And hee had bin cannibally giuen, hee might haue boyld and eaten him too.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 5.

For this reason I could not forbear communicating to you some imperfect information of a set of men (if you will allow them a place in that species of being) who have lately erected themselves into a nocturnal fraternity, under the title of The Mohock Club: a name borrowed it seems from a sort of cannibals in India, who subsist by plundering and devouring all the nations about them.—Spectator, No. 324.

Mr. Fannin [the master] who was with me, supposed it was dog's flesh, and I was of the same opinion, for I still doubted their being cannibals. But we were soon convinced by most horrid and undeniable proof.
Cook. Voyage, b. iv. c. 8.

Whilst the monarchies subsisted, this unprincipled cession was what the influence of the elder branch of the house of Bourbon never dared to attempt on the younger: but cannibal terrour has been more powerful than family influence.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

To all this let us join the practice of cannibalism, with which, in the proper terms, and with the greatest truth, their several factions accuse each other. By cannibalism, I mean their devouring, as a nutriment of their ferocity, some part of the bodies of those they have murdered; their drinking the blood of their victims, and forcing the victims themselves to drink the blood of their kindred slaughtered before their faces. By cannibalism, I mean also to signify all their nameless, unmanly, and abominable insults on the bodies of those they slaughtered.—Id. Ib. Let. 1.

CA'NNON. } Fr. Cannon; It. Cannone,
CANNONE'ER, v. } augmentative of Canna, (Me-CANNONE'ER, n. } nage.)
CANNONA'DE, v. } Skinner — Magna canna,
CA'NNONING, n. } (i. e.) a great tube or pipe, from its similitude to a reed, or cane, or tube. (See CANON.) Cotgrave says—

The gun tearmed a cannon; also the barrel of any gun; (more generally) any instrument, or thing, that is long and hollow, as the barrel of a gun.

No rage of drenching sea, nor woodness of the wynde:
Nor cannons with their thundring cracks shall put her from my mind.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Complaint of a Louer, &c.

By and by he commanded his men to shoot off twelve cannons charged with bullets into the wood that was hard by those people and ships, at whose noyse they were greatly astonished and amazed, for they thought heaven had fallen vpon them, and put themselues to flight, howling, crying and shreeking, so that it seemed hell was broken loose.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 217.

The 9th of May, the Prince of Parma, wt others, came to view the town of Graue, which a canne-neere saw, and discharged his cannon, wherewith hee tooke away the hinder part of his horse, and missed the prince but a little, so that he brused him sore.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1586.

The turret of my hope, which never failes,
Did at the first all Cupid's power dispise.
But it t' o'erthrow while as thou arm'd thine eyes,
Thy lookes were cannons, thy disdaines their balles
Stirling, Son. 32.

A bird that can but kill a fly,
Or prate, doth please his majesty,
'Tis known to euery one.
The Duke of Guise gave him a parret,
And he had twenty cannons for it
For his new galeon. Corbet. Journey to France.

Lin. May the loud cannoning of thunder-bolts,
Screeking of wolves, howling of tortured ghosts,
Pursue thee still, and fill thy amazed ears
With cold astonishment and horrid fears!
Brewer. Linguæ, Act I. sc. 1.

But Captain Beau, who at that time served as cannoneer, ours being shot, as I mentioned before, told him, that we were not at all affrighted at his menaces.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol I. p. 64.

The Duke of Savoy lost no time, but continued cannonading the place, while the fleet came up to bombard it.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1707.

The fixt stars are so remote from the earth, that, if a cannon-bullet should come from one of the fixt stars with as swift a motion as it hath when it is shot out of the mouth of a cannon, it would be 700,000 years in coming to the earth.—Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 3.

But chiefly on the cannon's brazen orb
He [Death] sits triumphant, and with fatal aim
Involves whole squadrons in the sulph'rous storm.
Jago. Edge-Hill, b. iv.

From the earliest dawnings of policy to this day, the invention of men has been sharpening and improving the mystery of murder, from the first rude essays of clubs and stones, to the present perfection of gunnery, cannoneering, bombarding, mining.—Burke. Vindic. of Natural Society.

CANO'A. } A small boat. See CAN; and CANO'E. } particularly the passage there quoted from Pliny.

In the meantime, nothing on earth could haue beene more welcome to vs, next vnto gold, then the great store of very excellent bread, which we found in these canoes; for now our men cried, Let vs go on, we care not how farre.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 646.

Vnto the rougher streame, the cruell swaine
Hurries the shepheardesse, where having layne
Her in a boate like the cannoues of Inde,
Some seely trough of wood, or some trees rinde,
Puts from the shoare.—Browne. Brit. Pastorals, b. i. s 2.

The manner of making a canoa is, after cutting down a large long tree, and squaring the uppermost side, and then turning it upon the flat side, to shape the opposite side for the bottom. Then again they turn her and dig the inside.
Dampier. Voyage, vol. I. c. 8.

The canoes, which these people use, are somewhat like those of the Friendly Isles; but the most heavy, clumsy vessels I ever saw; they are what I call double canoes, made out of two large trees, hollowed out.
Cook. Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

CA'NON, n. } Gr. Κανων; Fr. Canon; It. Canone; Sp.
CA'NON, adj. } Canon. "The Gr. Κανων," Martinius says,
CA'NONESS, n. } "seems in the first place to be virgula cannea, a
CANO'NICAL, adj. } rod or cane, which is usually very straight;
CANO'NICALLY. } and its etymology, to be Κανη, canna, a cane or CANO'NICALNESS. } reed." (See CANNON, ante.) And Vossius thinks CANO'NICALS, n. } the reason plain why Canon should have its CANONICA'TION. } name from Canna, and from its straightness be CA'NONIST, n. } applied to recti mensura, a measure, a rule. And CA'NONISTERS. } thus (met.)—
CANONI'STICK, adj. }
CANONIZA'TION, n. }
CA'NONIZER. }
CANONI'ZING, n. }
CA'NONRY, or }
CA'NONSHIP, n. }

A rule or law; any thing prescribed, laid down, as the rule or law for regulation, direction, government.

Canon is applied also to the person who uses such canon or rule, who lays it down, who conforms to it. Also—

1. To the rule and law of Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. To the catalogue of sacred books, by which all the doctrines of the Christian Church are to be regulated.

3. To the catalogue of Saints and Martyrs, whose memory was, by Ecclesiastical canon or law, preserved in the festivals of the Church. And from this last usage—

To canonize is to enroll among the saints and martyrs of the Church.

Canon bit,—a smooth round bit.

Caton counteth bit at nouht, and canonistres at lasse
Piers Ploughman, p. 163

And in my herte wondren I began
What that he was, til that I understond,
How that his cloke was sowed to his hode;
For which when I had long avised me,
I deemed him some chanon for to be.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,141.

Also, if they should exercise this jurisdiction, it must be executed after the canon laws, which, with their author, are profligate out of this realm.
Strype. Records, No. 57. Legh & Ap Rice to Cromwell.

Unto Wickliffe himself he threatened the greater excommunication, and further imprisonment, and to all his fautors vnlesse that they after three dayes canonicall admonition or warning, or as they call it, peremptorie, did repent and amend.—State Trials. Wiclif. an. 1383.

The obedience of Frances was to Pope Innocent the Thyrde and to his successours, canonicallye admitted bysshoppes of Rome.—Bale. Apology, p 23.

Howe be it I doe ascribe this condemnation rather vnto the canonists than vnto deuines.—Frith. Workes, p. 79.

Why, quoth he, wherof so serueth canonising than; if this be trewe I am neuer aulsed to be canonized while I lyue. Ye do the better, quoth I, nor seuen yere after neither, for it would be but a busynes for you.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 190.

Why may it be that the church be deceived in the canonisation: and yt they may for lack of true knowledge beleuinge untrewe mē, canonise for saites such folke sometime as be full far therefrom.—Id. Ib.

And for that cause it is not said amisse touching ecclesiasticall canons, that by instinct of the Holy Ghost they haue been made, and consecrated by the reuerend receptation of the world.—Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, b. iii s 6.

This is mere moral babble, and direct
Against the canon laws of our foundation.
Milton. Comus, l. 808.

A goodly person, and could manage faire
His stubborne steed with curbed canon-bit,
Who vnder him did trample as the aire,
And chauft, that any on his backe should sit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 7. s. 37.

And yet we do not so read his workes yt we beleue any thing to be true, because he saith it, but so far as we cā esteme, that yt which he saith, doth agree with the canonicall Scriptures.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 111.

How then is the Church an infallible keeper of the canon of Scripture, which hath suffered some books of canonical Scripture to be lost? and others to lose for a long time their being canonical, at least, the necessity of being so esteemed, and afterwards, as it were by the law of Postliminium hath restored their authority and canonicalness unto them.
Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, pt. I. c. 3.

Diodorus Siculus, lib. 4, saith that Hercules being very well pleased with the kindness of the inhabitants of Palatium, foretold them, that after his canonication, those that would consecrate the tenth part of their substance unto Hercules, should be very fortunate and prosperous in the whole course of their life; which continued, saith Diodorus, a custom unto my time.—Spelman. Works, p. 122.

——— For whose sinful sake
Schoolmen new tenements in hell must make:
Whose strange sins canonists could hardly tell
In which commandment's large receit they dwell,
Donne, Sat. 2.

This permission is the very antartic pole against charity, nothing more adverse, ensnaring and ruining those that trust in it, or use it; so loud and criminous as never durst enter into the head of any politician, Jew, or proselyte till they became the apt scholars of this canonistic exposition.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

To him [St. David] our country calendars gave the first of Marche, but in the old martyrologies I find him not remembered: yet I read that Calixtus the Second, first canonized him.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion. Illustrations, s. 4.

By the canonization of saints, and declaring who are martyrs, they assure their power, in that they induce simple men into an obstinacy against the laws and commands of their civil sovereigns even unto death.
Hobbs. Leviathan, pt. iv. c. 47.

The canonizing of saints is another relic of Gentilism: it is neither a misunderstanding of Scripture, nor a new invention of the Roman Church, but a custom as antient as the Commonwealth of Rome itself.—Id. Ib. pt. iv. c. 45.

But quaint emblems and devices begg'd from the old pageantry of some Twelfe-nights entertainment at Whitehall, will do but ill to make a saint or martyr: and if the people resolve to take him sainted at the rate of such a canonizing, I shall suspect their calender more than the Gregorian.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

But now the gravest and worthiest minister, a true bishop of his fold, shall be reviled and ruffled by an insulting and only canon-wise prelate, as if he were some slight paltry companion.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Add to this the canons of the Apostles, in the 68th of which we read the institution of the same; which canons, though they were not writ by the Apostles themselves, yet they are of great undoubted antiquity, and consequently of no less authority in the several ages of the church.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 5

There are in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons.
Ayliffe.

As for the books of the New Testament, we are sufficiently assured, that these and no other are the books which the antient church received for canonical and of divine authority, and though some of them were for a time controverted, yet upon farther enquiry and examination they were received.—Tillotson, Ser. 168.

So Whiston's affair sleeps, though he has published a large work in four volumes in octavo, justifying his doctrine, and maintaining the canonicalness of the Apostolical constitutions, preferring their authority not only to the epistles, but even to the gospels.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1711.

To the making of a thing or place sacred, this surrender of it by its right owner is so necessary, that all the rites of consecration used upon a place against the owner's will, and without his giving up his property, make not that place sacred, for as much as the property of it is not hereby altered; and therefore, says the canonist, Qui sine consultâ Domino consecrat, revera deseerat.
South. A Consecration Sermon, vol. i.

But he dying, the chancellor in September, being then at Ely, wrote a letter to secretary Cecyl, that he would procure that canonry for Immanuel of the King.
Strype. Memoirs, an. 1552.

Nic Saunders saith that one Morwin, Canon of Saint Paul's Cathedral, London, was thrust out of his canonry in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

He [Wm. Piers] had settled on him the rich rectory of Christian Malford, in Wilts, and a resid. canonship in the said ch. of Wells.—Id. Fasti Oxon.

The Canon Law is a body of Roman ecclesiastical law, relative to such matters as that church either has or pretends to have, the proper jurisdiction over.
Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd. § 3.

By the Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 3. All persons who accept any provision from the Pope, to be exempt from canonical obedience, to their proper ordinary, are subjected to the penalties of a præmunire.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 8.

Talk not to me of Popery and Rome,
Nor yet foretel its Babylonish doom;
Nor canonize reforming saints of old,
Because they held the doctrine that you hold;
For if they did, although of saint-like stem;
In this plain point we must reform from them.
Byrom. A Soliloquy.

CA'NOPY, v. CA'NOPY, n. CA'NOPIED, adj. } Fr. Canapé; Gr. Κωνωπειον, from Κωνωψ, a gnat, (qui conicos oculos habet. Lennep.) A veil or covering to exclude gnats from the face. Applied to—

A covering extended over a throne or chair of state; over the head; to any shade or covering.

Yea and euen Luther's image to burned they at Paulis crosse, with many Englishe testamentes; Thomas Wolsey the Cardinall present, solemply sitting vnder the goldin canopye.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

And alwaies, when he rides, there is a canopie or small tent carried ouer his head vpon the point of a launce.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 65.

Then toke she hold of the heery lockes of his heade, and sayde strengthen me O Lord God in this houre; and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the necke, and smote of hys heade. Then toke she the canopye awaye, and rollid the dead body asyde.—Bible, 1551. Judith, c 13.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace:
And their large branches did display
To canopy the place.—Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

Her eyes like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And, canopied in darkness, sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece

—— Nor yet by all meanes knew
Wide throated Mars, his sonne was faine, but in Olympus top,
Sat canopied with golden clouds Joue's counsell had shut up
Both him and all the other gods.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot grass dew-besprent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.—Milton. Comus.

Where ladies doff their champions' helmes,
And kisse their beauers hid,
And parlie vnder canapies,
How well or ill they did.—Warner. Albion's England, c. 9.

Then followed King Richard, in his robes of purple velvet, and over his head a canopy, born by four Barons of the Cinque-ports.—Baker. Richard III. an. 1483.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
So high above the circling canopie
Of night's extended shade.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

At a reasonable distance, on either hand of the cascade, the wall is hollowed into two spreading scallops, each of which receives a couch of green velvet, and forms at the same time a canopy over them.—Tatler, No. 179.

Wher'e'er the rude and moss green beech
O'er-canopies the glade,
Beside some water's rushy brink
With me the muse shall sit and think
(At ease reclin'd in rustic state.)
How vain the ardour of the crowd,
How low, how little are the proud,
How indigent the great.—Gray. Ode on the Spring.

CA'NOROUS, adj. Lat. Canorus; Fr. Canore, from Can-ere, to sound, to sing.

Sounding, (sc. musically, tunefully,) musical, tuneful.

But birds that are canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats and short necks, as nightingales, finches, linnets, canary birds and larks.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

CANT. v. CANT, n. CA'NTER, n. CA'NTICLE. CA'NTINGLY. CA'NTION. CA'NTO, n. CA'NZON. CA'NZONET. } Dr. T. H. (in Skinner) derives Cant, a cantando, because vagrants seek their gains from the common people, cantillando, by chanting. Lye is of the same opinion. See CHANT.

It seems to have been applied to the—

Chant; i. e. the whining tone or modulation of voice adopted by beggars, with intent to coax, wheedle, or cajole, by pretensions of wretchedness; then to—

The language of any cajoler, or hypocritical pretender, (See Swift, A Discourse on the Mechanical Operations of the Spirit, s. 2. Also the quotation from Spectator.)

Canticle,—a little song, a sonnet; a portion of a poem.

Cantion, Canzon; It. Canzone. See CHANT, CHANSON.

Ray. Folly, sir! of what quality.
Fal. Quality! any quality in fashion: drinking, lying, cogging, canting, et cætera. Will you have any more.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act i. sc. 1.

To say the truth, he [Wm Erbury] had language at command, and could dissemble for matter of profit, or to avoid danger, and it was very well known he was only a meer canter.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Who, whatsoeuer perill was prepared,
Both equal paines, and equal perill shared
The end whereof and dangerous euent
Shall for another canticle be spared.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

He [Arion] stood upright on his feet in the poop close to the ship side, and after he had sounded a certain invocation or praiers to the sea-god, he chanted the canticle before said, (the Hymn to Apollo Pythius.)—Holland. Plutarch, p. 252.

I doubt whether by Cuddy be specified the authours selfe or some other; for in the eight aeglogue the same person was brought in, singing a cantion of Colins making as he saith.—Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar, October. Glosse.

Vio. Make me a willow cabine at your gate,
And call vpon my soule within the house,
Write loyall cantons of contemned loue,
And sing them lowd euen in the dead of night.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 5.

Both the great master of Italian rhymes, Petrarch, and our Chaucer, and other of the upper house of the Muses haue thought their canzons honoured in the title of a ballad.
Drayton. Odes. To the Reader.

And that French Muse's [Bartas] eagle eye and wing,
Hath soar'd to heaven, and there hath learn'd the art
To frame angelic straines, and canzons sing:
Too high and deep for every shallow heart.
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 1.

Ped. You finde not the apostrophas and so misse the accent. Let me superuise the canzonet [cangenet.]
Shakespeare.—Love's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 2.

The busy, subtle, serpents of the law,
Did first my mind from true obedience draw:
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe,
I chang'd true freedom for the name of free,
And grew seditious for variety.
Roscommon. Ghost of the old House of Commons.

Others, I am afraid, may study the Scriptures, merely for the sake of the phrase and language they there meet with; which, when they are well acquainted with, they do so wretchedly misapply in their religious talk, that, in truth, what is admirable sense and reason in the holy books, is little better than jargon and cant when it comes out of their mouths.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 17.

Cant is by some people derived from one Andrew Cant, who, they say, was a Presbyterian minister in some illiterate part of Scotland, who by exercise and use had obtained the faculty, alias gift, of talking, in the pulpit in such a dialect, that 'tis said he was understood by none but his own congregation, and not by all of them. Since Mas. Cant's time, it has been understood in a larger sense, and signifies all sudden exclamations, whinings, unusual tones, and in fine all praying and preaching like the unlearned of the Presbyterians.—Spectator, No. 147.

He rais'd his spouse ere matin-bell was rung,
And thus his morning canticle he sung,
"Awake, my love, disclose thy radiant eyes,
Arise, my wife, my beauteous lady, rise!"
Pope. January & May.

Just come from yonder wretched scene,
Where all is venal, false, and mean,
(Looking on London as he spoke,)
I marvel not at thy dull joke;
Nor, in such case, to hear thee vapour.
Mallet. Cupid & Hymen.

I dread nothing more than the false zeal of my friends, in a suffering hour, as he [Whitfield] cantingly expresses it.
Trial of Mr. Whitfield's Spirit, p. 40. (1740.)

CANT. It. Incantare; Fr. Encant or incant. An outrope or outcry of goods, (Cotgrave.) From Cantare—

To proclaim (a public sale, to sell.)

Is it not the general method of landlord, to wait the expiration of a lease, and then cant their lands to the highest bidder.—Swift. Argument against the Power of Bishops.

When two Monks were outvying each other in canting the price of an abbey, he observed a third at some distance, who never said a word, the King demanded why he would not offer: the Monk said he was poor, and besides, would give nothing if he were ever so rich; the King replyed, then you are the fittest person to have it, and immediately gave it to him.—Id. History of William Rufus.

Numbers of these tenants or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives.—Id. Ib.

CA'NTER, v. CA'NTER, n. CA'NTERBURY. } The verb and noun, Canter, though common in speech, have not been found, in any author, except in those on horsemanship. Canterbury, applied to a slow gallop, (from which canter appears to have been corrupted,) occurs in an old book called Chtus's Whimsies, and is likewise used so lately as by Dennis, On the Prelim. to the Dunciad; both produced by Mr. Nares.—Berenger, (a better horseman probably than etymologist,) is inclined to a doubt on the common reason given for the usage of this word; viz. that it is derived from the pilgrims riding at this pace to Canterbury; and he suggests the Lat. Cantherius, a gelding, (see the word in Gesner;) horses of that kind, from the calmness of their temper, performing this soft and easy pace (now called canter), with the greatest docility; and the appellation of the animal being transferred to the pace. (See Berenger, On Horsemanship, p. 71.)

CA'NTLE. v. CA'NTLE, n. CA'NTLET, n. CANT, v. CANT, n. } Cantillum velut Quantillum; id quod supra mensuram additum est, (Spelman.) Fr. Eschanteler, eschantillon. From the Fr. Canton; It. Cantone, angulus; Gr. Κανθος, the corner of the eye. Applied generally to—

The corner or edge, piece or portion, fragment or division.

Cantel, in Vives, seems to signify, (met.) to edge in; canteled, in Hall, edged, bordered; in Dryden, divided, apportioned. See CANTON.

To cant, among mechanics, is to raise on the edge or corner.

A cantel of kynde witt. here kynde to save.
Piers Plowman, p. 238.

For nature hath not taken his beginning
Of no partie ne cantel of a thing,
But of a thing that parfit is and stable,
Descending so til it be incorrumpable.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2985.

Every body taketh the matter with mirth and sport, who so cantel a thing most shamefull.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 12.

His grace was appareiled in a garment of clothe of siluer of damaske, ribbed with clothe of golde, so thicke as might bee, the garment was large, and plited with verie thick and canteled of very good intaile.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

Lend in no wise, for fear that thou do want
Unlesse it be, as to a carle a chese;
But if thou can be sure to win a cant
Of half at least. Wyat. How to use the Court, &c.

And some other haue thoughte it better to diuide & cant it among good poor husbandme, that shuld til the ground with theyr handes, and take the land for their labour, with diuers other diuises mo, euery mā after his own minde.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 943.

And yet she broughte her fees
A cantel of Essex chese,
Was well a fote thicke
Full of maggottes quicke.—Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

I then well perceiued thabilliment royall of the French kyng, his garment was a chemew, of clothe of siluer, cuipond with clothe of golde, of damaske cantell wise, and garded on the bordours with the Burgon bendes, and ouer that a cloke of broched sattin.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

Whereas the English, without all remorse,
(Looking like men that deeply were distraught)
Smoaking with sweat, besmear'd with dust and blood,
Cut into cantels all that them withstood.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

Thus betaking your Lordship to God, I craue your attentiveness, in perusing a cantell or parcel of the Irish historie that heere issueth.
Stanihurst. Continuation of Chron. of Ireland, Ep. Ded.

Wrath bore the sway, both art and reason faile,
Fury new force, and courage new supplies,
Their armours forged were of mettall frale,
On euery side thereof, huge cantels flies,
The land was strewed all with plate and maile.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. vi. s. 48.

Raging with high disdain, repeats his blows;
Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose,
Huge cantels of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his bor'd arme is found.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

Ask, for what price thy venial tongue was sold;
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old:
For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled and the judge go snack.
Id. Juvenal, Sat. 7.

CA'NTON, v.
CA'NTON, n.
CA'NTONIZE.
CA'NTONMENT.

Ger. Kant; Fr. & Sp. Canton; It. Cantone. (See CANTLE.) An angle or corner. The Swiss, says Skinner, so call their provinces or federate republic, (q.d.) Regionis Anguli. Ihre thinks the etymology of Wachter more probable; viz. that Canton, (as applied to a district) is used, pro pago ex centum villis composito; since we know, he adds, that Helvetia or Swisserland was divided into 100 villages. From Tacitus we also learn, (de Mor. Ger. c. 6,) that, in levying soldiers, 100 (centeni) were sent from every village, and (c. 12,) that 100 companions from the commonalty were assigned to each chief.

Cotgrave says, "Se Cantonner. To canton, or cantonize it; to sever themselves from the rest of their fellows, and from the body of the State; and fortifie, quarter, or erect a new State apart." To canton is now more commonly,—

To quarter soldiers for a time in different parts or divisions; to canton a town or district,—to proportion such parts or divisions; to part, to apportion, to allow.

The poor world seemeth like a ball, that lights
Betwixt the hands of powerful opposites:
Which, while they cantonize in their bold pride,
They but an immaterial point divide.
Sherburne. To the Eternal Wisdom.

The princes of the bloud, the great officers of the realm, the prelates, and a great number of the gentry, plotted with the governours of the provinces and cities to abandon me as a professed heretick, and to cantonize the provinces amongst them.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1593.

They converse but with one sort of men, they read but one sort of books, they will not come in the hearing of but one sort of notions: the truth is, they canton out to themselves a little Goshen in the intellectual world, where light shines, and, as they conclude, day blesses them; but the rest of that vast expansum they give up to night and darkness, and so avoid coming near it.
Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 1.

The king of France, making great preparations for war, obtained a new levy of Switzers from the cantons, and procured £000 to be raised in England to be employed in his service.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 194.

There were no cities, no towns, no places of cantonment for soldiers: so that the Roman forces were obliged to come into the field late, and to leave it early in the season.
Burke. An Abridgment of English History, b. i. c. 3.

CA'NVASS. Lat. Cannabis; Fr. Canevas; It. Canevaccio; Sp. Canevazo; Dut. Kanefas; Sw. Kanfasse. All from the Gr. Κανναβις, flax, (Junius.)

A strong, coarse, kind of linen, or flaxen manufacture.

The mullok on an hepe ysweped was,
And on the flore yeast a canevas,
And all this mullok in a sive ythrowe,
And sifted, and ypricked many a throwe.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yeman, v. 16,460.

His bounty ample as the wind that blew,
Such barks for portage out of ev'ry bay,
In Holland, Zeeland, and in Flanders brings,
As spread the wide Sleeve with their canvass wings.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea
That almost burst the deck and from the ladder tackle
Wash'd off a canvas-climber.
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iv. sc. 3.

Other say, that those tumblers and common players, which shewed sundry games and pastimes to win the favour of the people, were wont to cover that passage over with canvas clothes and vans.—North. Plutarch, p. 17.

Should he draw his hand over a picture, where all is smooth and uniform, he would never be able to imagine how the several prominences and depressions of the human body could be shown on a plain piece of canvas, that has in it no unevenness or irregularity.—Spectator, No. 416.

True poetry the painter's power displays,
True painting emulates the poet's lays;
The rival sisters, fond of equal fame,
Alternate change their office and their name;
Bid silent poetry the canvas warm,
The tuneful page with speaking picture charm.
Mason. Art of Painting.

The mountain pines assume new forms
Spread canvas wings, and fly through storms,
And ride o'er rocks, and dance on foaming waves.
Young. British Sailor's Exultation.

CA'NVASS, v.
CA'NVASS, n.
CA'NVASSER, n.
CA'NVASSING, n.

The Fr. Cannabasser, Cotgrave explains, "to canvass, or curiously to examine, search, or sift out, the depth of a matter." Skinner says perhaps a met. from shaking or beating hemp. See CANVASS, ante.

To discuss, to examine, to explore, to scrutinize, to search or seek after; to solicit.

The merits of our cause, and the demerits of his own, he had diligently canvassed and weighed, and so aggravated the wickedness of his error by his damnable obstinacy.
State Trials. Sir J. Oldcastle, an. 1413.

He that should give his voice unto Christ, because there was no body else to canvass for it, that if Mahomet had paid him first, would have had as much faith for the Alcoran, as he hath now for the Bible is, I confess, a Christian,—he may thank his stars for it.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 510.

Glost. Stand back thou manifest conspirator,
Thou that contriued'st to murther our dead lord,
Thou that giu st whores indulgences to sinne,
I'le canuas thee in thy broad cardinall's hat,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 3.

There be that can pack the cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men.
Bacon. Essays. Of Cunning.

A hidden point, were worth the canvassing.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act ii. sc. 1.

When knowledge, instead of being bound up in books, and kept in libraries and retirements, is thus obtruded upon the publick; when it is canvassed in every assembly, and exposed upon every table; I cannot forbear reflecting upon that passage in the Proverbs, "Wisdom cryeth without."
Spectator, No. 124.

The elections were canvassing for a new parliament, and I ordered my pretensions so as they came to fail.
Sir W. Temple. Memoirs, pt. iii.

I was brought here under the disadvantage of being unknown, even by sight, to any of you. No previous canvass was made for me.—Burke. Speech at Bristol, 3d Nov. 1774.

To enable them to perform the most arduous and most painful duty in the world with spirit, with efficiency, with independency, and with experience, as real publick counsellors, not as canvassers at a perpetual election.
Burke. On shortening the Duration of Parliaments.

Fame, the sovereign deity of proud ambition is not to be worshipped so: who seeks alone for living homage, stands a mean canvasser in her temple's porch, wooing promiscuously from the fickle breath of every wretch that passes, the brittle tribute of his praise.—Sheridan. Pizarro, Act iii. sc. 3.

CAP, v.
CAP, n.
CAPE.
CA'PPER.
CAP-A-PIE.

A. S. Cappe; Dut. and Ger. Kappe; Fr. Cappe; It. Cappa; Sp. Capa. A cap, cape, or cope. (qv.) From the Lat. Caput, in the opinion of Skinner; Caput from the Gr. Κεφαλη, (Vossius,) which Lennep thinks is from the obsolete Κεπειν, whence Σκεπειν, to cover.

Cap is a covering for the head; cape is the head or top of a garment; also a head-land; cap-à-pié, from head to foot.

To cap is to cover; to top, to over-top. Also—To touch the cap, to move or remove it, (more properly to uncap;) to lift up, to raise it.

A vernicle hadde he sewed upon his cappe,
His wallet lay before him in his lappe
Bretful of pardon come from Rome al hote.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 266.

When a mā at the receite of his princes letter putteth of his cappe and kisseth it, doth he this reuerence to the paper or to the prince.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 117.

Like an Egyptian
Capped about,
Whan she goeth oute,
Her selfe for to shewe.—Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

And we met not with them againe, vntill the seuenth day, when we fell in with a cape or headland called Sivetinoz which is the entring into the bay of S. Nicholas.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 311.

Orleance. I will neuer sayd well.
Const. I will cap the prouerbe with, there is flatterie in friendship.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 7

Iago. Despise me
If I do not. Three great ones of the cittie,
(In personall suite to make me his lieutenant,)
Off capt to him. Id. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

He [Agis] began to spurn against these womanish delights and pleasures, in making himself faire to be the better liked, and to be fine and trim in his apparell, and to cast upon him a Spanish cape, taking pleasure in the diet, bathes, and manner of the ancient Lacedæmonians life.
North. Plutarch, p. 663

——A figure like your father,
Arm'd in all points exactly cap-a-pe,
Appears before them, and with solemne march
Goes slow and stately.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

The best caps were formerly made at Monmouth, where the Carpers Chappel doth still remain, being better carved and gilded than any other part of the church.
Fuller. Worthies. Monmouthshire.

It is worth our paine to observe the tenderness of our kings to preserve the trade of cap-making, and what long and strong struggling our state had to keep up the using thereof; so many thousands of people being maintained thereby in the land. Capping anciently set fifteen distinct callings on work.—Id. Ib.

When I was in Savoy, and the neighbouring countries, which have mountains almost perpetually capped with snow, I heard them often talk of a certain white kind of pheasants to be met with in the upper parts of the mountains, which for the excellency of their taste were accounted very great delicacies.—Boyle. Experimental History of Cold, Tit. 19

The same gold will also by common aqua regia, and (I speak knowingly,) by divers other menstruums be reduced into a seeming liquor, insomuch that the corpuscles of gold will, with those of the menstruum, pass through cap paper, and with them also coagulate into a crystalline salt
Id. The Sceptical Chymist, pt. i.

The mountain flower there shakes its milk white head,
Two stones, memorials of departed worth,
Uplift their moss-cap'd heads half-sunk in earth.
Jenyns. Passage in Ossian Versified.

Philander's temper's violent, not fits
The wond'rous waggishness of modern wits,
His cap's awry, all ragged is his gown,
And (wicked rogue!) he wears his stockings down.
Smart. The Horatian Canons of Friendship.

CAPABLE.
CAPABI'LITY.
CAPA'CIOUS.
CAPA'CIOUSNESS.
CAPA'CITATE, v.
CAPA'CITY, n.
CAPA'CITY, v.

Fr. Capable, capacité, It. Capáce, capacità; Sp. Capáz, capacidád; Lat. Capax, from Capere, to take, to hold. In our old writers Capable is used to signify Capacious, i. e.—

Able to take, to hold, to receive, to contain, to comprise, to comprehend. Now more emphatically—

Sufficiently able, able enough; able, (sc.) to perform or execute; to receive into the mind, to comprehend, to understand.

To capacitate or capacify is to enable or cause to be able; to enable to take, hold, receive, contain, comprise or comprehend.

Holye Scrypture, so deuysed and endyted by the hyghe wisedome of God, that it farre exceedeth in many places the capacitie and perceiuing of mã.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 242.

In the foure first chapters he reherseth the benefits of God done vnto them, to prouoke them to loue, & his mighty dedes done aboue all natural capacitie of faith, that they might beleue God, and trust in him, and in his strength.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 21.

Having now finished the treatise of principles, elements, and such other matters, linked and concurring with them; I will turne my pen unto the discourse as touching their effects, and works composed of them, beginning first at that which is most spacious and capable of all things.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 670.

The convex or outbowed side of a vessel will hold nothing; it must be the hollow and depressed part, that is capable of any liquor.—Bp. Hall. Ser. 6. A Holy Panegyric.

Capable we are of God both by vnderstanding and will; by vnderstanding, as he is that soueraigne truth, which comprehendeth the rich treasures of all wisdome: by will, as he is the sea of goodnesse, whereof whoso tasteth shall thirst no more.—Hooker. Eccl. Politie, b. i. § 11.

Ham. On him, on him: look you how pale he glares,
His forme and cause conioyn'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capeable.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

Achil. Come, thou shalt beare a letter to him straight.
Ther. Let me carry another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.—Id. Troil. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 3.

Euen so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall neu'r looke backe, neu'r ebbe to humble loue,
Til that a capeable, and wide reuenge
Swallow them vp. Id. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

His violence thou fearst not, being such
As wee, not capable of death or pain,
Can either not receave, or can repell.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Sure, he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 4.

Afterward discoursing of the arke and the capability thereof out of Buteo, (though indeed he name him not,) he makes Moses his cubit to be the same with ours.
Hakewill. Apologie, p. 223.

Therefore taking the kinds precisely of all creatures as they were by God created, or out of the earth by his ordinance produced, the ark after the measure of the common cubit, was sufficiently capacious to contain of all, according to the number of God appointed.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 6.

If heaven to men such mighty thoughts would give,
What breast but thine capacious to receive
The vast infusion? or what soul but thine
Durst have believ'd that thought to be divine.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iv.

Is it for that such outward ornament
Was lavish't on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish't, judgment scant,
Capacity not rais'd to apprehend
Or value what is best
In choice, but oftest to affect the wrong?
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

God sets no other price upon heaven, glory, and immortality, nay, and upon himself too, but our love; there being nothing truly great and glorious, which a creature is capable of enjoying, but God is ready to give it a man in exchange for his heart.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

We naturally are void of those good dispositions in understanding, will, and affection, which are needful to render us acceptable to God, fit to serve and please him, capable of any favour from him, of any true happiness in ourselves.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 34. On the Creed.

No figure is so capacious as this, [a sphere,] and consequently whose parts are so well compacted and united, and lie so near one to another for mutual strength.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

A concave measure of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel.
Holder. Discourse concerning Time.

In the deanery succeeded Richard Layton, or Leighton, LL. D on the 26th July the same year, who on the 31st June going before, was admitted to the said prebendship of Cumbrell, purposely to capacitate him for a deanery.
Wood. Fasti Oxon.

Having offered up himselfe as a sacrifice for our sins, and so undergone the punishment, which was due unto us for them, he is thereby fully capacitated and enabled to be our advocate with the father, to plead our cause, and to make effectual intercession with him, for those sins which we have committed, but for which he hath suffered.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 69.

Is it not better to praise God in the land of the living, than to be in a state, wherein we can have no knowledge of God at all, nor be in any capacity of praising him?
Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Wisdom begets a sound, healthful, and harmonious complexion of the soul; thereby capacifying us to enjoy pleasantly and innocently all those good things, the divine Goodness hath provided for, and consigned to us.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

When a young Arabian has composed a good poem, all the neighbours pay their compliments to his family, and congratulate them upon having a relation capable of recording their actions, and of recommending their virtues to posterity.—Jones. On Eastern Poetry, Ess. 1.

[He,] leaving meaner joys to kings,
Soar'd high on contemplation's wings;
Rang'd the fair fields of nature o'er,
Where never mortal trod before:
Bacon! whose vast capacious plan
Bespoke him angel, more than man.
Cotton. Pleasure, Vision 2.

CAPA'RISON, v. } Fr. Caparaçon; from CAPA'RISON, s. } Cappa. (See CAP.) Applied to—

The covering of a horse, or of a man; the trappings, decorations, with which he is covered.

Caparassoner,—to furnish with, provide with, dress, or attire in, or put on—a caparison, (Cotgrave.)

Also they brought many horses and mules vnto him furnished with trappers and caparisons, some being made of leather and some of iron.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 69.

Good, my complection, dost thou think though I am caparison'd like a man, I haue a doublet and hose in my disposition?—Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 2.

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering hollo, or his stand I say?
What cares he now for curb, or pricking spur,
For rich caparisons, or trappings gay.
Id. Venus & Adonis.

After the same manner, they have taken up of late another custome, to aliver the trappings especially and caparisons of their horses of service, yea and the harnesse of coach-horses and draught-jades.—Holland. Plinie, p. 517.

What boots it, that my fortune decks me thus
With unsubstantial plumes, when my heart groanes
Beneath the gay caparison, and love
With unrequited passion wounds my soul!
Smollet. The Regicide, Act iii. sc. 4.

CA'PER, v. } Fr. Capriole; It. Capriola;
CA'PER, s. } Sp. Cabriola, Capri saltus; the CA'PERER. } goat's leap;—a leap in which
CA'PREOL, v. } the feet are moved or shaken
CA'PRIOLE, s. } in the air,—so called from its imitating or resembling the leap of a goat, (Skinner.)

To leap, jump, skip, or dance; to move nimbly, wantonly, frolicksomely, capriciously. (See CAPRICE. Also the quotation below from Fuller.)

Hillocks, why capreold ye, as wanton by their dammes
We capreoli see the lusty lambs.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 114.

He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 1.

But first she found how that the damsell faire,
The messenger that sup'd with her last night,
Was gone before, with purpose to repaire
To those three knights that lately felt her might,
When she did cause them caper in the aire.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xxxiii. s. 60.

To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?
And. Faith I can cut a caper.
To. And I can cut the mutton too't.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 3.

Goats, in Lat. Capri, a carpendo from cropping (therefore forbidden to be kept in some places, because destructive to young woods) are when young most nimble and frisking, (whence our English word to caper) but afterwards put on great gravity.—Fuller. Worthies. Wales General.

Leo. Gentle sir.
Alph. I am not gentle sir, nor gentle will be,
Till I have my poor child restor'd,
Your caper-cutting boy has run away with?
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act ii. sc. 1.

Oft doth she make her body upward fine;
With lofty turns and caprioles in the air,
Which with the lusty tunes accordeth fair.
Davies. On Dancing

Epiphanius Ferdinandus himself not only tells us of a man of 94 years of age, and so weak, that he could not go, unless supported by his staff, who did, upon the hearing of music after he was bitten (by the Tarantula) immediately fall a dancing and capering like a kid.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 182.

A man may appear learned, without talking sentences; as in his ordinary gesture he discovers he can dance, tho' he does not cut capers.—Spectator, No. 4.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford:
No less the nimble caperer on the cord.
But these are stall insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea.
Dryden. (J. Juve.) Juvenal, Sat. 14.

The capriole is the most violent of the high airs. To make it perfect the horse should raise his fore-parts and his hinder to an equal height—and when he strikes out behind, his croupe should be on a level with his withers.
Berenger. On Horsemanship, vol. i. c. 20.

Proud of thy spoils, O Italy and France!
The soft enervate strain, and cap'ring dance:
From Sequan's streams, and winding banks of Po,
He comes, ye Gods! an all accomplish'd beau.
P. Whitehead. Honour. A Satire

Careless he seems, yet vigilantly sly,
Woos the stray glance of ladies passing by,
While his off heel insidiously aside,
Provokes the coper which he seems to chide.
Sheridan. Prol. to Pizarro.

CA'PILLARY, adj. } Lat. Capillus, quasi
CA'PILLARY, s. } capitis pilus, (Vossius, CAPI'LLAMENT. } after Isidorus.)

Hairy, resembling hair; having the fineness, smallness, delicacy of hair;—fine, small, delicate.

The vanes, the lightest part of the feathers, how curiously are they wrought with capillary filaments, neatly interwoven together, whereby they are not only light, but also sufficiently close and strong, to keep the body warm, and guard it against the injuries of weather.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12.

It should be considered that mere water only distends the vessels and thereby weakens their tone; and that mercury by its great momentum may justly be suspected of hurting the fine capillaries.—Berkley. Siris, s. 36.

Animal motion and sensation are also accounted for by the vibrating motions of this ætherial medium, propagated through the solid capillaments of the nerves.—Id. Ib. s. 224.

CA'PITAL, s. } Lat. Capitalis, from Caput,
CA'PITAL, adj. } the head. (See CAPE.) Dut.
CA'PITALIST. } Kapitael; Fr. Cavedal; the CA'PITALLY. } capital or principal sum or
CAPITA'TION. } stock. Fr. Chapiteau; It. Capitello; the capital, head or top of a pillar.

Of or belonging or pertaining to, the head; the chief, the principal, the uppermost;—in size or situation, in rank, in degree, in importance, in consequence. As a capital city, a capital crime.

For vndoubtedly, both repletion and superfluous slepe be capitall enemies to studye as they be semblably to health of body and soule.—Sir T. Elyot Governour, b. i. c. 11.

Wherefore let them that bee cappitall enemies vnto his grace, both in heart and in deede, suspect that of his grace and moue him vnto it, for doubtless I will neuer doe it.
Barnes. Workes, p. 294.

Meanwhile the winged heralds by command
Of sovran power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandæmonium, the high capital
Of Satan and his peers. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Id. Ib. b. xii.

Thus we have finished the head of our column, which being taken in general for all these members together, is commonly distinguished by the name of capital.
Evelyn. On Architecture.

Whether David were punished only for pride of heart in numbering the people, as most do hold, or whether as Josephus and many maintain he suffered also for not performing the commandment of God concerning capitation; that when the people were numbered, for every head they should pay unto God a shekel, we shall not here contend.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 11.

Who, that hears these words, would not wish to have been present at this astonishing scene; which represents the apostle of the Gentiles giving an account of his faith to Felix the Roman governor, in so moving and convincing a manner, with such a force and eloquence and strength of argument, that even he, before whom he stands capitally accused, is struck, awed, confounded by his discourse, and the judge himself quakes at the voice of the prisoner.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

I take the expenditure of the capitalist, not the value of the capital, as my standard, because it is the standard upon which amongst us, property as an object of taxation, is rated.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

Capitation taxes, if it is attempted to proportion them to the fortune or revenue of each contributor, become altogether arbitrary. If they are proportioned not to the supposed fortune, but to the rank of each contributor, become altogether unequal.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c 2.

CAPI'TULATE, v. CAPI'TULAR, n. CAPI'TULARLY. CAPI'TULARY. CAPITULA'TION. CA'PITIL, n. } Lat. Caput, the head. (See CAP.) Fr. Capituler; It. Capitolare; Sp. Capitular.

To settle or arrange the heads, (sc.) of an agreement; to propose, to enter into articles of agreement; to agree, to accede, to concede, to terms or conditions, (of submission, surrender.)

Steevens interprets capitulate in Henry IV.—to make head; the common usage seems to express the speaker's intention.

Capitular, (person or thing,) of or belonging to the head, (sc.) of an ecclesiastical body. See CHAPTER.

The Lat. Capitulum; Gr. Κεφαλαιον, Wiclif renders capitle; Tyndall, pyth; Geneva and Modern Version, sum.

But a capitle on the thingis that ben seid.
Wiclif. Hebrewis, c. 8.

Of the thynges whiche we haue spoken, this is the pyth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Now of the things which we have spoken, (this is) the summe.—Geneva Bible. Ib.

Rather than to fall into the handes of the people, they determyned to lett the enemyes into Pyreus, but so that they shulde not haue nother shypps nor the fortresses in their handes, and to capitulate and conferre wyth them touchynge the estate of the cytie, the beste that they could, so that their parsones might be saued.—Nicolls. Thucydides, p. 219.

Sayinge, that in this confusion thingis shal procede, unles your gr. after your accustomed dexteritie, enterprise the direction thereof with the Fr k. and his counsail appoynteing by capitulation what the Pope's ho. shal do, and what the same shal trust unto therfore.
Strype. Records, No. 25. Gardner to Wolsey.

With speclal capitulation, that neither the Scots nor the French shall re-fortify, nor cause to be re fortified, in neither of those two places, with the like covenant for our part, if the French deputies do require it.
Burnet. Records, No. 50. b. i. pt. ii.

Many ways of composition between Duke William and King Harold were propounded, yet Harold would harken to none, as nothing doubting of success, and perhaps thinking it a disgrace to capitulate for that which was now his own.
Baker. Wm. I. an. 1066.

——— Percy, Northumberland,
The Archbishops Grace of Yorke, Douglas, Mortimer,
Capitulate against vs and are vp.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

——— Do not bid me
Dismisse my soldiers, or capitulate
Againe, with Rome's mechanicks
Id. Coriolanus, Act v. sc 3.

And verely in those capitulations of peace, which after the expulsion of the kings, Porsena, King of the Tuscans tendered unto the people of Rome, I find this express article and imposition, that they should not use yron, but onlye about tillage of the ground.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 14.

But the capitular of Charles the Great joyne dieing and drunkenness together, as being usual companions, and forbids them both alike to bishops, priests, and deacons.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Cromewell advanced to Edinburgh where he was received without any opposition: and the castle that made a long resistance did capitulate.—Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

The keeper alledged you could do nothing but when all three are capitularly met, as if you could never open but like a parish-chest, with the three keys together.
Swift. To St. John, May 11, 1711.

The dean of Strasburg, the prebendaries, the capitulars, and domiciliars, (capitularly assembled in the morning to consider the case of buttered buns) all wished they had followed the nuns of Saint Ursula's example.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iv.

But in the register of the capitulary acts of York cathedral, it is ordered as an indispensable qualification, that the chorister, who is annually to be elected the boy-bishop should be competenter corpore formosus.
Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iii. s. 35.

No joys to him pacific sceptres yield,
War sounds the trump, he rushes to the field.
Behold surrounding kings their pow'rs combine,
And one capitulate, and one resign.
Johnson. Vanity of Human Wishes.

CA'PON, n. CA'PONISE, v. } Fr. Chapon; Lat. Capo; Sw. Kapun; Dut. Kap-hoen; Ger. Kapp-han; A.S. Capun, gallus castratus. From the Dut. and Ger. Kappen; to chop or cut,—Wachter; who remarks that Martial (he believes) is the first author, who uses the word capo, and that Pliny apparently avoids it as barbarous. Capus, however, is mentioned by Varro, de re Rustica. See Gessner and Vossius.

And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe
That as he sayd, his capons had ystawe.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,791.

He sawe hem, but he felt hem nought:
So that vpon his owne thought
He cheese the capon, and forsoke
That other, whiche his felawe toke.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Edward Plantagenet erle of Warwike, of whome ye haue heard before, beynge kept in the Towre almost frō his tender age, out of all cōpany of mē and sight of beastes, i so much that he coulde not decerne a goose from a capon.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 15.

Yet must he haunt his greedy landlords hall
With often presents at each festivall.
With crammed capons every new yeares morne.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat 1.

And no one empty-handed to salute
Thy lord and lady, though they have no suite
Some bring a capon, some a rurall cake.
B. Jonson. To Penshurst.

I tried once an experiment, which might indeed have possibly made some alteration in the tone of a bird, from what it might have been when the animal was at its full growth, by procuring an operator who caponised a young black-bird of about six weeks old.
Barrington. On the Singing of Birds.

CAPOUCH, n. CAPU'CHED. adj. } Fr. Capuchon, (from caput)—

A monk's cowle or hood; also the hood of a clouk.

He (the youth, Dorothea) wore a little brown capouch, girt very near to his body with a white towel.
Shelton. Don Quixote, b. iv. c. 1.

Between the cicada and that we call a grasshopper, the differences are very many: for first, they are differently cuculiated or capouched upon the head and back, and in the cicada the eyes are more prominent.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 3.

Capouch'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a why-not.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

CAPRI'CE, n. CAPRI'CHIO. CAPRI'CIOUS, adj. CAPRI'CIOUSLY. CAPRI'CIOUSNESS. } Fr. Caprice; It. Capriccio; Sp. Capricho; from the Lat. Caper, a goat; (q.d.) the wantonness, the whimsicalness of a goat. Skinner had seen the word only in the English Dictionary. It is in Sherwood, though capriciousness is not. He explains caprichio, (so he writes it,) a fantastical humour. See CAPER.

Fr. Caprice is thus explained by Cotgrave; "A humour, giddy thought, fantastical conceit, a sudden will, desire, or purpose to do a thing for which one hath no (apparent) reason."

But we are not to be guided in the sence we have of that book, either by the misreports of some antients, or the capriccio's of one or two neotericks.
Grew. Cosmologia, b. iv. c. 1.

It will, no doubt, be in a great measure excus'd by the consideration of what manner of times we have had to set forth: an interval of such wonders, such strange and capricious revolutions as are scarce to be paralell'd by any age or kingdom.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1661.

Others make all their knights, in fits
Of jealousy, to lose their wits;
Till, drawing blood o'th dames, like witches,
They're forthwith cur'd of their capriches.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

And [I, Williams, the Lord Keeper] gaue (in three days conference) such reasons to the 2 embassadors, that (although it is no easie matter to satisfie the caprichiousness of the latter of them,) yet they were both content it should rest.
Cabbala. To the Duke, Aug. 30, 1623.

Upon his right hand was industry, with a lamp burning before her; and, on his left, caprice, with a monkey, sitting on her shoulder.—Spectator, No. 63.

These, long time ripening, oft as Titan's ray
Bright-burning blazes on the summer's day,
At length, emerging from the soil, repair,
And sport capricious, in the fields of air.
Pawkes. Will with a Wisp.

Should fortune capriciously cease to be coy,
And in torrents of plenty descend,
I doubtless, like others, should clasp her with joy,
And my wants and my wishes extend.
Whitehead. To the Rev. Mr. Wright, 1751.

Ausonius, who first mentions it, (the tench,) treats it with such disrespect, as evinces the great capriciousness of taste; for that fish, which at present is held in such good repute, was in his days the repast only of the Canaille.
Pennant. British Zoology, Class 4.

CA'PRICORN, n. Lat. Capricornus; capri cornu, the Goat's horn.

So the sun in his elevation when hee enters the tropick of cancer is in heate more recollected and vigorous; but when he falls off from the meridian, as in Capricorne, hee is more faint, yet more dispersed in his influence.
Bacon. On Learning, (by Wats.) b. iii. c. 4.

CAPRIFICA'TION. CAPRI'FICAL. } Lat. Caprificus, (perhaps caper and ficus,) the wild fig, which, Pliny says, never bringeth any fruit to maturity, but breedeth certain flies or gnats, which, having nothing to feed upon in the wild fig, fly unto the other kind, upon which they greedily nibble, and thereby let in the breath of the warm sun, and the air besides, which helps to ripen the fruit. Hence the device of bringing swarms of these gnats from the wild to the other sort of fig tree. See the quotations from Pliny.

The nature of dust is to drie and soke up the superfluous moisture of the milke within figges. And therefore when they are first dried, whether it be by the meanes of dust, or of the said flies feeding, which is called caprification, they fall not from the tree so easily.—Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 19.

The Athenians goe by this rule, and do observe duly the caprificall day, which is kept holye unto Vulcan; for then they ever begin to drive their hives for this kind of honey.—Id. Ib. b. xi. c. 16.

CA'PSTAN. Sp. Cabestrante; Fr. Cabestante. Applied to—

The cylindrical machine around which a rope or cable is wound: in raising anchors or other heavy bodies.

No more behold thee turn my watch's key,
As seamen at a capstan anchors weigh.
Gay. Lament. of Glumdalclitch.

CA'PSULE. CA'PSULAR, adj. CA'PSULARY, adj. CA'PSULATE, adj. CA'PSULATED, adj. } Lat. Capsula, diminutive of Capsa, a capiendo, (Vossius,) i. e. from holding or containing. In Suidas, Καψα; κιστη και θηκη, i. e. cista et area, which Schneidius thinks may have its name, a cavitate, from the hollowness in which any thing may be held.

A little case (in plants—which contain the seed.)

Capsulate pods are the little short seed-vessels of plants. Capsulated,—inclosed in any thing, as a walnut is in its green husk. (Miller, Gardener's Dictionary.)

The little cases or capsules which contain the seed in this species [the fern] of plants are less than half the size of a very small grane of dust; nay in certain kinds they do not exceed the third or fourth part of such a grain, and resemble little bladders bound about with spiral twisting rings or lilets.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. x. Note I.

In man, and most other animals, the heart hath the guard of bones; but in the lamprey, which hath no bones, (no not so much as a back bone) the heart is very strangely secured, and lies immured, or capsulated in a cartilage, or gristly substance, which includes the heart, and its auricle, as the skull doth the brain in other animals.—Id. Ib. c. 7. Note 64.

When it [the wind pipe] ariseth from the lungs, it ascendeth out directly into the throat, but descending first into a capsulary reception of the breast bone.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

This is also a way to separate seeds, whereof such as are corrupted and steril, swim: and this agreeth not onely unto the seed of plants lockt up and capsulated in their husks but also, &c.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

CA'PTAIN, n. CA'PTAIN, adj. CA'PTAINLESS, adj. CA'PTAINRY. CA'PTAINSHIP. } Fr. Capitaine; It. Capitano; Sp. Capitan Dut. Kapiten; Mid. Lat. Capitaneus. From the Lat. Caput, i. e. (says Skinner,) belli seu militiæ caput. And Kilian, a capite; for as the head governs the other members, so—

The captain governs soldiers, citizens, and others.

Ye looke for your Messias to be some captain whiche shall vsurpe vnto himselfe the kingdom of the world, and entre the possessiō therof with charyottes, horses, elephauntes, wild asses, and armed hostes of men, with gunnes, crosse bowes, ingiens, fyer, and swordes, and bloud.
Udal. Luke, c. 24.

Upon the Lord Conier's resignation, the captainship of the castle of Carlisle was appointed to Sir —— Gray, and the wardenship of the west Marshes to Sir Richard Musgrave.—Burnett. Records. K. Edward's Journal, pt. ii.

A wayuer or fuller, shuld be an vnmete capitaine of an armey, or in any office of a gouernour.
Sir T. Elyot. Gouernour, b. i. c. 1.

Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the Carcanet.—Shakespeare, Son. 52.

—— But captainless
Confusedly they deale,
And giue a wretched instant of
An headles common-weale.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 19.

Sir Edmund Buller, in all things which tended to the queene's majestie's profit of commonwealth, was a principal against it, fearing that their captainries should be taken away & liuery abolished.
Holinshed. Chron. of Ireland, an. 1568.

This will prove more beneficial to you, if you be thrifty, than your captainship, and more natural.
Beaum. & Fletch. A King & No King, Act v.

Every boy is bound to have as good a memory as the captain of the form.—Spectator, No. 307.

He [the Earl of Marlborough] was declared captain-general, and the prince had the title of generalissimo of all the queen's forces by sea and land.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1702.

CA'PTIOUS. CA'PTIOUSLY. CA'PTIOUSNESS. CA'PTION. } Lat. Captiosus; Fr. Captieux, from the Lat. Capio, capere, to take. The Scotch use Catchy.

Ready, prompt, quick, eager, to take offence, to take objection, to cavil, to quibble: and thus (according to the usage of the noun, Caption, by Chillingworth)—

To outwit, to deceive.

Caption,—a taking.

Wherefore they went vnto Jesus, and moued vnto him this captious question: why (quoth they) do John's disciples and the Pharisees ofttunes fast, and thy disciples not fast at alle.—Udal. Mark, c. 2.

They enquired divers questions of mee, whether my Lord Cardinall were myne ordinarye iudge or not, wyth other lyke captious interrogations!—Barnes. Workes, p. 223.

Then turning to the Archbishop and the Prelates sayde: that he was not well content with that clause of theirs, salvo ordine suo, which he sayde was captious and deceytfull, hauing some maner of venym lurcking vnder it.
Grafton. Hen. II. an. 9.

I know I loue in vaine, striue against hope:
Yet in this captious and intenible sieue,
I still pour in the waters of my loue
And lacke not to loose still.
Shakespeare. All's well that Ends well, Act i. sc. 3.

How captiously he derogates
From me and mine estate!
And arrogates vnto himselfe
To bring me so in hate.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

I beseech you, sir, to consider seriously, with what strange captions you have gone about to delude your king and your country, and if you be convinced they are so, give glory to God, and let the world know it by your deserting that religion, which stands upon such deceitful foundations.
Chillingworth, pt. i. c. 2.

What design can the wit of man pitch upon in a captious and suspitious age that will not meet with objections from those that have a mind to cavil.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

Captiousness is another fault opposite to civility, not only because it often produces misbecoming and provoking expressions and carriage, but because it is a tacit accusation and reproach of some incivility, taken notice of in those whom we are angry with.—Locke. Of Education, s. 143—4.

Yet he, prime pattern of the captious art,
(But Tibbalding poor Tibbald, tops his part;
Holds high the scourge o'er each fam'd author's head,
Now are their graves a refuge for the dead.
Mallet. Verbal Criticism.

CA'PTIVE, n. CA'PTIVE, v. CAPTI'VITY. CA'PTIVANCE. CA'PTIVATE, v. CA'PTIVATE, adj. CAPTIVA'TION. CAPTA'TION. CA'PTION. CA'PTOR. CA'PTURE, n. CA'PTURE, v. } Lat. Captivus, from Capere, captum, to take.

To captive, appears to have been used, formerly, as to captivate (met.) is now; i. e.—

To take, (sc.) as a prisoner; (met.) to reduce to bondage, to subject, to subdue, to overpower, to enthral, to enslave; and as now used with a subaudition, first, of gentle, attractive, persuasive means or qualities; and secondly, sometimes of delusive or deceitful means or appearances.

Captation, in Skelton, is used with the first subaudition. "With propre captations of benevolence," (Crowne of Laurell.) And see CAITIFF.

The verb, to capture, now of so common use in public despatches, and in our Courts of law, appears to be quite of modern origin.

To take, (sc.) as a prize, as a prisoner.

Rather die I would, and determine
As thinketh me now, stocked in prison
In wretchednesse, in filth, and in vermine
Captife to cruell king Agamemnon.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

If thei maye not vpon the peryll of theyr soules, wittingly suffer among the people whom they haue in gouernaunce ani one to take awai another's horse, how maye thei without eternal damnation suffer other peple and specially infidels, to come in, spoyle, and robbe, and captiue them al.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 279.

And if our English papists doe but looke into Portugall, against which they haue no pretence of religion, how the nobilitie are put to death, imprisoned, their rich men made a prave, and all sorts of people captiued: they shall finde that the obedience euen of the Turk is easy and a libertie, in respect of the slauerie and tyrannie of Spaine.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 174.

Loue, that liueth and raigneth in my thought,
That built his seat within my captiue brest,
Clad in the armes wherin with me he fought,
Oft in my face he doth his banner rest.
Surrey. The Complaint of a Louer Rebuked.

And departing out of the foresaid hauen, they caried two of the Prussian ship-masters with thē, as their captiues vnto an hauen of England called Sandwich.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 149.

Which Infidels also have taken hir, [our said shipp,] and al the said goodes and merchaundises, with the residue of the people being in her, whom they have and detaigne in prison and captivity.
Strype. Records, No. 3. Hen. VIII. to Sir. Ed. Ponynge.

Her slippers raulshed hys eyes, her bewty captyuated his mynde, with the sworde smote she of his neck.
Bible, 1551. Judith, c. 16.

Let vs Christian men graunt nothing contrary to the Scripture, but euer captiuate our reason vnto that, for it is the infallible reasō and wisdome of God, and passeth our reason farre.—Frith. Workes, p. 18.

I beheld a face, a face more bright
Then glistering Phœbus, when the fields were fir'd:
Long time amaz'd rare beautie I admir'd,
The beames reflecting on my captiued sight.
Stirling. Aurora, s. 2.

Witnesse our too much memorable shame,
When Cressy battell fatally was strucke,
And all our princes captiu'd by the hand
Of that black name, Edward, black Prince of Wales.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 4.

Come, sad captiues, leave your moans;
And your groans
Under Sion's ruins bury;
Tune your harps, and sing us layes
In the praise
Of your God and let's be merry. Donne, Psalm 137.

My self, my sepulcher, a moving grave,
Buried, yet not exempt
By priuiledge of death and burial
From worst of other evills, pains and wrongs,
But made hereby obnoxious more
To all the miseries of life,
Life in captivity
Among inhuman foes.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

With that he gan at large to her dilate
The whole discourse of his captiuance sad,
In sort as ye haue heard the same of late.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. s. 17.

But after many fieldes, vnto
The foes continuall wracke,
The French king captiuated to
The English monarke, backe
His victor sayles, the prince of Wales,
Edward surnamed blacke.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 28.

How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian trull
Vpon their woes, whom fortune captiuates?
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

And I will shayne these legges and armes of thine,
That hast by tyrannie these many yeeres
Wasted our countrey, slaine our citizens,
And sent our sonnes and husbands captiuate.
Id. Ib. 1 Part, Act ii. sc. 3.

Suf. Sweet Madam, giue me hearing in a cause.
Mar. Tush, women haue been captiuate ere now.
Id. Ib. Act v. sc. 3.

No small part of our servitude lyes in the captivation of our understanding: such as, that we cannot see ourselves captive.—Bp. Hall. Remains.

Aloud the fairest of the sex complain
Of captives lost, and loves invok'd in vain;
At her appearance all their glory ends,
And not a star, but sets when she ascends.
Lansdowne. Beauty & Law.

The lengthen'd night gave length of misery
Both to the captive lover and the free;
For Palamon in endless prison mourns,
And Arcite forfeits life if he returns:
The banish'd never hopes his love to see;
Nor hopes the captive lord his liberty.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Here are princesses more illustrious for the blood, that lightens in their cheeks, than for that, which runs in their veins, and who like victorious monarchs, can conquer at a distance, and captivate by proxy.
Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 6. Ref. 10.

I no sooner met it, [the widow's eye,] but I bowed like a great surprised booby, and knowing her cause to be the first which came on, I cry'd like a captivated calf as I was.—Make way for the defendant's witnesses.—Spectator, No. 113.

This was very happy for him, for in a very few years, being concerned in several captures, he brought home with him an estate of about twelve thousand pounds.
Guardian, No. 159.

—— If feelings, void of art,
Rouse the quick passions, and inflame the heart;
If music, sweetly breathing from the tongue,
Captives the ear, BARDS must not pass unsung.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

Yet, on a time, when vig'rous thoughts demand,
Indulge a warmth, and prompt the daring hand:
On purpose deviate from the laws of art,
And boldly dare to captivate the heart.
Harte. An Essay on Painting.

Which is agreeable to the law of nations, as understood in the time of Grotius, even with regard to captures made at sea; which were held to be the property of the captors after the possession of twenty-four hours; though the modern authorities require, that before the property can be changed, the goods must have been brought into port, and have continued a night intra præsidia, in a place of safe custody, so that all hope of recovering them was lost.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 401.

CA'PUCHIN. Capouch, (qv.)

CAR, n. Ger. Karr; Sw. Karra; Fr. Char. "Car, cart, chariot, and the Lat. Carrus, are the participle of the A. S. Cyran, acyran, to turn, to turn about, to turn backwards and forwards. This word was first introduced into the Roman language by Cæsar, who learned it in his wars with the Germans. Vossius mistakingly supposes it derived from Currus." (See Tooke.)

A vehicle that turns, or that moves by turning (sc.) on wheels.

O thou strong builder of the firmament,
Who placed'st Phœbus in his fiery car,
And for the planets wisely didst invent
Their sundry mansions, that they should not jar.
Drayton. Pastorals, Eclogue 1.

He came ever in the rear-ward of the fashion, and sung those tunes to the over-scutched huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware they were his fancies, or his good-nights.—Shakespeare.—2 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

O bear me to the paths of fair Pall-mall!
Safe are thy pavements, grateful is thy smell!
At distance rolls along the gilded coach,
Nor sturdy carmen on thy walks encroach.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car,
Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
Two coursers of ethereal race
With necks in thunder cloth'd, and long resounding pace.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy, 3.

CA'RABINE, or CA'RBINE. } Fr. Carabin; It. Carabina; Sp. Carabina; Ger. Karbiner. Propriè est interfector, a slayer, and is derived from the A. S. Cearfan, interficere, to slay, (Wachter.) In A. S. Cearfan, ceorfan, aceorfan, to carve, to cut, to cut to pieces, to slay, to kill.

A destructive kind of gun.

——— What though the German drum
Bellow for freedom and revenge? the noise
Concerns not us, nor should divert our joys;
Nor ought the thunder of their carabins
Drown the sweet airs of our tun'd violins.
Carew. On the Death of the King of Sweden.

I, hearing him give good words, thought he proposed to render himself to me; and therefore stopped my horse, that I might hear him more distinctly: but he, instead of that, made ready his carabine to fire at me.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 132.

CA'RACK, n. Fr. Carraque; It. Caracca; Sp. Caráca. Vossius, a gravitate capitis, a καρα et βαρυς. Skinner, perhaps, from the Lat. Carrus; (q. d.) carrus marinus. Delphino calls it—

A great heavy sort of ship, the Portuguese formerly sailed in to the East Indies: it was also used by the Genoeses.

Carack and Caravel had probably one origin; and that origin the cargo with which they were loaded.

And now hath Sathanas, sayth he, a tayl
Broder than a carrike is the sayl.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Prol. v. 7270.

And had prepared in certayne portes, such a nombre of vessels, shyppes, carreckes, and gayies, sufficient to passe ouer lx.m. men of armes, with all their purueaunces.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 27.

The other, [ship] wherein C. Cæsar had transported the second obeliske into the river, after it had been kept safe for certain yeares together to be seene, (for that it was the most admirable carrick that ever had been knowne to flote upon the sea,) Claudius Cæsar late Emperour of Rome, caused it to be brought to Ostia, where, for the safetie and securitie of the haven, he sunk it, and thereupon as a sure foundation, hee raised certaine piles or bastions, like turrets or skonces, with the sand of Puteoli.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 9.

The fire refuses not, as well to warm the beggar as the prince; the water bears as well the carrick as the cork.
Feltham, Resolve 75.

CARAVA'N, n. } A Persian and Turkish
CARAVA'NSARY. } word. The Turks pronounce it Kervan, and it signifies a number of persons assembled to journey together. Caravansera,—from Kervan, and serai, a house; a house at which caravans sojourn, (Menage.)

Sir. What ill chance hath brought the to this place,
So far from path or road of men, who pass
In troop or caravan, for single none
Durst ever, who return'd, and dropt not here
His carcass, pin'd with hunger and with drought?
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Ah sir, said the Dervise, a house, that changes its inhabitants so often, and receives such perpetual succession of guests, is not a palace but a caravansary.
Spectator, No. 289.

———The wealthy marts
Of Ormus and Gombroon, whose streets are oft
With caravans and tawny merchants throng'd,
From neighbouring provinces and realmes afar.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. iv.

Obadiah, the son Abensina, left the caravansara early in the morning, and pursued his journey through the plains of Indostan.—Rambler, No. 65.

CA'RAVEL, or } Fr. Caravelle; It. Cara-
CA'RVEL. } vella; Sp. Carabela. Menage says from Carabus, (a crab.) Caraba, carava, caravella, caravel. See CARACK.

Hackluyt appears to have deemed it, comparatively, a large vessel. Delphino calls it—

A light, round, old-fashioned ship, with a square poop, rigged like a galley, formerly used in Spain and Portugal.

The next day being the 10th of May in the morning, there were come to aide the said Portugals, foure great armadas or caruasls more which made seuen, of which 4, three of them were at the least 100 tunnes a piece, and another not so bigge, but all well appointed and full of men.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 63.

Isab. Who I? I thank you, I am as haste ordain'd me, a thing slubber'd, my sister is a goodly portly lady, a woman of a presence, she spreads sattens, as the king's ships do canvas every where, she may spare me her musen, and her bonnets, strike her main petticoat, and yet out sail me. I am a carvel to her.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act i. sc. 1.

CARBONA'DO, v. } Fr. Carbonade; It.
CARBONA'DO, n. } Carbonata; from the Lat. Carbo, carbonis, a coal.

Fr. Carbonade,—"a rasher on the coals; also a slash over the face, which fetcheth the flesh with it," (Cotgrave.)

To carbonado, is, to chop, cut, slice, or slash; as meat chopt or cut for cooking upon the coals.

Draw you rogue, or I'le so carbonado your flanks, draw you rascall, come your waies.—Shakes. Lear, Act ii. sc. 2.

An hundred thousand Turks, it is no vaunt,
Assail'd him; every one a termagaunt:
But what did he, then! with his keen-edged spear,
He cut and carbonaded them: here and there
Lay legs and arms.—Massinger. The Picture, Act ii. sc. 1.

Has he bespoke? what, will he have a brace,
Or but one partridge, or a short legg'd hen,
Daintyly carbonado'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act i. sc. 1.

He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth o'nt before Corioles, he scotcht him, and notcht him like a carbonado.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 4.

Clab. Hunger shall force thee to cut off the brawns
From thy arms and thighs; then broil them on the coals
For carbonadoes.—Massinger. The Bondman, Act iii. sc. 3.

They make a general sally, and attack all that are so unfortunate as to walk the streets through which they patroll. Some are knocked down, others stabbed, others cut and carbonadoed.—Spectator, No. 324.

CA'RBUNCLE, n. } Fr. Carbuncle; It. Car-
CA'RBUNCLED, adj. } boncolo; Sp. Carboncol; Dut. Karbunckel; Lat. Carbunculus, diminutive of Carbo, carbonis, a coal; quod sit ignitus ut carbo.

Carbunculus, by Pliny, is applied to a disease that singes and burns the ellets of the burgeons or buds; he also speaks of "the hote earth, called Carbunculus, which used to burn the corne sowne thereupon," (Holland.)

A Carbuncle is a name given to a certain precious stone; and also to certain burning spots or tumours on the face; to both, from their shining or glittering like burning coals. See the example from Pliny.

Forth right he straught his finger out,
Upon the whiche he had a ryngc,
To seen it was a riche thyng,
A fine carbuncle for the nones
Most precious of all stones.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

So harde is that carbuncle, catching ones a core, to be by any meane well and surely cured.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 251.

And the goutes, carbuncles, kankers, lepryes, and other lyke sores and syeknesses, whiche do proceed of blode corrupted, be to al men detestable.
Sir T. Elyot. Gouernour, b. ii. c. 4.

The carbuncle
Which from it such a flaming light
And radiancy ejecteth,
That, in the very darkest night,
The eye to it directeth.—Drayton, Nymphal 9.

Among these red gems, the rubies, otherwise called carbuncles, challenge the principall place and are esteemed richest—they have their name in Greeke of the likeneese unto fire, and yet fire hath no power of them, which is the reason that some call them Apyroti.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 7.

Drink, drink off your bowls,
We'll enrich both our heads and our soule
With canary.
A carbuncled face
Saves a tedious race,
For the Indias about us we carry.
Brome. The Good Fellow.

In our annals or cronicles we find upon record, that while Lucius Paulus and Q. Marcius were Censors of Rome, the pestilent carbuncle (a disease appropriat to Provance and Languedoc in France) came first into Italie.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 1.

I find, on the one side that a great many think it no rarity, upon a mistaken persuasion, that not only there are store of carbuncles, of which this is one; but that all diamonds, and other glittering jewels, shine in the dark. Whereas, on the other side, there are very learned men, who (plausibly enough) deny, that there are any carbuncles or shining stones at all.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 790.

The infectious steams presently invaded the lower part of his leg, and produced a pungent pain and blister, which turned to a pestilential carbuncle, that could scarce be cured in a fortnight after.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 576.

Therefore he would have it his way; and our friend is to drink till he is carbuncled, and tun-bellied; after which we will send him down to smoke, and be buried with his ancestors in Derbyshire.—Tatler, No. 66.

———From that scene
The gloomy night for ever to expel,
Imagination's wanton skill in chains
Of pearl throughout the visionary hall
Suspends carbuncles, gems of native light,
Emitting splendour, such as tales portray.
Glover. The Athenaid, b. iv.

CA'RCAN. } Fr. Carcan; Mid. Lat. Carca-
CA'RCANET. } num. Menage says from the Gr. Κιρκωσις, a kind of chain.

A kind of chain, (sc.) for the neck, or a necklace.

Unto which [Geometry and Astrology] who will thinke that the gorgeous trappings and caparisons, the brooches, collars, and carkans of riches are any waies comparable.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 177.

For, said they, they have the same bows, the same rich embroidered gowns, the same golden chains and carcanets of womanish persons, hanging on their cowardly bodies and faint hearts.—North. Ib. p. 280.

My wife is shrewish when I keep not howres;
Say that I lingered with you at your shop
To see the making of her carkanet,
And that tomorrow you will bring it home.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iii. sc. 1

About his necke a carknell rich he ware,
Of precious stones, all set in gold well tried,
His armes that erst all warlike weapons bare,
In golden bracelets wantonly were tied.
Harrington. Orlando Furioso, b. vii. s. 46.

CA'RCASS. } Fr. Carquass; Mid. Lat. Car-
CA'RCASLIKE. } casium. Perhaps immediately from the Fr. Carquois; It. Carcasso, a quiver, ob similitudinem cum pharetra; (sc.) with an empty quiver. (See Junius, Menage, Du Cange, and Wachter.) Applied to—

A dead body; any thing decayed; in a ruinous state; the mere shell; the skeleton; as the carcass of a house.

Howe cã I, quoth he, be sure therof. May ye taking vp of a mannes bones, & setting hys carcas in a gay shrine, & then kissing his bare scalpe, make a mã a saint.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 190.

He wouldo haue commaunded the karkatlyke syeke man to be had away, and then haue all to washed himselfe with water.—Udal. Mark, c. 2.

Thre times about the walls of Troy was Hector haled on ground
His carcas eke Archilles had for golde exchaunged round.
Phaer. Virgile. Æneidos, b. i.

But, for our burning of the dead, by all means I am wonne
To satisfie thy king therein, without the slenderest paine
Made of their spoyled carkasses; but freely (being slaine)
They shall be all consum'd with fire.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

Bast. Heere's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carkasse of old death
Out of his rags.—Shakespeare. King John, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— The Red sea coast, whose waves o'erthrew
Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursu'd
The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
From the safe shore their floating carkases
And broken chariot wheels.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. i.

He thinks that Providence fills his purse, and his barnes, only to pamper his owne carcase, to invite him to take his ease and his fill, that is, to serve his base appetites with all the occasions of sin.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

Fast by the azure necks he held
And grip'd in either hand his scaly foes;
Till from their horrid carcasses expell'd
At length the poisonous soul unwilling flows.
West. First Nemean Ode.

CA'RCERAL. Lat. Carcer, a prison; a coercendo, quod exire prohibet, (Varro.) Carceres (the barriers or starting post) are so called because horses are restrained (coercentur) from going beyond them, before the signal is given. The Goth. Karker; A. S. Carcern; Dut. and Ger. Kerker: Wachter says it may be derived from the A. S. Cark, cura, care, (of which prisons are full.)

Notwithstanding through favour they were contented, that he should be released from his carceral in Lumbard, in case he would put in sufficient suretie in the kings chancerie, and sweare that he shall neuer holde or fauour any such opinions hereafter.—Fox. Martyrs. Hen. VI. an. 1.

CARD, v. } Fr. Carte; It. Carta: Sp. Carta; Lat. Charta, from Χαρτης, and that from Χαρασσειν, insculpere, to grave, to write.
CARD, n.
CA'RDER, n.
CA'RDING, n.

The shipman's card is his chart: "Mappes and cardes; are maps and charts," (See Steevens on Hamlet, act v. sc. 1.)

Carding,—playing games of hazard with cards.

Item, that no blaspheming of God, or detestable swearing be vsed in any ship, nor communication of ribaldrie, filthy tales, or vngodly talke to be suffred in the company of any ship, neither dicing, carding, tabling, nor other diuelish games to be frequented.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 227.

Imprimis, to banish swearing, dice and card-playing, and filthy communication, and to serue God twice a day with the ordinary seruice usuall in churches of England.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 75.

Playing at cards and tables is some what more tollerable, onely for as much as therein wytte is more vsed, and lesse truste is in fortune, all be it therin is neyther laudable study or exercise.—Sir T. Elyot. The Gouernour, b. i. c. 26.

Tra. A vengeance on your crafty withered hide,
Yet I haue fac'd it with a card of ten.
Shakespeare. Taming the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

I my selfe haue all the other,
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know,
I' th' ship-man's card. Id. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 3.

And because the altars were not so easie to be repaired again, they prouided tables, whereof some before used to serue for drunkards, dicers, and carders, but they were holy enough for the priest and his pageant.
Knox. History of Reformation, p. 148.

Nay, be it that he should espy
False carding, what of it?
It shal be thought but ielousie
In him, or want of wit.—Warner. Albion's England, b. vi.

This year died Lanfrank, after he had been Archbishop of Canterbury eighteen years, who had brought the monks to some good order, that before his time followed hunting and hawking, dicing and carding, to the great discredit of their profession.—Baker. William II. an. 1087.

Some enquire whether the trade of card-makers and dice-makers be lawful: and the reason of their doubt is, because these things are vsed by the worst of men, and to very vile purposes, to which these arts do minister, and therefore are reasonably suspected as guilty of a participation of the consequent crimes.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conse. b. iv. c. 1.

I think it is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases, or no other ideas, but those of black and red spots ranged together in different figures.—Spectator, No. 93.

My business has been to view, as opportunity was offered, every place in which mankind was to be seen, but at card-tables, however brilliant, I have always thought my visit lost, for I could know nothing of the company, but their clothes and their faces.—Rambler, No. 10.

E'en misses, at whose age their mothers wore
The back string and the bib, assume the dress
Of womanhood, fit pupils in the school
Of card devoted time, and night by night
Plac'd at some vacant corner of the board,
Learn every trick, and soon play all the game.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

CARD, v. } Dut. Kaerden, obliquo lanam
CARD, n. } deducere ferro, (Kilian.) Fr. Carder; It. Cardare; Sp. Cardar; Lat. Cardere, from Κειρειν, exapor, to shear.
CA'RDER.

Mr. Steevens thinks, that the met. in Shakespeare's Henry IV. is taken from mingling coarse wool with fine, and carding them together, whereby the value of the latter is diminished. To card, he adds, is used by other writers, for to mix. In Ritson's opinion, the King means that his predecessor set his consequence to hazard, played it away, (as a man loses his fortune,) at cards. Dyer calls it—the mingling card. It seems to be used as equivalent to—to discard.

To card (e. g.) in Bacon and Beaum. & Fletch. is—

To mix, to mingle;—(also to clear or free from,) as by the operation of carding.

The skipping king hee ambled vp and downe
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits,
Soone kindled, and soone burnt, carded his state,
Mingled his royalt e with carping fooles, &c.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

It is an excellent drink for a consumption, to be drunk either alone, or carded with some other beer.
Bacon. Natural History, § 46.

Petru. But mine is such a drench of balderdash,
Such a strange carded cunningness, the rayne-bow
When she hangs bent in heaven, sheds not her colours
Quicker, and more, than this deceitful woman,
Weaves in her dyes of wickedness.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Tamer Tam'd, Act iv. sc. 4.

It is necessary that this book be carded and purged of certain base things that lurk among his high conceits.
Shelton. Don Quixote, b. i. c. 6.

——— Upon these taxations
The clothiers all not able to maintaine
The many to them longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII. Act i. sc. 2.

——— Go, card and spin:
And leave the business of the war to men.
Dryden, Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

——— With equal scale
Some deal abroad the well-assorted fleece,
These card the short, those comb the longer flake.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. iii.

Then the sleek brightening lock, from hand to hand,
Renews its circling course: this feels the card;
That, in the comb, admires its growing length. Id. Ib.

Behold the fleece beneath the spiky comb
Drop its long locks, or, from the mingling card,
Spread in soft flakes, and swell the whiten'd floor.—Id. Ib.

CA'RDIACK. } Fr. Cardiaque; It. and Sp.
CARDI'ACAL, adj. } Cardiaco; Gr. Καρδια, the CA'RDIACLE, n. } heart.

Cardiacle is any thing which affects the heart;—either disease or cure. See CORDIAL.

But wel I wot, thou dost min herte to erme,
That I have almost caught a cardiacle.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Prologue, v. 12,347.

Certes lady (q. I tho) so ye must needes, or els I had nigh caught such a cardiacle for sorrow, I wot it wel I should it neuer haue recouered.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. ii.

The leaf of balm, and of alleluia or wood sorrel, as also the roots of anthora, represent the heart in figure, and are cardiacal.—H. More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 6.

CA'RDINAL, n. } Fr. Cardinal; It. Cardinale; Sp. Cardenal; Dut. Kardinael; Lat. Cardinalis, from Cardo, a hinge, "that on which the door is turned and returned;" from the A. S. Cyran, to turn. Du Cange quotes, among others, the following verses:
CA'RDINAL, adj.
CA'RDINALIZE.
CA'RDINALSHIP.

Porta suos postes sine Cardine claudere nescit,
Nec bene præter eos Pastor ovile regit.
Cardo tenet portam, nec quid valet illa remoto
Cardine, sic Papa nihil valet absque viris.

"A Cardinal is so stiled, because serviceable to the apostolick as an axle, or hinge, on which the whole government of the church turns; or as they have from the Pope's grant, the hinge and government of the Romish Church," (Ayliffe.)

Cardinal, adj.—pre-eminent, chief, principal.

The cloke was so called, because similar to that usually worn by cardinals.

Though Spelman seems to agree that the word is derived from the Lat. Cardo, he differs as to the cause of the application. (See his Gloss. Arch., Du Cange, and Menage.)

So that tucie cardinals the pope him sende iwis,
& hit him asoilede of that was ido amis.
R. Gloucester, p. 476.

Now is peeres to the plouh. pruyde hit aspide
And gadered hym a gret ost. greven he thenketh
Conscience and alle cristene. and cardinale vertues.
Piers Ploukman, p. 383.

A cardinall was thilke tide,
Whiche the papate hath long desyred,
And therevpon gretly conspired,
But whan he sighe fortune is failed,
For whiche long time he hath trauailed:
That like fyre, whiche Ethna brenneth,
Through out his woefull herte renneth.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

They shoote all at one marke
At the cardinal's hat
They shoote all at that
Out of their stronge townes
They shote at him with crownes.
Skelton. Why come ye not to Court

For what other is all his doctrine then of benefites, promotions, dignities, byshoprikes, cardinallshyps.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 416.

For this believe, that impudence is now
A cardinal virtue, and men it allow
Reverence, nay more, men study and invent
New ways, nay glory to be impudent.
Drayton. Of the Evil Time.

He hath, above the worst of carnal popes, cardinalized divers to the bolstering up of the Borghesian faction.
Sheldon. Miracles of Antichrist, p. 306.

The colour of his face was as all generally agree, more fresh during the time of his cardinalship, than since.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 656.

The story is famous of that cardinal (who flourished in the last age,) that said, that once indeed he had read the Bible, but if he were to do so again, it would lose him all his Latinity.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 295.

But we've no time, my dear, to waste,
Come, where's your cardinal, make haste.
Lloyd. Chit Chat.

CARE, v. } Goth. Kara; A. S. Caru, cearu. "Carian, to take CARE, n. } care or heed, to regard, to
CA'REFUL, adj. } mind, to attend," (Somner.)
CA'REFULLY. } In A. S. are also found the CA'REFULNESS. } compounds, Carfull, carfullice, carfulnysse, carleas. Junius thinks that the word may have some affinity with the Gr. Κηρ, the heart, because men take especial care of those things, quæ maximè ipsis cordi sunt. See CURE.
CA'RELESS. } To care, is generally used, as explained by CA'RELESSLY. } Somner, i. e.—
CA'RELESSNESS. }

To heed, to mind, to regard, to be heedful, or mindful, regardful or anxious. Hence, as—

Care-ful, heedful, cautious. Also, full of care, trouble or distress.

In Ritson, (quoted below)—

To distress, to trouble, to vex, to harass, to afflict with care.

And the noun is common in both applications of the verb, viz.—

Heedfulness, mindfulness, regard, attention;—solicitude, anxiety, trouble.

Care, prefixed to various words, furnishes a few powerful expressions.

——— I care wel harde
For I can finden no man, that fulli beleueth
To techen me the high wais, and therefore I wept.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Sire for greate Godes loue, tha graith thou me tell,
Of what myddel erde man myght I best lerne
My crede, for I can it naught, my kare is the more.
Id. Ib.

And al they songen o songe, that sorwe was to heren,
They crieden alle o cry, a karful note. Id. Ib.

——— For drede gan ich quaken
And criede carfully to kynde. of kare me brynge.
Id. Vision, p. 402.

Be ay of chere as light as lefe on linde,
And let him care, and wepe, and wringe, and waille.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9088

Men shulden wedden after hir estate,
For youthe and olde is often at debate.
But sithen he was fallen in the snare
He most endure (as other folk) his care.
Id. The Miller's Tale, v. 2232.

By the which desyre and earnest purpose he testifieth yt in all his welthe, pleasure, and quietnes, he cared for nothing more then that kynde of lyfe, and conversatiō, wherin he was like a shepe in the flocke of the faithfull.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

By the daily testimonie of our subiects which trafficke in your kingdoms and dominions, we are informed, that according to the dutie of a most worthy prince, so carefully and exactly you minister iustice vnto euery man, that all men most willingly repaire vnto your highnesse, with full trust to obtaine the same.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 97.

By suche manoure of figuratiue speakynges called of the Grekes hyperbole, his entente was to plucke oute of his disciples myndes (who were as yet grosse and rude,) all carefulnesse for those thynges that are wont to be an hinderaūce or let vnto the minde, whē it goeth about any heauenlye enterpryse.—Udal. Mark, c. 6.

Thē shall they be in carefulnesse, whyche nowe haue abused my wayes: and they that haue cast them oute dispytfullye, shal dwell in paynes.—Bible, 1551. Esdras, c. 9.

O Lord my hope behold, and for my helpe make haste
To pardon the forepassed race that careless I haue past.
Vncertaine Auctors. The repentant Sinner.

Therefore it stondeth you in hande by all meanes, that that daye fynde you not sluggishly napping, nor carelessly snourting by riot and sothfulnes.—Coverd. 1 Peter, c. 14.

Therfore euill mote she fare,
For euer she dyde the lytell boye care,
As forforth as she dorste.
The Frere & the Boye. Ritson. Anc. Pop. Poetry, p. 36.

His trust was with th' Eternal to be deem'd
Equal in strength, and rather than be less
Car'd not to be at all.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Hereupon I have chosen that kind of life which is most free from the troublesome cares of the world, that I might attend the service of God alone.—Camden. Eliz. an. 1559.

With as much care and little hurt, as doth a mother use,
And keepe off from her babe, when sleepe doth through his powers diffuse
His golden humour; and th' assaults of rude and busie flies,
She still checks with her carefull hand
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

My wife more carefull for the latter-borne,
Had fastned him vnto a small spare mast,
Such as sea faring men prouide for stormes
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had beene like heedful of the others.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act i. sc. 1.

And I would wish you to abstayne from iudging too farre, when you see a man that hath no liuings, vse himselfe vprightly and carefully in them all, and otherwyse profitably to the whole churche.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 247.

Jehoiada then occupied the priesthood, an honourable, wise and religious man. To his carefulness it may be ascribed, that the state of the church was in some sender sort upheld in those unhappy times.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 20. s. 4.

All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Shakespeare. Passionate Pilgrim, s. 18.

Sweet blushing goddess of the golden morning,
Faire patronesse of all the world's affaires,
Thou art become so careless of my cares,
That I must name thee goddesse of my mourning.
Stirling, s. 12.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity,
But virtue joyn'd with riches and long life.
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

At length, the foolish flie without foresight,
As he that did all daunger quite dispise,
Toward those parts came flying carelessely
Where hidden was his hatefull enemie.
Spenser. Muiopotmos.

O change beyond report, thought, or belief:
See how he lies at random carelessly diffus'd,
With languish't head unpropt,
As one past hope, abandon'd,
And by himself given over.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Therefore, for Coriolanus neyther to care whether they loue or hate him, manifests that true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his noble carelessenesse lets them plainly see it.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

I care not, fortune, what you me deny:
You cannot rob me of free nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky,
Through which Aurora shews her brightening face.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

There arose a marvellous schism and variety of factions, in the celebrating the common service; some followed the king's proceedings; others admitted them, but did patchingly use but some part of the book. But many carelessly contemned all, and would exercise their old wonted popish mass.—Strype. Memoirs. Edw. VI. an. 1547.

I wish that might befall the French to temper a little such an overgrown greatness; but I doubt it much, from the present King's dispositions, among whose qualities those of carelessness or lavishing his treasures, I am afraid, are none.
Sir W. Temple. To Lord Arlington.

The priest, whose office is with zeal sincere
To watch the fountain and preserve it clear,
Carelessly nods and sleeps upon the brink
While others poison what the flock must drink.
Cowper. Expostulation.

CARE'EN. Fr. Carene; It. Carena; Sp. Caréna, carena; Lat. Carina, (a currendo dicta,) the keel of a ship.

To lay a vessel with her keel upwards, for the purpose of repairing, of calking her. See CALK.

We had no worms till we came to this place; for when we careen'd at the Marias, the worm had not touch'd us; nor at Guana, for there we scrubb'd.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. c. 13.

The shore at this place seem'd to form several bays, into one of which I proposed to carry the ship, which was become very foul, in order to careen her, and at the same time repair some defects, and recruit our wood and water.
Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

CARE'ER, v. } Fr. Carrière; It. Carriera;
CARE'ER, n. } Sp. Carrera; from Currere, (Junius.) From—to carry, (Skinner.) Fr. Carrière, Cotgrave well explains—

"An highway, a road or street; also, a career on horseback; and, (more generally,) any exercise, or place for exercise, on horseback; as a horse-race, or a place for horses to run in; and their course, running, or full speed therein."

To career,—to move at full speed, swiftly;—also, as if in display of skill or grace.

——As with starrs thir bodies all
And wings were set with eyes, with eyes the wheels
Of beril, and careering fires between.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Lie. I am glad you are here; but they are all i' th' pound, sir,
They'l never ride o'er other men's corn again, I take it,
Such frisking, and such flaunting with their feathers,
And such careering with their master's favours.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 2.

He stops, when he should make a full carere,
He runs or trots, when he would have him rest.
At last to throw his rider in the mire,
He plungeth with his head beneath his breast.
Harrington. Orlando, b. ii. s. 7.

The Count de Alanson in a great rage cries out, On, on, let us make way upon the bellies of these Genoueses, who do but hinder us: and instantly pricks on with a full career through the midst of them.—Baker. Edw. III. an. 1346.

——On with speed we fare
Prosperous, and when the sun careering prone,
Sunk to the western isles, and dewy shade
Sabled the pole, we, tilting o'er the waves
On ocean's utmost bound, approach'd the realms
Unbless'd, where the Cimmerians darkling dwell.
Fenton. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

All to the heart return again;
From thence resume their new career,
But still return, and centre there;
So real happiness below
Must from the heart sincerely flow.—Whitehead. Variety.

CARE'NE. } Low Lat. Carena, carentena,
CA'RENTANE. } quasi, quarentina; a quarantine, (qv.) See in Du Cange.

A Carene, was a fast for forty days on bread and water. A Carentane or quadragene,—a Lent, or forty days of Lent; any space of forty days.

You have with much labour and some charge purchased to yourself so many quadragenes or lents of pardon: that is, you have bought off the penances of so many times forty days. It is well; but were you well advis'd? it may be your Quadragenes are not Carenes, that is, are not a quitting the severest penances of fasting so long on bread and water.
Bp. Taylor. Diss. from Popery, pt. i. s. 4.

In the church of Sancta Maria de Popolo there are for every day in the year 2800 years of pardon, besides 14 014 Carentanes, which in one year amount to more than 1,000,000.—Id. Ib. s. 3.

CARE'SS, v. } Fr. Caresser; It. Carezzare;
CARE'SS, n. } Sp. Acariciar. Not from Καρεζειν, to soothe, nor from Χαριεσθαι, but from the Lat. Carus; q. d. Caritia, carities, i. e. Caritas, and thence Caritiare, caresser, (Skinner.) And Menage says, de carisciare, formed from carus. Carus, cari, cariscus, carisicus, carisciare.

To touch, to treat with gentleness or fondness, to fondle; to treat endearingly, soothingly, flatteringly.

His business (was) about setling a peace with Tangier: much respected he was here, caress'd at court, and at both the Universities; and he seemed to express no less esteem for our nation.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1683.

——He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses: from his lip
Not words alone pleas'd her.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. viii.

Do not instantly upon your return from church, return also to the world, and secular thoughts and employments; but let the remaining part of that day be like a post-communion or an after-office, entertaining your blessed lord with all the caresses and sweetness of love and colloquies, and intercourses of duty and affection.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Living, s. 10. No. 14.

The King of France used him, [the Duke of Buckingham,] in so particular a manner, knowing his vanity, and caressed him to such a degree, that he went without reserve into the interests of France.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1671.

Nay, I have known men, grossly injured in their affairs, depart pleased, at least silent, only because they were injured in good language, ruined in caresses, and kissed while they were struck under the fifth rib.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

Thus must he steer through Fame's uncertain seas,
Now struck by censure, and now puff'd by praise;
Contempt with envy strangely mix'd endure,
Fear'd where caress'd, and jealous, though secure.
W. Whitehead. Danger of writing Verse.

CA'RGO. } Fr. Cargaison; Sp. Carga-
CA'RGASON, n. } çon; the freight or lading of a ship; Fr. Carguer, charger; It. Caricare, to lade or load. All (says Skinner) from the Lat. Carrus. (See CAR.) And Menage, Charger, from Carricare, formed from Carricus, the diminutive of Carrus. Sir Thomas North writes Cargued.

The load carried, the goods or wares carried, or conveyed.

The brokers came to the water side, and these merchants as soone as they are come on land, do giue the cargason of all their goods to that broker, that they will haue to do their business for them, with the marks of all the fardles and packs they haue.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 217.

Which did not hurt the Grecian galleys, being made low and snug, but greatly offended the Persian galleys, being high cargued, heavy, and not yare of steredge.
North. Plutarch, p. 105.

So in the mild contentions of the muse,
(The war which peace itself loves and pursues,)
So have you home to us in triumph brought
This cargazon of Spain with treasures fraught.
Cowley. The Adventures of Five Hours.

This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republic of letters, and just fitted out for the University with a good cargo of Latin and Greek.—Spectator, No. 494.

To diff'rent lands for diff'rent sins we roam,
And, richly freighted, bring our cargo home,
Nobly industrious to make vice appear
In her full state, and perfect only here.
Churchill. The Times.

CARICATU'RE, n. }
CARICATU'RE, v. } It. Caricatura, from CARICATU'RIST. } Caricare, to charge, to load. (See CARGO.)

These words are in common use.

To charge, to overcharge; to load, to overload; and thus, to colour too highly, to exaggerate, to distort.

From all these hands we have such draughts of mankind as are represented in those burlesque pictures, which the Italians call caracaturas; where the art consists in preserving, amidst distorted proportions and aggravated features, some distinguishing likeness of the person, but in such a manner as to transform the most agreeable beauty into the most odious monster.—Spectator, No. 537.

The painter exhibited a caricature of the writer. (Wilkes.) Churchill then wrote his epistle to Hogarth.—In revenge for this epistle, Hogarth caricatured Churchill under the form of a canonical bear, with a club, and a pot of beer.
Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. iv. c. 4.

CARK, v. }
CARK, n. } A. S. Carc, caru, care; car-ian,
CA'RKING. } car-ic-an, carcan, be-carcan, accurare, to carke, or care for, to take care of. Cearig, is full of care and fear; and also moaning, grieving, complaining, lamenting. (See Somner.) Cark is applied to—

Anxious care, anxiety, solicitude, trouble.

Shal noth' kyng ne knygt, constable ne meyre,
Over cark the comune.—Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 62.

In house, for wife and child, there is but cark and care,
With trauel and with toyl ynough in fields we use to fare.
Vncertaine Auctors. Man's Life.

If thou dost meane to haue vs pen
  ayin clerklie worke in deede,
Worthie bir Phebe, and to put oute
  our bookes with better spede,
Cutte of the carke that nippes our harte.
Drant. Horace. Ep. b. ii. To Augustus.

Ryght semblablye, this carkynge kynde
  of men doe neuer eye
The route, that they haue ouerrun
  in goodes, but haste and hye
To retche the resydue. Id. Ib. Sat. 1.

What meane you, my masters, and whither run you headlong, carking and caring all that ever you can to gather goods and rake riches together as you do, whiles in the meane time you make little or no reckoning at all of your children, unto whom you are to leave all your wealth?
Holland. Plutarch, p. 5.

Waile we the wight, whose presence was our pride:
Waue we the wight, whose absence is our cark.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar, November.

Such is the thrift of that old carking hag,
Her houses fall she ventures, but to spare
The simple cost ev'n of a patch'd repair.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 2. s. 53.

Would not common prudence teach you to take the surest way for your subsistance, and not to suffer yourselves to be tormented with needless fears, and carking cares, about that which God himself hath promised to provide for you: I know it would.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 131.

CARLE, n. CARLE, v. CA'RLISH, adj. CA'RLOT. } A.S. Ceorle; Ger. Kerl; Dut. Kaerle. Carel, karl, in the ancient language of Germany, signifies robust and strong, (Vossius.)

A carle is a robust, strong man; a rustick, labouring man; uncivilized, unpolished, rude, brutal. See CHURL.

The miller was a stout carl for the nones,
Full bigge he was of braun, and eke of bones.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 547.

——— He woulde not seeme
Like one of carlish abiecte minde,
So vyle a thing t' esteme.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 2.

Full of ache, sorrow and griefe, children againe, dizards, they carle many times as they sit, and talke to themselves.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 60.

So vp he rose, and thence amounted streight,
Which when the carle beheld, and saw his guest
Would safe depart, for all his subtile sleight,
He chose an halter from among the rest,
And with it hung himselfe vnbid, vnblest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

By whose brave carriage in so hard a thing,
He did well worthy of his trust appear;
Who in his castle, carelesly defended
That crafty carlot closely apprehended.
Drayton. The Baron's Wars, b. v.

What news, what news! thou noble king,
Howe, Arthur, hast thou sped!
Where hast thou hung the carlish knighte
And where bestow'd his head.
The Marriage of Sir Gawayne, pt. ii. Percy.

Sil. Not very well, but I haue met him oft,
And he that bought the cottage and the bounds
That the old carlot once was master of.
Shakespeare. As You like It, Act iii. sc. 5.

Coarse Bothnick locks are not devoid of use;
They clothe the mountain carl or mariner
Labouring at the wet shrouds, or stubborn helm,
While the loud billows dash the groaning deck
Dyer. Fleece, b. ii.

I deem that carl, by beauty's pow'r unmov'd,
Hated of heav'n, of none but hell approv'd.
O may he never love, O never be belov'd.
Thompson. Hymn to May.

CARMINATIVE. Fr. Carminatif; from Lat. Carminare, to cleanse from gross parts; or from Carmen; as if acting by charm or enchantment. Arbuthnot calls carminatives—expellers of wind; and further says:—

Carminative are such things as dilute and relax at the same time; because wind occasions a spasm or convulsion in some part. Whatever promotes insensible perspiration is carminative.—On Aliments, c. 5.

Carminative and diuretic
Will damp all passion sympathetick:
And love such nicety requires
One blast will put out all his fires.
Swift. Strephon & Chloe.

CA'RNALIZE, v. CA'RNAGE, n. CA'RNAL, adj. CA'RNALIST, n. CA'RNALITE, n. CARNA'LITY, n. CA'RNALLY. CA'RNALNESS. CA'RNEOUS. CA'RNOUS. CA'RNOSE. CARNO'SITY. CA'RNIFY. CARNI'VOROUS. } Lat. Caro, carnis, flesh, a carendo, eò quod careat animâ, because it is without life or breath. (See Vossius.) Carnal, as applied generally, is—

Of or pertaining to the flesh; to the lusts of the flesh; fleshly; opposed to spiritual.

Carnage,—the slaughter of flesh; flesh slain or slaughtered.

It is not unusual to write carnal prefixed to minded and mindedness.

Carneous,—fleshy, having qualities of, or resembling those of, flesh.

Carnify,—to cause to be or to become flesh, rests on the usage by Sir Mathew Hale who uses it more than once.

Carnivorous,—devouring flesh. See CARNIVAL, and INCARN.

The loue & amitie of christen folke should be rather ghostly fredship than bodily: with that all faithfull people are rather spirituall then carnall.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 1.

Nothynge so sharpely assaileth a man's minde, as doth carnalle affection, called (by the followers thereof) loue.
Sir T. Elyot. Gouernour, b. iii. c. 17.

Deliciouse delicates effeminate ryght strong men and miche the soner the soft Assyrios. By siche carnalite was Capua made a Canne to Hanibal.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

The Jewes loke for Christ, and he is come xv. hundred yeares agoe, and they not ware: we also haue loked for Antichrist, and he hath raigned as long, and we not ware: and that because either of vs looked carnally for hym and not in the places where we ought to haue sought.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 60.

But such as stubbernly maintaine Moses lawe literally & carnally understanden, excepte they forsaking the carnalness thereof, fal from it to the spirite, neither do please God nor can.—Udal. Rom. c. 8.

By which device they encountered and fought with even fronts, and on equall hand for number: so he put the enemies to flight, and with those few souldiers, which he had, he made great carnage of them.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 371.

The carnage and execution was no less after the conflict, then during the fight: for whereas there were many more of them slaine outright in the place than taken prisoners, those also that were prisoners, they spared not, but murdered every where as they went.—Id. Livie, p. 55.

There is no talking to such, no hope of their conversion, they are in a reprobate sense meere carnalists, fleshy minded men.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 685.

There he affirmeth of himselfe, that when he did behold the Christians in their torments and suffrings to be so constant in their profession, he [Justine] was therewith marvellouslie moved: after this maner reasoning with himselfe, that it was impossible for that kind of people to be subiect to anie vice or carnalitie, which vices of their owne nature are not able to sustaine anie sharpe aduersitie, much lesse the bitternes of death.
Fox. Martyrs. Persecutions of the Church.

God is on our side, and therfore we fear not what the Pope or any other carnalite can do against us.
Anderson. Expositon upon Benedictus, 1573, p. 76.

What concord can there be between a sensual and carnalized spirit that understands no other pleasures but only those of the flesh, and those pure and virgin-spirits, that neither eat nor drink, but live for ever upon wisdom and holiness, and love and contemplation?
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 2.

For sin wrought this concupiscence and carnal-mindedness; and this carnal-mindedness is such a propensity and desire to sin, and hath in it such eagerness to act, that it bringeth forth many sins, and they bring forth death; and therefore the Apostle says expressly φρονημα του σαρκος θανατος και εχθρα εις θεον this carnal-mindedness is death and enmity against God: this is that state, in which whosoever abides cannot please God.
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 3. s. 3.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I propose, I command; in inferior faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest, I sanguify, I carnify.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 31.

This oilie substance doth increase and augment within the olive, until the rising of the star Arcturus, to wit sixteen dayes before the calends of October; after which time, their stones and carnous matter about them doe rather thrive.—Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 3.

Yea, and otherwise it is good for the old maine bough to feed still and thrive in pulpe and carnositie, if we purpose that it should remaine and carry a length with it.
Id. Ib b. xvii. c. 23.

I would the consciences of men were such, as oyl and butter might supple them. But I see they are for the most part overgrown with so hard a carnosity, as it requireth strong and potent corrosives to make an entrance into them.
Spelman. English Works. An Epilogue, p. 18.

About an age ago it was the fashion in England, for every one that would be thought religious, to throw as much sanctity as possible into his face, and in particular to abstain from all appearances of mirth and pleasantry, which were looked upon as the marks of a carnal mind.
Spectator, No. 494.

If Godly, why do they wallow and steep in all the carnalities of the world, under pretence of Christian liberty?
South, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Lastly, that the apostle doth very fitly take the law either in one sense or in the other, either spiritually or carnally, according to the differing sentiments of those to whom he wrote the epistles.—Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull.

Gaspar Bartholine hath observed that where the gullet perforates the midriff, the carneous fibers of that muscular part are inflected and arcuate, as it were a sphincter, embracing and closing it fast.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The muscle whereby he [the hedge-hog] is enabled to draw himself thus together, and gather up his whole body like a ball, the Parisian academists describe to be a distinct carnose muscle, extended from the ossa innominata, to the ear and nose, running along the back bone, without being fastened thereto.—Id. Ib. pt. ii.

Such birds as have crooked beaks and talons are all carnivorous; and so of quadrupeds, καρκαροδοντα, carnivora omnia. All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous.
Id. Ib. pt. i.

Our nobility was wont to applaud the Italians, as the best examples of elegancy: may we not with good pretences to sobriety, reduce our carnivorous tables to their patterns of salads.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 376. Letter from J. Beale.

But the practice of these [the dog and cat] is nothing, to what the animals of the forest endure. As these mostly live upon accidental carnage, so they are often known to remain without food for several weeks together.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. ii. c. 6.

But if in this inconsiderable part of the globe, such a carnage [2,000,000] has been made in two or three short reigns, and that this great carnage, great as it is, makes but a minute part of what the histories of that people inform us they suffered; what shall we judge of countries more extended, and which have waged wars far more considerable?
Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

CARNA'TION, n. CARNA'TIONED. } Lat. Caro, carnis, flesh; Fr. Incarnadine; It. Carnadino. Color carnis, colour of flesh, (Skinner.)

Mr. Steevens says, carnardine is the old term for carnation. And quotes the old comedy as below. Hopkins uses carnation as incarnation, (qv.) See the quotation from Wilkins.

After the same manner are the several varieties of colours to be expressed; namely, by their resemblance to other things commonly known. So flesh-like is carnation.
Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 7.

Court, gentle Zephyr, court and fan,
Her gentle breast's carnationed wan.
Lovelace. Lucasta at the Bath.

The brave carnation, then, with sweet and sovereign power,
(So of his colour call'd, although a July flower.)
With th' other of his kind, the speckled and the pale.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

She here me first perceiv'd, and here a morn
Of bright carnations did o'erspread her face;
Here did she sigh, here first my hopes were born,
Here first I got a pledge of promis'd grace.
Drummond. Sonnets, &c. pt. i. s. 60.

Some profess'd florists make them their constant study and employment, and despise all fruit; and now and then a few fanciful people spend all their time in the cultivation of a single tulip, or a carnation.—Spectator, No. 455.

So, in a garden bath'd with genial show'rs,
A thousand sorts of variegated flow'rs,
Jonquils, carnations, pinks, and tulips rise,
And in a gay confusion charm our eyes.
Jenyns. Art of Dancing, c. 2.

Grograms, sattins, velvet fine,
The rosy coloured carnardine.
Any Thing for a Quiet Life.

What signature is there stamp'd upon any of the creatures of a Trinity in Unity, of the eternal generation, or temporal carnation of the Son of God.—Hopkins. Workes, p. 716.

CA'RNIVAL, n. Fr. Carnaval; It. Carnovale. Some Italian writers (says Du Cange) think Carnovale so called, as if carne or caro, vale. Du Cange, (in v. Carnelevamen,) himself thinks,—dies istos, seu potius Diem Martis, qui Quadragesimam antecedit,—that those days were, or rather the Tuesday preceding Lent, was called caru-a-val,—quod sonat, Caro abscedit, seu tempus carnes comedendi;—the days for eating flesh are passed.

The time or season in which it was lawful to eat flesh, was called in Mid. Lat. Carnale; in Fr. Charnage.

This festive season, which is particularly observed at Venice, continues from the Epiphany till the first day of Lent.

They had their Baccanalia; we had our wakes, answering to them: they their Saturnalia, and we our Carnevals, and Shrove-Tuesdays, liberty of servants.
Hobbes. Of the Kingdom of Darkness, c. 45.

The carnival of Venice is every where talked of. The great diversion of the place at that time, as well as on all other high occasions is masking. These disguises give occasion to abundance of love adventures; and I question not but the secret history of a carnival would make a collection of very diverting novels.—Addison. On Italy. Venice.

CARO'CHE, n. } Fr. Carosse; It. Carozzo;
CARO'CHED, adj. } Lat. Carruca, from Carrus. See CAR.

A kind of car or chariot.

Moreover, that during all the time of his empire, he neither tooke up any man to sit with him in his carroch, nor admitted any private person to be his companion in the honourable estate of consull, as princes have been wont to do.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 63.

Car. She, I assure you, madam,
Knows nothing but her will; must be allow'd
Her footmen, her caroch, her ushers, pages,
Her doctor, chaplains.—Massinger. Renegado, Act i. sc. 2.

Spun. Old honour goes on crutches, beggary rides carocched.—Id. The Virgin Martyr, Act iii. sc. 3.

All this, quoth Ralph, I did, 'tis true,
Not to preserve myself, but you:
You, who were damn'd to baser drubs
Than wretches feel in powdering tubs;
To mount two-wheel'd caroches, worse,
Than managing a wooden horse.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

CA'ROL, v. } Fr. Carolle; It. Carola. Menage
CA'ROL, n. } says, Chorcola, a diminu-
CA'ROLING, n. } tive of Chorea. Somner produces the word Kyrriole, and thinks it probable that such a word may have been corrupted from Κυριε ελεησον, (Lord, have mercy,) so frequently repeated in morning prayers. And hence he conjectures our carol to be a hymn, (sc.) usually sung on the Nativity. In Fr. Carolle is the name of a kind of dance, and so it is used in Robert of Gloucester. See the quotation from Warton.

Aftur mete, as rygt was, the menstrales geode aboute,
And kuygtes and sweynes in carole gret route.
R. Gloucester, p 53.

What ladies fayrest ben or best dancing,
Or which of hem can carole best or sing,
Ne who most felingly speketh of loue;
Of all this now I make no mentioun.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2205.

And if so befalle amonge,
That she carole vpon a songe,
Whan I it here, I am so fedde,
That I am fro myselfe so ledde,
As though I were in Paradice.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

There was great myrth on all side,
Where as she passeth by the streate,
There was ful many a tymbre beate,
And many a maide carolende. Id. Ib.

And eke he can carolles make,
Roundel, balade, and vereiate. Id. Ib. b. i.

Ne nightingale in the seson of May
Was never non, that list better to sing
Ne lady lustier in carolling.
Chaucer. The Chanounes Yemannes Tale, v. 16,813.

The same season the princesse, mother to kyng Richarde, lay at Wynsore, and her doughter with her, my lady Maude, the fayrest lady in all Englande: theris of saynt Poule, and this yong lady, were in true amours togyder eche of other, and somtyme they met togyder at daunsynge and carollyng.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 394.

There, on a day, as he persew'd the chace,
He chanc't to spy a sort of shepherd groomes,
Playing on pipes, and caroling apace,
The whiles their beastes there in the budded broomes
Beside them fed. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

Nor under every bank and every tree,
Speak rhymes unto my oaten minstralsie;
Nor carol out so pleasing lively laies
As mought the Graces move my mirth to praise.
Bp. Hall. Satires, b. i. Sat. 1.

They heare such notes, and heauenly carolings
Of God's high praise, that fills the brasen sky,
And feel such ioye and pleasure inwardly,
That maketh them all worldly cares forget,
And onely thinke on that before them set.
Spenser. Hymne of Heauenlie Beautie.

Why do the Delian palms incline their boughs,
Self mov'd? and hovering swans, their throats releas'd
From native silence, carol sounds harmonious.
Prior. Second Hymn to Callimachus.

Rise, sons of harmony, and hail the morn,
While warbling larks on russet pinions float;
Or seek at noon the woodland scene remote,
Where the gray linnets carol from the hill.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

In the year 1521 Wynkyn de Worde printed a set of Christmas carols: these were festal chansons for enlivening the merriment of the Christmas celebrity; and not such religious songs as are current at this day with the common people under the same title, and which were substituted by those enemies of innocent and useful mirth, the Puritans.
Warton. English Poetry, vol. iii. s. 26.

CAROUSE, v. } Fr. Carousser; Sp. Ca-
CARO'USE, n. } rau, from the Ger. Gar
CARO'USER. } ausz, empty it entirely,
CARO'USAL. } (prorsus deple vel exhauri,) in a word, all out, (Skinner.) Lye thinks it may be from Reuse, or ruse; and Ruse, Junius derives from the Dut. Ruyschen, strepere, perstrepere, sonore tumultuari, to make a roaring noise, an uproar. Menage is to the same purport as Skinner;—Ger. Garauss, which signifies toute vuide.

Mr. Gifford—without any authority—asserts, that rouse was a large glass, ("not past a pint," as Iago says,) in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the rest of the company formed a carouse. There could be no rouse or carouse unless the glass was empty. A rouse or two, in the language of the present day, would be a bumper or two." (See Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 239, Note.) To carouse is—

To drink freely, copiously, with much jollity.

Carousel, (see the quotations from Dryden,) (Fr. Carrousel, from the It. Carrosello, Menage;) a pageant in which chariots (carosses) were much employed, is ascribed to a different source; viz. Carosse, a chariot.

Then drinke they all around both men and women: and sometimes they carouse for the victory very filthily and drunkenly.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 96.

The tiplinge sottes at midnight which to quaile carouse do vse,
Wil hate the if at any tyme
to pledge them thou refuse.—Drant. Ep. to Lollius.

He in that forrest did deaths cup carouse
Which fatal was vnto the conquerors house.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 646.

Plentie, the childe of peace, in euerie house,
Did furnish out the tables with her store,
Lyæus fruitful cup with full carouse
Went round about, mirth stood at euerie doore.
Id. Ib. p. 610.

When lately Pym descended into hell,
Ere he the cups of Lethe did carouse,
What place that was, he called loud to tell;
To whom a Devil—"This is the lower house."
Drummond, Epig. 8.

And that monarch, whom even a siege could not reduce below a condition of feasting, though he were carousing in the consecrated cups, had such a brimmer of trembling put into his hand, as both presaged, and, perchance, began, the destiny approaching him under the ensigns of the noble Cyrus.—Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 5. ref. 3.

As if he [Benhadad] had drawn together such a numerous and mighty army, headed by so many princes, only for the glorious and warlike expedition of carousing in their tents, or to fight it out hand to hand, in the cruel and bloody encounters of drinking healths.—South, vol vi. Ser. 10.

The bold carouser and advent'rous dame,
Nor fear the fever nor refuse the flame;
Safe in his skill, from all restraints set free,
But conscious shame, remorse or piety.
Lansdowne. To Dr. Garth in his Sickness.

But I have probable reasons, which induce me to believe, that some Italians having curiously observ'd the gallantries of the Spanish Moors at their Zambras or Royal feasts, where musick, songs, and dancing, were in perfection, together with their machines, which are usual at their Sortias, or running at the ring, and other solemnities, may possibly have retin'd upon these Moresque divertisements, and produc'd this delightful entertainment, by leaving out the warlike part of the carousels, and forming a poetical design for the use of the machines, the songs, and dances.
Dryden. Albion & Albanius, Pref.

This game, these carousels Ascanius taught,
And, building Alba, to the Latins brought.
Id. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

The sun was set;—they had done their work; the nymphs had tied up their hair afresh,—and the swains were preparing for a carousal;—my mule made a dead point.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. vii. c. 43.

CARP, v. } Fr. Charpir; It. Carpire;
CA'RPER, n. } Lat. Carpere, to shear, to crop,
CA'RPING, adj. } to carve, (perhaps from the CA'RPING, n. } A. S. Ceorf-ian, to carve,) to CA'RPINGLY. } tear to pieces; and thus—

To pull or pluck out, to catch at, (sc. met.) small faults or errors; to find fault, to detect or expose faults, to cavil. In our old writers;—to hold up to ridicule, to jest, to scoff at.

And it appears also to have been used as Dr. Jamieson interprets it; 1. to speak, to talk, to relate verbally or in writing; 2. to sing. And he supposes the word to have been introduced from the Lat. Carpere, to cull, by the monkish writers. For carping, the Scotch also use catchy.

——To Conscience he tolde
And Conscience to the kyng. carped it after.
Piers Ploughman, p. 34.

By clothynge ne by carpinge. knowe shall thou hym nevere.
Id. p. 282.

In felawship wel coude she laughe and carpe
Of remedies of love she knew perchance,
For of that arte she coude the olde dance.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 476.

And whom it liketh for to carp
Prouerbes and demaunde she,
An other suche thei neuer sie,
Whiche that science so well taught.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

The one of these he carped, as a man of no witte and uerie meane learninge: the other for his verbositie and negligence in penning his history.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 139.

Then for his phrase he carpeth at it in infinite places, both for obscure and licentious.—Hobbes. Life of Thucydides.

As Britons, that so long
Have held this antique song,
And let all our carpers
Forbear their fame to wrong,
Th'are right skilful harpers.
Drayton. To Himself and the Harp.

Shame not these woods
By putting on the cunning of a carper,
Be thou a flatterer.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

The answere is fit for so friuolous an obiection; and a little true reason voyde of malicious carping, would haue taught you that this is rather a ciuill manner and custom to our country, than a ceremonie of the church.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 537.

But it is always thus with pedants, they will ever be carping, if a gentleman or man of honour puts a pen to paper.
Tatler, No. 17.

Lay aside, therefore, a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with attention and diligence, with an honest design to find out his true meaning, do not snatch at little lapses and appearances of mistake, in opposition to his declared and avowed meaning.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 8.

CA'RPENTER, n. } Low. Lat. Carpenta-
CA'RPENTRY, n. } rius; Fr. Charpentier; It. Carpentero; Sp. Carpintero. Menage thinks from Carpentum; Vossius, quod ligna carpit, i. e. cædit, because he cuts wood. We must by no means omit, observes Junius, that Hesychius, Καρτειν exp. πληττειν, ferire, to strike. And Tooke remarks, that "the translation of the New Testament, which is ascribed to Wicliffe, (he alludes probably to his own MS.) proves to us that at that time, smith, (sc. one who smiteth,) and carpenter were synonymous."

A wright, or worker in wood.

And tho Sir Mael was inome, & hil withinne come,
An carpenter, that hil sede that seot the seute, hil nome,
And ladde him vpe the tour an hee, & made him huppe to grounde. [shot the shot.]—R. Gloucester, p. 537.

What is the wisdom that is goven to him, and siche vertues which ben maad by his hondes, wher this is not a carpenter. [a smith, ether, a carpentere, as quoted by Tooke,] the sone of Marye.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 6.

What wisdome is this that is giuen vnto him: and such virtues that are wrought by his handes. Is not this ye carpenter Maries sonne.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whereas the tenth day I sent our pinnesse on shoare to be mended because she was leaky and weake, with the carpenter and three more to help him, the weather chanced so, that it was Sunday before they could get aboord our ship.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 276.

A firm house, though the carpenter
Perish, shall stand. Donne. To Mr. J. W.

O! to make boards to speak! there is a task!
Painting and carpentry are the soul of masque.
B. Jonson. An Expostulation with Inigo Jones.

CA'RPET, n. Dut. Karpet; It. Carpetta; "Fr. Cairin, a Turkie carpet; such a one as is brought from Caire in Egypt," (Colgrave.) Skinner suggests that the Italian Carpetta may be from Cairo, and tapets, (q. d.) tapes. Carbasus seu Memphiticus.

Carpets were formerly used as covers for tables. See the examples from B. Jonson, and Mr. Gifford's notes upon them. Now applied to—

A covering for the floor.

A carpet knight,—one that ever loves to be in women's chambers, (Cotgrave.) Others say, that they were men learned in arts and sciences, on whom knighthood was bestowed.

If before you returne you could procure a singular good workeman in the arte of Turkish carpet making, you should bringe the arte into this realme, and also thereby increase worke to your company.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 423.

With whom was thon Duke of Burbon, and the Cardinall his brother, a prelate, more mete for a ladyes carpet, then for an ecclesiasticall pulpet.—Hall. Edward IV. p. 234.

There 's a carpet i'th' next room, put it on, with this scarfe over thy face, and a cushion o'thy head, and be ready when I call.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act i. sc. 5.

Reg. What, are those desks fit now? set forth the table,
The carpet and the chayre: where are the news
That were examin'd last?
Id. The Staple of News, Act i. sc. 4.

No carpet knight
That spent his youth in groves, or pleasant bowers;
Or streaching on a couch his lazy limbs,
Sung to his lute such soft and melting notes
As Ovid, nor Anacreon ever knew,
Could work on them, nor once bewitch their sense.
Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act i. sc. 1.

But then refreshed with thy fairy court
I look on Cynthia, and Sirenas sport,
As on two flow'ry carpets that did rise,
And with their grassy green restor'd mine eyes.
B. Jonson. Verses to Drayton.

Uber. I rejoice
Rare princess, that you are not to be won
By carpet courtship, but the sword.
Massinger. The Bashful Lover, Act i. sc. 1.

——— There sat the fair,
A glittering train on costly carpets rang'd,
A group of beauties all in youthful prime,
Of various feature, and of various grace:—Scott. Amwell.

CA'RRION, n. } Fr. Caroyne, charongne; It.
CA'RRION, adj. } Carogna; Sp. Carnmna. All, says Skinner, from the Lat. Caro, carnis, flesh. It is generally now applied to—

Putrified flesh; formerly to the mere carcass, or dead body.

A carrion crow preys upon the carcass, or carrion.

And ther, as ya vncle ded lay, ya foule caroyne he brogte,
And rygt ther by pece mele hakked yt al to nogte.
R. Gloucester, p. 216.

As curres from caroyne, that is cast in diches.
Piers Ploukman. Crede, p. 21.

Thilke mauere of folk ben the flies that folowen the hony, or elles the houndes that folowen the carraine.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The lyfe and beautie of all good dedes is of God, and we are but the carren leaue, we are onelye the instrument whereby God worketh onely but the power is his.
Bible, 1551. Prol. to Leuiticus.

But we fare as doothe rauens and the carein crowes yt neuer medle with any quicke flesh.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 213.

——— Their proud eyes do not see
The radiance of my helmet there, whose beames had instantly
Thrust backe, and all these ditches fild, with carrion of their flesh,
If Agamemnon had been kinder.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

And therewithall the sight did faile my dazeling eyne,
I nothing sawe saue sole Despaire bad me dispatch:
Whom I beheld, she caught the knife from me I weene,
And by her elbow carian death for me did watch.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 68.

But she that much disdain'd this homely fashion,
Doth staine her cheekes with red for very shame
To thrust back his carren corpe without compassion
Reuiling him with many a spiteful name
Harrington. Orlando, b. viii. s. 42.

Of the duties of which persons [formalists] I may say this, that if filth could be defiled, their prayers would defile their fastings, and their fastings their prayers: so that the joining of one to the other, would be nothing else, than the covering up of carrion with the fumes and incense of a dunghill.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

CA'RROT, n. Fr. Carote; It. Carota; Dut. Karote. Of unknown etymology.

Their savoury parsnip next and carrot, pleasing food.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 20.

Like a bunch of ragged carrots stand
The short swoln fingers of thy mistress' hand.
Donne, Elegy 8.

On twigs of hawthorn he regal'd,
On pippin's russet peel,
And when his juicy salads fail'd,
Slic'd carrot pleas'd him well.
Cowper. Epitaph on a Hare.

CA'RRY, v. }
CA'RRIAGE, n. }
CA'RRIER. }
CA'RRYING, n. } Fr. Charier; Sp. Acarrear; Ger. Karren; A. S. Cyran, to turn. Menage derives the Fr. thus, Carrus, carri, carricare, carriare, charier. For the etymology of Carrus, see CAR.

To convey (sc.) on a turning, a wheeled vehicle; generally, to convey, to bear, to remove from one place to another by any means of conveyance or support; as distinguished from—to draw or drag; also simply, to support or sustain.

To bear, to deport, to conduct, to behave.

To carry in or to, is, to import; to carry out, to export; to carry over or across, to transport.

To carry, is frequently used with an ellipsis, as to carry (sub. into effect) is—to effect, to accomplish.

To carry a suit (sub. to a successful issue) is—to gain, to win it.

To carry a fort, is—to gain, to conquer it.

Carriage of the body or person,—deportment, manner of appearance in motion or rest; conduct, behaviour, management.

She lette no morsel from hire lippes falle,
Ne wette hire fingres in hire sauce depe,
Wel coude she carie a morsel, and wel kepe
Thatte no drope ne fell upon hire brest.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 130.

Here may ye seen, min owne dere brother,
The cherl spake o thing, but he thought another.
Let us go forth abouten our viage;
Here win I nothing upon this caringe.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7152.

Loe here bee the barelles of harneys that this traitours had priuelie conuayed in theyr carriage to destroy the noble lordes with all.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 44.

Whensoeuer the said English merchants or any of their factours, shal be desirous to hire carriers to carry their wares to any place of our dominions or cities, it shall be at their choyse and pleasure to hire them the best way they can.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 506.

Sir Fraunces Arragonnys hearyng of that chaunce, apparreled sixe strong men, lyke rusticall people with sackes and baskettes, as carriers of corne and victaile, and sent them to the castle of Cornyll.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 19.

——— No one neglectine was
Of Hector's safetie; all their shields, they coucht about him close;
Rais'd him from earth, and (giving him, in their kind armes repose)
From off the labour, carried him, to his rich chariot
And bore him mourning towards Troy.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

Ulis. He doth rely on none,
But carries on the streame of his dispose
Without obseruance or respect of any.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 3.

Those men are happy
And so are all, are neere her.
I take it, she that carries vp the traine,
Is that old noble lady, Dutchesse of Norfolke.
Id. Henry VIII. Act v. sc. 2.

——— Thus oxen, mules, in chariots strait they put,
Went forth, and an unmeasur'd pile of sylvane matter cut,
Nine daies emploide in cariage.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

His looks imperious, fore'd, yet milde, allur'd
The proud to bow, the humble to be bold:
What fit, reforming, marking every place;
His gallant carriage all the rest did grace.
Stirling. Jonathan.

The very carrier that comes from him to her is a most welcome guest, and if he bring a letter, she will read it twenty times over.—Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p. 524.

Some carry-tale, some placeman, some slight zanie.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

If these should not succeed, then he trusted to the frosts of the following winter, which seldom fail in that country to make all passable and safe for troops and carriages themselves, that in summer would be impassable, either from the waters or depth of soil.—Sir W. Temple. Memoirs, c. 1.

I am of Mr. Cowley's opinion, that so much of dancing at least as belongs to the behaviour and an handsome carriage of the body, is extremely useful, if not absolutely necessary.
Spectator, No. 67.

And is this all? Is this the end
To which these carryings-on did tend.—Hudibras, c. 2.

This being formed, he contrives such a design, or fable, as may be most suitable to the moral; after this he begins to think of the persons, whom he is to employ in carrying on his design; and gives them the manners which are most proper to their several characters
Dryden. Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

The Spaniards, though long accustomed to an arbitrary government, resented this proclamation with great spirit, as an infringement of the common rights of mankind, and made a vigorous struggle against its being carried into execution.—Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. ii. c. 2.

I then affirm that, if in time of war our trade had the good fortune to increase, and at the same time a large, nay the largest proportion of carriage had been engrossed by neutral nations, it ought not in itself to have been considered as a circumstance of distress.—Burke. Late State of the Nation.

It is from their attachment to their native place, and particularly where they have brought up their young, that these birds [pigeons] are employed in several countries as the most expeditious carriers.—Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b iv c.8.

CART, v. }
CART, n. }
CA'RTAGE. }
CA'RTER. }
CA'RTFUL. }
CA'RTWRIGHT. } Lat. Carrus, from the A. S. Cyran; to turn or return.

Chaucer, (Knight's Tale, quoted hereafter,) and G. Douglas, use cart and carter, as chariot and charioteer.

A turning or wheeled vehicle, generally, employed for use in agriculture, or in matters of business, rather than of pleasure.

For ge ben men beter y tagt to schoule and to spade,
To carteslaf and to plowstaf, and a fischyng to wade,
To hamer and to nedle, and to marchandise al so,
Than with sword or hauberk eny batail to do.
R. Gloucester, p. 99.

——— Oure cart shal he drawe
And fetche forth oure victailes.—Piers Ploukman, p. 33.

Thei ben as foure wheels in the foure horsid carte of the lord that bereth him aboute bi prechyng of the Gospel.
Wiclif. Prologue on Matthew.

Behold my blody woundes, depe and wide,
Arise up erly in the morwe tide,
And at the west gate of the toun (quod he)
A carte ful of donge ther shalt thou see,
In which my body is hid priuily.
Do thilke carte arresten boldely.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 1524.

Awake and with the dawning day arise:
To take the western gate thy ready way,
For by that passage they my corps convey:
My corps is in a tumbril laid; among
The filth, and odour, and enclos'd with dung.
That cart arrest, and raise a common cry,
For sacred hunger of my gold I die;
Then shew'd his grisly wounds.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Nought was forgete by th' infortune of Marte
The carter overridden with his carte.
Under the wheel ful low he lay adoun.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2024.

My lord, quod he, whan that the weder is faire,
Withouten winde, or pertourbing of aire,
Let bring a cart-wheele here into this hall;
But loke that it have his spokes all;
Twelf spokes hath a cart wheele cummunly.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7837.

He should beare a sicker eie,
That he to lowe, ne to hie
His cart drive at any throwe
Wherof that he might ouerthrowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

In the meane season by ye diligent labour of ye Lord Barnes, ye pece of ordinaunce was raysed & caried, and furthe was it caried, by this time the French army apered in sight.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

Woe be vnto vayne persones, yt drawe wyckednes vnto thē, as it were wt a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart-rope.—Bible, 1551. Esay, c. 5.

If either of you both loue Katherina,
Because I know you well, and loue you well,
Leaue shall you haue to court her at your pleasure.
Gre. To cart her rather. She's too rough for mee.
Shakespeare. Taming the Shrew, Act i. sc. 1.

But lest I set the horse behind the cart.
I mind to tell each thing in order so
As thou maist see and shew whence sprang my woe.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 60.

News is brought to the Regent, that the French by stratagem of a carter, that with a load of hay coming over the drawbridge, caused the axletree to break, and whilst the porter was ready to help the carter, the porter's braines were beaten out, the town of Ardes surprized, and the Lord Fawconbridge Captain thereof taken prisoner.
Baker. Hen. VI. an. 1449.

The king hath licenc'd certain victuals into the town, and wood upon intreaty of the Cardinal Gondi at twenty-five crowns the cart-full, and a cow eight.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 614.

A sentence well couch'd, takes both the sence and the understanding. I love not those cart-rope speeches, that are longer then the memory of man can fathom.

Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 20.

After these locall names, the most names in number haue been deriued from occupations, or professions, as wright, carturight, shipwright, &c.—Camden. Remains. Surnames.

Another priest, called Sir Thomes Snowdel, whom they nick-named Parson Chicken, was carted through Cheapside for assoiling an old acquaintance of his in a ditch in Finsbury Field, and was at that riding saluted with chamber-pots and rotten eggs.—Strype. Memoirs. Q. Mary, an. 1553.

For though the motion of the cart-wheel is so obvious, and seems so plain a thing, that the carman himself never looks upon it with wonder; yet after Aristotle had taken notice of the difficulty, that occurred about it, this trivial phænomenon has perplexed divers great wits, not only schoolmen, but mathematicians; and continues yet to do so.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 413.

Milliners, summon'd from afar,
Arriv'd in shoals at Temple Bar,
Strictly commanded to import
Cart-loads of foppery from court.

Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv

CA'RTEL, v. } Fr. Cartel, charta, chartella,
CA'RTEL, n. } chartellum, (Menage.) It. Cartello. "A little paper of defiance or challenge for a single combat," (Cotgrave.) Applied to—

Any paper—expressing the terms or conditions upon which any thing is done.

To chartel, in Jonson, is, elliptically, to challenge.

Bob. By the foot of Pharoah, and 'twere my case now I should send him a chartel presently. The bastinado! A most proper and sufficient dependance, warranted by the great Caranza. Come hither. You shall chartel him.

B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act I. sc. 5.

He sware by Saint George they were valiant verses; and commanded them to be shot vpon an arrow into the cittie, as a cartell of challenge.—Camden. Remains. Rythmes.

Though by a cartel that had been settled between the two armies, all prisoners were to be redeemed at a set price, and within a limited time yet the French, having now so many men in their hands, did, without either colour or shame, give a new essay of their perfidiousness for they broke it upon this occasion, as they had often done at sea.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1659.

CA'RTILAGE, n. } Simpliciter a carne
CARTILAGI'NEOUS, adj. } fit carnulago, hinc cartilago, (Vossius.) Fr.
CARTILA'GINOUS. } Cartilage.

A gristle or tendril of the ear or nose, or such a skin as is between the toes of geese or ducks, &c. (Cotgrave.)

In a pigeon, which hath a soft and low note, 'tis [i. e. the wind-pipe] partly cartilaginous, and partly membranous, viz. where the rings meet. In an owle, which hath a good audible note, 'tis more cartilaginous. But that of a jayes, hath hard bones, instead of cartilages: and so of a linnet.

Grew. Cosm. Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

The cartilagineous kind—which by what artifice they poize themselves, ascend and descend at pleasure, and continue in what depth of water they list, is yet unknown to us.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Though I have declared in the beginning of this work, that the means whereby cartilaginous fishes raise and sink themselves in the water, and rest and abide in what depth they please, is not yet certainly known; yet I shall propound a conjecture concerning it.—Id. Ib. pt. ii.

These eye-lids are of excellent use to the eye, serving both for curtains to keep out the light, when it is not desired; which the cartilages that strengthen their edges, and help them to shut very close, enable them the better to do, and to fence the eye from dust, and cold, and smoke, and other outward injuries.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 735.

Talicotius grafted a new one on the remaining part of the grisle or cartilaginous substance, which would sneeze, smell, take snuff, pronounce the letters M or N, in short, do all the functions of a natural nose.—Tatler, No. 260.

CARTOO'N. Fr. Carton; It. Cartone; from the Lat. Charta, paper. The thick paper, (says Cotgrave,) whereon painters draw sometimes. Applied emphatically to the famous Cartoons of Raphael.

There needs no other proof of this truth, than the testimony of every reasonable creature, who has seen the cartons in Her Majesty's Gallery at Hampton-Court, these are representations of no less actions than those of our blessed Saviour and his Apostles.—Spectator, No. 226.

The most considerable and the most esteemed works of Raffaelle are the cartoons, and his fresco works in the Vatican.—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Discourse II.

CA'RTRIDGE. Fr. Cartoach; It. Scartoccio; Lat. Charta, paper.

A charge made ready for any musket or ordinance, (Florio.) A full charge (says Cotgrave,) for a pistol (musket, &c.) put up within a little paper, to be the readier for use. See BORE, for an example from Dryden.

In them she [the bee] builds or forms her cylindrical nests or cases, resembling cartridges, or a very narrow thimble, only in proportion longer, of pieces of rose or other leaves.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

CA'RUCATE. } Lat. Caruca; Fr. Caruc,
CA'RRUGAGE, or } (a plough,) from Carrus,
CRA'RUGAGE. } Vossius thinks. See CAR.

A carrucate of land, says Spelman, is that portion, which is marked out for the labour of one plough, a plough-land. It is also called a Carue, (qv.)

In this roll of Winchester, so most of all called, because it was made after the example of the other, were taxed and set downe, the earledoms, hundreds, tythings, woods, parks, and all farms, in euery territory, or precinct, how many carucates of lande, how many plough-lands, &c.

Stow. William the Conquerour, an. 1080.

Geffrey, Archbishop of York, would not permit the Sheriffe to leuie the dutie called charuoage, that was, three shillings of euerie plough-land within his diocesse.

Holinshed. Chronicle. K. John, an. 1200.

CARVE, v. } Dut. Kerven; Ger. Kerben;
CA'RVER. } A. S. Ceorfan, secare, scindere,
CA'RVING, n. } carpere—

To cut, (whether meat, or copper, or other substance;) to grave or engrave; to cut up in parts or portions, to distribute; to allot portions; also (met.) to cut (sc.) for ourselves, to choose our own portion.

Vor sir William Mautrauers (thonk nabbe he non)
Carf him of fet & hondc, & is limes mani on.

R. Gloucester, p. 560.

The pileres weren ypaint,
And queyntly ycorven, with curious knottes,
With wyndowes wel ywrought, wyde vp alofte.

Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Tho was he corven out of his harneis,
And in a bed ybrought ful fayre and blive,
For he was yet in memorie, and live,
And alway crying after Emelie.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2698.

For in the lond ther n'as no craftes man,
That geometric, or arsmetrike can,
Ne portreiour, ne kervere of images,
That Theseus ne yaf him mete and wages
The theatre for to maken and devise.—Id. Ib. v. 1901.

As well may the moste rude ymage and moste symply wrought, put vs in minde of Christ, & our ladv, and any other saint, as may the most costelve and moste curyous that anye payntour or carver can deuise.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 116.

I us'de thee so, thou lovdst none else; nor any where woldst eate
Till I had crownd my knee with thee, and carued thee tendrest meate.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

Or list us make two striving shepherds sing,
With costly wagers for the victory,
Under Menalcas judge; while one doth bring
A carven bowl wel wrought of beechen tree.

Bp. Hall. Defiance to Envy.

——But yet (Paulina)
Hermione was not so much wrinckled, nothing
So aged as this seemes.
Pol. Oh, not by much.
Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence.
Which lets goe-by some sixteen yeeres and makes her
As she liu'd now.—Shakes. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 3.

The inward spiritual or mystical sense is the gold more precious and more beautiful, that glisters through those cuttings and artificial carvings in the letter.

Henry More. Defence of Cabbala, Introd.

I asked a gentleman the other day that is famous for a good carver (at which acquisition he is out of countenance, imagining it may detract from some of his more essential qualifications) to help me to something that was near him; but he excused himself, and blushing told me, of all things he con'd never carve in his life; tho' it can be proved upon him, that he cuts up, disjoints, and uncases, with incomparable dexterity.—Spectator, No. 475.

Instead of fretting and complaining, that things succeeded otherwise than he expected, he resolves with himself, that that condition, whatever it be, in which he actually is, is indeed best for him, and that which he himself, were he to be the carver of his fortunes, supposing him but truly to understand his own concernments, would chuse for himself above all others.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Each day a sister-lamb is serv'd,
And at the glutton's table, carv'd;
The crashing bones he grinds for food,
And slakes his thirst with streaming blood.

Moore, Fable 6.

——Smooth linden best obeys
The carver's chissel; best his curious work
Displays in all its nicest touches.

Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

CARVE. Fr. Carue. See CARUCATE.

He gave also to Saint Cedda (made by consent of him and King Oswy, Bishop of Lindisfarne) fifty hides of land (a hide, a plough-land, or a carve, I hold clearly equivalent) towards foundation of a monastery.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11. Illustrations.

CASCA'DE, n. Fr. Cascade; It. Cascata, from the Lat. Cadere, casum, to fall.

A fall (sc.) of water; a waterfall.

Those only, who have endured a long series of thirst, and who can readily recal the desire and agitation which the ideas alone of springs and brooks have at that time raised in them, can judge of the emotion with which we eyed a large cascade of the most transparent water, which poured itself from a rock near a hundred feet high into the sea, at a small distance from the ship.—Anson. Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

And streams, as if created for his use,
Pursue the track of his directing wand,
Sinuous or strait, now rapid and now slow,
Now murm'ring soft, now roaring in cascades—
Ev'n as he bids! Th' enraptur'd owner smiles.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

CASE, v. } Fr. Caisse; It. Cassa;
CASE, n. } Sp. Caxa; Dut. Kasse,
CA'SING, n. } kast; Lat. Capsa; a capiendo, says Vossius; yet he CASEHA'RDEN, v. } prefers the Gr. Καμψα, which in Lennep's opinion is pro Καψα, from Καπτω, the future of Καπτειν, cavitate, complecte, capere, to take, to hold. (See CAPSULE.)

That which takes, receives, holds, or contains, whether arrows, (as in Chaucer and G. Douglas, Virgil, b. i.) knives, books, watches, or any thing else. And thus, the skin.

To caseharden,—to harden the case, the outside, the skin, the surface.

To case is used, in Shakespeare, for—to uncase, to strip off the case:—"We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case him."—All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 6.

And with that word, the armes in the cas,
Of the goddesse clatteren fast and ring.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2260.

And now my tongue's vse is to me no more,
Than an vnstringed vyall, or a harpe,
Or like a cunning instrument cas'd vp
Or being open, put into his hands
That knowes no touch to tune the harmony.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 3.

Nine great pieces of ordnance, mounted near the west gate thundered forth a continuall storm, not of single bullets, but of chain-shot and case-shot.

Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1601.

For generally, as with rich furred conies, their cases are farre better than their bodies, and like the bark of a cinnamon tree, which is dearer than the whole bulk, their outward accoutrements are far more pretious than their inward endowments.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 474.

Adding, that in several places the Portuguese kept their great guns cased over, that the dew might not fall upon them, and by its corrosiveness to rust them, as to be apt, after a while, to break in the discharge.

Boyle. Workes, vol. v. p. 634.

But if an hundred watches were to be made by an hundred men, the cases may be assigned to one, the dials to another, the wheels to another, the springs to another.

Spectator, No 232.

Adieu, old fellow, and let me give thee this advice at parting; e'en get thyself case-hardened; for though the very best steel may snap, yet old iron, you know, will rust.

Guardian, No. 95.

The poet, being resolved to save his heroine's honour, has so ordered it, that the king always acts with a great case-knife stuck in his girdle, which the lady snatches from him in the struggle, and so defends herself.

Addison. On Italy. Venice.

—— Like a dart,
Lanch'd from the sinews of a Parthian's arm,
Without reply th' inspired Caryatian flew,
Cas'd as he was in steel. Glover. Athenaid, b. xiii.

The outward casings [of the cathedral of Cadiz] are to be of white marble, the bars of the windows of bronze.
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 23.

CASE, s. } Lat. Cadere, casum, to fall; Fr. Cas; It. and Sp. Caso.
CA'SUAL, adj. } As it fell out, as it turned CA'SUALLY. } out, as it happened, as it came
CA'SUALTY. } to pass,—are equivalent expressions.

The state or condition, in which any thing may befal or happen to be; the state or condition of circumstances, actual or possible.

Casual, i. e. accidental or incidental; unconnected with, independent of, plan, purpose, or design; not foreseen, premeditated or predetermined.

The tything to Rome com that he ysawe was,
That hem hadde ydo schame, heo were glad of that cas
R. Gloucester, p. 83.

And vpon case befel, that through a rout
His eye perced, and so depe it went
Til on Creseide it smote, and there it stent.
Chaucer. Troilus. b. i.

Thinke eke thyselfe to sauen art thou hold;
Such fire by processe, shall of kind cold,
For sens it is but casuell pleasaunce
Some case shal put it out of remembraunce.
Id. Ib b. iv.

But or that he had half his cours ysailed,
No I not why, ne what mischance it ailed,
But casually the shippes bottom rente.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 1607.

But O most miserable case, that when the lighte of God doth shine vnto vs in these daies so bright as it did neuer shine in the remembrance of men, yet so litle zeale, fauor, and loue, should be founde.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

I put case the sea had promised the to be alway in suertie of hir, and the skie cleere wether, the sommer snowes, and the wynter flowers.—Golden Boke, Let. 3.

Not for that I meane
Such a casualty should be seene
Or suche chaunce should fal
Unto our cardinal.—Skelton. Why come ye not to Court.

Also age runneth on a pace which may euery day worse than other suffer displeasure, and is more feeble to sustaine the casualties chaunceing.
Vives. Instruction to Christian Women, b. ii. c. 12.

The law of God, and after it our own laws, and in effect the law of all nations, have made difference between slaughter casual and furious.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 4.

The cause why the children of Israel tooke vnto one man many wiues, might be, least the casualties of warre should in any way hinder the promise of God concerning their multitude from taking effect in them.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, Pref.

—— But like the martlet
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Euen in the force and rode of casualtie.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 9.

Wilmot, about the time of his escape, had by force taken Muckron, his principall seat, as it was casually on fire.
Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1601.

He that is versed in making reflections upon what occurs to him; he that, (consequently,) has the works of nature, and the actions of men, and almost every casualty that falls under his notice, to set his thoughts on work, shall scarce want themes to employ them on.—Boyle. Occas. Refl. s. i. c. 2.

Had Dinocrates really carved Mount Athos into a statue of Alexander the Great, and had the memory of the fact been obliterated by some accident: who could afterwards have proved it impossible, but that it might casually have been formed so.—Bentley, Ser. 5.

Yet on his way, (no sign of grace
For feare in fear are apt to pray,)
To Phœbus he preferr'd his case
And begg'd his aid that dreadful day
Gray. A Long Story.

CA'SEMATE. Fr. Casemate; Sp. Casamata; It Casamatta, of uncertain etymology. See Menage.

Cotgrave calls it, a loop, or loophole in a fortified wall. And Skinner is to the same purport.

—— Secure your casemates,
Here Master Picklocke, sir, your man o' law,
And learn'd attorney, has sent you a bag of munition.
B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act i. sc. 3.

CA'SEMENT. From the It. Casamenta, a building, a small house, with a slight deviation from the meaning, (Skinner.) Junius says, it is also used for the Dut. Kasseüne, jugamentum fenestræ vel ostii; Fr. Chassis de fenestre, a case or frame for a window; and Menage derives chassis from capsa. And thus we are brought round to the English case, itself from capsa. See CASE.

—— And when you hear the drum
And the vile clamour of the wry-neckt fife,
Clamber you not up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publique streete,
To gaze on Christian fooles with varnisht faces.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc 5.

Bel. Who can be sad? out with these tragick lights,
And let the day possess her natural howres.
Teare down these blacks, cast ope the casements wide,
That we may jocondly behold the sunn.
Beaum. & Fletch. Queen of Corinth, Act iii. sc. 2.

For by these casements enter in adulterous thoughts in the mind as they did in David's; and likewise impure thoughts conceived in the heart may discover themselves by the motions of the eye —Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Yet when the new light which we beg for, shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose, if it come not first in at their casements.—Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

CA'SEOUS. Lat. Caseus, a cheese; cheesy.

Dec. 24. This evening I perceived that the caseous part was severed from the butyrous, in the closed receivers as well as in the milk, which, at the same time, I had left exposed to the air.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 587.

CASH, v. } Fr. Casse, caisse; It. Cassa.
CASH, n. } Hence Fr. Caissier, quaissier;
CASHI'ER, n. } It. Cassiere, with us cashier; (q. d.) capsarius; i. e. qui capsam custodit; all from the Lat. Capsa. (Skinner and Menage.) See CASE.

Fr. Casse, Cotgrave says, is "a box, case, or chest; also a merchant's cash or counter." And Sherwood explains cashier, "Qui garde la casse de l'argent d'un merchand." And see the example from Sir William Temple.

Cash is now transferred by usage from the case, which holds the silver or gold, to the silver or gold itself.

Giue mee thy hand.
Nym. I shall haue my noble?
Pist. In cash, most justly payd.
Shakespeare. Henry V. Act ii. sc. 1

Or as a thief bent to unhoord the cash
Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast fear no assault,
In at the window climes or o'er the tiles.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b iv.

Go take other men, though they be able to count and cast up these riches, yet they are but as cash-keepers for merchants that tell over other mens moneys; but for the heir, the possessor himself, for him to tell over all this, is all the while to study his own riches, and so his heart is comforted according to the value that is in them.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. p. 38.

So as this bank is properly a general cash, where every man lodges his mony, because he esteems it safer, and easier paid in and out, than if it were in his coffers at home.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 2.

At the new Exchange they are eloquent for want of cash, but in the city they ought with cash to supply their want of eloquence.—Spectator, No. 156.

I say this in answer to what Sir Roger is pleased to say, that little that is truly noble can be expected from one who is ever pouring on his cash-book or balancing his accompts.
Id. No. 174.

CASH, or } From the Lat. Cassus; (from CASHI'ER, v. } Careo is caritum, whence, (as CA'SSATE. } Priscian teaches, lib. xi.) cassum, in the same manner as from defetiscor instead of defetiscitus, we have defessus. Vossius.) From the Lat. Cassus, which signifies, vain, useless, good for nothing, says Casseneuve, has been formed the Bar. Lat. verb, Casso, cassare; and thence the Fr. Casser, "to cass, to casseer, discharge, turn out of service." It was written cash, as in Goldyng; casseer, as in Warner; and now to quash, (qv.)

To annul or annihilate; to render useless or unserviceable; to dismiss or discharge from service; to disband.

Thre and twenty thousand talents were bestowed here abouts. Furthermore he cashed the old souldiers and supplied their roumes with yong beginners. But such as wer reteined stil, grudging at the dismissing of the old souldiers, required to be cashed theselues also, biddinge him pay thé their wages and not to tell them of their yeres, for seing they wer chosen into warfare together, they thought it but right and duty to be discharged together.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 63.

The ruffians among them, and soldiers cashiered, which be the chief doers, look for spoil: so that it seems no other thing but a plague and a fury among the vilest and worst sort of men.
Strype. The D. of Somerset to Sir P. Hoby, Sept. 1, 1549.

Moreouer, if the Tartars draw homeward, our men must not therefore depart and cassier their bandes, or seperate themselues asunder: because they doe this vpon policie, namely to haue our armie diuided, that they may more securely inuade and waste the countrey.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 63.

After this Richard, the election of three archbis. was cassate at Rome.—Fox. Martyrs, Ed. 3.

He knows that abstinence from marriage was never commanded by any law of Moses, or Christ; and that that other from meats was now left free by Christ,—those special laws under Moses given to the Jews, being now cassate and cancelled by Christ.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii pt. ii. p 177

Certainly they did not think it so needful, as that they would have suspended or cassated the decree.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, s. 6

And (for, perhaps, from such consort
The brutes casseerd will be,)
Three blended bloods of nations three,
Hath giuen vs natures three.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix.

—— Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hath cashier'd Cassio
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3

And so it is likewise with the sinner when once he has cast off the fear of God, and cashiered the sense of religion out of his mind, (which is the best security of mens innocency, and the most effectual curb to keep them from going astray) he presently flies out into all sorts of extravagancy and debauchery, as his temper and inclination does prompt him.
Sharp, vol. vi. Ser 3

All which passages, if we do not acknowledge to have been guided to their respective ends and effects, by the conduct of a superior, and a divine hand, we do by the same assertion cashier all Providence, strip the Almighty of his noblest prerogative, and make God not the governor, but the meer spectator of the world.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

This opinion as I hinted before, supersedes and cassates the best medium we have to demonstrate the being of a Deity, leaving us no other demonstrative proof, but that taken from the innate idea.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Connexions form'd for interest, and endear'd
By selfish views, [are] censur'd and cashier'd.
Cowper. Tirocinium

CASK, n. } Fr. Casque, or caque; Sp.
CA'SKET, v. } Casco, Menage derives thus,
CA'SKET, n. } Cadus, cadecus, cacus, caque. Skinner says from the Lat. Cadus, (see CADE,) or from the Fr. Casse; It. Cassa, capsa, (q. d.) Cassa, capsa, cassica, vel Capsica vini. See CASE.

Casket is the diminutive of cask.

Certain vessels for wine and other liquors are called casks. But caskets are used for depositing letters, trinkets, jewels, &c.

New wine will search to find a vent,
Altho' the cask be sett so strong;
And wit wyll walke when wyll is bent,
Although the way be neuer so long.
Vncertaine Auctors. Where good Wyll is, &c.

And because we be not sure what timber they shall finde there to make caske, we haue laden in these ships 140 tunnes emptie caske, that is 94 tunnes shaken caske, and 46 tunnes whole, and ten thousand hoopes, and 480 wrethes of twigs.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 300.

No alcumist dame Nature can displace,
Except that God doth giue abundant grace.
The caske will haue a taste for euermore,
With that wherewith it seasoned was before.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 193.

Ber. I haue writ my letters, casketted my treasure,
Giuen order for our horses.
Shakespeare. All's Well, Act ii. sc. 5.

A garter or a bracelet of hers is more precious than any Saints relique, he lays it up in his casket, (O blessed reliques) and every day will kisse it.—Burton. Anat. of Melan. p. 524.

Yet this notice of former superstitions was gained by this barbarity, that among a great number of rotten carcasses were found caskets full of pardons safely folded and lapt together in the bottom of their graves.
Strype. Edw. VI. an. 1549

——— With that
A German oft has swill'd his throat, and sworn,
Deluded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd
The generous rummer, whilst, the owner, pleas'd,
Laughs only at his guests, thus entertain'd
With foreign vintage from his cider cask.
Philips. Cider, b. ii.

——— Maid, farewell!
I leave the casket that thy virtue held,
To him whose breast sustains it; more belov'd,
Perhaps more worthy, yet not loving more,
Than did thy wretched Cleon.
Mason. The English Garden, b. iv.

CASK, n. } Fr. Casque; Sp. Casco. A hel-
CA'SQUET. } met, or head-piece. Menage and Skinner, from the Lat. Cassis, though the latter observes that in Sp. Casco (and also in Fr. Casque) testam notare; and what is cassis, but capitis testa? See the preceding CASK.

A case (sc.) for the head; an enclosure, cover or protection for the head.

——— Can this cock-pit hold
The vastie fielas of France! Or may we cramme
Within this woodden O, the very caskes
That did affright the ayre at Agincourt.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Ch. 1.

Now with thick clouds th' enlighten'd pavement swarms,
The fireman sweats beneath his crooked arms,
A leathern casque his ventrous head defends,
Boldly he climbs where thickest smoke ascends;
Mov'd by the mother's streaming eyes and prayers,
The helpless infant through the flame he bears
Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

First at his foe Leophron aim'd a stroke;
But on his polish'd casque, the falchion broke:
From the smooth steel the shiver'd weapon sprung;
Aloft in air its hissing splinters sung
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. iii.

CA'SSOCK, n. Fr. Jaque, casaque; It. Giacco, casacco; Sp. Jaca, casaca; Ger. Kasak, jacke; Dut. Kasacke, kajacke, jacke; Eng. Cassock and jack. Junius adopts from Vossius, that the parent of all these words is the Gr. Κασα, whence the Lat. Casa, applied generally to any thing which covers, (sive domus est, sive vestis—Wachter); and that jack is corrupted from kajacke. (See Vossius de Vitiis Ser. 3. 3. in v. Casabula.) Vossius is supported by other learned names. (See Menage and Wachter.) Of Jack, jaque, &c. Skinner says, quod si omnia a Lat. sagum. Wachter prefers to deduce jacke from the Gr. Ιαγη, a covering. A cassock, tunica longior, is—

A long cloak or vestment; used by a soldier or clergyman.

——— But when Ulysses
Againe shall greet vs, he shall put thee on Both coat and cassocke.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

I stretched forth mine arme at length, and swinging the skirt of my cassocke on high, round about my head, by this usual signe shewed, that the enemies were at hand: and so joyning with them, rode amaine, with my horse ready by this time to tyre.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 114.

Your broad-way sons would never be too nice
To close with Calvin, if he paid their price;
But rais'd three steeples higher, would change their note,
And quit the cassock for the canting coat.
Dryden. The Hind & Panther, pt. iii.

I put on a cassaque of one of the Marquis's guards, and with my page, the Duke of Nieuburg's guard, and Colonel Majette, a Flemish officer in the Munster service, I took horse at the back door of my inn.
Sir W. Temple. To Sir J. Temple.

It would be right too, let me tell you,
To buy a gown of new prunella;
And bid your maid, that art who knows,
Repair your cassoc at the elbows.
Cawthorn. A Letter to a Clergyman.

CAST, v. }
CAST, n. }
CA'STER, n. }
CA'STING, n. }
CA'STLING, n. }
CA'STAWAY, n. }
CA'STAWAY, adj. } Sw. Kasta; Dan. Kaste. Ihre thinks that we owe this word to the Normans, since he cannot discover that our ancestors, the A. S. ever used it. With English prepositions subjoined, it is equivalent to certain compounds of the Lat. Jacere, to throw.

Thrown or cast from or away from; abject.

Thrown or cast down, dejected, (met.)

To cast or throw out; to eject, to expel, (lit. and met.)

To cast or throw in; to inject, (lit. and met.)

To cast or throw against; to object, (lit. and met.)

To cast forth or forward; to project, (lit. and met.)

To cast back; reject, (met.)

To cast under; to subject, (met.)

It has many consequential usages, and is employed with various subauditions; some of the former are derived from wrestling, where the party cast or thrown, is the defeated, beaten, vanquished party: and thus to cast, is—

To defeat, to beat, to vanquish, to overcome, to overpower. And further—

To decide the victory, to determine it, to declare or pronounce to be defeated or overcome, to condemn. And thus generally—

To decide or determine; to condemn.

To cast an account,—from the old manner of calculating, (see to CALCULATE,)—is, to tell the sum, to reckon, to compute.

To cast (sc.) fused metal into a mould,—is to form or fashion the mould or model; to mould or model; to fix or settle the form, the features, the parts or proportions, and even the hue, or complexion.

To cast the mind, or thoughts,—is, to reflect, meditate, consider, contrive; to project.

Al in on company heo wenden worth ther
In the see with god wynd, so that at the laste
In to the on ende of Gasycone the wynd here schippes caste. R. Gloucester, p. 15.

Somme wyth lance, some wyth suerd, wythoute vylenye
Wyth pleyynge at tables, other atte checkere,
Wyth castynge other wyth asetynge. Id. p. 192.

Ion answerede to him and seide, maister, we sighen oon castynge out feendis in thi name which sueth not us, and we have forbiden him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

John answered him, saying, master, we sawe one castynge out deuils in thy name, whiche foloweth not vs, and we forbad because he folowed vs not.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

That in these women men may all day find
There as they cast her hert there it dwelleth.
Chaucer. Legend of Lucrece.

And therefore, I pray you, that in this necessitee and in this nede ye caste you to overcome your herte.
Id. Tale of Melibeus.

This sely carpenter goth forth his way,
Ful oft he said alas, and wa la wa,
And to his wif he told his privetee,
And she was ware, and knew it bet than he
What all this queinte cast was for to sey.
Id. The Miller's Tale, v. 3610.

Min bin also the maladies colde,
The derke tresons, and castes olde
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2470.

This Acteon, as he well might
Aboue all other cast his chere.—Gower. Con. A. b. i

A worcke that is made with ye hande of ye craftesman and the caster, clothed with yelowe sylcke and scarlet.
Bible, 1551. Jeremy, c. 10.

But when they drawe nye vnto the mountaynes, the sling casters came out agaynst them.—Id. Judith, c. 6.

——— Apollo's powre prevail'd,
And rapt Agenor from his reach, whom quietly he plac't
Without the skirmish, casting mists to save from being chac't. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Of all his course when casting up the scroules,
They finde each moment did some harme conspire,
That, (even when dying,) he distress'd weake soules,
So that no end could mitigate his ire.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The tenth Houre.

Three ciuill broyles, bred of an ayery word,
By thee old Capulet and Mountague,
Haue thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets,
And made Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their graue beseeming ornaments
To wield old partizans.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 1.

And when the mind is quickned, out of doubt
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake vp their drowsie graue, and newly moue
With casted slough, and fresh legeritie.—Id. Hen. V. Ch. 4.

Others there be who make their boast and report with joy unto others, how in the partition of their patrimony they have by cunning caste conny-catched their bretheren, and ouer-wrought them so by their cauteious circumvention, fine wit and alie policies, as that they have gone away with the better part by odds.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 149.

Boy. Why do you looke on vs, and shake your head,
And call vs orphans, wretches, castawayes.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act ii. sc. 2.

Where no good gifts haue place, nor bear the sway,
What are the men, but wilful castaway.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 112.

We have in one place a kind of earth, which is so fine to make moulds for goldsmiths, and casters of metall, that a load of it was worth fiue shillings thirtie yeares agone.
Holinshed. Desc. of England, c. 10.

We govern this war as an unskilful man does a casting-net: if he has not the right trick to cast the net off his shoulder, the leads will pull him into the river.
Selden. Table Talk. War.

That no person whatsoever shall be admitted without a visible quearity [queerness] in his aspect, or peculiar cast of countenance, of which the president and officers for the time being are to determine, and the president to have the casting voice.—Spectator, No. 17.

Observing one person behold another, who was an utter stranger to him, with a cast in his eye, which, methought, expressed an emotion of heart very different from what could be raised by an object so agreeable as the gentleman he looked at, I began to consider, not without some secret sorrow, the condition of an envious man.—Id. No. 19.

The business men are chiefly conversant in, does not only give a certain cast or turn to their minds, but is very often apparent in their outward behaviour, and some of the most indifferent actions of their lives.—Id. No. 197.

Nature herself has assigned, to every emotion of the soul, its particular cast of the countenance, tone of voice, and manner of gesture.—Id. No. 541.

Upon Cheke's learning also, he casts a blur, when he says, that for his other sufficiencies, besides skill in Latin and Greek, he was pedantic enough, as appears by his books.
Strype. Memoirs, b. ii. c. 28.

If he, whom the world judges a saint, may yet be in the gall of bitterness and a son of perdition, is it possible that such a one, whose actions proclaim him even to the world for a reprobate and a cast-away, should yet indeed be a pious and sincere person.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 13, 14.

As politic as those who, when the moon
As bright and glorious in a river shone,
Threw casting-nets with equal cunning at her,
To catch her with, and pull her out o' the water.
Butler. The Elephant in the Moon.

They have upon casting up their accounts found, that the sufferings of this present life are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 12.

All was pure within: no fell remorse,
Nor anxious casting-up of what might be,
Alarm'd his peaceful bosom. Blair. Grave.

CA'STIGATE, v. }
CASTIGA'TION. }
CA'STIGATOR. }
CA'STIGATORY. } Fr. Chastier; It. Castigare; Sp. Castigar; Dut. Kastüden. Perottus thinks the Lat. Castigare, to be composed of Castum agere;

To chasten, to purify, to amend, to correct, to chastise.

If thou didst put this sowre cold habit on
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: thoud'st courtier be againe
Wert thou not beggar.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Violent events do not always argue the anger of God: even death itselfe is, to his servants a fatherly castigation.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Seduced Prophet.

What aselike impudence is it then, for any mere vainglorious, and selfe-loving puffe, that every where may read these inimitable touches of our Homer's mastery, any where to oppose his arrogant and ignorant castigations?
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

In these and all other things whatsoever, when by nature and the laws we are quit from the empire of the father, and that power which is called castigation, or the power of command and coercion, we are still tied to fear him with a reverential fear, and to obey him with the readiness of piety in all things where reverence and piety are to have regard and prevail, that is wherever it is possible and reasonable to obey.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

The Latin castigator hath observed, that the Dutch copy is corrupted and faulty here and in divers places elsewhere
Barnewell. Apologie, (with marginal Castigations, 1618.)

Aristophanes, in his Comedy of Peace, reckons the feast of Adonis among the chief festivals of the Athenians. The Syrians observed it with all the violence of grief, and the greatest cruelty of self-castigation.
Langhorne. The Death of Adonis, Note.

For which offence she (a common scold) may be indicted: and if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed in a certain engine of correction called the trebucket, castigatory, or cucking stool, which in the Saxon language is said to signify the scolding stool.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 13.

CA'STLE, n. } A.S. Castel; Fr. Chateau; It. Castello; Sp. Castillo.
CA'STELLAN.
CA'STLED.
CA'STLE-BUILDER.
CA'STLE-BUILDING, n. } Castellum, parvum castrum. Castrum a casâ (a cot, a hut) deducitur, quod sit conjunctio quædam casarum, (Perottus.) Eo casæ dictæ sunt olim in Romano exercitu, unde castra, (Scaliger.) Chasteau, Cotgrave says—

A castle is properly a house furnished with towers, encompassed by walls and ditches; and strengthened by a mount or donjon in the middest.

Castle-building,—met. (see the quotations from Burton and Spectator)—

Raising lofty structures, forming grand projects, with no foundation to rest them upon.

This rede folk of Trole ouer come were at the laste,
And flow into her castles.—R. Gloucester, p. 19.

And he commaundide knyghtis to go doun, and to take him fro the myddil of hem, and to lede hym into casteis.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 23.

[And he] commaunded the souldiers to go doune, and to take him fromc amonge them and to bringe him into the castell.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Pride of the table appeareth in excesse of divers meates and drinkes, and namely swiche maner bake metes and dishe metes brenning of wilde fire, and peinted and castelled with paper, and semblable wast, so that it is abusion to thinke.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Of this castell was castellayne
I. la the kynges chamberlaine
A knightly man after his lawe.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

I build great castles in the skies,
Whose tender turrets, but of glasse,
Are straight oreturn'd with every wind,
And rear'd and raz'd, yet without hands.
Stirling. Sonnets, s. 6.

When I goe musing all alone,
Thinking of divers things fore-known,
When I build castles in the aire,
Void of sorrow and void of fear,
Pleasing myselfe with phantasmes sweet,
Me thinks the time runnes very fleet.
Burton. Anat. of Mel. The Author's Abstract.

It was my chance in walking all alone,
That ancient castle-crowned hill to scale,
Which proudly overlookes the lowly vale.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 776.

Seuen of the same against the castle-gate,
In strong intrenchments he did closely place,
Which with incessant force and endless hate,
They battered day and night, and entrance did awate.'
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11. s. 6.

The southern coast, with most of the inland parts thereunto adjacent, were wholly subdued and secured by fortifying camps, building castles, and planting many colonies.
Sir W. Temple. Introd. to Hist. of England.

I am unhappily far gone in building, and am one of that species of men who are properly denominated castle-builders, who scorn to be beholden to the earth for a foundation, or dig in the bowels of it for materials; but erect their structures in the most unstable of elements,—the air,—fancy alone laying the line, marking the extent, and shaping the model.—Spectator, No. 167.

A dissertation on castle-building may not only be serviceable to myself, but to all architects who display their skill in the thin element.—Id. Ib.

Through these a river rolls its winding flood,
Adorn'd with various tufts of rising wood.
Here half conceal'd in trees a cottage stands,
A castle there the opening plain commands.
Littleton. Jealousy, Ecl. 3.

——— Late may it there remain!
With promise fair, as now, (more fair what heart
Parental craves!) of long, transmissive worth,
Proud Warwick's name, with growing fame to grace,
And crown, with lasting joy, her castled hill.
Jago. Edge Hill. Noon, b. ii.

Regard, ye justices of peace!
The castle barber's piteous case
And kindly make some snug addition,
To better his distrest condition.
Warton. The Castle Barber's Soliloquy.

CASTRAMETA'TION. } Castra, metari; to measure out a camp.
CASTRE'NSIAL.

Sixty miles, is the measure of three daves journey, according unto military marches, or castrensial mansions.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden.

Between Chadlington and Sarsden is also an unmentioned camp, either Saxon or Danish, for both are concerned in this question, and their castrametation, even under the most practicable and commodious circumstances of ground, is sometimes ambiguous.—Barton. Hist. of Kiddington, p. 50.

CA'STRATE, v. } Varro thinks that castrare is manifestly from castus, quòd castrando vis libidinis extinguitur. Used metaphorically—
CASTRA'TION, n.

To cut out, to strike out, to exterminate, to expunge.

What I have here said is not only in regard to the publick, but with an eye to my particular correspondent, who has sent me the following letter, which I have castrated in some places upon these considerations.—Spectator, No. 179.

The argument then, in your form, will stand thus: Who can deny but that force, indirectly, and at a distance may, by castration, do some service towards bringing men to embrace that chastity, which otherwise they would never acquaint themselves with. Thus you see castration may, indirectly, and at a distance, be serviceable towards the salvation of men's souls.
Locke. Second Letter. On Toleration.

CA'STREL. See KESTREL.

CA'SUAL. See CASE.

CA'SUIST, v. } Fr. Casuiste; It. Casuista; Sp. Casuista. (See CASE.)
CA'SUIST, n.
CASUI'STICAL.
CA'SUISTRY. } A casuist is—
One learned, skilled in cases, (sc.) of conscience; dexterous, subtle in arguing upon them.

And where he sets us in a fair allowance of way, with honest liberty and prudence to our guard, we never leave subtilizing and casuisting till we have strained and pared that liberal path into a razor's edge to walk on, between a precipice of unnecessary mischief on either side; and starting at every false alarm, we do not know which way to set a foot forward with manly confidence and Christian resolution through the confused ringing in our ears of panic scruples and amazements.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Div. b. ii. c. 20.

Then subtile doctors Scriptures made their prize,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each others eyes.
Denham. The Progress of Learning.

For that is a fixed rule among the casuists, that an infinite number of venial sins do not amount to one mortal, and consequently though they have obliquity in them, yet they do not put a man out of the favour of God.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

The truth of this assertion depends upon that known rule of casuistical divinity, that it is a greater sin to omit a known duty altogether, than to perform that duty as well as we can, though with much unworthiness.—Sharpe, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

There is a generation of men, who have framed their casuistical divinity to a perfect compliance with all the corrupt affections of man's nature, and by that new invented engine of the doctrine of probability, will undertake to warrant and quiet the sinners conscience in the commission of any sin whatsoever, provided there be but the opinion of one learned man to vouch it.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

However he [Jeremy Taylor] being a person of most wonderful parts, and like to be an ornament thereunto he was dispensed with, and thereby obtained in that house [All Souls] much of that learning, wherewith he was enabled to write casuistically.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night:
See skulking truth to her old cavern fled
Mountains of casuistry heap'd o'er her head.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iv.

Sift then yourself, I say, and sift again,
Glean the pernicious tares from out the grain;
And ask thy heart, if custom, nature's heir,
Hath sown no undiscover'd fern-seed there;
This be our standard then, on this we rest,
Nor search the casuists for another test.
Smart. The Horatian Canons of Friendship.

See vast Colmbria's comments pil'd on high;
In heaps Soncinas, Sotus, Sanchez lie;
For idle hours, Sa's idle casuistry.
Hart. An Essay on Satire.

CAT, n. } Fr. Chat; It. Gatto; Sp. Gato; Mid. Gr. Κατος; Mid. Lat. Catus, catta, cattus; A.S. Cat; Dut. Kat; Ger. Katze; Sw. Katt, katta. Catta, felis, a cat, is as old as Martial, (lib. xiii. ep. 69.) Wachter observes that this word is derived by many learned men from the Ger. Wachten, (also written ge-wachten,) to watch; whence the Fr. Guetter, to watch; and from guetter, he adds, Du Cange and Skinner have not hesitated to deduce cat. Others refer to the Lat. Catus, acutum videns, sharp-sighted.
CA'T'S-PAW.
CA'TEAL, n.
CA'TERWAUL.
CA'TISH, adj.
CA'TLING.

Cat's-paw,—(common in vulgar speech, but not in writing,)—the tool, the instrument; derived probably from the Fable, in which the Ape employs the Cat to pick the chestnuts from the hot coals with her paw, while he is quietly cracking them.

Catipan,—to turn catipan, Skinner interprets deficere, transfugere, αποστατειν, to fall off, to apostatize. But see the example from Bacon.

Cat-stick,—Mr. Gifford believes to be what is now called buck-stick, used by children in the game of tip-cat or kit-cat. See Catipan and Cat-stick in Nares.

Ich sigge it for me quath the mous:
Shal neuer the cat ne the kyton by my consail be grevede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 10.

Thou sayst also, I walk out like a cat;
For who so wolde senge the cattes skin,
Than wol the cat wel dwellen in hire in;
And if the cattes skin be sleke and gay,
She wol nat dwellen in hous half a day,
But forth she wol, or any day be dawed,
To shew her skin, and gon a caterwawed.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5930

Ye save well quod he, but yet as women saye, somewhat it was alway that y^e cat winked whan her eye was oute.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 241.

And vnto the catte of the mountain, [Daniel compareth the] vnstedfast kingdome of the Grekes.—Bale. Image, pt ii.

But, as an old booke saith, who will assay
About the cats necke to hang on a bell,
Had first need to cut the cats clawes away,
Lest if the cat be curst, and not tam'd well,
She with her nailes may claw him to the fell.
So putting the bell about the cats necke,
I vnadvised caught a cruell checke.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 283.

There is a cunning, which we in England call, the turning of the cat in pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him.
Bacon. Ess of Cunning

Goe charge my goblins that they grinde their joynts
With dry convulsions, shorten vp their sinewes
With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them,
Then pard, or cat o'mountaine.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keepe here! If my ladie haue not call'd vp her steward Maluolio, and bid him turne you out of doores, neuer trust me.
Id. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 3.

———Vnder which bushes shade
A lyonnesse, with vdders all drawn drie,
Lay cowching head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stirre.
Id. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 3.

If any knowledge resteth after death
In ghosts of birds, when they have left to breathe,
My darling's ghost shall know in lower place
The vengeance falling on the cattish race.
For never cat nor catling I shall find,
But mew shall they in Pluto's palace blind.
Drummond. Phillis on the Death of her Sparrow.

Page. You, sirrah sheep's-head
With a face cut on a cat-stick, do you hear.
Messenger. The Maid of Honour, Act ii. sc. 2

———Some
Sovereign places held among the watry train,
Of cat-tails made them crowns, which from the sedge doth grow,
Which neatly woven were.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 20.

If cat-ey'd, then a Pallas is their love,
If freckled, she's a party colour'd dove.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. iv.

Our mountebank has laid a deeper train,
His cant, like merry Andrew's noble vein,
Cat-calls the sects to draw them in again.
Id. Prol. to the Pilgrim.

Another virtuoso of my acquaintance will not allow the cat-call to be older than Thespis, and is apt to think it appear'd in the world soon after the ancient comedy; for which reason it has still a place in our dramatick entertainments: nor must I here omit what a very curious gentleman, who is lately returned from his travels, has more than once assured me, namely, that there was lately dug up at Rome the statue of a Momus, who holds an instrument in his right hand, very much resembling our modern cat-call.
Spectator, No. 361.

You dread reformers of an impious age,
You awful cat-o'-nine-tails to the stage,
This once be just, and in our cause engage.
To gain your favour, we your rules obey,
And treat you with a moral piece to-day.
Vanburgh. Prologue to the False Friend.

It indeed appeared a little odd to me, to see so many persons of quality of both sexes, assembled together at a kind of catter-wawling, for I cannot look upon the performance to have been any thing better, whatever the musicians themselves might think of it.—Spectator, No. 361.

Your petitioner, [Job Chanticleer,] most earnestly implores your immediate protection from the insolence of the rabble, the batteries of catsticks and a painful lingering death.
Tatler, No. 134.

The hapless nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first and then a claw,
With many an ardent wish,
She stretch'd in vain to reach the prize;
What female heart can gold despise?
What cat's averse to fish?
Gray. On the Death of a favourite Cat.

CATABA'PTIST. The quotation explains the word.

The name Anabaptist is derived from the preposition ανα, and βαπτιζω, and signifieth a re baptizer; or at least such an one who alloweth of, and maintaineth re baptizing, they are called also Catabaptists, from the preposition κατα, and βαπτιζω, signifying an abuser or prophaner of baptism. For indeed every Anabaptist is also a Catabaptist; the reiteration of that sacrament of our entrance into the church, and seal of our new birth in Christ, is a violation and depravation of that holy ordinance.—Featly. Dippers Dipt, p. 23.

CATACHRE'STICAL, adj. } Fr. Catachrese, catachrestique;
CATACHRE'STICALLY. } Gr. Καταχρασθαι, (from κατα and χρασθαι,) to use against or contrary, (sc.) to its purpose; to abuse.

Fr. Catachrese, "the abuse or necessary use of one word for lack of another more proper," (Cotgrave.)

The first a catachrestical and far derived similitude, it [the mandrake] holds with man, that is, in a bifurcation or division of the root into two parts, which some are content to call thighs.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, p. 105.

I ask you if one of them does not perpetually pay us with clenches upon words and a certain clownish kind of raillery? If now and then he does not offer at a catecresis or Cleveiandism, wresting and torturing a word into another meaning.—Dryden. An Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

Sin never thrives, unless it be in the most catachrestical and improper way of speaking in the world.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

Where, in divers places of holy writ, the denunciation against groves is so express, it is frequently to be taken but catachrestically.—Evelyn, b. iv. s. 4.

CA'TACLYSM. Gr. Κατακλυσμος, diluvium, from κατα, and κλυζειν, abluere, diluere, to wash away. A deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal was such, as either held, that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, or, &c.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 217.

CA'TACOMBS, n. Fr. Catacombes; It. Catacomba; from κατα and κυμβος, a hollow.
See the quotation from Eustace.

On the other side of Naples are the catacombs. These must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches, as an eminent author of our own country imagines. But upon examining them I find they were each of them stopp'd up; without doubt as soon as the corps was laid in it.
Addison. On Italy. Naples.

There has lately been found a human tooth in a catacomb, which has engaged a couple of convents in a law suit, each of them pretending that it belonged to the jaw bone of a saint, who was of their order.—Tatler, No. 129.

The catacombs are subterranean streets or galleries from four to eight feet in height, from two to five in breadth, extending to an immense and almost unknown length, and branching out into various walks. The catacombs were originally excavated in order to find that earth or sand called at present puzzolana, and supposed to form the best and most lasting cement. Such lone, unfrequented caverns, afforded a most commodious retreat to the Christians, during the persecutions of the three first centuries. In them therefore they held their assemblies, celebrated their holy mysteries, and deposited the remains of their martyred brethren. For the latter purpose they employed niches in the sides of the wall, placed there the body with a vial filled with the blood of the martyr, or perhaps with some of the instruments of his execution, and closed up the mouth of the niche with thin bricks or tiles.—Eustace. Tour through Italy, vol. ii. c. 3.

CA'TADUPE, n. Fr. Cataduppe; from κατα, and δουπος, sonitus rei allisæ, the sound of any thing dashed, (Lennep.) Used by Homer to express the crash of falling trees. Applied to certain—
Falls of the Nile; and also to those who live near them.

Here and there, and ever and anon hitting upon islands, and stirred as it were with so many provocations, and at last inclosed and shut within mountaines, and in no place carrieth he [the Nile] a rougher and swifter streame, whiles the water that he beareth, hasteneth to a place of the Æthyopians, called Cataduppi, where in the last fall amongst the rockes that stand in his way, he is supposed not to runne, but to rush downe with a mightie noise.
Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 9.

Mem. Our ears are so well acquainted with the sound, that we never mark it. As I remember, the Egyptian Catadupes never heard the fall of Nilus, because the noise was so familiar to them.—Brewer. Lingua, Act iii. sc. 7.

CA'TALOGUE, n. } Gr. Καταλογος; Lat.
CA'TALOGUE, v. } Catalogus; Fr. Catalogue; It. and Sp. Catalogo, from κατα, and λεγειν, to gather, to collect.

To collect, (sc.) the names or descriptions, or both; to enumerate, to record them.

And because the name, office and dignitie of the masters general, or great masters of Prussia could otherwise have been vtterly darke and vnknown to the greater part of readers, I haue set downe immediately before the first Prussian ambassage, pagina 144, a brief and orderly catalogue of them all.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. To the Reader.

Beta the dream and Synod cites,
And catalogues the navall knights.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad. Argument to b. ii.

Saint Maud here not the least, though she be set the last,
And scarcely over-match'd by any that is past,
Whom likewise for a saint those reverend ayes chose
With whom we at this time our catalogue will close.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

Every man is ready to give in a long catalogue of those virtues and good qualities he expects to find in the person of a friend, but very few of us are careful to cultivate them in ourselves.—Spectator, No. 385.

If religion is thrown into the quarrel, the most innocent acts are catalogued with sins.—Walpole. Anecd. vol. iii. c. 1.

CA'TAPHRACT. It. Catapatta; Sp. Catapates; Gr. Καταφρακτος, καταφρασσειν, from κατα, and φρασσειν, to block up, to protect, to fortify. Undique armis munitus. Horsemen, cataphract, are well described in the quotation from Ammianus.

And the men of armes [cataphracti equites] here and there entermingled on bard horses, whom the Persians use to call Calibinarii, harnessed all over with good corselets, and bard about with guards of steele; so as one would have taken them for images finely polished by the hand-worke of Praxiteles, and not for men indeed: about whom also there went thin plated hoopes, made fit and handsome for the bending of their bodies, and running all over their limmes; so that which way soever they had need to stirre and moove their joynts, the apparell or habilment would agree thereto, the joyning thereof was so meet, and served so well every way.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 63.

——— Immediately
Was Samson as a public servant brought,
In their state livery clad, before him pipes
And timbrels, on each side armed guards,
Both horse and foot, before him and behind
Archers and slingers, cataphracts and speares.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

CA'TAPLASM, n. Fr. Cataplasme; It. Cataplasma; Sp. Cataplasma; Gr. Καταπλασμα, from κατα, and πλασσειν, to form or mould. Applied (medically)—
To substances formed or moulded into one mass; a poultice or plaster.

Hee writeth moreover that if they [turnips] be roasted or baked under the ashes and so incorporat with grease, they will make a notable good cataplasm for the gout and joynteach.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 3.

I bought an vnction of a mountebanke
So mortall, I but dipt a knife in it,
Where it drawes blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that haue vertue
Vnder the moone, can saue the thing from death,
That is but scratcht withall.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

For (where he was the god of eloquence,
And subtiltie of metals) they dispence
His spirits, now in pills, and ecke in potions,
Suppositories, cataplasms and lotions.
B. Jonson. The Voyage Itself.

CA'TAPULT. Fr. Catapulte; It. Catapulta; Sp. Catapulta; Lat. Catapulta; Gr. Καταπελτης, from κατα, and παλλειν, to shake, to brandish, to hurl.

An engine from which, originally, darts (tela), subsequently stones and other hard and heavy missiles, were thrown.

The Syrians invented the catapult.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

In the rifling of the campe, the Apollonians met with catapults and balists, and other engines provided for the assault of the citie.—Id. Livie, p. 537.

CA'TARACT, n. Fr. Cataracte; Sp. Catarates; Gr. Καταρακτη, præruptus, ac præceps in flumine locus, (Vossius.) Καταρασσειν, from κατα, and ῥασσειν, tundere, collidere, to beat or dash. Applied to—
The dash of a waterfall; to the waterfall itself. Also applied to a disease of the eye, (quasi καταρατταν, confounding the sight.)

——— Nor so much hereafter shall be spoke
Of that (but lately found) Guianian Oronoque,
Whose cataract a noise so horrible doth keep,
That it even Neptune frights.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

They say also that this ceremonie would be precisely observed, that in the very place where this plant [the polium] is found, so soon as it is gathered it should be hanged presently about the neck of the partie, with a special care that it touch not the ground first, and then it is an excellent remedie for the cataract in the eye.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 20.

Now this river Nilus running along by the parts of Æthiopia, having also gone through divers names, which many nations have given him, as he passeth along the earth, with a most rich exundation, commeth at length to the cataracts, that is to say certain steep and broken rocks, downe which as hee falleth, he seemeth to rush rather than to run.—Id. Ammianus, p. 211.

It is an old tradition, that those that dwell near the cataracts of Nilus, are strucken deaf: but we find no such effect, in canoniers nor millers, nor those that dwell upon bridges.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 276.

A maid of about eighteen years of age, having by a couple of cataracts, that she brought with her into the world, lived absolutely blind from the moment of her birth; being brought to the free use of her eyes, was so ravished at the surprising spectacle of so many various objects, as presented themselves to her unacquainted sight, that almost every thing she saw transported her with such admiration and delight, that she was in danger to loose the eyes of her mind by those of her body, and expound that mystical Arabian proverb, which advises, to shut the window, that the house may be light.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 6.

But when o'er rugged cliffs and ways unev'n
In steepy cataracts thou 'rt headlong driv'n,
Thy rushing waves, resisted, fiercer fly,
And batter'd froth rebounding fills the sky;
The hills remurmur with the dashing sound,
Thy billows rude triumphant far around,
And rear their conquering heads with hoary honours crown'd.
Hughes. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

CATA'RRH, n. } Fr. Catarrhe; It. Catarro;
CATA'RRHAL. } Sp. Catarro; Gr. Καταῤῥειν,
CATA'RRHOUS. } from κατα, and ῥεειν, to flow.
A defluxion.
The adj. are used by medical writers.

The spirite of gluttony, tryumphynge amonge vs in his glorious chariotte, callyd welfare, dryuynge vs afore hym, as his prisoners, into his dungeon of surfet, where we are tourmented with catarrhs, feuers, &c.
Sir T. Elyot. Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 25.

A lazar-house it seem'd, wherein were laid
Numbers of all diseas'd, all maladies,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

CATA'STROPHE, n. Fr. Catastrophe; It. Catastrofe; Sp. Catastrophe; Gr. Καταστροφη, from κατα, and στρεφειν, to turn.

A turning about; a revolution; generally applied to the final turn or change of events, the change which produces the final event.

For all mans life me seemes a tragedie,
Full of sad sights and [illegible] catastrophees;
First comming to the world with weeping eye,
Where all his dayes, like dolorous trophees,
Are heap'd with spoyles of fortune and of feare,
And he at last laid forth on balefull beare.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses. Melpomene.

Dear friend, be silent and with patience see
What this mad times' catastrophe will be.
Drayton. To Mr. W. Browne.

At the Earl's end I was abroad, but when I came home, (though little was left for writers to glean after Judges,) yet I spent some curiosity to search what it might be that could precipitate him [the Earl of Essex] into such a prodigious catastrophe.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 180.

At Abingdon he [the Prince of Orange] was surprised with the news of the strange catastrophe of affairs now at London, the king's desertion, and the disorders which the city and neighbourhood of London were fallen into.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1688.

When a man with a steady faith looks back on the great catastrophe of this day, with what bleeding emotions of heart must he contemplate the life and sufferings of his deliverer!—Spectator, No. 356.

CATCH, v. } In Sw. Katsa is instrumentum piscatorium, (Ihre.) Junius says, akin to Dut. Ketsen, (to chase.) And he adds, Κατεχειν, (to detain, to obtain, to occupy,) borrows its tenses from the unused theme Κατασχεω, whence every body sees (nemo non videt) the English Catch has been contracted.
CATCH, n.
CA'TCHER, n.
CA'TCHPOLL.
CA'TCHWORD.

To catch seems to comprise the force of—to stop and to hold; it implies that the thing caught is in motion, and is not merely stopt but held. To stop a ball is not to catch it; though stopped it may not be held. To hold a ball is not to catch it; the motion of it is neither expressed nor implied.

To catch, (sub. in a trap or snare,) is to entrap, to ensnare.

To catch hold is a familiar expression, and implies that the thing caught is to be held from moving.

To catch may sometimes be supplied by—to seize, to grasp; and is sometimes used as equivalent to—merely, to overtake. Also to have or use the sudden motion of one, who catches, or tries to catch any thing; to snatch, to jerk.

——— So muche vyss [fish] hii asolde hym brynge
That ech man wendry saal of so gret caccheyng.
R. Gloucester, p. 265.

And clannesse shal cacchen hit and clerkes shullen hit fynde. Piers Ploughman, p. 254.

——— Retcheth thei nevere
Of the coun of the coun, so they cacche siluer.
Id. Ib. p. 75.

Quikliche cam a catchepol, and craked a two here legges,
And here armes after, of everiche of the theoves.
Id. Ib. p. 343.

Stryue thou a good stryf of feith, cacche euerlastinge lyf unto whiche thou art clepid.—Wiclif. Tyme, c. 6.

For the wisdom of this world is foli anentis God; for it is writun I schal catche wise men in her fel wisdom.
Id. 1 Corynth. c. 3.

And whanne dai was come the magestratis senten cacchepollis and seiden, delyuere thou the men.
Id. Dedis, c. 16.

Salomon saith, that the wordes of a flaterer is a snare to cacchen innocentes. He sayth also, he that speketh to his frend wordes of aweteness and of plesaunce, he setteth a net beforne his feet to cacchen him.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

But other while whan so is,
That I male catche slepe on honde
Lyggend alone, than I fonde
To dremc a mery aweuen er daie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

With that he sterte vp fro the mete,
And shoue the borde into the flore,
And caught a swerde anone and swore
That thei shulde of his hondes die.—Id. Ib. b. v.

When the boy saw that hys father was dead, and that the catchpoles began to snatch at him, he was sore dismayed, and thought that he should dye to. And when one of them apposed him, asking him how he beleeued, he answered, master I beleue euen as it pleaseth you.
Frith. Workes, p. 57.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure;
Let vs be iocond. Will you troule the catch.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 2.

For like as dropsie patients drink and still be drie,
Whose vnstanch'st greedie thirst no liquor can allay;
And drinke they nere so much, yet thirst they by and by;
So catchers and snatchers do toile both night and day,
Not needie, but greedie, still prolling for their prey.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 278.

Could never man work thee a worser shame,
Then once to minge thy father's odious name?
Whose mention were alike to thee as lieve
As a catch poll's fist into a bankrupt's sleeve.
Bp. Hall. Satires, b. iv. Sat. 2.

——— And as fields that have been long time cloide
With catching weather, when their corne lies on the gavill heape,
Are with a constant north wind dried, with which for comfort leape
Their hearts that sow'd them.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Down fell both spear and shield, down they as fast,
And the dire hiss renew'd and the dire form
Catcht by contagion, like in punishment,
As in thir crime. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

——— While we perhaps
Designing or exhorting glorious warr,
Caught in a fierie tempest shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
Of racking whirlwinds. Id. Ib. b. ii.

So saying he caught him up, and without wing
Of Hippogrif bore through the air sublime
Over the wilderness and o'er the plain.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

He then called to me audibly, to step at least out of the path I was in, for if I staid there any longer, I was in danger to be catched in a great net that was just hanging over me, and ready to catch me up.—Spectator, No. 524.

A butterfly in one of its states is called an aurelia, which name for its sound, was chosen to distinguish the society of butterfly-catchers at Munster.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. vi. Note 2.

It [profusion] is a hungry vice: it eats up all,
That gives society its beauty, strength,
Convenience, and security, and use:
Makes men mere vermin worthy to be trapp'd
And gibbeted, as fast as catchpole claws
Can seize the slipp'ry prey. Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Yet more demands the critic ear
Than the two catch-words in the rear
Which stand like watchmen in the close
To keep the verse from being prose.—Lloyd. On Rhyme.

CA'TECHISE, v. } Fr. Catechiser; It. Catechizzare; Sp. Catechizar; Gr Κατηχειν, sonare, insonare, from Κατα, and Ηχω, Echo, sonus repercussus, from Αγειν, frangere, (Lennep.)
CATECHISA'TION.
CA'TECHISER, n.
CA'TECHISING, n.
CA'TECHISM, n.
CA'TECHIST.
CATECHI'STICAL.
CATECHI'STICALLY.
CATECHE'TICK, adj.
CATECHE'TICAL.
CATECHU'MEN.
CATECHU'MENIST.

Catechumen, part. pass. Κατηχουμενος: one receiving oral instruction: instruction in the rudiments (of religion.)

To catechise, primarily, is to sound; (sc. against the ears of those whom we wish to teach; i. e. to teach or instruct orally, to give oral instruction.) It is then applied thus—

1. To teach that, which requires to be repeated again and again, to those who require to be taught again and again, to the very echo; to have their instruction sounded and resounded into their ears.

2. To teach the first elements or rudiments of any art or science, and particularly of the Christian religion.

3. To catechise, is, consequentially, to question, (as children usually are, when taught the Catechism of their religion,) to examine.

That children should be carefully catechised, and confirmed by the bishops, or in their absence by such as were employed in the visitation of churches.
Spotswood. History of the Church of Scotland, an. 1616.

In prohibiting that none should commune alone, in making the people whole communers, or in suffering them to commune under both kinds in the catechization of young chaplains in the rudiments of our faith, &c.
Burnet. Records, pt. ii. b. i. No. 53. Oglethorp's Submission.

Festus Hommius, amongst other things complain'd that through the negligence of the remonstrants, it came that catechising was so much decay'd; which words of his, it is thought, will be an occasion of some choler, though for the present they pass'd uncontroll'd.—Hale. Let. from Dort.

Catechisings are our best preachings, and by them we shall give the best account of our charges.
Bp. Taylor. On Confirmation.

This book I is a catechism to fight,
And will be bought of every lord and knight,
That can but read.—B. Jonson. Verses on Drayton's Muse.

To which [profession of faith] none (of years and knowledge) was ever admitted, who had not been sufficiently instructed by the catechist in every part of this foundation, (which to that end the catechist received from the Bishop with his short exposition of it,) and being so instructed made open confession of it, and moreover, by vow obliged himself there, to superstruct all Christian practice upon it.
Hammond. Of Fundamentals, c. 2.

We will therefore suppose a man of an ordinary stamp, not to have inculcated into him any principles of religion, or explicite or catechistical doctrine of a God, but to be of such a temper only (whether by nature or education, 'tis all one,) as to deem some things fit and right to be done, and others unfit and unjust.
H. More. App. to Antidote against Atheism, c. 9.

The question is, what is the signatum, the invisible and celestiall thing, which answers thereunto. In our catecheticall explications of this mystery, it is wont to be affirmed to be the bloud of Christ; namely, that as water washeth away the filth from the body, so the bloud of Christ cleanseth us from the guilt and pollution of sin.
Mede. Works, b. i. Disc 17.

To whom [Dr. Potter] among other fruits of his studies he communicated his practical catechism, which for his private use he had drawn up out of those materials which he had made use of in the catechetick institution of the youth of his parish.—Fell. Life of Hammond.

It was decreed that in every parish there should be two sermons every Sunday, of which that in the afternoon was to be catecheticall.—Hale. Let. from Dort.

He does the same thing in sacraments as he does in preaching. in both he declares the guilty person to be out of the way to heaven, to be obnoxious to the Divine anger, to be a debtor of repentance; and refusing to baptise an evil catechumen or to communicate an ill-living Christian, does but say the same
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

Hence their forenamed authors assume, that the children of the faithfull dying without baptisme, may be thought to receive the baptisme of the Spirit, as well as those catechumenists spoken of.—Bp. Morton. Cath. Appeale, p. 248.

It is true, that the word κατηχειν from whence our word catechism doth come, is used in Scripture to signifie teaching in general: but it hath since by ecclesiastical writers been appropriated to that particular way of instruction, which hath been long in use in the Christian church, and is commonly called catechising.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 52.

In 1550 he [Jewell] was admitted to the reading of the sentences, and during the reign of King Edward 6. became a zealous promoter of reformation and a preacher and catechiser at Sunningwell near to Arlington in Berks
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i. p. 169.

The principles of Christianity, briefly and catechistically taught them, is enough to save their souls.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 5

Those of riper years be encouraged and exhorted to be present at his catechetical performances, and who were too much ashamed of their ignorance to overcome it by any other methods.—Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull.

——— Pierce my vein,
Take of the crimson stream meand'ring there,
And catechise it well; apply thy glass,
Search it, and prove now if it be not blood
Congenial with thine own. Cowper. Task, b. iii

CA'TEGORY, n. } Gr. Κατηγορια, from Κατα, and αγειρειν, (from αγειν, ducere;) αγειρειν properly signifies — to bring together; to collect into one. For the application of the word see the example from Watts.
CATEGO'RICAL.
CATEGO'RICALLY.
CATEGO'RICALNESS.

So again, the distribution of things unto certain tribes, which we call categories or predicaments, are but cautions against the confusion of definitions and divisions.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

They appointed that of the Synod two should be chosen delegates, who should immediately go to them, in the name of the Synod warn them to lay by all other answers, and at the next sessions categorically answer, whether they would exhibit their minds concerning the points in controversy, or no.—Hale. Let. from Dort.

The word of Mr. Bayes's that he has made notorious is categoricalness; and I observe that wheresoever there comes a word of that termination he shows it the same honour, as if he had a mind to make Bayes a collar of nesses.
Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 136

In these last sections we have briefly comprised the greatest part of what is necessary in the famous ten ranks of being, called the ten predicaments, or categories of Aristotle, on which there are endless volumes of discourses formed by several of his followers. But that the reader may not utterly be ignorant of them, let him know the names are these: substance, quantity, quality, relation, action, passion, where, when, situation, and cloathing.
Watts. Logic, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5

A single proposition (which is also called categorical) may be divided again into simple and complex.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. c. 2. s. 5.

CATENA'TION. Lat. Catena; Gr. Καθημα, monile descendens, Καθιημι, (κατα and ιημι,) demitto descendo. See CHAIN and CONCATENATION.
A conjunction or connexion; like that of the links of a chain.

There is one link and common connection, one general ligament, and necessary obligation of all whatever unto God Which catenation or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate; they shall fall from their existence, essence, and operations: in brief, they must retire into their primitive nothing, and shrink into their chaos again.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 5.

CA'TER, v. } Dut. Kater. Skinner remarks that there are some who write Acates, (see ACHATES,) and if this, he adds, can be right, I should deduce the word from the Fr. Achept, achet, or achapt, emtio, from the verb achapter, acheter, emere. Achepter, however, he derives from the Mid. Lat. Adcaptare. But in A. S. Ceapian, aceapian, is, "emere vendere, mercaturam facere, to buy and sell, to traffick, whence our cheapen," (Somner.) To cater, generally—

To buy or sell, to purchase or provide; to furnish or supply, food, entertainment, &c.

Richely she feeds, and at the rich man's cost,
And for her meate she needes not crake or cry;
By sea, by land, of deineates the most
Her cater sekes, and spareth for no perell.
Wyatt. Of the meane and sure Estate.

Take that, and he that doth the rauens feede,
Yea providentially caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age. here is the gold
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 3.

When the toll'd cater home them to the kitchen brings,
The cook doth cast them out as most unsavory things.
Drayton. Polly-Olbion, s 25.

Circe (obseruing, that I put no hand
To any banquet. hauing countermand
From weightier cares; the light cates could excuse,)
Bowing her neare me these wing'd words did vse.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

The season hardly did afford
Coarse cates unto thy neighbour's board
Yet thou hadst dainties. Carew. To Saxham

The little fowls in the air have God for their provider and caterer.—Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 33.

Impostor do not charge most innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance. she good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good,
That live according to her sober laws,
And holy dictate of spare temperance.—Milton. Comus.

Yet to so ridiculous a height is this foolish custom grown, that even the Christmas pye, which in its very nature is a kind of consecrated cate, and a badge of distinction, is often forbidden to the Druid of the family.—Tatler, No. 255.

It is true, that some of these rules may seem more principally to respect the steward, clerk of the kitchen, caterer, or perhaps the butler.—King. Art of Cookery.

Androcles, after having sodden the flesh of it by the sun, subsisted upon it till the lion had supplied him with another. He lived many days in this frightful solitude, the lion catering for him with great assiduity.
Guardian, No. 139.

Hath any rival glutton got the start,
And beat him in his own luxurious art;
Bought cates, for which Apicius could not pay,
Or drest old dainties in a newer way.
Churchill. The Times.

CA'TER-COUSIN. Quatre cousin.

Gob. His maister and he (sauing your worship's reuerence) are scarce catercousins.—Shakes. Mer. of Venice, Act ii. sc. 2.

His mother was as honest a woman as ever broke bread; she and I have been cater-cousins in our youth.
Dryden. Limberham, Act iii. sc. 1.

CA'TERPILLAR. Junius writes Cartepillar, or Cartlepillar, perhaps from the Dut. Kerten, kartelen, circumtondere, quod herbas, et fruges, arrodendo circumtondeat, because they shear herbs and fruits, by eating or devouring. Dr. T. Hickes thinks it is chair peleuse, i. e. caro pilosa. Minshew and Skinner, chatte-peleuse, so called ab hirsutie istius animalis, felis simili. Under the word Cater, cates; Junius says, hence it is manifest why volvox vel convolvulus, is in English called caterpiller, because it destroys the food of man and beast, as it springs from the earth.

Caterpillers destroy the fruite, an hurtefull thing and well shyfted for, by a diligent ouerseer.
Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The fruits were faire, the whiche did grow
Within thy garden planted.
The leaues were grene of euery bough,
And moysture nothing wanted,
Yet or the blossoms gan to fall,
The caterpillar wasted all.
Vncertaine Auctors. A Louer accusing his Loue, &c.

Those vast exotick animals, which the multitude flocks to see, and which men give money to be allowed to gaze on, have had many of them less of my admiration than the little caterpillar (as learned naturalists esteem it) to which we are beholden for silk.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 22.

CATHA'RTICAL. } Καθαιρειν, from κατα and CATHA'RTICS. } αιρειν, tollere. Whence Καθαιρειν denotes plane tollere, nempe sordes, and thus to purge, to cleanse.

Purifying or purging, cleansing.

Scarce any elementary salt is in a small quantity cathartical.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 557.

Thus Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the cathartick or purgatives of the soul, as being the most proper means to cleanse it from error, and to give it a reuish of truth, which is the natural food and nourishment of the understanding, as virtue is the perfection and happiness of the will.—Spectator, No 517.

Some men employ their health, an ugly trick,
In making known how oft they have been sick.
And give us in recitals of disease
A doctor's trouble, but without the fees
Relate how many weeks they kept their bed,
How an emetic or cathartic sped.—Couper. Conversation.

CATHE'DRAL, n. } Cathedral church, Fr.
CATHE'DRAL, adj. } Eglise cathédrale; It. Chiesa catedrale; Sp. Yglesia catedral; Dut. Kathedrael kercke, from the Gr. Καθεδρα, from κατα and εδρα, a seat, from εζειν, to sit. So called, says Junius, ab Episcopali cathedrâ; in the same sense in which the Saviour of the world employs it, (Matt. xxiii. 2,) "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat," επι της Μωσεως καθεδρας.
CATHE'DRATED.

The seat; the seat of episcopal authority.

There be cathedrall churches into whiche the countre cõmeth wt processiõ at Whytsontyde, & the women folowing the crosse wyth many an vnwomanly songe.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 198.

Wherefore I determined to go vnto Sartach, & to deliuer vnto them yᵉ letters of my lord the king, wherein he admonisheth him concerning the good and commoditie of all Christendome. And they receiued vs with gladnes, and gaue vs entertainement in the cathedrall church.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol i. p 94.

It was decreed, and straitely ordred in a councel holden at Gerunda in Spaine, that al litle churches in the countrie should conforme them selues vnto the greate cathedral churches that were in cities and townes, as well for order of the communion, as also for singinge, and other ministration.—Jewel. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p 71.

Her body [Mary of Scotland] was embalmed, and ordered with due and usuall rites: and afterwards interred with a royall funerall in the cathedrall-church of Peterborough.
Camden. Eliz. an. 1587.

If this reproof be private, or with the cathedrated authority of a prælector or public reader.
Whitelock. Manners of the English, p. 385

I began to consider with myself what innumerable multitudes of people lay confused together under the pavement of that antient cathedral; how men and women, friends and enemies, priests and soldiers, monks and prebendaries, were crumbled amongst one another, and blended together in the same common mass; how beauty, strength, and youth, with old age, weakness and deformity, lay undistinguished in the same promiscuous heap of matter.
Spectator, No. 26.

Two of the best voices came in time enough, and the service was performed cathedral-wise, tho' in a manner, to bare walls, with an anthem suitable to the day.
Guardian, No. 80.

CA'THOLICK, n. } Fr. Catholique; It. and CA'THOLICK, adj. } Sp. Catolico; Dut. Katholick; Gr. Καθολικος,
CA'THOLICKLY. } from κατα and ὁλος, all,
CA'THOLICKNESS. } the whole, universal. For CATHO'LICAL, adj. } the various applications
CATHO'LICISM, n. } of the word in the Christian Church, see the quotation from Dr. Clarke.

Catholick, — all, the whole, universal; less strictly, general, common.

Fr. Catholizer, Cotgrave says, is to catholize it, to play the Catholick, to become a Catholick.

Supposing that they might easily winne that riche and flourishing citie, being but meanely fortified and inhabitid with citizens not accustomed to the warres, who durst not withstand their first encounter, hoping moreouer to find many rebels against her maiestie and popish catholiques, or some fauourers of the Scottish queene, (which was not long before most iustly beheaded) who might be instruments of sedition.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 597.

Also of what prowes he was in armes, and how valiaunt and good a capitayne in battayle, it may sufficiently appeare to them that wyll rede his noble actes and achieuaunces in the bokes before remembred, wherein no good catholyke man wyl any thing doubte, thoughe they be maruaylous
Sir T. Elyot. The Gouernour, b. iii. c. 22

The princes of Germanie were of two seuerall opinyons, and of seuerall names, the part that fauoured the pope and all things done by his authority were called catholicall, and the other part, which folowed and preached onely the Gospel of Christ were called euangelicall.
Grafton. Hen. VIII. an 22.

It might by degrees become universal that was not so at first; and therefore unless the whole present age do agree, that is, unless of all that are deemed orthodox there be a present consent, this broken consent is not an infallible testimony of the catholicism of the Doctrine.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. Introd

—— His seed in none could fail to grow,
Fertile he found them all, or made them so,
No druggist of the soul bestow'd on all
So catholicly a curing cordial.
Donne. Elegy by Sir L. Carey.

Besides, that marriage is indissoluble, is not catholicly true; we know it dissoluble for adultery, and for desertion, by the verdict of all reformed churches.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Thus one may judg of the catholikness, which Romanists brag of, and challenge on two accounts.
Brevint. Saul & Samuel at Endor, p. 10

Before I enter upon this task, I shall by way of preface or introduction say something concerning those systems which undertake to give an account of the formation of the universe by mechanical hypothesis of matter, mov'd either uncertainly, or according to some catholick laws, without the intervention and assistance of any superior immaterial agent.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i

They teach (the) spirituous parts (of salt petre) to be the grand and catholick efficient of cold.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 596.

The 1st and largest sense of the term Catholick Church, is that which appears to be the most obvious and literal meaning of the words in the text, (Heb. xii. 23.) The general assembly and church of the first-born which are written in heaven; that is, the whole number of these who shall finally attain unto salvation.—2ndly, The Catholick or Universal Church, signifies in the next place, and indeed more frequently, the Christian Church only: the Christian Church, as distinguished from that of the Jews and patriarchs of old: the Church of Christ spread universally from our Saviour's days over all the world; in contradistinction to the Jewish Church, which was particularly confined to one nation or people.—3dly, The Catholic Church signifies very frequently, in a still more particular and restrained sense, that part of the Universal Church of Christ, which in the present age is now living upon earth; as distinguished from those which have been before, and shall come after.—4thly and lastly, The term Catholick Church signifies in the last place, and most frequently of all, that part of the Universal Church of Christ, which in the present generation is visible upon earth, in an outward profession of the belief of the Gospels, and in a visible external communion of the word and sacraments.—The Church of Rome pretends herself to be—This Whole Catholick Church, exclusive of all other societies of Christians.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 62.

I never could meet with any body that pretended to say what their private faith and religion might be; all the gipsies that I have conversed with assured me of their sound catholicism.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 29.

CA'TTLE. In Dut. Chattels, bona mobilia, and cattle, pecus, are called by the same name, Kateylen, kateelen. Spelman says, all goods moveable or immoveable: yet properly that kind of goods which consists in animals, a quorum capitibus, res ipsæ, were at some times called capita, at others, capitalia; by syncope, captalia and catalla, whence our law term catalla, in Eng. Chattels. The early inhabitants of the earth, he adds, estimated their wealth from the number of their animals. Skinner derives from capita, (q.d.) capitalia, because they belong by law ad caput, i. e. personam. Now applied to—

Kine, horses, and some other animals, appropriated to the use of man.

They seeldin possessiouns and catel and departiden tho thinges to alle men as it was nede to ech.—Wiclif. Dedis.

His tithes paied he full fayre and wel
Both of his propre swinke, and his catel.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 516

Th' ignoble never liv'd, they were awhile
Like swine, or other cattell here on earth!
Their names are not recorded on the file
Of life, that fail so.
B. Jonson. Underwood. Epithalamion.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was forbidden by the late act of parliament, the quickest trade for ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks, which, for four or five summer-months of the year, were carried over in very great numbers; and this made all the breeders in the kingdom turn their lands and stocks chiefly to that sort of cattle.
Sir W. Temple. Of Advancement of Trade in Ireland.

"Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle," says the poet or at best the keepers of cattle for other men; they have nothing which is properly their own, that is a sufficient mortification for me, while I am translating Virgil.
Dryden. Parallel between Poetry and Painting

CAVALCADE. Fr. Cavalcade; It. Cavalcata, from the Lat. Caballus; Gr. Καβαλλης, a name applied to the meaner sort of horses, from the Doric, Καββαλλειν, for καταβαλλειν, to throw or cast down, (Vossius.) A cavalcade is—

A number of persons proceeding together on horseback.

Many members of the House of Commons, especially those of London, went to Oxford, accompanied or attended with the ceremonious caracoade of a numerous train of friends.
Baker. Charles II. an. 1681.

Next after these, there rode the royal wife,
With Emily, the cause and the reward of strife.
The following cavalcade, by three and three,
Proceed by titles marshal'd in degree,
Thus through the southern gate they take their way,
And at the List arriv'd ere prime of day.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Quick with the word his way the hero made,
Conducted by a glorious cavalcade;
Fert petulance the first attracts his eye,
And drowsy dulness slowly saunters by,
With mance old, and scandal ever new,
And natural nonsense, neither false nor true.
Smart. Hilliad.

CAVALI'ER, n. } Fr. Chevalier, cavalier; It. Cavaliere; Sp. Caballero; immediately from the Fr. Cheval; It. and Sp. Cavalla, from Lat. Caballus. See CAVALCADE.
CAVALI'ER, adj.
CAVALI'ERING, adj.
CAVALI'ERISH.
CAVALI'ERLY.
CAVALIER'O.
CAVALRY, n.

A horseman, one who rides or is on horseback. Then applied, consequentially, to—

One, who has the gallant spirit, and manners of men—having the rank of horseman. See also the quotation from Clarendon.

Cavalier, adj.—gallant, brave, high-spirited, haughty, disdainful.

Cavalry, n.—Fr. Cavallerie, horsemanship, also horsemen, (Cotgrave.) Applied to—military companies of horsemen.

It may perhaps seeme strange and incredible, that so many caualleros should all faine in this one attempt, since in many parts of the Indies, far smaller numbers in shorter time haue performed as great matters, and subdued mighty kingdomes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 691.

Welcome, my little tyne theefe, and welcome indeed too: I'le drinke to M. Bardolfe, and to all the caualeroes about London.—Shakespeare. 2 Part Henry IV. Act v. sc. 3.

Nevertheless, because he would not sit still, nor be displeased for his wrath, he enforced Arberio and Agile with other captaines and officers of the cauallerie, to make haste with pursuant regiments under their conduct.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 181.

Many good welcomes, and much gratis cheere
Keepes he for every straggling cavaliere
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 7.

And from those contestations, the two terms of Roundhead and Cavalier grew to be receiv'd in discourse, and were afterwards continued for the most succinct distinction of affections throughout the quarrel: they who were looked upon as servants to the king, being then called Cavaliers; and the other of the rabble contemned and despised, under the name of Roundhead.
Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, b. iv.

I know all the sober gentry will close with you, if they may be tenderly and gently used; and I will so use them, as knowing it to be the common concern, to amplifie, and not to lessen our interest, and to be careful that neither the cavaliers nor phanatick party have yet a share in your civil or military power.—Baxter. Monk. Speech to the House.

Had he [Nedham] been constant to his cavaleering principles, he would have been beloved by and admired of all
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

But notwithstanding all that could be said, the confederacy for them was strong enough to carry all before them; the cavalierish party, who were very numerous, joining with them, in expectation that it might prove a good step towards the return of the former peerage.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 105.

They sent away their cavalry with so much haste, and in so continued a march, that they were possessed of the path before the body the king had sent could reach it, whereby they gained their point, though their cavalry suffered much.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1694.

My worthy friend Sir Roger, when we are talking of the malice of parties, very frequently tells us an accident, that happened to him when he was a school boy, which was at the time when the feuds ran high between the Round-heads and Cavaliers.—Spectator, No. 125.

He [Warburton] very cavalierly tells us, that these notes were among the amusements of his younger years.
Edwards. Canons of Criticism, Pref.

——— They could tell,
How their long matchless cavalry, so oft
O'er hills of slain by ardent Rupert led,
Whose dreaded standard Victory had wav'd,
Till then triumphant, there with noblest blood
From their gor'd squadrons dy'd the restive spear
Of London's firm militia, and resign'd
The well-disputed field.—Glover. London.

CA'UDAL, adj. } Lat. Cauda, a tail. Of unCA'UDATE. } known etymology.

Having a tail, or something terminating like, or otherwise resembling, a tail.

How Jove his thunder makes, and lightning new,
How with the bolt he strikes the earth below,
How comate, crinite, caudate stars are fram'd,
I knew, my skill with pride my heart enflam'd.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xiv. s. 44.

The tail is slender, of the same length as the remainder of the body to the nose, and terminates in a small caudal fin.
Pennant. Zoology. The Cuvier Ray.

CA'UDLE, v. } Fr. Chaudeau, from Chaud;
CA'UDLE, n. } Lat. Calidus, warm; (q. d. Skinner)—

A warm drink; of eggs, wine, bread, sugar and spices.

He migte tho at is diner abbe bileued al so wel,
As me seith "wan ich am ded, make me a caudel."
R. Gloucester, p. 561.

——— Will the cold brooke
Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste
To cure thy o're nights surfet.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

——— O tell me, good Dumaine;
And gentle Longauill, where lies thy paine?
And where my liedges? all about the breast:
A caudle hoa! Id. Love's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 3.

If a man laments in company, where the rest are in humour enough to enjoy themselves, he should not take it ill if a servant is order'd to present him with a porringer of caudle or posset drink, by way of admonition that he go home to bed.—Spectator, No. 143.

She's gone! but there's another in her stead,
For of a princess Charlotte's brought to bed:—
Oh! could I but have had one single sup,
One single sniff, at Charlotte's caudle cup!
Warton. The Oxford Newsman's Verse for 1767.

CAVE, v. } Fr. Cave; It. Cava; Sp.
CAVE, n. } Cueva, cava; Lat. Cavus.
CA'VERN, n. } Varro and Festus think a
CA'VERNED, adj. } chao dictum. Chaos is pro-
CA'VERNOUS. } perly a vast gap or opening,
CA'VITY, n. } (vastus hiatus) from the ancient Χασω for χαινω, to gape, to open, (Vossius.)

Any thing hollow; a hollow place, for men, or other animals, to take shelter or refuge.

Thei eriden in wildirnessis in mounteyns and dennys and caues of the erthe.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 11.

They wandered in wilderness, in mountaynes, in dennes and caues of the earth.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But or his here was clipped or yshave,
Ther was no bond with which men might him bind,
But now he is in prison in a care
Wherin they made him at the querne grinde.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,071.

Under an hille there is a caue,
Whiche of the sonne maie not haue
So that no man maie knowe aright
The poynt betwene the daie and night.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But greene wood like a garland growes, and hydes them al with shade,
And in the midds a pleasaunt caue there stants of nature made,
Where sits the nymphes among the springs in seats of mosse and stone. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos b. i.

They spide a little cottage, like some poore man's nest,
Under a steepe hills side, it placed was,
There where the mouldred earth had cav'd the bank.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

——— Although perhaps
It may be heard at court, that such as wee
Caue heere, hunt heere, are out lawes, and in time
May make some stronger head
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

In other places there he also caues and holes of a prophetick all power: by the exhalation of which, men are intoxicate, and as it were drunken, and so foretell things to come, as at Delphi, the most renowned oracle.—Holland. Plin. b. ii. c. 93.

The other errour may be, for that the object of sight doth strike upon the pupill of the eie, directly without any interception; whereas the care of the eare doth hold off the sound a little from the organ; and so nevertheless there is some distance required in both.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 272

For many a field-bredd herdsman, (vnheard still,)
Hast thou made drowne, the cauernes of the hill
Where his retreates lie, with his helplesse teares.
Chapman. Hymne to Hermes

The sea-nymphs that the watry caverns keep,
Have sent their pearls and rubies from the deep,
To deck thy love; and plac'd by thee they drew
More lustre to them, than where first they grew.
Watson. Upon Donne and his Poems

The fire of an oven is a fit similitude of a fire within, as into which fire is put to heat it, and the heat made more intense by the cavity or hollowness of the place.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. p. 565.

Those that descended into the care of Trophonius, were first to be tried by many sacrifices, whether they were fit to enter it or not, and they were to pray before an image of Dædalus's making, which none else were allowed to see, and then after other preparation they were let into that dreadful place, where they saw and heard strange things which they discovered to the priests when they came forth.
Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

From out the rock's wide caverns deep below
The rushing ocean rises to its flow,
And, eddying, here retires; within its sides,
In roomy cares the god of sea resides.
Hughes. The Court of Neptune.

Now pass'd the rugged road, they journey'd down
The cavern'd way descending to the town,
Where, from the rock, with liquid lapse distils
A limpid fount. Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

But he, [Ulysses] deep musing, o'er the mountains stray'd
Through many thickets of the woodland shade,
And cavern'd ways the shaggy coast along,
With cliffs and nodding forest overhung.—Id. Ib. b. xiv.

Upon weighing the heart in my hand, I found it to be extremely light, and consequently very hollow, which I did not wonder at, when, upon looking inside of it, I saw multitudes of cells and cavities running one within another.
Spectator, No. 281

The first rude essay of nature had been so much improved by human labour, that the care contained several apartments appropriated to different uses, and often afforded lodging for travellers, whom darkness or tempests happened to overtake.—Johnson. Rasselas, c. 21.

I will teach you to pierce the bowels of the earth, and bring out from the caverns of the mountains metals which shall give strength to your hands, and security to your bodies.—Id. Rambler, No. 33.

Amid the fearful trance, a thund'ring sound
He hears, and thrice the hollow decks rebound;
Upstarting from his couch on deck he sprang,
Thrice with shrill note the boatswain's whistle rang,
All hands unmoor! proclaims the boatswain's cry,
All hands unmoor! the cavern'd rocks reply.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1

The town and temple of Delphi were seated on a bare and cavernous rock; defended, on all sides, with precipices, instead of walls.—Warburton. Julian, b. ii. c. 6.

CA'VIL, v. } Fr. Caviller; It. Cavillare; Sp. Cavilar; Lat.
CA'VIL, n. } Cavillor, from Cavere.
CAVILLA'TION. } Cavere proprié est juris-
CAVILLA'TORY, adj. } consultorum. Cavillari
CA'VILLER. } est leguleiorum ac rabu-
CA'VILLING, n. } larum forensium, (Vos-CA'VILLINGLY. } sius.) Cavere is, to be
CA'VILLOUS, adj. } wary, to be circumspect,
CA'VILLOUSLY. } to provide against risks or contingencies. Cavillari, to cavil, is—

To guard against imaginary or trifling risks or difficulties; to invent trifling difficulties, to raise captious objections; objections merely verbal;—to carp, to wrangle.

And in thin hond thou shalt it have anon,
On this condition, and other non,
That thou depart it so, my dere brother,
That every frere have as moch as other:
This shalt thou swere on thy profession
Withouten fraud or cavilation.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7718.

Finally yf you be voyde of beleſe in suche thynges as are spiritual, and pertaine unto the soule, wheras ye can not thwarte and cauyll in the thinges you see dooen before your iyes, then do you plainly declare your obstinate malice.
Udal. Mark, c. 2.

Eis hys pregnaunt wit could not haue passed it so cleane ouer, but would haue assayled it with some sophisticall cauillation which by hys painted poetrie he might so haue coloured, that at the last he might make ye ignoraunt some appearance of truth.—Frith. Workes, p. 108.

Indeede you almost in no place reason ad idem, which is a manifest argumente, that you are but a shifting cauiller.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 429.

Onlie among all, and of all Nero and Domitian being kindled by diuers naughtie and spiteful persons cauillinglie obiected against our doctrine, of whom this sicophantical slandering of us by naughtie custome first came and sprang up.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 46.

But Colotes, like a sychophant, cavilling at him, and catching at his words, without regard of the matter, not arguing against his reasons indeed, but in wordes onely, affirmeth flatly, that Parmenides overthroweth all things in one word, by supposing that all is one.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 913.

——— Inexplicable
Thy Justice seems; yet to say truth, too late,
I thus contest: then should have been refused
These terms whatever, when they were propos'd:
Thou didst accept them; wilt thou enjoy the good,
Then cavil the conditions.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

To preache by halfes is to be worse
Then those tongue-holly lauells,
That cite good words, but shift off works,
And discipline by cauells.
Warner. Albion's England, c. 39.

I might adde further for more full and complete answer, so much concerning the large oddes betweene the case of the oldest churches in regard of those heathens, and ours in respect of the Church of Rome, that very cauillation itselfe should bee satisfied, and haue no shift to flie vnto.
Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. iv. § 8.

That ev'n th' ignorant may understand,
How that deceit is but a caviller,
And true unto itself can never stand,
But still must with her own conclusions war.
Daniel. Musophilus.

And therefore the Apostle in Rom. i. dealing with the Gentiles, mentions none of their carnal pleas, but when he comes to the Jews in chap. ii. he spends it in taking away their cavillings.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 309.

Those persons are said to be cavillous and unfaithful advocates, by whose fraud and iniquity, justice is destroy'd; and, therefore, they ought to be severely punish'd, as aforesaid.—Ayliffe. Parergon. Jur. Canon. p. 56.

Nay, by the covenant itself, since that so cavillously is urged against us, we are enjoined in the fourth article, with all faithfulness to endeavour the bringing all such to public trial and condign punishment, as shall divide one kingdom from another.—Milton. Articles of Peace with the Irish.

The first of these cavillatory objections against the parliament's proceeding is, that both houses, have without the king's consent, contrary to Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, &c. &c. by their ordinances onely imposed late taxes.
Prynne. Soveraigne Power of Parliaments, pt. iv. c. 2.

Since it seems they have wit and understanding enough to carul and find fault with these things, and upon that account to deny their obedience to those lawful powers which God hath set over them, one would think, they should, at the same time, have so much honesty, as seriously to endeavour to give themselves satisfaction as to those things they find fault with.—Sharp, vol. ii. A Disc. of Conscience.

In the first place, it should be considered, that those cavillers at the style of the Scripture, that you and I have hitherto met with, do (for want of skill in the original especially in the Hebrew) judge of it by the translations, wherein alone they read it.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 257.

'Tis I, quoth she, in every vale,
First hiss'd the noisy nightingale;
And boldly cavill'd at each note,
That twitter'd in the woodlark's throat.—Smart, Fable 14.

CAUL. Sherwood writes, Caul or Kell,—wherein the bowels are wrapped. Bullokar, Kell; the caule about the paunche of a hart or stagge. The Geneva Bible, Hosea, "I will break the calfe of their heart." Perhaps a misprint, as in ten other instances it is Kall or Kal, and once Calle. The Septuagint, Συγκλεισμος, from συν, and κλει-ειν, to shut up, to close, to inclose. The Latin Vulgate, Interiora. Junius says, perhaps the same with Coule, (qv.) Skinner, from the A.S. Cylla, uter, a bag. In Ger. Kel-en is Cavare, to hollow; which, Wachter thinks, is from the Gr. Κοιλος, hollow. Caul is applied as above;—

To that wherein the bowels are wrapped; (see the quotation from Paley,) and also to a part of the head-dress or cap, which incloses the head.

I wil mette thē, as a beare that is robbed of her whelpes, and I will breake the calfe of their heart, and there wil I deuoure them like a lion.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Hosea, xiii 8.

I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and I will rent the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion.—Bible, Modern Version.

A quiuer on her shoulders smale he hanges with crooked bow
In steade of golden caulle, and mantel braue shulde hange below.—Phaer. Virgile. Æneidos, b. xi.

For I suppose that some of you have seen towels, napkins, nets, caules, kercheſes and coifes woven of such thread, which would not burn or consume in the fire, but when they were foul and soiled with occupying, folk flung them into the fire, and took them forth again clean and fair.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1094.

After the manner of women he puts a cawle upon his head.—Prynne. Histriomastrix, pt. i. p. 197.

Some of our ancient ladies of the court exercise their fingers in the needle, other in caulworke, diuerse in spinning of silke.—Holinshed. Desc. of England, c. 15.

Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd
And in a golden caul the curls are bound.
Dryden. Virgile. Æneis, b. vii.

Why the fat is collected chiefly about some particular parts and vessels, and not others, as for example, the reins and the caul, I easily consent with Galen and others, the reason to be the cherishing and keeping warm of those parts upon which such vessels are spread; so the caul serves for the warming of the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

It is deemed lucky to be born with a caul, or membrane over the face. This caul is esteemed an infallible preservative against drowning. It is related that midwives used to sell this membrane to advocates, as an especial means of making them eloquent. According to Chrysostom, the midwives frequently sold it for magic uses.—Grose. Superstitions, p. 45.

The omentum, epiploon, or caul, is an apron, tucked up, or doubling upon itself, at its lower part. The upper edge is tied to the bottom of the stomach, to the spleen, as hath already been observed, and to part of the duodenum. The reflected edge, also, after forming the doubling, comes up behind the front flap, and is tied to the colon and adjoining viscera.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

CAU'PONIZE. Lat. Caupo, a suttler, a victualler.

To procure victuals, to provide and supply with articles of food, drink, &c.;—to act as suttler or victualler.

I call your virtues unaccountable, as I do the wealth of our rich rogues who canponised to the armies in Germany in this last war; who have raised our admiration, that they were able to plunder and pillage so mightily amidst an universal poverty.—Warburton to Hurd, Let. 171.

CAUSE, v.
CAUSE, n.
CAU'SABLE, adj.
CAU'SAL, adj.
CAUSA'LITY.
CAU'SALLY.
CAUSA'TION.
CAU'SATIVE.
CAU'SATOR.
CAU'SEFUL.
CAU'SELESS.
CAU'SELESSLY.
CAU'SELESSNESS.
CAU'SER.

Lat. Causa. Perottus, (see Martin, in v. Causa,) enumerates many proposed etymologies. 1. Some think it is so called, a Chao, detracta aspiratione, because Chaos was the first cause of all things. 2. Others from the Gr. Καυσις, which signifies heat or burning, because a cause is that which kindles and inflames us, (accendit inflammatque) to action. 3. Some, a cavendo, because it is that, quæ cavet, that any thing should be done or not be done. 4. Some, a casu;—and this Martinius himself prefers as the most simple, ut primo sit (causa, sc.) quod contigit, accidit. Occasio, (of obvious etymology,) he observes is also used pro causâ et origine. Isidorus says also, (see Vossius,) caussa sit, quicquid cecidit, id est, accidit. Vossius is in favour of caiso, seu quaiso, as the ancients wrote, for quæso. And αιτεω, he remarks, (whence αιτια, causa,) is nothing more than quæsere, seu petere. See Martinius and Vossius; and for the various usages of causa, see Gesner.

This word has puzzled the philosophers quite as much as it has the etymologists. See the examples following, particularly those from Locke, Edwards, Hume, and Scott.

To cause, as used by Spenser, is merely to excuse or make excuses. See EXCUSE.

Cause may be described to be—A general term, denoting the case, the state or condition, of circumstances, of things, preceding, prevening, premoving, pre-acting, to or towards, a change of case, state, or condition of circumstances: an acting, moving to, effecting, producing: an agent effecting: the feeling moving the agent: that which—the reason, the will, which—moves, induces, prevails, determines: the origin or source. The cause or case in law, the plaintiff's case or cause, are terms used indiscriminately. The cause of a person or party, is the case, the state or condition of things, or circumstances, in which he is, or endeavours to be.

For it is seyn to me withouten resoun to sende a bounden man, and not to signyfie the cause of him.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 25.

For me thinketh it unreasonable for to send a prisoner, and not to shewe the causes whyche are layde against him.
Bible, an. 1551. Ib.

He knew the cause of every maladie,
Were it of cold, or hote, or moist, or drie.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 421.

——— But grete God above,
That knoweth that none act is causeles,
He deme af all, for I wol hold my pees.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9348.

And nowe (men seyen) is other wise
Simon the cause hath vndertake,
The worldes swerde in hand is take.
Gower. Con. A. Prologue.

And by this skille a man maie knowe,
The more that thei stonden lowe,
The more ben the cercles lasse,
That causeth why that some passe
Her due cours to fore an other.—Id. Con. A. b. vi.

Then would ye sone perceyue the common wealthes hurt, not when other felt it who deserued it not, but when you smarted who caused it, and stoode not and looked upon other men's losses, which ye might pittie, but tormented with your owne, which ye would lament.
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The Lord for them with causefull ire
Shall use destroying power. Sidney, Psalm 21.

Forced she is to teares ay to returne,
With new requestes, to yeld her hart to loue:
And least she should before her causelesse death
Leaue any thing vntried. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Neyther doth this counsayle bind a man that he shal of necessitie against the comen nature suffer another manne causelesse to kyll hym, nor letteth not any manne frō the deffce of another, whom he seeth innocente and inuaded and oppressed by malice.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 278.

Daungerous delph, depe dungeon of disdaine,
Sacke of self-will, the chest of craft and change,
What causeth thee thus causelesse for to change!
Vncertaine Auctors. Against a cruel Woman

What word is that, that changeth not,
Though it be turnde and made in twaine?
It is mine Anna, God it wot,
The only causer of my paine;
My loue that medeth with disdaine.
Wyat. Of his Love called Anna.

My hart doth melt with meere compassion,
To think how causelesse of her own accord
This gentle Damzel, whom I write upon
Should plonged be in such affliction
Without all hope of comfort or reliefe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8

But he to shifte their curious request,
Gan causen why she could not come in place;
Her crased helth, her late recourse to rest
And humid evening ill for sicke folkes ence,
But none of those excuses could take place.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9

Which not withstanding I will acknowledge to be iust and reasonable, if he or any other man living shall shew that I vse as much as the bare familiar companie but of one, who by word or deed hath euer giuen me cause to suspect or conjecture him, such as here they are termed, with whom complaint is made that I ioyne myselfe.
Hooker. Answer to Travers.

Saile by them therefore; thy companions
Before hand causing to stop euery eare
With sweete soft wax so close, that none may heare
A note of all their charmings.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii

—— In this pleasant soile
His farre more pleasant garden God ordain'd,
Out of the fertile ground he caus'd to grow
All trees of noblest kind for sight, smell, taste.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

If it be in that all have sinned, as taking ἐφ ᾧ [in that] as a causal particle, yet still it implies that all have sinned, and were guilty of an act of sinning, as was argued.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 12.

Now if there be no spirit, matter must of necessity move itself, where you cannot imagine any activity or causality, but the bare essence of the matter from whence the motion comes.—H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 6.

If one sin would naturally and by physical causality destroy original righteousness, then every one sin in the regenerate can as well destroy habitual righteousness, because that and this differ not but in their principle, not in their nature and constitution.
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, s. i. c. 6.

Now always God's word hath a causation with it,—he said to him, sit,—that is, he made him sit, or as it is here expressed, he made him sit with a mightie power.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. i. p. 406.

For the subject of it [mathematic] being quantity, not quantity indefinite, which is but relative, and belongeth to philosophia prima, as hath been said, but quantity determined or proportionable, it appeareth to be one of the essential forms of things, as that that is causative in nature of a number of effects.—Bacon. On Learning, b. i.

O sir, I said, the gods defend that I
Should causelesse kill a man in miserie,
Tell me thy name and place, then by and by
I will promise for thine adversarie.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 232.

Confession to a priest, the minister of pardon and reconciliation, the curate of souls, and the guide of consciences is of so great use and benefit to all that are heavy laden with their sins, that they who carelessly and cautelously neglect it, are neither lovers of the peace of consciences, nor are careful for the advantages of their souls.
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 10. s. 4.

If you do not please that there shall arise to me some fruit by all this by your discerning and acknowledging the causelessness of your exceptions, yet if you please let us put it to others to judge between us; for 'tis possible we may judge amiss of our own performances.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 196.

I live in feare, I languish all in dread,
Wealth is my woe, the causer of my care.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 230.

To suppose an infinite succession of changeable and dependent beings produced one from another in an endless progression, without any original cause at all: is only a driving back from one question to another, and (as it were) removing out of sight the question concerning the ground or reason of the existence of things.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 2.

In the notice, that our senses take of the common vicissitude of things, we cannot but observe, that several particulars, both qualities and substances begin to exist, and that they receive this their existence, from the due application and operation of some other being. From this observation, we get our ideas of cause and effect. That which produces any simple or complex idea, we denote by the general name cause; and that which is produced, effect.—So that whatever is considered by us to conduce or operate, to the producing any particular simple idea, or collection of simple ideas, whether substance or mode, which did not before exist, hath thereby in our minds the relation of a cause, and so is denominated by us.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 26.

There may be veritable relations of some, who without a miracle, and by peculiarity of temper, have far out-fasted Elias. Which notwithstanding doth not take off the miracle; for that may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in the other.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 21.

And thus may it more causally be made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica or hip-gout.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 13.

And therein though Socrates onely suffered, yet were Plato and Aristotle guilty of the same truth; who demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the indivisible condition of the first causator, it was not in the power of earth, or Areopagy of hell to work them from it.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 10.

I sometimes use the word cause, in this enquiry, to signify any antecedent, either natural or moral, positive or negative, on which an event, either a thing, or the manner and circumstance of a thing, so depends, that it is the ground and reason, either in whole, or in part, why it is, rather than not, or why it is as it is, rather than otherwise, or, in other words, any antecedent with which a consequent event is so connected, that it truly belongs to the reason why the proposition which affirms that event, is true; whether it has any positive influence, or not.
Jon. Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. ii. s. 3.

Similar objects are always conjoined with similar. Of this we have experience. Suitable to this experience, therefore, we may define a cause to be an object, followed by another, and where all the objects similar to the first, are followed by objects similar to the second. Or in other words, where, if the first object had not been, the second never had existed. The appearance of a cause always conveys the mind, by a customary transition, to the idea of the effect. Of this also we have experience. We may, therefore, suitably to this experience, form another definition of cause; and call it an object followed by another, and whose appearance always conveys the thought to that other.
Hume. On Hum. Underst. s. 7.

According to Aristotle, a cause, or τὸ αἴτιον is of four kinds, 1st, the material, which denotes the relation in which marble stands to the statue that is formed of it. 2nd, The formal, which denotes the cause of every thing being precisely what it is, according to the peripatetic doctrine, that every phenomena in nature is a consequence of the operation of the two principles, matter and form. 3d, The efficient, or that from which effects proceed; and 4th, The final, which expresses the purpose or object intended to be accomplished by these effects.—Scott. Elements of Intell. Philosophy, c. 1.

CA'USEY. } Dut. Kautsije, kaussijde. Via
CA'USEWAY. } strata, (Kilian.) Fr. Chaussée; It. Calzata; Sp. Calçada; Mid. Lat. Calceata. Via calce strata, (Skinner.) Spelman observes, every WAY—calcata est, but not calceata: is trodden, but not paved. It is not, therefore, called a calcando, but a calceando, because it is fortified with stones or some other hard substance, quasi calceo, against the injuries of waggons and passengers. Sommer, a calce, because they are rendered firm with stones, which the Fr. call Chaux, lime. It is applied to—

A way, a path, a road, prepared, hardened: formed of stones, or other consolidated substance.

And there was Peter de Boyse capitayne, who made good semblant to defende the Bridge, for he and his men were by the bridge on the causey, ravenging on bothe sydes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 413.

So did they toyle as thereabout,
No cause was vnwrought,
Wherefore new labours for his men
The holie hermit sought.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 24.

The king of England came all along the causey, that I have spoken of well accompanied that he seemed well to be a king.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 13.

—— Th' other way Satan went down,
The causey to hell gate. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

And hail-stones, pattering from the chilling sky,
Hop'd on the thatch, and on the causeway by.
Fawkes. G. Douglas imitated.

Ten years were consumed in the hard labour of forming the road through which these stones (for the pyramid) were to be drawn; a work, in my estimation, of no less fatigue and difficulty than the pyramid itself. This causeway is five stadia in length, forty cubits wide, and its extreme heighth thirty-two cubits, the whole is of polished marble, adorned with the figures of animals.
Beloe. Herodotus. Euterpe, c. 124.

CA'USTICK. See infra CAUTERY.

CA'UTEL, n.
CA'UTELOUS, adj.
CA'UTELOUSLY.
CA'UTELOUSNESS.
CA'UTELTY.
} Fr. Cauteller, cautelle, cauteleux; from the Lat. Cautus; It. and Sp. Cautela, cauteloso. Cautelous, used as cautious;—

Provident, circumspect, wary, and then extended to,—cunning, crafty, subtle, insidious.

Warburton observes, that cautel signifies only "a prudent foresight, or caution, but passing through French hands, it lost its innocence, and now signifies, fraud, deceit." And Mr. Gifford, "our older writers seem to have included in this word not only the sense of wariness, but also something artful and insidious ingrafted upon it."

Whereof a man shall justifie
His wordes in disputesion,
And knitte vpon conclusion
His argument in suche a forme,
Which maie the pleyne trouth enforme,
And the subtile cautele abate
Whiche euery trewe man shall debate.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And the Frenchmen founde cautels and subteltics by wrongefull wayes to renewe agayne ye warre, and thereby toke and usurped all the right that your predecessurs had in that quarell.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 222.

By this praty cautele and slighte imposture, was the toune Poûtelarche takē and surprised, which toune was the kaye and passage ouer the riuer of Soame, frō Fraûce to Normandy.—Hall. Henry VI. an. 26.

In all which discourse you may note very many memorable things; as namely, first the wise, discreet, and cautelous dealing of the ambassadors and commissioners of both parts, then the wealth of the foresaid nations, and their manifold and most vsual kinds of wares vttered in those dayes, as likewise, &c.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. Pref.

But of such covered cautelly, being taken for good Catholic chastity, I have not to deal, referring that to him, which once I trust shall purge the church of such cloked hypocrisy.
Base in Strype. Memoirs of Q. Mary, an. 1554.

In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Apply'd to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness.—Shakes. A Lover's Complaint

—— Perhaps he loues you now,
And now no soyle nor cautell doth besmerch
The virtue of his feare.—Id. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

Sweare priests and cowards, and men cautelous
Old feeble carrions, and such suffering soules
That welcome wrongs.—Id. Julius Cæsar, Act ii. sc. 1.

Beleeu't not lightly, though I go alone
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fenne
Makes feard, and talk'd of more then seen: your sonne
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.
Id. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 1.

He had a mind, was of a large extent,
The sign thereof on his bold brow he bore;
Stern of behaviour, and of body strong;
Witty, well spoken, cautelous, tho' young.
Drayton. Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Over and besides, these Druidæ (as all the sort of these magicians bee passing cautious and cunning to hide and cover their deceitful fallacies) doe affirme, that there must be a certaine speciall time of the moone's age espied, when this businesse is to be gone about.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 3.

We see, I say, that all pretorian courts, if any of the parties be entertained or laid asleep under pretence of arbitrement or accord, and that the other party, during that time, doth cautelously get the start and advantage at common law, though it be to judgment and execution; yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prius, no respect had to such eviction or dispossession.
Bacon. War with Spain.

Old men, saith our best natural master, by reason of the experience of their often mistakes, are hardly brought constantly to affirm any thing, they will always cautelously interline their speeches, with it may bees and peradventures, and other such particles of wariness and circumspection.
Hale. Remains, Ser. 1.

Now of these two, David here (like Mary in the Gospel) teacheth you to make choice of the better part. For let it not offend you, if I compare these two great Christian virtues, { cautelousness / repentance
and not only compare, but much prefer the one before the other. I know the doctrine of repentance is a worthy lesson, the joy and comfort of our souls, we drink it in with thirsty ears; yet let me tell you to be all for it, is some wrong and impeachment to this Christian cautelousness and wariness here commended.—Id. Rem. Dixi Custod. p. 322.

It is a good thing to seek what we have lost, and this repentance doth: but it is a thing of higher excellency not to be of the lacking hand, but to enjoy still what we have. And this the benefit of cautelousness.
Hale. Rem. Dixi Custodiam, p. 324.

CA'UTERIZE, v.
CA'UTERIZING, n.
CA'UTERY.
CAU'STICK, adj.
CAU'STICK, n.
CAU'STICAL.
} Gr. Καυστηριον, from Καιειν, to burn. Lat. Cauterium; Fr. Cauterizer; It. Cauterizzare; Sp. Cauterizar.

To sear, burn, or close up with fire, or fire hot instruments, irons, ointments, medicines, &c. (Cotgrave.)

Gr. Καυστικος, from Καιειν, to burn; Lat. Causticus; Fr. Caustique; It. Caustico; Sp. Caustico.

That which can or may burn; that has the power to burn.

The use hereof is to be ground into powder, and with vinegre to be reduced into a liniment, for to be applied unto those parts that are to bee cauterized or cut.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 7.

Cauteries and hot irons are to be used in the suture of the crown, and the seared or ulcerated place, suffered to run a good while. 'Tis not amisse to bore the skull with an instrument, to let out the fuliginious vapours.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 384.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be as a cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 2.

And to the torturers (her doctors) say,
Stick on your cupping-glasses, feare not, put
Your hottest causticks to, burne, lance, or cut:
'Tis but a body which you can torment,
And I, into this world, all soule was sent.
B. Jonson. Elegie on Lady Pawlet

Cald. You may
(And I must suffer it) like a rough surgeon,
Apply these burning caustics to my wounds
Already gangrened, when soft ungents would Better express an uncle with some feeling
Of his nephew's torments.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act iii. sc. 2.

The ashes of any snails whatsoever, are astringent and hot, by reason of a certaine abstersive qualitie that they have, which is the reason that they enter into potential cauteries, or causticke and corrosive medicines.
Holland. Pinie, b. xxx. c. 4.

Such are these caustick plaisters preparatively to the incarnative, the knife and the launce that Hippoc. reckons among the μαλαχωτερον λεκιν, the mollifying preparations that the physician must always carry about with him.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 484.

As flesh that is cauterized, as the word signifies, or seared with an hot iron, at first feels great pain, but afterwards grows hard and senseless, feeling nothing that is put upon it; so the conscience, although at first it be very sensible of the evil and mischief of sin, yet being often enflamed and tormented with it, it afterwards grows dead and stupid, past all feeling, so that nothing will make any impression upon it.—Bp. Beveridge, Ser. 18.

I remember, that the limbs of soldiers, wounded with gunshot, to have been cut off by the advice of our European surgeons, both Dutch and Portuguese, those barbarous people the Indians, by recent juices, gums, and balsams to have freed them from knife and cauteries, and happily cured them.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 117.

This whole method, is like to applying of corrosives, and caustricks, and the most tormenting remedies, to remove the pain of a cut finger, or like the hating of armies to chase away flies.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

As some bold surgeon with inserted steel,
Probes deep the putrid sore, intent to heal,
So the rank ulcers that our patriot load,
Shall she with caustick healing fires corrode.
Falconer. The Demagogue.

CA'UTION, v.
CA'UTION, n.
CA'UTIONAL.
CA'UTIONARY.
CA'UTIOUS.
CAU'TIOUSLY.
CA'UTIOUSNESS.
CA'UTY, adj.

Lat. Caveo, cautum; It. and Sp. Cauto. Varro says, a cavo, and the reason seems to be, that men, in early ages, were said, cavere (to be cautious against) evils and dangers, heat and cold, &c. when they betook themselves in cavos suos recessus et iis sese tuerentur: into their hollow retreats, and secured or protected themselves there.

To caution another is,—to tell him to be cautious, provident, circumspect, wary; to tell him to secure himself, or to take measures for his security or safety. To apprise or warn him of his danger; and—simply—to give notice or warning; though with a subaudition of danger. See CAUTEL.

Wiclif renders (tuum scriptum) thy caution, i. e. thy written account, thy voucher in writing, as the Fr. Caution, thy surety or warrant.

The king anon vpe the boc and caucion vond god,
That he al clanliche to the pope's loking stod.
R. Gloucester, p. 506.

And he seide an hundrid barels of oyle, and he seide to him take thi caucioun [tuum scriptum] and sitte doone and wryte fifty.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 16.

Altho there be no express worde for euery thing in specialtie, yet there are general commandments of all things, to the end that euen such cases, as are not in Scripture particularly mentioned, might not be left to any to order at their pleasure, onely with caution that nothing be done against the Word of God.—Hooker. Eccl. Polite, b. iii. § 6.

If peace be made, the Queen must forsake the estates of Holland and Zeeland, and withall lose her money expended upon the war, or else deliver up the cautionary towns it to the enemy's hands.—Camden. Q. Eliz. an. 15[illegible].

I fox like lurking lay about the king,
Into the actions of the peeres I prie,
With cautie observation of each thing.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 754.

By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
From compassing the earth, cautious of day.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

——— Yet remember
What I foretell thee, soon thou shalt have cause
To wish thou never hadst rejected thus
Nicely or cautionly my offer'd aid,
Which would have set thee in short time with ease
On David's throne.—Id. Par. Regained, b. iv.

For a cautiousness in any one, not to sin scandalously, or on the house top, take this by itself, abstracted from the sin it belongs to, and I cannot see why that should be either a part, or aggravation of a sin.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 609.

However, our doctor demeaned himself in his embassie with such cautiousness, that he not only escaped the Duke's fury, but also procured many privileges for our English merchants, exemplified in Mr. Hackluit.
Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

In reference to sensual pleasures it forbids all irregularity and excess, and strictly enjoins purity and temperance; cautioning us to take heed least we be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 5.

I must now close up what I have spoken upon this subject with this cautional observation.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

I was now, methought, passing to the other side of the grove, when I met the ghost of Bickerstaff my predecessor, who, (in the manner that is reported of Musæus of old,) dictated to me many cautionary precepts for my future conduct, and with a smiling gravity, rallied me upon my too eager forwardness in advancing into his province.
Tatler, No. 273.

And yet these same cautious and quick-sighted gentlemen can wink and swallow down this sottish opinion about percipient stoma, which exceeds in credibility all the fictions of Æsop's fables.—Bentley. Ser. 2.

I have myself with pleasure, frequently seen some of this species of insects to carry ample provisions into their dry and barren cells, where they have sealed them carefully and cautiously up with their eggs, partly, it is like, for incubation-sake, and partly as an easy bed to lodge their young: but chiefly, for future provision for their young in their nympha-state, when they stand in need of food.
Derham. Physico Theology, b. iv. c. 15.

CAW, v. } Vox a sono ficta. Also written
CAW, n. } Kaw, (qv.)
The cry of the different species of crow.

As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye,
Or russet-pated choughes, many in sort,
(Rising and cawing at the gun's report,)
Never themselues, and madly sweepe the sky.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 2.

Nor [thou] with an inward murmuring
Hoarsly crow-like caw'st out some idle thing,
I know not what. Holliday. Persius, Sat. 3.

He sees, that this great round-about,
The world, with all it's motley rout,
Church, army, physic, law,
Its customs, and its business,
Is no concern at all of his,
And says—what says he?—caw.—Cowper. The Jackdaw.

CEASE, v.
CEASE, n.
CE'ASELESS.
CE'ASELESSLY.
CE'ASING, n.

Fr. Cesser; It. Cessare; Sp. Cesar; Lat. Cessare, from cedere, or rather the supine, cessum. Cessare is, cedere a labore; to go away from labour.

To leave, to quit, to discontinue, to desist or forbear to do or from doing any thing; to leave or depart from; to end or put an end to, to stay, to stop or put a stop to.

Thei seide to hym softeliche, cesse shulle we nevé
Til mede be thy wedded wyf.—Piers Ploughman, p. 32.

Therfore I heerynge ghoure feith that is in Crist Iesus and the loue into alle seyntis, ceesse not to do thankyngis for ghou, makynge mynde of ghou in my preiers.
Wiclif. Effesies, c. 1.

Wherfore euen I (after that I heard of the fayth whiche ye haue in the Lorde Jesu & loue vnto al ye sainctes,) cease not to geue thankes for you makynge mencyon of you in my prayers.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Fothly, a man may change his purpos and his conseil, if the cause ceesith, or whan a new cas betideth.
Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

And thus was ceased the debate
Of Loue. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

What stirre and rule (quod order then) do these rude people make?
We hold her best that shall deserue a praise for vertue's sake.
This sentence was no sooner said, but beauty therwith blusht:
The noise did cease, the hal was still and eury thing was husht.—Uncertaine Auctors. Praise of Mistres R.

Their eternall death shall also be with corporal payne and torments of the bodye, euen with the whole felowship of the deuyll, and that without any ende or ceasynge.
Udal. Revelacions, c. 20.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease without your remorse.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 3.

Ser. Get on your cloake, and hast you to Lord Timon,
Importune him for my moneyes, be not ceast
With slight denail.—Id. Timon of Athens, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— When I had subscrib'd
To mine owne fortune, and inform'd her fully,
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overture, she ceast
In heauie satisfaction, and would neuer
Receiue the ring againe.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 3.

France. Take her, faire sonne, and from her blood raysc up
Issue to me, that the contending kingdomes
Of France and England, whose very shoares looke pale,
With enuy of each others happinesse,
May cease their hatred.—Id. Henry V. Act v. sc. 2.

Which persecution was both longer and also crueller than all the other—for whole tenne yeeres together it continued in burning the churches, in banishing the innocent, in murthering the martyrs and neuer ceased.
Stow. The Romanes.

——— Suppose there was defect
(Beyond all question) in our king, to wrong Æacides,
And he, for his particular wreake from all assistance cease,
We must not cease t' assist ourselves.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

——— About her middle round
A cry of hell hounds never ceasing bark'd
With wide Cerberian mouths full loud, and rung
A hideous peal.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

——— But much more
That spirit, upon whose spirit depends and rests
The lives of many: the cease of majestie
Dies not alone, but like a gulfe doth draw
What's neere it, with it.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 3.

Love, justice, honour, innocence renew,
Men's sprights with white simplicity indue;
Make all to leave in plenty's ceaseless store
With equal shares, none wishing to have more.
Drummond. The Speeches. Saturn.

Aire, and ye elements, the eldest birth
Of nature's wombe, that in quaternion run
Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things, let your ceasles change
Varie to our great Maker still new praise.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Rose-cheeked youth, who garlanded with flow'rs
Still blooming ceaselessly, unto thee pours
Immortal nectar in a cup of gold,
That by no darts of ages thou grow old.
Drummond. Hymn on the fairest Fair.

What mean despicable creatures do we make ourselves, when we forsake the paths of virtue and the commandments of our God! Alas, we cease to be men, and put ourselves upon the same level with the brutes.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 2.

Smit with the glorious avarice of fame,
He claims no less than an immortal name;
Hence on his fancy just conception shines,
True judgment guides his hand, true taste refines;
Hence ceaseless toil, devotion to his art,
A docile temper, and a generous heart.
Mason. Fresnoy. Art of Painting.

Spencer, (says he,) is much misrepresented; he did not mean by abrogation a ceasing, but an alteration and abatement.—Warburton. Remarks on Occas. Reflect. pt. ii.

CEA'SURE. See CESURE.

CE'CITY } Fr. Cécité; Lat. Cæcitas, blind-
CECU'TIENCY. } ness; Cæcus, blind. Of uncertain etymology. Martinius observes, cæca sane est ejus etymologia.

In him [the Babylonian] unreasonable cecity and blindnesse trampled all lawes both of God and nature vnder feet: wilfulnesse tyrannized ouer reason, and brutish sensualitie ouer will.—Hooker. Ser. On Pride.

So that they [moles] are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more then a cecutiency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish of objects or colours; so are they not exactly blind, for light is one object of vision.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 18.

CE'DAR, n.
CE'DARLIKE.
CE'DARN.

Fr. Cédre; It. and Sp. Cedro; Dut. Ceder-boom; A. S. Ceder-beam; Lat. Cedrus; Gr. Κεδρος. Perhaps from κε-αω, urere, to burn, (Vossius and Martinius.)

Evelyn uses cedry, as the adjective, but Milton, cedarn. See the quotation from Pliny.

Chastitie, humilitie, and charitye or perfecte loue towarde all men, ben ornamentes a great dele more precious in the syght of God, then that other marble pillours, the garnishyng of vuerye, the tymbre woorke of cedre tre, the golde, the siluer, and the precious stones whereof the priestes and Pharisees made so muche great pryde and shewe.
Udal. Luke, c. 21.

And they of Tyrus broght much cedre-wood to David.
Geneva Bible, 1561. 1 Chronicles, xxii. 4.

As for cedare, the best simply be those that grow in Candie, Affricke, and Syria: this vertue hath the oile of cedar, that if any wood or timber be thoroughly anointed therewith, it is subject neither to worme nor moth, no yet to rottenness.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 39.

The fume and smoke of the cedar and the citron trees only, the old Trojans were acquainted with when they offered sacrifice.—Id. Ib. b. xiii. c. 1.

By his prescript a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold, therein
An ark, and in the ark his testimony,
The records of his covenant.—Milton. Par. Lost, b xii.

——— It is not for his tall
And growing gravity, so cedar-like,
To be the second to an host in cuerpo,
That knows his own elegancies.
B. Jonson. New Inn, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— There eternal summer dwells,
And west-winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn alleys fling
Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton. Comus.

Pindus again shall hear, again rejoice,
And Hæmus too, as when th' enchanting voice
Of tuneful Orpheus charm'd the grove,
Taught oaks to dance, and made the cedars move.
Lansdowne. In praise of Myra.

CEDE, v. } Fr. Céder; It. Cedere; Sp. Ceder; Lat. Ced-ere, to go, to go away. Accede.
CE'SSION. } Cede appears to be of very
CE'SSIBLE. } modern introduction.
CESSIBI'LITY. }

To go away from, to quit or forsake, to yield or give up, to resign. Cession—

A going away from, quitting, or forsaking, yielding, giving up, resigning. Yielding or giving way, (sc.) to pressure, to any external force.

That it is the equal pressure of the air on all sides upon the bodies that are in it, which causeth the easy cession of its parts, may be argued from hence.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 15

But lastly, if the parts of the strucken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body till it has spent its force.
Digby. On Bodies, c. 9.

There is to be further noted that, if the subject strucken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas if the thing strucken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect.
Id. Ib.

Your Lordship will find in Mr. Hyde's letter two points, upon which the Prince desired us to write this ordinary; one about the satisfaction of his debts from Spain by the cession of Maestricht, the other about the Princess's portion.
Sir W. Temple. To the Lord Treasurer, Sept. 1678.

My gallant fellow-citizens, you come
To learn the issue of this day's debate
In gen'ral council. Wisely did we cede
To Spartan Eurybiades command;
The different squadrons to their native ports
Had else deserted. Glover. Athenaid, b. iii.

After the treaty of Ryswick, indeed, some few of those among them, who had not obtained settlements in Martinico and Hispaniola, returned to St. Christopher: but the war of the partition soon after breaking out, they were finally expelled, and the whole island was ceded in sovereignty to the crown of Great Britain, by the treaty of Utrecht.
Grainger. Sugar Cane, b. i. Note

CE'DULE. Schedule, (qv.) Fr. Cédule; It. Cedola; Sp. Cedula.

A scrowl, handwriting, or private instrument in writing, (Cotgrave.)

Then Ilay deliuered to the Earle [of Surrey] a little cedule, wryten with the kynges secretaries hand unsigned.
Hall. Hen VIII. an. 5.

I have procured a royal cedule which I caus'd to be printed, and whereof I send you here inclos'd a copy, by which cedule I have power to arrest his very person [the Conde del Real]; and my lawyer tells me there was never such a cedule granted before.—Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 14.

CE'DUOUS. Lat. Cæduus, from cæd-ere, to cut, to cut down.

And first by Trees here, I consider principally for the genus generalissimum. These we shall divide into the greater and more ceduous, fructicant and shrubby.
Evelyn. Sylva, s. 3. Introd. ed. 1679.

CEIL, v. } In neither Skinner nor Junius.
CE'ILING. } Barrett has "Sieling, planking or boarding — also materiaria crustatio." In the Bible, 1551, it is written Syll; in the Geneva, 1561, Sile; (once in the margin Cieled, and in the text, Cieling;) in Barker, 1583, Sid. Minshew says, "to side, (v.) to wainscot." Somner, that the A.S. Syl is "basis, limen, the ground-post, a sill, sell or ground-sill. Also, Columna, a pillar. Herculea sylla, Hercules' pillars." In Sw. Sylt, according to Ihre, is—the foundation of any thing; whence he adds, in Ulphilas, Sulan, gasulan, fundare, to found, or lay the foundation. Junius, in his Gloss. Goth. suggests that Syl may be from the Gr. Ξυλον, lignum, or from ὑλη, any wooden material fit for building. In 2 Chron. iii. 5. quoted below, "he syled with fyre tree," is in the Septuagint, εξυλωσε ξυλοις κεδρινοις. In Jer. xxii. 14. "the sylynges maketh he of cedere," is, εξυλωμενα εν κεδρω. Dr. Jamieson suggests the Dut. Siele, indusium subuculum. The old English, (see the quotation from Leland,) he says, is a canopy. Though Cotgrave explains the Fr. Ciel, to signify heaven, and also a canopy, and the inner roof of a room of state, &c. he discountenances the supposition that they are the same word, by observing that they have different plurals; the first having cieux, and the second ciels. North writes Seeling. (See in v. FRET.)

Ceiling seems to have been applied, generally, to any work in wood or timber, whether roof, sides, or floor: it is still applied to the planking of a ship. More commonly, to—

The cover of the top of a room or apartment; beneath an upper flooring or outer roof.

And the greater house he syled with fyre tree and ouerlayde it wt good golde, and graued thereto paulmetrees and chaines.—Bible, 1551. 2 Chron. c. 3.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir tree, which he overlayd with fine gold, and set thereupon palm trees and chains.—Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

Then spake the lorde by the prophete Aggeus, and sayde: ye youre selves can finde tyme to dwel in syled houses, and shall thys house lye waste.—Bible, 1551. Aggeus, c. 1.

Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying,
Is it time for you, O ye that dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?—Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

The chammer was haunged of red and of blew, and in it was a cyll of cloth of gold; bot the king was not under for that sam day.—Leland, vol. iv. p. 295. Fyancells of Mary, eldest Daughter of K. Hen. VII. to K. Jas. of Scotland.

He causeth windowes to be hewen therein, and the sylynges and geastes maketh he of cedere, and paynteth theym with senober.—Bible, 1551. Jeremy, c. 22

And cutteth him out windows, and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion.—Bible. Modern Version. Ib.

Mean while the south wind rose, and with black wings
Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove
From under heav'n; the hills to thir supply
Vapor, and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain; and now the thick ned sky
Like a dark ceeling stood.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

I myself have, not without some wonder, observed how very long a plant of aloes torn from the ground, and hung in the air near the ceiling of my chamber, would continue succulent.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 124.

In this convent there is also a singular curiosity of another kind, a small chapel, the whole lining of which, both sides and cieling, is composed of human sculls and thigh bones: the thigh bones are laid across each other, and a scull is placed in each of the four angles.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 1.

——— But me perhaps
The glowing hearth may warmly awhile
With faint illumination, that uplifts
The shadows to the cieling, there by fits
Dancing uncouthly to the quivering flame.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

CE'LATURE. Calare, calatum, insculpere, to cut, to carve, to grave, to engrave.

With crafty archys raysyd wonder clene,
Embowed over all the work to cure,
So marveylous was the celature.
Lydgate. Troye Boke, in Warton, vol. ii. p. 99.

These celatures in the drinking cups were so fram'd that they might put them on or take them off at pleasure, and were therefore called emblemata: such was that whereof the satyrist speaks.—Hakewill. Apologie, p. 372.

They admitted in the utensils of the church some celatures and engravings. Such was that Tertullian speaks of, the Good Shepherd in the Chalice.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 10.

CE'LEBRATE, v. } Fr. Célebrer; It. Celebrare; Sp. Celebrar; Lat. Celebrare, celebratum; Gr. Κλεϵ-ειν, dicere, prædicare.
CE'LEBRATING, n.
CELEBRA'TION.
CE'LEBRA'TER.
CELE'BRIOUS.
CELE'BRITY.
CE'LEBRE, adj.
CELE'BRABLE.

To call, to declare, to proclaim, to make known or renowned; to spread the praise, fame, or reputation. Also—

To treat as worthy of honour, with public ceremony, with solemn rites.

Hercules is celebrable for his hard trauaile, he daunted the proud Centaurus, half horse, halfe man, & beraft the disporting frō yᵉ cruell lion, that is to saie, he slough the lion & beraft him his skin. Chaucer. Boccius, b. v.

As for those barking preachers so slaunderously defaming us in so celebre a place [they] ought rather to be called false prophets and sheep-cloathed wolves.
King Hen. VIII. to Wyatt, an. 30.

Wherby they have particularly acquired for theselfe eternal glory, and also right honorable burya'll, not onely to be therein ingraued, but that theire vertue and their glory, be in the same celebrated and magnefyed for euermore, whan tyme shal require to speake of their feates, or for to ymitate and followe them.—Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 56.

And tho many, both bishops and kings, ignorant of true religion, judge otherwise of these deeds; yet godly men know they have more of true praise, than the most celebrated triumphs.—Strype. Records. The D. of Saxony to Hen. VIII. an. 1539.

Before this tyme, of whom tooke you the manner of celebrating the masse: not of the tradition of Jeames, for yᵗ was as yet vnknowen to the world, & now first of all was it by yᵗ Synode opened to the world.—Barnes. Works, p. 350.

And yet find we that feast [the Feast of the Dedicatiō] euer after continued and had in honour vntyll Christes owne dayes, and our Sauiour hymself went to the celebration of that same feast, as appeareth in the Ghospell of Sayut John.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 318.

I have sinned against the earth, which so long hath miserably wanted this sacrament against men, whom I have called from this supersubstantial morsel, the slayer of so many men as have perished for want of food. I have defrauded the souls of the dead of this daily and most celebrious sacrifice.
Strype. Memoirs Cranmer's Confession, an. 1553

——— With what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive
Strict laws impos'd to celebrate his throne
With warbl'd hymns, and to his Godhead sing
Forc't Hallelutahs.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

——— The citizens
I am sure have shewne at full their royall minds,
As let em have their rights they are ever forward—
In celebration of this day with shewes,
Pageants, and sights of honor.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII Act iv. sc. 1.

In that sacred and celebrious assembly of all the states, addressing for the royal inauguration, he [Abp. Hubert] added to those lay peeres conditionals, his clergy-sophismes, and second seede plot of treasons
Speed. Hist. of G. Britaine, an. 1199.

Though you tell me not who objected against your writing Occasional Meditations, because you have named me, who encourage you to write more of them, I dare venture to lay my credit with you, that you yourself do thank your celebrater as competent a judge, in such cases, as your exceptionmaker.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. Letter from Lady Ranelagh.

I am really more a well wisher to your felicity, than a celebrater of your beauty.
Pope to Mrs. A. Formor. On her Marriage.

The drowsy elements, arous'd by thee,
Roll to harmonious measures, active all!
Earth, water, air, and fire, with feeling glee,
Exult to celebrate thy festival.—Thompson. Hymn to May.

It may happen in the various combinations of life, that a good man may receive favours from one, who, notwithstanding his accidental beneficence, cannot be justly proposed to the imitation of others, and whom therefore he must find some other way of rewarding than by publick celebrations.—Rambler, No. 136.

Doctor Warburton had a name sufficient to confer celebrity on those who could exalt themselves into antagonists, and his notes have raised a clamour too loud to be distinct.
Johnson. Preface to Shakespeare.

CELE'RITY. Fr. Célérité; Lat. Celer, from Κελλ-ειν, impellere, to drive on, urge on, impel. Applied to the motion of any thing driven on, forced or struck on.

Speed, swiftness, velocity.

From this question his ho. descended to the maner of proceding of this mater, and how the same requyred celerite: and therupon called in doubt, whether your gr. shold be refused as suspecte.
Strype. No. 23. Records. The King's Ambassadors to Wolsey.

The horsemen made such diligence, and with such celeritie set forwarde their iourney, that nothyng was more likely then they to haue obtayned, ye and seased their praye.
Grafton. Rich. III. an. 3.

Even a small parcel of air, if put into a sufficiently brisk motion, may communicate a considerable motion to a solid body; whereof a notable instance (which depends chiefly upon the celerity of the springy corpuscles of the air) is afforded by the violent motion communicated to a bullet shot out of a good wind-gun.—Boyle. Works, vol. v p. 5.

Time, with all its celerity, moves slowly to him, whose whole employment is to watch its flight.—Idler, No. 21.

CELE'STIFY, v. } Fr. Céleste, célestial; It. and Sp. Celeste, celestiale; Lat. Cælum; Gr. Κοιλον, i. e. cavum, hollow, (Vossius.)
CELE'STIAL, adj.
CELE'STIAL, n.
CELE'STIOUS.

In application, equivalent to the English—
Heavenly; having the qualities of the heavens; of the inhabitants of heaven.

And yff we haue nede of prayers lyvyng in this worlde, moche more nede shall we haue in the other worlde, where we shall be lett from that celestyal syght.
Strype. Records. Dr. Crome's Declaration, &c No. 19.

It remaineth therefore, that as your lordship from time to time vnder her most gracious and excellent Maiestie, haue shewed your selfe a valient protectour, a carefull conseruer, and an happy enlarger of the honour and reputation of your country; so at length you may enjoy those celestiall blessings, which are prepared to suche as tread your steps, and seeke to aspire to such diuine and heroical vertues.
Hackluyt. Voyages. Epistle Dedicatoree, vol. i.

This end the talking had, King Ioue from golden throne vprose.
Whom home to heauenly court celestials garding al did close.—Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. 10.

For though we should affirm that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth celestified, and earth but heaven terrestrified, or that each part above had influence upon its divided affinity below: yet how to single out these relations, &c.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

In the mean time your selves, Illustrious and most Excellent Lords, in whom this pious and noble sedulity, out of meer Evangelical affection, exerts itself to reconcile and pacify contending bretheren, as ye are worthy of all applause among men, so doubtless will ye obtain the celestial reward of peace makers with God; to whose supreme benignity and favour, we heartily recommend in our prayers both you and yours.—Milton, vol. ii. Letter of State, Oct. 1653.

But as poets and astronomers have fancied, among the celestial lights that adorn the firmament, bears, bulls, goats, dogs, scorpions, and other beasts; so our adversaries impute I know not what imaginary deformities to a book, ennobled by its author with many celestious lights fit to instruct the world, and discover to them the ways of truth and blessedness.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 257.

That mind will never be vacant, which is frequently recalled by stated duties to meditations on eternal interests; nor can any hour be long, which is spent in obtaining some new qualification for celestial happiness.—Rambler, No. 124.

No sooner were they of age to be received into the apartments of the other celestials, than Wit began to entertain Venus at her toilet by aping the solemnity of Learning, and Learning to divert Minerva at her loom, by exposing the blunders and ignorance of Wit.—Id. No. 22.

CE'LIBATE, n. } Fr. Célibe, célibate; It. and Sp. Celibe, celibato; from the Lat. Cælebs. A κοιτη, vel κοιτη, et λειπω, est κοιλψ, quia ei λειπει κοιτη γαμικη, deest lectus nuptialis, because the nuptial bed is wanting to him, (Vossius.) And to the same purport is Scaliger (ad Festum.) See Martinius. Celibate was applied as Celibacy now is, to—
CELI'BACY, n. }
The state of being unmarried; or of—
One who has not—one who is without—the nuptial bed; who is single, solitary, without a wife, unmarried. In English Law, the male is called, a bachelor; the female, a spinster.

Not discerning in the mean time that amongst those who pretended to the purities of celibate, some would yet bring woman into their houses.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

At length this most holy, zealous, mortified and seraphical Dr. Sherlock having spent all his time in holy and chaste celibacy, surrendered up his most pious soul to God in sixteen hundred eighty and nine, and was buried on the 25th of June within the chancel.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

The former could not be done, while the clergy gave hostages of their fidelity to the civil government by the interests of their families and children: therefore this Pope did most severely forbid all clergy-men's marrying, that as the old Roman soldiers were forbidden marriage while they received pay, lest their domestick interests should abate their courage; so the celibate of the clergy was strictly enjoyned, to make them more usefull and hearty for this design.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

He, that said it was not good for man to be alone, placed the celibate amongst the inferior states of perfection.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 292. Letter from Mr. Evelyn.

This [the poverty of some of the clergy] is the only specious objection, which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine and practice of this church, in the point of celibacy, the only matter of just reproach, wherein they visibly triumph.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

He [the Pope] was sensible, that so long as the monks were indulged in marriage, and were permitted to rear families, they never could be subjected to strict discipline, or reduced to that slavery under their superiors, which was requisite to procure to the mandates, issued from Rome, a ready and zealous obedience. Celibacy, therefore, began to be extolled, as the indispensable duty of priests.
Hume. Hist. of England, vol. i. c. 2.

CELL, v. } Fr. Cellule; It. Cella; Sp. Celda; Lat. Cella, a celendo. Festus,—Cella, quod ea celantur, quæ velimus esse occulta; because in it those things may be concealed, which we wish to be hidden; and cellar is now particularly applied to places appropriated to things of this description.
CELL, n.
CE'LLIAR, n.
CE'LLERAGE, n.
CE'LLARER, or CE'LLERER, n
CE'LLULAR, adj.

to be out of sight.

A place of concealment, of secrecy, of retirement, of seclusion, of store; a secret or retired apartment, or habitation or dwelling: a depository; a retreat.

And for chef charyte, we chargeden vs seluen
In amendyng of this men, we maden oure celles
To ben in cytes yuet. Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Biholde the crowis: for thei sowen not neither repen, to which is no celer ne berne, and God fedith them, how mych more ye ben of more prys than thei?—Wiclif. Luke, c. 12.

And if you list to herken hinderward,
I wol you sayn the lif of Seint Edward:
Or elles tragedies first I wol telle
Of which I have an hundred in my cell.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 13,978.

Ther be other spices of pride that ben withouten: but natheles, that on of these spices of pride is signe of that other, right as the gay levesell at the taverne is sign of the win that is in the celler.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Upon my faith thou art some officer,
Some worthy sextein, or some celerer.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 13,942.

Minerue for the head thei soughten,
For she was wise, and of a man
The witte and reason which he can,
Is in the celles of the brayne.
Wherof thei made hir souereyn.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Myself a recluse from the world,
And celled under ground,
Lest that the gould, the precious stones,
And pleasures, here be found,
Might happen to corrupt my minde,
For blindness did I pray,
And so contemplatiuely heere,
I with contentment stay.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii.

Sec. Br. 'Tis most true,
That musing meditation most affects
The pensive secrecy of the desert cell,
Far from the chearful haunt of men and herds,
And sits as safe as in a senate house.—Milton. Comus.

Which fume mounting into the head makes the enthusiast to admiration fluent and eloquent, he being as it were drunk with new wine drawn from that cellar of his own that lies in the lowest region of his body, though he be not aware of it, but takes it to be pure nectar, and those waters of life that spring from above.—H. More. On Enthusiasm, s. 18.

Hora. Ahah boy, sayest thou so. Art thou there, truepenny?
Come on, you here this fellow in the selleredge.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

The soul contending to that light to fly
From her dark cell, we practice how to die:
Employing thus the poet's winged art
To reach this love, and grave it in our heart.
Waller. Of Divine Love, c. 6.

Thus, though in summer divers cellars, that are not deep, are perhaps no colder than the external air was (when it was judged but temperate) in the winter or the spring, yet it will seem very cold to us, that bring into it bodies heated by the summer sun, and accustomed to a warmer air.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 482.

On a bulk in a cellar, or in a glass house among thieves and beggars, was to be found the author of the Wanderer, the man of exalted sentiments, extensive views, and curious observations.—Johnson. The Life of Savage.

CE'LSITUDE. Fr. Celsitude, highness, excellency, (terms conferred on Princes,) Cotgrave. From the Lat. Celsus, high, lofty.

Honour to the celestiall and cleare,
Goddes of Loue, and to thy celsitude
That yeuest vs light, so fer downe frō thy spere
Persing our harts with thy pulcritude.
Chaucer. The Court of Love.

To the most excellent prince in Christ, &c William, &c. greeting in him by whom kings doe reigne and princes beare rule. Vnto your kingly celsitude [Ric. 2.] by the tenour of those presents we intimate that, &c.
Fox. Martyrs. Rich. II. an. 7.

CEME'NT, v. } Fr. Cément or Ciment, cimenter; It. Cemento; Lat. Cementum, so called because cæsum, i. e. cut, (sc.) from larger stones; and applied (see Vossius) to those small stones or pieces or fragments of stones, which were used for filling up, stowing, cramming together with other materials. See the quotation from Holland's Livy, where the word morter is improperly introduced.
CEME'NT, n.

An adhesive, sticking, fastening, binding compost, of sand, lime, or other materials.

Slyme was their morter, ch. ii. and slyme pittes, ch iv. that slyme was a fatnesse that issued out of the earth, like vnto tarre: and thou mayest call it cement, if thou wilt.
Tyndal. Works, p. 6.

Seperate the stoanes, and the wall openeth, and leat the cement faile, and the edifice falleth.—The Golden Boke, c. 17.

As flowers dead, lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,
So beauty blemish'd once for ever's lost,
In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.
Shakespeare. The Passionate Pilgrim, s. 11.

And that was no hard matter to do, for that the cement or morter was not hardened and bound with lime, but tempered with earth and clay, after the old manner of building.
Holland. Livie, p. 400.

What strength have we now to oppose to these most pernicious enemies, [the lusts of the flesh] which are so closely cemented, and even incorporated within us, that they are become as it were flesh of our flesh, and bones of our bones!
Chillingworth, Ser. 9.

——— Indeed, they may
Appear too dearly bought, my falling glories
Being made up again, and cemented
With a son's blood.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iii. sc. 1.

God indeed can cement the ruins, and heal the breaches of an apostate soul, but usually a shipwreck'd faith and a deflowr'd conscience admit of no repair.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

And indeed by variety of cements we may be assisted to make divers experiments that we could not otherwise make so well, if at all; for which reason I have been somewhat curious about making a pretty number of such mixtures.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 463.

An harmony of mould, by nature mixt!
Not light as air, nor as a cement fix'd:
Just firm enough t' embrace the thriving root,
Yet give free expanse to the fibrous shoot.
Hart. Christ's Parable of the Sower.

CE'METERY, n. } Fr. Cimitière; It. Cimitero; Sp. Cementario; Lat. Cæmenterium. Κοιμητηριον, (q. d.) dormitorium, a place to sleep in, from κοιμαω, to sleep. Applied by Christians, to whom death itself is but a sleep, dormitio, (Vossius,) to—
CEMITE'RIAL. }
The place of burial.

Among Christians the honour, which is valued in the behalf of the dead, is, that they be buried in holy ground; that is, in appointed cemeteries, in places of religion, there where the field of God is sown with the seeds of the resurrection, that their bodies also may be among the Christians, with whom their hope and their portion is, and shall be for ever.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying. s. 8.

The cemiterial cels of ancient Christians and martyrs, were filled with draughts of Scripture stories.
Brown. Urn Burial, c. 3.

Though we decline the religious consideration, yet in cemiterial and narrower burying places, to avoid confusion and cross position, a certain posture were to be admitted.
Id. Ib.

It is for this reason (says Plato) that the souls of the dead appear frequently in cæmeteria, and hover about the places, where their bodies were buried, as still hankering after their old brutal pleasures, and desiring again to enter the body that gave them an opportunity of fulfilling them.
Spectator, No. 90.

CENA'TION. } Lat. Cœna, a supper; perCE'NATORY, adj. } haps from Gr. Κοινη, common, a common meal. "Cenatory convention."

A meeting for supping or taking supper together, or in common.

And concordant hereunto is the instruction of Columella, De positione villæ, which he contriveth into summer and winter habitations, the rooms of cœnation in the summer, he obverts into the winter ascent, that is south-east.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 7.

Lastly if it be not fully conceded, that this gesture [discumbency] was used at the Passover, yet that it was observed at the last supper, seems almost incontrovertible, for at this feast of cenatory convention, learned men make more then one supper, or at least many parts thereof.—Ib. Ib. b. vi. c 6.

CE'NOBY, n. } Gr. Κοινοβιον, from Κοινος, CE'NOBITES. } common, and βιος, life.
CENOBI'TIC. } See the example from Gib-
CENOBI'TICAL. } bon.

His [John Bucke] armes are yet to be seene in the ruines of the hospitall of St. John's near Smithfield, and in the church of Alhadows at the upper end of Lumbard Street, which was repaired and enlarged with the stones brought from that demolished cenoby.
Sir G. Buck. History of Rich. III. p. 68.

Yet it is hard that any church should be charged with crime for not observing such rituals, because we see some of them which certainly did derive from the Apostles, are expired and gone out in a desuetude; such as are abstinence from blood, and from things strangled, the cœnobitick life of secular persons, &c.—Bp. Taylor. Lib. of Prophesying, s. 5.

They have multitudes of religious orders black and gray, eremitical and cœnobitical, and nuns.—Stillingfleet.

The monks were divided into two classes: the cœnobites, who lived under a common, and regular, discipline; and the anachorets, who indulged their unsocial, independent fanaticism.—Gibbon. History, c. 37.

CE'NOTAPH, n. Fr. Cénotaphe; Gr. Κενοταφιον, from Κενος, empty, and ταφος, a tomb.

An empty tomb;—erected in honour of one to whom the rites of burial had been performed elsewhere; or of one, to whom no rites of burial had been performed at all.

Hobeit the armie reared in honour of him an honorarie tombe or stately herse) (which the Greeks call cenotaphium, i. e. an empty tomb,) about the which every yeare afterwards upo a certain set day, the souldiers should runne at tilt, keepe jousting and turnament.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 153.

Priam, to whom the story was unknown
As dead, deplor'd his metamorphos'd son
A cenotaph his name and title kept
And Hector round the tomb, with all his brothers wept.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xii.

The cenotaph is placed immediately under that of Milton, and represents, in alto relievo, a female figure with a lyre as emblematical of the higher kinds of poetry, pointing with one hand to the bust above, and supporting with the other a medallion.—Mason. On Mr. Gray, Note 2.

CENSE. } Fr. Encens, encenser; It. Incenso;
CE'NSING, n. } Sp. Encienso. Junius says, that
CE'NSER. } Thus was, by the writers of the middle age, called Incensum; Skinner adds, quia (sc.) incenditur, hoc est, adoletur; because it was burnt. See INCENSE.

Any thing burned; any perfumed, aromatick, odoriferous thing, burned, (sc.) in divine honour.

And anothere aungel cam and stood bifore the auter, and hadde a goldun censer, and manye encensis weren youun to him that he schulde ghyue of the preieris of alle seintis on the goldun auter that is bifore the trone of God.
Wiclif. Apocalipse, c. 8.

And another angel came & stod before ye aulter hauing a golde senser, & much of odoures was geue vnto hym, yt he shoul offer of ye praiers of all sainctes vpō the goldē aulter, which was before ye seat.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This Absolon, that jo'y was and gay,
Goth with a censer on a holy day,
Censing the wives of the parish faste.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3341.

But with vs is the Lorde our God whome we haue not forsaken, and the priestes of the sonnes of Aaron ministrynge vnto the Lorde, & the Leuites in office, burning vnto the Lorde euery morninge & euery euen burnt offerynges and swete cense.—Bible, 1551. 2 Chronicles, c. 13.

And as for censing of them, and kneeling and offering unto them, with other like worshippings, although the same hath entred by devotion, and fallen to custom, yet the people ought to be diligently taught, that they in no ways do it.
Burnet. Records. Judicium. Of Images, vol. i.

He spake against invocation and praying to saints, and against censing in the church and other ceremonies.
Strype. Memoirs. Hen. VIII. an 1540.

Her thoughts are like the fume of frankincence
Which from a golden censer, forth doth rise,
And throwing forth sweet odours mount fro thence
In rolling globes up to the vauted skies.
Spenser. Colin Clout come home.

See, father, what first fruits on earth are sprung
From thy implanted grace in man, these sighs
And prayers, which in this golden censer, mixt
With incence, I thy priest before thee bring.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Lives there on earth to whom I am unknown,
Unconquerable queen of mighty woes!
Whom nor the fuming censer can appease,
Nor victim's blood on blazing altars pour'd.
West. Triumphs of the Soul.

CENSE. } From the Lat. Censere, of
CE'NSION. } unknown etymology. Festus,
CE'NSUAL, adj. } censere, nunc significat putare, nunc suadere, nunc decernere. And then, censio, estimatio. And Varro, censor ad cujus censionem, id est, arbitrium, censeretur populus. It is used as equivalent to—

Rate, tax, assessment. See quotation from Livy.

For he divised and ordained the cense, to wit, the assessing, and taxation of the citizens: a thing most profitable to that state and government, which was like in time to come, to grow so mightie. By which cense, the charges and contributions, either in war or peace, was not levied by the poll upon the citizens, as aforetime, but according to the valuation of their wealth and abilitie.—Holland. Livie, p. 30.

And though respect bee a part following this; yet now here, and still I must remember it, if you write to a man, whose estate and cense and senses, you are familiar with, you may the bolder, (to set a taske to his braine,) venter on a knot.—B. Jonson. Discoveries, p. 123.

God intended this cension onely for the blessed Virgin and her sonne, that Christ might be borne, where he should.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Birth of Christ.

He [William the Conqueror] caused the whole realm to be described in a censual roll, (whereof he took a precedent from King Alfred,) so there was not one hyde of land, but both the yearly rent and the owner thereof was therein set down.—Baker. William I. an. 1079.

CE'NSOR. } Fr. Censeur; It. Censore; CENSO'RIAL. } Sp. Censor. (See the exCENSO'RIAN. } ample from North's Plu- CENSO'RIOUS. } tarch.) The popular usage
CENSO'RIOUSLY. } (of censorious) is deduced
CENSO'RIOUSNESS. } from that part of the cen-
CE'NSORSHIP. } sor's office, by which he
CE'NSURE, n. } "had authority to degrade
CE'NSURE, v. } any senator, who did not
CE'NSURABLE. } worthily behave himself,"
CE'NSURABLENESS. } See CENSURE.
CE'NSURER. } A censorious man is one
CE'NSURING, n. } disposed to detect, and expose faults; to pass severe judgments; to degrade.

Censure,—censoris officium, vel etiam opus; i. e. animadversio, reprehensio, (Gessner.) In our old writers, to censure is merely—

To think, to form an opinion, to judge, to adjudge. Now—

To judge unfavourably, to condemn, to reprehend, to blame.

Thou saiest in thy letter, that the censores are right rygorous in that realme; and therefore all that nacion hath yll-wyll with the senate.—Golden Boke, Let. 11.

If any one intend an inquisitive survey of my actions, I intreate him to judge favourably of mee, and not rashly to admit any censorious conceit.
State Trials. Anne Boleyn. From Harleian MS.

Wherefore to write my censure of this booke
This Glasse of Steele vnpartially doth shewe
Abuses all to such as in it looke
From prince to poore, from high estate to lowe,
As for the verse, who list like trade to trie,
I feare me much shall hardlie reach so high.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

These are to will and command you to convent such obstinate persons before you, and then to admonish and command to keep the order prescribed in the same book; and if any shall refuse so to do, to punish them by suspension, excommunication, or other censures of the church.
Burnett. Records. Hen. VIII. an. 3. The Bishops.

For he that was censor, had authority to put any senator off the council, and so degrade him, if he did not worthily behave himself according to his place and calling: and might name and declare any one of the senate, whom he thought to be most honest and fittest for the place again. Moreover, they might by their authority take from licentious young men, their horse which was kept at the charge of the common weal. Furthermore, they be the censors of the people, and the muster-masters, keeping books of the number of persons at every mustering.—North. Plutarch, p. 221.

O strange alarme! what must this meeting prove
Where rume onely hath prepar'd the way?
All known when mustred (though not numbred) there,
A dreadfull censor no man's spot will spare.
Stirling. Dooms-Day. The Fourth Houre.

And as the Chancerie had the pretorian power of equitie; so the Star chamber had the censorian power for offences, vnder the degree of capitall.—Bacon. Henry VII. p. 64.

A third kind of pride is a supercilious affected hautiness, that men perhaps meekly enough disposed by nature, are fain to take upon them for some ends, a solemn censorious majestick garb, that may entitle them to be patriots of such or such a faction; to gain a good opinion with some, whose good opinion may be their gain.—Hammond. Works, vol iv. p. 614.

That brings me to the next thing proposed at first, the Pharisees censoriousness and insinuated accusations of all others.—Id. Ib.

But, when there was an assembly summoned for the choosing of censors, C. Martius Rutilus professing himselfe to stand for a censorship, even he that had been the first dictatour of the commons, troubled the peace and unity of the states of the citie.—Holland. Livie, p. 264.

——— Lidia, appear,
And feast an appetite almost pined to death
With longing expectation to behold
Thy excellencies: thou, as beauty's queen,
Shalt censure the detractors.
Massinger. Great Duke of Florence, Act v. sc. 2.

——— I know in this
That I am censured rugged and austere,
That will vouchsafe not one sad sigh or tear
Upon his slaughter'd body.—Id. The Unnatural Combat.

Upon this insolent answer, every one looked the king should have censured him to some terrible punishment; when contrary to all their expectations, in a high degree of charity, he not only freely forgave him but gave a special charge he should be set at liberty, and that no man should dare to do him the least hurt.—Baker. Rich. I. an. 1199.

Humf. Madam, the king is old enough himselfe
To glue his censure: these are no women's matters.
Shakespeare, 2 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 3.

Glue euery man thine eare; but few thy voyce,
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy iudgment.
Id. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

But where the sun's bright beams could not pierce into, I have to those oscure grotte, darke caves and vaults, brought candlelight, my own conceit and conjecture, which (as they are) I submit to the favourable censure of the more learned and juditious.—Burton in Fuller. Worthies. Leicestershire.

——— We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the feare
To cope malicious censurers, which euer,
As rau'nous fishes doe a vessell follow
That is new trimm'd.—Shakes. Hen. VIII. Act i. sc. 2.

To say true, this and divers other are alike in their censurableness, by the unskilfull (be it divinity, physick, poetry, &c.) we may complain in a metaphor, (as painting can without) the blind world cannot judge of colours.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 493.

He was not so censorious as to imagine, either that the authors of them do seek the praise of men more than the praise of God, or that they do, out of vanity, attempt to make up the real want of good sense, by a show of good words.—Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull.

I have of late years met with divers such vain pretenders, who speak arrogantly and censoriously both of God and men; whilst themselves oftentimes understand no tongue but their mother's.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 304.

They are both very requisite in a virtuous mind, to keep out melancholy for the many serious thoughts it is engaged in, and to hinder its natural hatred of vice from sow'ring into severity and censoriousness.—Spectator, No. 243.

When my great predecessor Cato the elder stood for the censorship of Rome, there were several other competitors who offered themselves, and to get an interest among the people, gave them great promises of the mild and gentle treatment, which they would use towards them in that office.—Tatler, No. 162.

Should I be troubled when the purblind knight,
Who squints more in his judgment than his sight
Picks silly faults, and censures what I write.
Rochester. An Allusion to Horace, b. i. Sat. 10.

I am sorry the first, and the worst of the two [trying a new experiment] is fallen to my share, by which all a man can hope is to avoid censure, and that is much harder than to gain applause, for this may be done by one great or wise action in an age; but to avoid censure, a man must pass his life without saying or doing one ill or foolish thing.
Sir W. Temple. Upon the Cure of the Gout.

Nay amongst Europeans themselves, Cicero hath found many censurers, and a book hath been published to prove, that Tully was not eloquent.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 299.

In all the hot debates in King Charles the First's reign, in which many resolutions taken in council were justly censurable, yet the passing any censure on them was never attempted by men, who were no way partial in favour of the prerogative.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1711.

And then he adds, For if we should judge our selues, we should not be judged. If we would judge our selues, whether this be meant of the publick censures of the church, or our private censuring of our selves in order to our future amendment and reformation, is not certain.

Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 25.

It is impossible for human purity not to betray to an eye, thus sharpened by malignity, some stains, which lay concealed and unregarded, while none thought it their interest to discover them; nor can the most circumspect attention, or steady rectitude, escape blame from censors, who have no inclination to approve.—Rambler, No. 172.

While this censorial power [of the press] is maintained, to speak in the words of a most ingenious foreigner, both minister and magistrate is compelled, in almost every instance, to choose between his duty and his reputation

Junius. Preface to Letters.

Of temper as envenom'd as an asp,
Censorious, and her ev'ry word a wasp;
In faithful mem'ry she records the crimes
Or real, or fictitious, of the times. Couper. Truth.

Of this delicacy Horace is the best master. He appears in good humour when he censures; and therefore his censure has the more weight as supposed to proceed from judgment, not from passion.—Young. Love of Fame, Pref.

There is no kind of impertinence more justly censurable, than his who is always labouring to level his thoughts to intellects higher than his own, who apologizes for every word which his own narrowness of converse inclines him to think unusual; keeps the exuberance of his faculties under visible restraint; is solicitous to anticipate enquiries by needless explanations; and endeavours to shade his own abilities, lest weak eyes should be dazzled with their lustre.

Rambler, No 173.

CE'NTAUR, n. / CE'NTAURY. } The Centaurs, says Vossius, were certain inhabitants of Thessaly,—the first people who were carried by Bulls; and because they were accustomed to goad the bulls, κεντειν ταυρους, they had their name thence. Palæphatus says that these Thessalians pursued on horseback certain wild bulls, and threw their spears or javelins at them; which gives the same etymology, though a different reason for it.

He, as if centaur-like he had been one piece with the horse, was no more moved than one is with the going of his own legs: and in effect so did he command him as his own limbs.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

The greater centaurie is that famous herb, wherewith Chiron, the centaure, (as the report goeth,) was cured, at what time as having entertained Hercules in his cabin, hee would needs be handling and tempering with the weapons of his said guest, so long until one of the arrows light upon his foot and wounded him dangerously.

Holland. Pliny, b. xxv. c. 6.

CE'NTENARY, n. / CENTE'NNIAL.. / CENTI'LOQUY. } Fr. Centenaire; It. Centenario; Sp. Centenar, Lat. Centenarius, from Centum, a hundred; Gr. Ἑκατον, from Ἑκας, procul, quasi dicas remotissimum calculum in numerando, (the farthest or last stone in calculating,) et inde eximie Centum, (Lennep.)

Centiloquy, from Centum, and loqui, to speak, to discourse. And see CENTURION.

A hundred; a hundredth.

If we should allow but one inch of decrease in the growth of men for every centenary, (and lesse cannot well bee imagined,) there would at this present be abated almost fiue foot in their ordinary stature, which notwithstanding was held the competent height of man above sixteen hundred yeares since, and so still continues.—Hakewill. Apologie, p. 45.

Ptolomeus, in his centiloquie, Hermes or whosoever else the author of that tract, attributes all those symptomes, which are in melancholy men, to celestiall influences.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 190.

To her alone I rais'd my strain,
On her centennial day,
Fearless that age should chill the vein
She nourish'd with her ray.—Mason. Palinodia, Ode 10.

CE'NTINEL, v. / CE'NTINEL, n. / CE'NTRY. } See SENTINEL. From the Fr. Sentinelle; It. Sentinella, excubitor, from the Lat. Sentire, ut qui observat et sentit, (sc.)—

One who observes, and perceives the approach of the enemy, (Skinner.) One who is set on watch for such purpose. A (military) watch.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time on aged things,
To wake the morn, and centinel the night.
To wrong the wronger till he render right.

Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Whom lest some watchful centinell should spie,
And him into the garrison disclose,
His cowle about him carefully doth tie,
Creepes to the gate and closely thereat beate,
As one that entrance gladly would intreate.

Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 543.

Having set our centinels, I received a letter from Col. Norton, desiring me to send some horse to his assistance against some of the King's forces; which as I was reading, one of my centinels brought me word, that the enemy appeared at the town's end.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 119.

At two places, the one at our first setting out on this expedition, and the other at the end of it, we saw a horseman set, as we supposed, as a centinel, to watch us.

Dampier. Voyages, vol. i. c. 9.

Yet there is a certain race of men that either imagine it their duty, or make it their amusement, to hinder the reception of every work of learning, or genius, who stand as centinels in the avenues of fame, and value themselves upon giving ignorance and envy the first notice of a prey.

Rambler, No. 3.

At the same time four or five of the natives stepped forward to see what we were about, and as we did not allow them to come within certain limits, unless to pass along the beach, the centry ordered them back, which they readily complied with.—Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. c. 5.

CE'NTO. Gr. Κεντρων, originally a needle, and in a secondary sense a garment of patchwork, (sewed together by needles;) hence the word is (met.) applied to a poem composed of verses or parts of verses taken and put together from other authors.

A cento primarily signifies a cloak made of patches. In poetry it denotes a work wholly composed of verses promiscuously taken from other authors only disposed in a new form or order, so as to compose a new work and a new meaning.—Cambridge. Scribleriad, Note 13.

From different nations next the cento crowd,
With borrow'd, patch'd, and motley ensigns proud
Not for the fame of warlike deeds they toil,
But their sole end the plunder and the spoil.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

CE'NTRE, v. / CE'NTRE, n. / CE'NTRAL. / CENTRA'LITY. / CE'NTRALLY. / CENTRA'TION. / CE'NTRICK. / CENTRI'CITY. / CENTRIFU'GAL. / CENTRIPE'TAL. } Fr. Centre; It. Centro, Sp. Centro; Gr. Κεντρον, a point, (sc.) in the middle of a sphere, globe, or circle.

That point, from which the circumference is every where equidistant.

Centri-fugal,—flying from the centre.

Centri-petal,—seeking or tending towards the centre.

His tables Toletanes forth he brought
Ful wel corrected,
As ben his centres, and his argumentes,
And his proportional convenientes
For his equatoms in every thing

Chaucer. The Frankeleine's Tale, v. 11,559.

We heare the law truely preached, how we ought to do whatsoeuer God boldeth, and abstetne from whatsoeuer God forbiddeth, with all loue and mekenes, with a feruent and a burnyng lust from the center.—Tyndall. Works, p. 382.

Yet strange it was, so many stars to see
Without a sun, to give their tapers light:
Yet strange it was not that it so should be:
For where the sun centres himself by right,
Her [Mercy] face, and locks did flame.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory in Heaven.

——— By him first
Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
Ransack'd the center, and with impious hands
Rifl'd the bowels of their mother Earth
For treasures better hid.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Whereby we are well furnish'd with an answer to a further objection, that would insinuate that this emanation or effux of the secondary substance from the central is creation properly so called, which is deemed incompetible to any creature.—H. More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c. 8.

——— The sea cannot o're swell
Its just precincts; or rocky shores repell
Its foming force, or else its inward line
And centrall rams do hardly it compell
Within itself, and gently 'pease the strife.

More. On the Soul, pt. i. b. ii. s. 3.

Now if there be but one centrality
Of th' universall soul which doth invade
All humble shapes, how come these contradictions made.

Id. Ib. pt. iv. s. 15.

Sith all forms in our soul be comnite
And centrality be there.—Id. Ib. pt. iii. c. 2. s. 33.

What needs that numerous clos'd centration,
Like wastefull sand ytost with boisterous inundation?

Id. Ib. pt. ii. b. iii. c. 2. s. 8.

Now deem this universall round alone,
And rayes no rayes but a first all-spread light,
And centrick all like one pelucid sun

More. On the Soul, pt. i. b. ii. s. 16.

——— In every thing compost
Each part of th' essence its centrosity
Keeps to itself, it shrinks not to a nullity.

Id. Ib. pt. ii. b. iii. c. 2. s. 20.

Our requests for future, and even our acknowledgements of past mercies, centre purely in ourselves, our own interest is the direct sum of them. But praise is a generous and unmercenary principle.—Atterbury, vol. i. ser. 1.

If God would cause a body to move free in the æther round about a certain fixed centre, without any other creature acting upon it; I say, it could not be done without a miracle, since it cannot be explained by the nature of bodies.

Clarke. Mr. Leibnitz's Third Paper.

I pass cerulian gulphs, and now behold
New solid globes their weight, self balanc'd, bear,
And all, around the central sun in circling eddies roll'd.

Hughes. The Ecstacy.

First Ptolemy his scheme celestial wrought,
And of machines a wild provision brought.
Orbs centric and excentrick he prepares,
Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres,
In order plac'd. Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

A real circular motion, for example, is always accompanied with a centrifugal force, arising from the tendency which a body always has to proceed in a right line.

Maclaurin. Philosophical Discoveries of Newton, b. ii. c. 1.

Though the gravity of bodies really arises from their gravitation towards the several parts of the earth, (as will appear afterwards,) yet because this power acts around in all parts, and its direction is nearly towards the centre of the earth, it is therefore called a centripetal force.—Id. Ib.

One rule remains. Nor shun nor court the great,
Your truest centre is that middle state
From whence with ease th' observing eye may go
To all which soars above, or sinks below.

Whitehead. A Charge to the Poets.

Father—Creator! who beholds thy works,
But catches inspiration? Thou the earth
On nothing hung, and balanc'd in the void
With a magnetic force, and central poise.

Thompson. Sickness, b. v.

CE'NTUPLE, v. / CE'NTUPLE, adj. / CENTU'PLICATE, v. } Lat. Centuplex, centuplicatus, from Centum, (see CENTENARY,) a hundred, and plicare, to fold.

To fold a hundred times; to repeat a hundred times.

——— Say but this once,
Thou hast not done what rashly I commanded.
And that Paulinus lives, and thy reward
For not performing that which I enjoin'd thee,
Shall centuple whatever yet thy duty
Or merit challenged from me.

Massinger. Emperor of the East, Act v. sc. 3.

Jac. If the contagion
Of my misfortunes had not spread itself
Upon my son, Ascanio, though my wants
Were centupl'd upon myself, I could be patient.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act i. sc. 2.

I wish his strength were centuple, his skill equal
To my experience, that in his fall
He may not shame my victory!

Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act i. sc. 1.

I perform'd the civilities you enjoyn'd me to your friends here, who return you the like centuplicated, and so doth, &c.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 2.

CENTU'RION, n. / CE'NTURY. } Fr. Centénier, centurie; It. Centurione, centuria; Sp. Centurion, centuria; Lat. Centurio.

So called from the number of soldiers, (centum, a hundred,) over which he was appointed. North uses centener from the French.

A century is a hundred of years, of men, of any thing. See CENTENARY.

Centuriator and centurist were names given to historians, who arranged their narratives into periods of centuries, or a hundred years.

And the centurion answeride, and seide to him, Lord, I am not worthi that thou entre undir my roof, but oonly sey thou bi word, and my child schal be heelid.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 8

I proceed now (as I promised) to shew, that there were such places, as I have described, appointed and set apart among Christians for their religious assemblies, and solemn addresse unto the divine majestie, through every one of the first three centuries particularly: and that therefore they assembled not promiscuously and at hap hazard, but in appropriate places, unless necessity sometimes forced them to doe otherwise.—Mede. Works, b. ii. Dis. 1

——— And when
With wild-wood leaues and weeds, I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers
(such as I can) twice o're, I'le weepe and sighe.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

——— A century send forth,
Search every acre, in the high-growne field,
And bring him to our eye. Id. Lear, Act iv. sc. 4.

To hide his offence in some sort, he [Silvanus] would not or durst not return into the presence of Seneca, nor speak to him: but made one of his centeners go into the house, to declare the emperor's commandment, which was that Seneca should die.—North. Life of Seneca.

But how can he know former ages, unless, according to the opinion of Plato or Pythagoras, he might exist and be alive so many centuries before he was born.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 14.

The poet of whose works I have undertaken the revision, may now begin to assume the dignity of an ancient, and claim the privilege of established fame and prescriptive veneration. He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit.
Johnson. Preface to Shakespeare.

CEPHA'LICK. From Gr. Κεφαλη, the head. Fr. Céphalique, "good for the head; curing a diseased head; of or belonging to the head," (Cotgrave.)

That with which he cured himself [of phthisical consumption] and afterwards the generality of his chief patients, was principally sulphur melted and mingled in a certain proportion to make it fit to be taken, in a pipe, with beaten amber or a cephalick herb.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 189.

——— He the salubrious leaf
Of cordial sage, the purple flowering head
Of fragrant lavender, enlivening mint,
Valerian's fetid seed, endows benign
With their cephalic virtues.—Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

CERE, v.
CE'REOUS.
CERE-CLOTH.
CE'REMENT.

Lat. Cera, wax; Gr. Κηρος, of uncertain etymology.

To cere is to wax, to smear or cover with wax.

Cere-cloth, also written Sear-cloth. In A. S. Sare-cloth, is "a sore cloth, a cloth to wind or bind up a sore," and Ser-cloth, is, "ceratum, a Sear-cloth," (Somner.) Lye thinks the former is the original word. Skinner gives both without deciding in favour of either. The Dutch call a Sear-cloth,—Een wasche kleed, a wax cloth. Junius calls it medicamentum, consisting of oils, gums, and liquid mixed with wax. The Fr. Cerot; (Gr. Κηρωτον; Lat. Ceratum,) Cotgrave calls "a Sear-cloth or plaister made of wax, gum or other cleaving simples." By cerements, Heath understands—the waxed winding sheet, in which the corpse was inclosed, and sown up in order to preserve it.

Then was the bodye bowelled, embawmed, and cered, and secretly amongest other stuffe conueyed to Newcastell.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

And with that, out of his bosom he took a bag of a cere-cloth with writings therein.—Wyatt. To the King, 7 Jan. 1540.

At night he [the bee] stores up his dayes gatherings, and what is worth his observation goes into his cerecloth tables, and what is not passes away at supper for table-talke.
Gayton. Festivous Notes upon Don Quixote, b. ii. c. 5.

Is't like that lead containes her? 'twere damnation
To thinke so base a thought, it were too grose
To rib her seare-cloath in the obscure grave.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 7.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linnen, besmeared with gums, in manner of sear-cloths.—Bacon. Natural History, s. 771.

——— O answer me,
Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
Why thy canonized bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements.—Shakesp. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 4.

The body of the Marquess of Dorset seemed sound and entire, namely cere-clothed, that after 78 years was found uncorrupted.—Brown. Urne-Burial.

CEREALIOUS. Lat. Cerealis, from Ceres; which Vossius thinks is from the ancient Cereo, quod creo, significabat. Quasi frugum creatrix, the Creator of the fruits of the earth. Varro and others, think—a gerendo; g changed into c.
Of or pertaining to corn.

The Greek word Spermata, generally expressing Seeds, may signifie any edulious or cerealious grains.
Brown. Miscellaneous Tracts, vol. i. p. 16.

CEREBEL, n. Lat. Cerebellum, from the Gr. Καρα, caput, the head; Fr. Cérébelle.

In the head of man, saith he, [Willis] the base of the brain, and cerebell, yea of the whole skull, is set parallel to the horizon; by which meanes there is the less danger of the two brains jogging, or slipping out of their place.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vi. c. 2.

CE'REMONY.
CEREMO'NIAL.
CEREMO'NIAL, s.
CEREMO'NIALLY.
CEREMO'NIALNESS.
CEREMO'NIOUS.
CEREMO'NIOUSLY.

Fr. Cérémonie; It. Ceremonia; Sp. Ceremonia; Lat. Carimonia, ritus sanctus. Of the various etymologies, which Vossius repeats, he thinks that of Scaliger, though not free from doubt, the most probable. Scaliger supposes the word to be so called from the ancient Cerus, that is, Sanctus; unde in Saliari carmine, cerus manus, i. e. sanctus bonusque. See also in Martinius—cerus, and ceremonia. Ceremony is now applied to—

A regular, orderly, fixed or settled form or manner of doing any thing;—in religious and sacred rites or observances; in social or civil intercourse. Also—to the religious, sacred, rite or observance itself.

"I never stood on ceremonies," in Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar, is explained by Mr. Steevens—"I never paid a ceremonious or superstitious regard to prodigies or omens." "Decked with ceremonies," i. e. ceremoniously, (sc.) with Cæsar's trophies.

Right so this god of loves hypocrite
Doth so his ceremonies and obeisance
And keepeth in semblaunt alle his observance
That souneth unto gentillesse of love.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,829.

And I asked him, why therefore haue you not the crosse with the image of Jesus Christ thereupon: and he answered we haue no such custome. Whereupon I coniectured that they were indeede Christians: but for lacke of instruction they omitted the foresayde ceremonie.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 114.

But then by what law I pray you, are they excluded? are they excluded by the olde ceremonial lawe of Moses? No not so, but by a newe lawe, suche as nothyng else requireth, but a lyuyng fayth in the sonne of God.—Udal. Rom. c. 3.

——— Disrobe the images
If you do finde them deckt with ceremonies.
Mur. May we do so?
You know it is the feast of Lupercall.
Fla. It is no matter, let no images
Be hung with Cæsar's trophees.
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act i. sc. 1.

For he is superstitious growne of late,
Quite from the maine opinion he held once,
Of fantasie, of dreames, and ceremonies.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 1.

What man is there so much vnreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to haue defended it
With any termes of zeale: wanted the modestie,
To urge the thing held as a ceremonie.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

It seems swearing of fealty was with the Scots but a ceremony without substance, as good as nothing; for this is now the third time they swore fealty to King Edward: yet all did not serve to make them loyal.—Baker. Edw. I. an. 1283.

What is it here below that makes the Church one? One Lord, one Faith, one Baptisme. One Lord, so it is one in the head; one Faith, so it is one in the heart; one Baptisme, so it is one in the face; where these are truly professed to be, though there may be differences of administrations and ceremonies; though there may be differences in opinions, yet there is Columbo una; all those are but diversly coloured feathers of the same dove.
Bp. Hall. Ser. The Beauties &c. of the Church.

Not to use ceremonies at all, is to teach others not to use them again; and so diminish respect to himself: especially, they are not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures. But the dwelling upon them, and exalting them above the moon, is not only tedious, but doth diminish the faith and credit of him that speaks.
Bacon. Ess. Of Ceremonies and Respects.

But upon giving the apparatus of the ceremonial, he [Moses] was called up within the cloud, Ex. xxiv. 18, to signify that this law was intended to be a mystery unto the people.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 3.

Then again, there was their synagogical government, which seems to be differing from what either the priests had in the temple, in respect of persons clean or unclean ceremonially, or over one another; or from courts of judicature in their gates.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 165.

The two sacraments of the Circumcision and the Passover, had assuredly, besides the ceremonialness annexed to them, the institution of typifying Christ to come.—Id. Ib. p. 166.

As the oath itself, when he [Eumenes] came to take it, he made show of dislike, in that it was not solemn enough for such personages as they were, who could not be too ceremonious in testifying their allegiance.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. iv. c. 3. s. 17.

The very river itself [Eulæus] is in much request, and the water thereof ceremoniously regarded: in such wise, as the kings drink of no other, and therefore they fetch it a great way into the countrey.—Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 27.

Nay, and the Heathens (many of them at least) when they were to sacrifice to their greatest, and most reverend deities, used, on the evening before, to have a certain preparative rite or ceremony called by them Cœna pura, that is, a supper, consisting of some peculiar meats, in which they imagined a kind of holiness, and, by eating of which they thought themselves sanctified, and fitted to officiate about the mysteries of the ensuing festival.—South, vol ii. Ser. 8.

I remember no other points of the ceremonial, that seem to have been established by the course of this assembly, unless it was one particular to ourselves, who declared that we would dine with no ambassador till the peace was concluded.
Sir W. Temple. Mem. from 1672 to 1679.

After this great work of reconciling the kingdom was done most ceremoniously in the Parliament, in December did another prelate, Bishop Gardner, the great Lord Chancellor of England, ascend the pulpit at Saint Paul's, and there made a sermon of the happy reconciliation of the kingdom.
Strype. Memoirs. Q. Mary, an. 1554.

All have free access to him, and speak to him whenever they see him, without the least ceremony: such is the easy freedom, which every individual of this happy isle enjoys.
Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. c. 13.

The next year saw me advanced to the trust and power of adjusting the ceremonial of an assembly. All received their partners from my hand, and to me every stranger applied for introduction.—Rambler, No. 109.

CE'RRIAL. Lat. Cerrus; Fr. Cerre. The unprofitable wild oake, termed the Holme Oake, (Cotgrave.) Of unknown etymology. Martinius asks,—An a duritie, κερας, cornu?

A coroune of a grene oke cerial
Upon his hed was set ful fayre and mete.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2292.

I sie come first of all in their clokes white,
A company that ware for their delite
Chapelets fresh of okes serrial,
Newly sprong. Id. The Flower and the Leaf.

——— Before the rest,
The trumpets issued, in white mantles dress'd:
A numerous troop, and all their heads around
With chaplets green of cerr al oak were crown'd.
Dryden. Ib.

Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine or of hawthorn held,
Or branches for their mystic emblems took,
Of palm, of laurel, or of cerrial oak. Id. Ib.

CE'RTAIN, adj.
CE'RTAIN, s.
CE'RTAINLY.
CE'RTAINTY.
CE'RTES, ad.
CE'RTITUDE.

Fr. Certain; It. Certo; Sp. Cierto, from the Lat. Cretus, past part. of Cernere; Gr. Κριν-ειν, to separate, to distinguish, to decide. Certum proprie idem sit, quod decretum ac proinde firmum, (Vossius.) See ASCERTAIN.

Fixed firmly, steadily; within clear and precise limits; secure or securely settled or established; sure or assured; determined or decided; placed beyond all doubt or dispute, all question or denial.

Bytuene thys tueye kynges was a certeyn fourme ydo.
R. Gloucester, p. 309.

My brothr delyuer thou me, my neuow thou me grante,
& holde thi certeynte, & salle hold couenante.
R. Brunne, p. 69.

And britheren, I my silf am certeyn of thou, that also ghe ben ful of loue.—Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 20.

"Therfore moost certeynli wite al the hous of Israel, that God made hym both Lord and Crist, this Ihesu whom ghe crucifieden.—Id. Dedis, c. 2.

But wite ye this, that if the housbondeman wiste in what our the theef were to come, certis he wolde wake and suffre not his hous to be undirmyned.—Id. Matthew, c. 24.

This Nicholas answered: fetch me a drinke.
And after wol I speke in priveteе
Of certain thing that toucheth thee and mee.
I wol tell it non other man certain.
Chaucer. The Millieres Tale, v. 3492.

Of eche of thise of unces a certain
Not helpeth us, our labour is in vain.
Id. The Chanones Tale, v. 16,244.

Nature hath now no domination,
And certainly that nature wol not werche,
Farewel physicke; go bere the man to churche.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2761.

And certes if it n'ere to long to here,
I wolde have told you fully the manere,
How wonnen was the regne of Feminie
By Theseus, and by his chevalrie. Id. Ib. v. 877.

For euery climat hath his dele,
After the tournyng of the whele,
Whiche blinde fortune ouerthroweth
Wherof the certaine no man knoweth.—Gower. Prologue.

For all must end as doth my tilsse
There is none other certaintie,
And at the end the worst is hys,
That most hath known prosperitie.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Louer here telleth, &c.

And one cried this, another yt amenge the people. And when he coulde not know the certaintie for the rage, he commaunded him to be carryed into the castell.
Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 21.

Thou saiest, thou sawest neuer certitude in the loue of a woma, nor end of her hate —Golden Boke, Let. 16.

He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou sorrow he will weep,
If thou awake he cannot sleep,
Thus of every grief in hearte,
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.
Shakespeare. The Passionate Pilgrim, S. 18.

Certainly, if it were granted, that she [Athaliah] like a new Semiramis, did march in the head of her troop, yet it had been mere madness in her to enter the place alone, when her assistants were kept out.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 21. s. 7.

Whereof when the king was informed, he woulde thervnto geue no credite vntill he had sent thether, and receyued the certaintie.—Grafton. Edw. I. an. 8.

Ne certes can that friendship long endure,
However gay and goodly be the style,
That doth all cause or euill end ensure
For vertue is the band, that bindeth harts most sure.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

That something therefore has really existed from eternity, is one of the certainest and most evident truths in the world; acknowledged by all men, and disputed by none.
Clarke. On the Being and Attributes of God.

What is the meaning that we are not to believe every spirit, but to try the spirits, whether they be of God. Certainly this; that we are not to believe every one that takes upon him to be an inspired man, or that would pretend to deliver doctrines to us, as the infallible truths of God: but we are to examine those that make this pretence, whether they can really produce their credentials that they come from God.—Sharp, vol. vii. Ser. 2.

But, I hope, before I have done, to make it evident, that this way of certainty by the knowledge of our own ideas, goes a little farther than bare imagination: and, I believe it will appear, that all the certainty of general truths a man has, lies in nothing else.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, b. iii. c. 4.

As when a current, from the ocean wide,
Rolls through the Cyclades, its angry tide:
Now here, now there, in circling eddies tost,
The certain tenour of its course is lost.
Each weary pilot for his safety fears
In mute suspense, and trembles as he steers.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. i.

Such is the certainty of evil, that it is the duty of every man to furnish his mind with those principles, that may enable him to act under it with decency and propriety.
Rambler, No. 32.

CE'RTIFY, v. } Fr. Certifier, formed from CERTI'FICATE, v. } the Lat. Certum, (see CER-CERTI'FICATE, n. } TAIN,) and fieri, to cause
CERTIFICA'TION. } to be.

To be or cause to be surely or certainly known; to ascertain, to assure.

He is his lord and brother, he certifies that to the,
That no man in this werld he lufes so mykelle.
R. Brunne, p. 259.

This was certified, and sikere on ilk side.—Id. p. 249.

And whan I was certified of your name, the lenger I loked in you the more I you goodlie dradde.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. i.

That thou with vs be not wroth.
Though we suche thyng, as is the loth
Upon our trouth certifie.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Incontynent he sent messengers to Kyng Edwarde, recommendyng him to his grace with all his hert, counceilyng hym to come thyther and to passe the see, certifyenge him, how the Flemmynges greatly desyred to se hym.
Berners. Froisart. Cronycle, c. 32.

She wrote letters and sent messangers to the Frenche Kynge, desyringe him not to consente that the bastarde of Spaygne shulde make her any maner of warre, seyng, that her resorte was to the court of Fraunce, certifyeng him that moche yuell might ensue, and many inconuenyentes fall thereby.—Id. Ib. c. 239.

And after, that we al of our council here, and captains of the retinue, do send a certificate signed and subscribed with our names; declareing ourselves to be contented, and conformable to receive the payment in form afore rehearsed.
Strype. Records, No. 5. Sir R. Jernegan to the Cardinal.

Finally he teacheth vs here, yt the tradycion of the fathers, and the common obseruance and custome of the Catholike Churche, is for the certificacion of a trouth a sure vndoubted authoritie.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 801.

And thus as if he had beene wroth, he said to one of his clerkes, fetch hither quicklie, the certification that came to me from Shrewesbury vnder the bailiffes seale, witnessing the errors and heresies, which this losell [Thorpe] hath venimouslie sowne there.—Fox. Martyrs. Hen. IV.

He censures, and in censuring seems to hope it will be an ill omen, that they who build Jarusalem divide their tongues and hands. But his hope fail'd him with his example, for that there were divisions both of tongues and hands at the building of Jarusalem, the story would have certify'd him; and yet the work prosper'd.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Hereupon Periander commanded Georgius presently to arise to apprehend them and lay them up fast in close prison, where no person might have accesse unto them, or certifie that Arion was alive and safe.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 232.

About Playsance, is a towne situate vpon the hill named Vellemanum, wherein six men brought a certificate that they had liued one hundred and ten yeares apiece.
Holland. Apologie, p. 163.

The said secretary [Cromwell] certified him, [Pole,] that in case his learning and judgment did not stretch to the satisfying of the king's mind and desire, that then his return hither to his own country would be to the king's pleasure, and to his comfort and profit of his friends.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1535.

When the strangers go away, their Peuns desire them to give them their names in writing, with a certificate of their honest and diligent serving 'em: and these they show to the next comers, to get into business; some being able to produce a large scrowl of such certificates.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. i. c. 18.

CE'RULE, adj. } Lat. Cæruleus, quasi cæ-
CERU'LEAN. } luleus. For it is properly
CERU'LEOUS. } that colour of which the CERULI'FICK, adj. } skye (cælum) appears to be,
(Vossius.) See BLUE. See the quotation from H. More.

Then gan the shepheard gather into one
His straggling goates, and draue them to a foord,
Whose cærule stream, rombling in pibble stone,
Crept vnder mosse as greene as any goord.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

For the danger of these waters is apparent to the eye, this ceruleous or blue coloured sea, that overspreads the diaphanous firmament being easily discern'd through the body thereof.—H. More. Litteral Cubbala, c. 1. p. 7.

And, therefore, I allow myself to guess at the strength of the liquors examined by this experiment, by the quantity of them, which is sufficient to destroy or restore the ceruleous colour of our tincture.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 734.

I say then, that while the several species of rays, as the rubifick, cerulifick, and others, are by refraction separated one from another; they retain those motions, which are proper to each of them.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

——— Let the bulky wain
Through dusty roads roll nodding; or the bark
That silently adown the cerule stream
Glides with white sails, dispense the downy freight
To copsy villages on either side,
And spiry towns. Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

Behold yon steepy cliff; the modern pile
Perchance may now delight, while that rever'd
In ancient days, the page alone declares,
Or narrow coin through cerulean rust.
Id. The Ruins of Rome.

CE'RUSE, n. } Fr. Cérusse, céruse; It. Ce-
CE'RUSED. } rusa; Lat. Cerussa, a kind of paint or ointment, which females laid upon their faces to produce fairness. The name seems to denote that it had some similarity to wax, (Vossius.)

The preparation commonly called white lead, also bears the name of ceruse.

Ther n'ae quicksilver, litarge, ne brimston,
Boras, ceruse, ne oule of tartre non.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 662.

And the breath stinketh, and the teeth rust, and an euill ayre all the body ouer, both by the reason of the ceruse and quicksiluer.—Vives. Instruct. of Christian Women, c. 4.

The college of physicians have not sat,
As they were used, in council, how to fill
The crannies in your cheeks, or raise a rampire
With mummy, cerusses, or infants' fat
To keep off age and time.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act iii. sc. 4.

——— I dare tell you,
To your new cerus'd face what I have spoken
Freely behind your back, what I think of you.
You are the proudest thing, and have the least
Reason to be so that I ever read of.
Beaum. & Fletch. Spanish Curate, Act v. sc. 4.

But, sister, whether it touch you or no, it touches your beauties, and I am sure they will abide the touch; an' they do not, a plague of all cerusse, say I.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iv. sc. 8.

Others make posies of her cheeks,
Where red and whitest colours mix;
In which the lily and the rose
For Indian lake and cerusse goes.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

CESS, v. } Junius thinks is a-kin to Bar. Lat.
CESS, n. } Saisire, to seize upon. It is pro-
CE'SSOR. } bably no other than Sess or Assess; from the It. Assessare, to impose a tax, (assessio,) which never is imposed unless by an assize (nisi ab assessu) of men appointed for that purpose. See ASSESS. See the two first quotations.

A subsidy we call that which is imposed upon every man, being cessed by the pole, man by man, according to the valuation of their goods and lands.—Camden. Eliz. an. 1563.

Eudox. But what is that which you call cesse? It is a word sure unusual among us here, therefore, (I pray you) expound the same.
Iren. Cesse is none other than that which yourselfe called imposition, but it is in a kind unacquainted perhaps unto you.—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland, p. 227.

To count the particular faults of private men, should be a worke too infinite; yet some there be of that nature, that though they be in private men, yet their evill reacheth to a generall hurt, as the extortion of sheriffs, and their subsheriffs, and bayliffes, the corruption of victuallers, cessors, &c.—Id. Ib. p. 230.

CESSE. Out of all cesse. Cotgrave says, sans cesse, ex-cess-ively, immoderate, out of all cesse and cry.

1 Car. I prethee Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flockes in the point: the poore jade is wrung in the withers, out of all cesse.—Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

CESSA'TION. } Lat. Cessare, cessatum, to CE'SSANT, adj. } cease, (qv.)

A leaving, quitting, or discontinuing; a desisting or forbearing to do, or from doing, any thing.

In this engaged estate of my life, God has been pleased, by a civil death, to contrive a justifiable intermission of secular duties, and by such a way, as renders even this cessant state in some sort active, and discharging my obligations.—Mountague. Devout Essays, Ep. Ded.

To whom Jack Cade gave very good language, but directly affirming no cessation of arms, unless the king in person would hear the grievances of the subject and pass his princely word for the reformation of their wrongs.
Baker. Hen. VI. an. 1450.

And therefore make Pythick truce, (as they say) for the while with vice and wickednesse, which you are ever wont to chastice and rebuke, in all your speeches, and come and sit down here by us again, that together with us you may search out some other cause of this general eclipse and cessation of oracles, which now is in question.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1078.

A cessation of all hostilities was to begin within two months, and to continue till all was concluded by a complete treaty, and ratified: provided the Spanish monarchy was then entirely restored.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1709.

I am far from supposing that the cessation of my performances will raise any enquiry, for I have never been much a favourite with the public, nor can boast that, in the progress of my undertaking, I have been animated by the rewards of the liberal, the caresses of the great, or the praises of the eminent.—Rambler, No. 208.

CE'SSION. See CEDE.

CEST, n. Lat. Cestus; Gr. Κεστος. Cingulum acu pictum, and so called a Κεντεω, i. e. pungere, quia acûs compunctionibus elaboratum; because worked by the prickings of a needle. Cestus, Lat. is most commonly used. Applied to—

The girdle or zone of Venus.

Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name,
To whom, prepar'd and bath'd in heaven,
The cest of amorous power is given,
To few the god-like gift assigns,
To gird their blest prophetic loins,
And gaze her visions wild, and feel unmixt her flame.
Collins. Ode on the Poetical Character.

CETA'CEOUS, adj. Lat. Cete, of uncertain origin: a whale;

Of the kind or class of whale.

In cetaceous fishes, or as the Latins call them, sea beasts, the tail hath a different position from what it hath in all other fishes, for whereas in these it is erected perpendicular to the horizon, in them it lies parallel thereto partly to supply the use of the hinder-pair of fins, which these creatures lack, and partly to raise and depress the body at pleasure.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Notwithstanding the many parts and properties which cetaceous fishes have in common with land animals, yet there still remain others, that in a natural arrangement of the animal kingdom, must determine us, after the example of the illustrious Ray, to place them in the rank of fishes; and for the same reasons, that first of systematic writers assigns.—Pennant. Zoology, Class 4. Fishes.

CHAFE, v. }
CHAFE, n. }
CHA'FER. }
CHA'FING, n. } Fr. Chauffer, from Calfare, formed by contraction from Calfacere, (Menage.) To warm, or cause to be warm. Skinner says, by rubbing or friction; and also, translato longius sensu;—to chafe, is used for to kindle with anger. And as now used it is—

To warm, heat, or inflame; to kindle, (sc.) with rubbing, friction, or attrition; (to rub,) and (met.) to warm, to kindle, with vexation, with anger.

Chafer is used by Baker simply for—

A vessel; a dish or bowl.

To chafe or warm, (sc.) perfumes; to incense; to perfume.

Medle we nat moche with hem. to meeven any wratthe
Leste cheste chauſe ous so.—Piers Ploughman. Vision, p 232.

Ne for no harme that men do me say, he ne chafeth not ayenst reson.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

All good smelles are more odoriferous, if they be well medled and chaufed togither.—Golden Boke, Let. 3.

The tyme went ouer forwarde and the sonne mounted, and the dayes chafed maruaylously, for it was aboute mydsomer, whan the sonne was in his strength, and specially in Spayne and Granada, and in the farre countreyes of Septentryon.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol ii. c. 103.

But when as her he by no means could find,
After long search and chauff he turned backe
Unto the place where me he left behind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

Heaven's sun, which stay'd so long from us this year,
Stay'd in your north (I think) for she was there,
And hither by kind nature drawn from thence,
Here rages, chafes, and threatens pestilence.
Donne. Letter to Mr. J. P.

Chor. His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n
Stalking with less unconsci'nable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultrie chafe.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Then the yeoman of the scullery, with a pan of fire to heat the irons, a chafer of water to cool the ends of the irons, and two forms for all officers to set their stuff on.
Baker. Hen. VIII. an. 1541.

Mingle the powder of these spices with it, and heat them in a platter upon a chafing-dish of coales together, stirring them well that they doe not burne.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 389.

I strok'd his neck and shoulders bare,
And squeez'd the water from his hair,
Then chaf'd his little hands in mine,
And cheer'd him with a draught of wine.
Hughes. Anacreon, Ode 3.

A strange and supernatural instance of which we have in our saviour, in the sad preliminaries of his passion. The inward chafings and agitations of his struggling soul forcing away through his body, by a sweat even of blood, and opening all his veins, by an inward sense of something sharper than the impression of any lance or spear from without.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

——— Anon with helms,
With spears and bucklers, grating o'er the bed
Of loosen'd stone, with limbs and trunks of men,
The turbid current chafes.—Glover. Athenaid, b. xxii.

CHAFF. }
CHA'FFLESS. } A. S. Ceaf; Dut. Kaf; Ger. Kaff. Skinner and Lye think
CHA'FFY. } from the A. S. Caf, light, swift; because chaff, on account of its lightness, is moved swiftly in the air. Wachter prefers the Ger. Kaw, hollow, empty, light;—est enim folliculus sine grano.

See the quotation from Pliny.

For so the at the first, in poudre as dos the chaf,
Heand fast thei thrist, & fled bothe rif and raf.
R. Brunne, p. 277.

Me list not of the chaf ne of the stre
Maken so long a tale, as of the corn.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5121.

——— It were a short bevete
To winne chaffe, and lese whete.—Gower. Con. A. b iv

How might I do to get a graffe
Of this vnspotted tree!
For all the rest are plaine but chaffe
Which seme good corne to bee.
Vncertaine Auctors. A Praise of his Lady.

For whose sake I let all go to losse, and count thē as chaffe or refuse (that is so say, as thinges which are purged out, and refused, when a thing is tried and made perfect) that I might win Christ.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 219.

If the eares be bolted by themselves alone for goldsmiths worke, the chaffe comming thereof is called in Latine, Acus; but if it be threshed and beaten upon a paved floore, eare, straw, and all together (as in most parts of the worlde they use to doe, for to fodder cattaile or give provender to horses) then it is tearmed Palea; but the refuse or chaffe remaining after that Panicke or Semama bee cleansed, they call in Latine Appluda, however in some counties it be otherwise named.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 10.

——— The careful plowman doubting stands
Least on the threshing floore his hopeful sheaves
Prove chaff. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

——— The loue I beare him
Made me to fan you thus, but the gods made you
(Vnlike all others) chaffelesse. Pray your pardon.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act I. sc 7.

The most slight and chaffy opinion, if at a great remove from the present age, contracts such an esteem and veneration, that it outweighs what is infinitely more ponderous and rational of a modern date.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

Some birds, you know, Lindamor, we usually beguile with chaff, and others are generally drawn in by appropriated baits, and by the mouth, not the eye.
Boyle. Occasional Reflections, Ref. 10.

And the poor husbandman, with folded arms,
Surveying his lost labours, and a heap
Of blasted chaff,—the product of the field
Whence he expected bread.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii.

'Till swoln to tempests they outrage the thunder,
Winnow the chaffy snow, and mock the skies
Even with their own artillery retorted
Armstrong. Imitations of Shakespeare.

CHA'FFER, v. }
CHA'FFER, n. }
CHA'FFERING, n. }
CHA'FFERY. } Lye (in Junius) has no doubt,—from the Alam. Chauphen, emere. In Goth. Kaupon; A. S. Ceapan, cypan; Ger Kauffen, to traffick, to cheap, to buy or sell. In Luke xix. 13,—Goth. Kaupoth; A. S. Ceapiath; Wiclif,—Chaffare ye. As now used—

Those, who do not give the price asked, or who do not take that offered, but make repeated offers or repeated refusals, with a view to greater gains, are said to chaffer.

Mathew maketh mencion of a man that lente
Hus silver to thre menne. and menynge that thie sholde
Chaffare and cheve thr with. in chele and in hete
And he that best laboredē. best was alowede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 141.

And whanne hise ten seruantis weren cleped, he gaf to hem ten besauntis and seyde to hem, chaffare ye til I come.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 19.

He comaundede hise seruantis to be clepid to whiche he hadde gyue money; to wite how myche ech hadde wonne by chaffarynge.—Id. Ib.

Hir chaffare was so thrifty and so newe,
That every wight hath deintee to chaffare
With hem, and eke to sellen hem her ware.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4557.

My gold is youre, whan that it you leste,
And not only my gold, but my chaffare:
Take what you lest, God shilde that ye spare.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,215.

But of this point, lo thus I fare,
As he that payeth for his chaffare,
And bieth it dere, and yet hath none:
So mote he nedes proue gone. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

From these to the Troglodites, in the south-west coast, is foure days journey, with whom they chaffer and trafficke onelye for a certaine precious stone or gem, which wee call a carbuncle, brought out of Æthyopia.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 10.

Now, as the place whence he came was so dry, that, as Malmsbury saith, miserabili commercio, ibi aqua veneat; "by sad chaffer they were fain to give money for water;" so he removed to one so low and moist, men sometimes (upon my knowledge) would give money to be rid of water.
Fuller. Worthies. Wiltshire.

A thousand patrons thither ready bring
Their new-fain churches to the chaffering;
Stake three yeares' stipend; no man asketh more.
Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 5.

Of the third [sort] is merchandise or chafferie, that is buying and selling.—Spenser. On Ireland.

——— For curate he had none.
Nor durst he trust another with his care;
Nor rode himself to Paul's, the public fair,
To chaffer for preferment with his gold.
Dryden. The Character of a good Parson.

CHAGRI'N, v. } Not in our old Dictionaries.
CHAGRI'N, n. } Fr. Chagriner, the origin of which Menage confesses to be entirely unknown to him; he suggests, however, Carchinus, qui signifie un cancer, mauvaise humeur, a cancer or ill humour. Cotgrave explains it;—

"To vex, disquiet, grieve, trouble, perplex, fill with care, heauinesse, melancholy, anguish."

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin.
That single act gives half the world the spleen.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 4

But friends, and favourites, to chagrin them,
Find counties, countries, seas between them:
Meet once a year, then part, and then,
Retiring, wish to meet again.
Shenstone. The Progress of Taste, pt. i.

Oh! trifling head, and fickle heart
Chagrin'd at whatso'er thou art;
A dupe to follies yet untry'd,
And sick of pleasures, scarce enjoy'd!
Warton. The Progress of Discontent

The closest connection had been formed between him and Feenou, in testimony of which they had exchanged names; and therefore he was not a little chagrined, that another person now put in his claim to the honours, which his friend had hitherto enjoyed.—Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. ii. c. 6.

I hid myself a fortnight in the country, that my chagrin might fume away without observation, and then returning to my shop began to listen after another lottery.
Rambler, No. 181.

CHAIN, v. }
CHAIN, n. } Fr. Chain; It. Catena; Sp. Cadena; Lat. Catena; Gr. Καθηνα, monile dependens, from Καθιεσθαι, demittere, descendere. Gesner explains,—Catena, vinculum ex ferreis annulis, a ligature of iron rings. Martinius,—connexus annulorum; i. e. a connected series of rings or links. Applied (met.)—

To a connexion of ideas or arguments; to any connected succession or series.

To chain is to fasten, bind, or confine with a chain; to reduce to the state or condition of those chained; and, hence, to enslave, to enthral.

Chain is written prefixed to—shot, pump, &c.

Thorgh Edward long trayne Gascoyn is born down,
Non defendes his chayne, but only Bayoun.
R. Brunne, p. 264.

Which man hadde hous in birielis and neither with cheynes now myghte ony mon bynde hym. For ofte tymes he was bounden in stokis and cheynes, and he hadde broke the cheynes and hadde broke the stockis to small gobetis.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 5.

Which [man] hadde his abydyng among yᵉ graues, and no man coulde bynde him: no not with cheines because yᵗ whē he was often bounde wᵗ fetters and cheynes, he plucked the chaines asundre and breke the fetters in peces.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Before his triumphe walketh she [Zenobia]
With gilte chaines on hire necke honging,
Crouned she was, as after hire degree.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,362

Lastly yᵉ kynge aduertysyng in his mynde, that he myght nothynge dere yᵉ Sarazeyns without he might passe that riuer of Thanoys, concluded by aduyce of his maryners, to make a brydge of shyppes, [so that finally he cheyned and fastened his shyppes,] togyder in such wyse, that a passage was made for his knightes.—Fabyan, an. 1273.

Our captaine and master perceiuing their pretence, caused our gunners to make all our ordinance readie with crosse barres, chaineshotte and haile shot.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt ii. p. 63.

And he made two heed peces of molten brasse, to set on the toppes of the pyllars, of fyue cubytes long a pece, wᵗ garlandes of brodred worcke, and whopes of chayne-worcke for the heed peces that were on the pyllars, vii. for the one, and vii. for yᵉ other.—Bible, an. 1551. 3 Kinges, c. 7.

What is this knowledge? but the sky-stoln fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit?
And which the poor, rude, satyr did admire,
And needs would kiss, but burnt his lips with it.
Davies. The Introduction.

In the entrance of philosophy, when the second causes, which are next unto the senses, do offer themselves to the mind of man, if it dwell and stay there, it may induce some oblivion of the highest cause; but when a man passeth on farther, and seeth the dependence of causes, and the works of providence; then, according to the allegory of the poets, he will easily believe that the highest link of nature's chain must needs be tied to the foot of Jupiter's chair.

Bacon. On Learning, b. i.

The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony.—Milton. L'Allegro, v. 143.

The standers by admire her passing forces,
And chiefe their wives that saw them killed so,
For as a chain-shot sweeps all in the way,
So with those nine Marasa then did play.

Harrington. Orlando, b. ix. s. 55.

When the rice is ripe and gathered in, they tread it out of the ear with buffaloes, in a large round place made with a hard floor fit for that purpose, where they chain three or four of these beasts, one at the tail of another, and driving them round in a ring, as in a horse mill, they so order it that the buffaloes may tread upon it all.

Dampier. Voyage, an. 1687.

For he that so breaketh one command is guilty of all, he breaks the chain in pieces, and shows contempt of the lawgiver, and want of inward sincerity towards God.

Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 2

An habitual sadness seizes upon the soul, and the faculties are chained to a single object, which can never be contemplated but with hopeless uneasiness.—Rambler, No. 47.

The sides of the bay are white cliffs of great height; the middle is low land, with hills gradually rising behind, one towering above another and terminating in a chain of mountains, which appear to be far inland.

Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. ii. c. 1.

CHAIR, n. } From the A.S. Cyran, acyran,
CHAIR, v. } to turn, to turn about, to turn backwards and forwards. A chair is a species of seat. It is not a fixed, but a movable seat, turned about and returned at pleasure; and from that circumstance it has its denomination. It is a chaer-seat, (Tooke, ii. 190.)

Chair is used in old writers as we now use car, or chariot.

To chair, is a common expression used at elections for members of parliament, when the triumphant candidate is carried about in a chair.

As he wende aboute by the see, & such poer adde an honde,
Up achaere he sat adoun, al vp the see sonde,
An enresonede hys men, as hit byuore him stonde.

R. Gloucester, p. 321.

For the quene he sent & eche did dight hire chare.

R. Brunne, p 332.

——— Anon he ful of sorowe
Pro h' chaire thare he sat. & brak hus necke atweyne.

Piers Plowman, p. 6.

And thei loven the firste syttynge places in soperis, and the firste chaieres in sinagogis.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 23.

And he turnyde aghen sittinge in his chare & redynge Isaie the prophete, and the spirite seide to Philip, neighe thou and loyne thee to this chare.—Id. Dedis. Ib. c. 8.

God daunted all his pride, and all his host,
For he so sore fell out of his chare,
That it his limmes and his skinne to tare,
So that he neither mighte go ne ride;
But in a chaire men about him bare.

Chaucer. Monkes Tale, v. 14,531.

He with great humilitee
Out of his chare to grounde lepte,
And them in both his armes clepte.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

The Romaines maden a chayere.
And sette her emperour therein. Id. Ib. b. v.

The Scithes sware only by the chayre or throne of theyr kyng, which othe if they brake, they therefore suffer death.

Sir T. Elyot. Gouernour, c. 7.

And stroue to match, in royall rich array
Great Junoe's golden chaire, the which they say
The gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
To Joue's high house through heauen's brass paued way.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

At last agreed they call'd him by consent,
Before the queen and female parliament.
And the fair speaker rising from the chair
Did thus the judgment of the house declare

Dryden. The Wife of Bath.

To this end, it was agreed by Mr. Rouse, chairman to that assembly, and the rest of Cromwell's junto, to meet earlier in the house than was usual.—Ludlow. Mem. vol. ii. p. 32.

But, give him port and potent sack,
From milk-sop he starts up Mohack;
Holds that the happy know no hours;
So through the streets at midnight scowers,
Breaks watchmen's heads and chairmen's glasses,
And thence proceeds to nicking sashes.—Prior. Alma, c. 3.

But restless was the chair, the back erect
Distress'd the weary loins, that felt no ease
The slipp'ry seat betray'd the sliding part
That press'd it: and the feet hung dangling down,
Anxious in vain to find the distant floor.

Couper. Task, b i.

CHAISE. Fr. Chaise, for Chaire, says Duchat, by the change of s into r, common in our language. Applied to—

A light carriage drawn by one horse or more.

One question more comes into my mind to ask you, and that is, whether the back of those that fall down so flat, are so made that, when it is up, one may lean and loll against it at one's ease, as in a coach or chariot; for I am grown a very lazy fellow, and have now three chairs to lean and loll in, and would not be without that relief in my chaise.

Locke. To Anthony Collins.

Every body here hires a carriage, and Mr. Banks hired two. They are open chaises, made to hold two people, and driven by a man sitting on the coach-box; for each of these he paid two rix dollars a day.

Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. b. ii. c. 10.

CHA'LDRON. A large measure, particularly of coals, containing 2000 pounds. I know not whether from Fr. Chauderon, caldarium, so many coals as are sufficient for heating (calfaciendo) a large cauldron! (Skinner.)

Coals were bought at Newcastle for two shillings and two pence a chaldron, and sold again in France for thirteen nobles.—Strype. Memoirs. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

CHA'LICE, n. } Fr. Calice; Sp. Caliz; Lat.
CHA'LICED, adj. } Calix; Gr. Κυλιξ, and so called παρα το κυλισεθαι, from its roundness. Usually applied to—

A cup used in religious rites.

This is a fouler thefte than for to breke a chirche and steale away the chalice.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And therefore he saith that in their time thei had treen chalices & golden prestes, and now haue we golden chalices and treen prestes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 114.

And the grave clergy had with them been set,
To warrant what they undertook was just,
And as for monies, that to be no let,
They bade the king, for that to them to trust
The church to pawn would see her chalice laid,
Ere she would leave one pioneer unpaid.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Hearke, hearke, the larke at heauen's gate sings,
and Phœbus gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs,
on chalic'd flowers that lyes.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 3.

Saying, that the lifting up of the host betokeneth nothing, but the sending down of the Son by the Father to suffer death for man: and the lifting up of the chalice signified, that the Father of heaven sent down his Son to shed his blood in earth for man's salvation.

Strype. Memoirs. Hen. VIII. an. 1556.

The same merry gentleman represented the office thus: "They get them a tankard (as though they refused the use of a chalice) and one saith, I drink, and I am thankful. The more joy of thee, saith the other."

Id. Memoirs. Q. Mary, an. 1554.

——— O'er the horns
Th' inverted chalice, foaming from the grape,
Discharg'd a rich libation.—Glover. Leonidas, b xii.

CHALK, v. } Lat. Calx, calcis, from Gr.
CHALK, n. } Χαλιξ, which denotes a stone
CHA'LKY. } or the fragments of stone, of CHA'LKSTONE. } which cement or mortar is made. Scheidius observes, that from Κλασειν, frangere, (pp.) κεκλασκα, is κλασκος, which might give the contracted κλαξ, whence καλξ. See CALCAREOUS.

To chalk, is to cover, or spread over with chalk; to mark out a tract or course, as if with chalk.

He toke the chalk, and shope it in the wise
Of an ingot, as I shal you devise.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,690.

Lo how thei feignen chalke for cheese.

Gower. Con. A. Prologue.

For thys wyll not be allowed of them that know chese frō chalke, no, though they brynge with them thre Ambroses for their witnesse.—Bale. Apology, p. 71.

But whan they shoulde walke
Were fayne with a chalke
To score on the balke.—Skelton. Why come ye not to Court?

Else how should even tale be registred,
Or all thy draughts on the chalk'd barrel's head.

Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 2.

And accordingly he hath chalked out a new way of loving also; he gave his life for us; yea, himself, and all his glory; and so it follows that in John, xv. 12, Love one another, as I have loved you.—Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. i. p. 239.

The wheat of Campaine is reddir, but this of Pisa whiter, and more weightie it is, if it come from a chalkie ground, or have chalk mingled among.—Holland. Plinie, vol. i. p. 503.

Terrible apprehensions and answerable to their names, are raised of fayrie stones and elve's spurs found commonly with us, in stone, chalk, and marl-pits.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

In that room, up one pair of stairs, which was hung with a rusty green, he found John Milton sitting in an elbow chair, black cloths and neat enough: pale but not cadaverous, his hands and fingers gouty, and with chalk-stones.

Richardson. Life of Milton.

When rusty weapons with chalk'd edges
Maintain'd our feeble privileges.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c 2

Cole, whose dark streams his flowery island lave;
And chalky Wey, that rolls a milky wave.

Pope. Windsor Forest

I shall pursue the plan I have chalked out in my letters that follow this.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

The calumny is fitter to be scrawled with the midnight chalk of incendiaries, with "no popery," on walls and doors of devoted houses, than to be mentioned in any civilized company.—Id. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

There is as much expression in the Susanna as perhaps can be given, preserving at the same time beauty; but the colour is inclinable to chalk, at least it appears so after looking at the warm splendid colours of Rubens: his fine and rich composition makes this look cold and scanty.

Sir Joshua Reynolds. Journey to Flanders, &c

Already British coasts appear to rise,
The chalky cliffs salute their longing eyes;
Each to his breast, where floods of rapture roll,
Embracing strains the mistress of his soul.

Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

CHA'LLENGE, v. } Dut. Kalangieren; Fr.
CHA'LLENGE, n. } Chalanger, calanger. Chalonger or chalenger, Menage thinks is derived
CHA'LLENGABLE. } from Calumnier, from the Lat. Calumniari. Wiclif renders calumniam sustineret, he might be chalengid; calumniantur, chalenge falsli. Neque calumniam faciatis, nether make ye fals chalenge.
CHA'LLENGER.

"To claim, challenge, demand, make title unto; also to challenge, accuse, appeach, complain, charge with, call in question for an offence, crime, or trespass," (Cotgrave.)

The emperesse to Engelond com,
To calangy after hyre fader, by rygte the kynedom.

R. Gloucester, p. 451.

Grante him conquere his right Gascoyne and Normundie,
That the kyng of France chalanges falsly.

R. Brunne, p. 235.

And wele it was to witen no chalange ageyn.—Id. p. 87.

Somme serven the kynge. and hus silver tellen
In the chekkere and the chaunceirie. chalengynge hus dettes
Of wardes & of wardemotes.—Piers Plowman, p. 5.

A charter is chalengable, byfore a chief iustice.—Id. p. 221

For the tribune dredde lest the lewis wolde take him bi the wale and sle him, and afterwarde he myght be chalengid as he hadde take money.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 23.

Hauynge good conscience, that in that thing that thei bachiten of you, thei ben confoundid which chalenge falsli youre good conuersacioun in Crist.—Id. 1 Petir, c. 3.

And he seide to hem, smyte ye no man wrongfully, nether make ye fals challenge and be ye a payed with your soudis.

Id. Luke, c. 3.

God oftentymes by clere examples and bodely delyueraunces chalengeth to himself the glorye of his owne name.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

Not that I chalenge any thing of right
Of you, my soveraine lady but of grace.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,636.

Then the thirde daye came in an other knyght of Henaude as chalenger, to whom, as defendaût, came in sir John Cornewayll, knyght, and so well bare him, that he put the straunger to the worse.—Fabyan, an. 1509.

Antonius on the other side bravely sent him word againe, and challenged the combat of him, man for man, though he were the elder: and that if he refused him so, he would then fight a battle with him in the fields of Pharsalia, as Julius Cæsar and Pompey had done before.

North. Plutarch, p. 776.

To all yet, he his challenge made at every martiall feate,
And easily fould all since with him Minerva was so great.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Soon after this so fierce conflict was done,
Another challenger straight steppeth out,
With whom Martano was required to runne,
But he (whose heart was ever full of doubt)
With fonde excuses sought the same to shunne,
And shew'd himselfe a faint and dastard lout.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xvii. s. 63.

Now, at the time and in th' appointed place,
The challenger and challeng'd, face to face,
Approach; each other from afar they knew,
And from afar their hatred chang'd their hue.
Drayton. Palamon & Arcite.

This [duelling] seems to have begun upon the famous challenge that passed between Charles V. and Francis I. which though without effect, yet it is enough known and lamented, how much of the bravest blood in Christendom has been spilt by that example.
Sir W. Temple. Of Heroic Virtue.

My second excepted against it, and advised me to match my own, and send him the choice, which I obeyed; it being, you know, the challenger's privilege to elect his weapon.
Guardian, No. 133.

I claim, not the letter, but the spirit of the old English law, that is, to be tried by my peers. I decline his grace's jurisdiction as a judge. I challenge the Duke of Bedford, as a juror to pass upon the value of my services.
Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

When any of them chooses to wrestle, he gets up from one side of the ring, and crosses the ground in a sort of measured pace, clapping smartly on the elbow joint of one arm, which is bent, and produces a hollow sound that is considered the challenge.—Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. ii. c. 7.

Yet I am far from thinking this tenderness universally necessary; for he that writes may be considered as a kind of general challenger, whom every one has a right to attack: since he quits the common rank of life, steps forward beyond the lists, and offers his merit to the public judgment.
Rambler, No. 93.

——— His hour is come.
The impious challenger of pow'r divine
Was new to learn, that heav'n, though slow to wrath,
Is never with impunity defied.—Cowper. Task, b. vi.

CHALY'BEAN. Fr. Chalibe. Chalybs, a kind of very hard iron, received its name from the Chalybians, a nation of Pontus or Scythia, (Vossius: and see Virg. Geo. i. 58.)

Who tore the lion as the lion tears the kid,
Ran on embattell'd armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail—
Adamantean proof Milton. Samson Agonistes

CHA'MBER, v. }
CHA'MBER, n. }
CHA'MBERER. }
CHA'MBERING. }
CHA'MBERLAIN. }
CHA'MBERLAINSHIP. }

Fr. Chambre; It. and Sp. Camera, Ger. and Dut. Kamer; Lat. Camera; Gr. Καμαρα, fornix, tectum arcuatum, opus fornicatum, aut similis structura. An arched covering, a vault, or similar structure. This, says Wachter, is the first signification of the word, which afterwards was applied, privately, to all (enclosed) parts or apartments of a house, cellas, cœnacula, dormitoria, and publicly, ad conclavia rationum, et tribunalia principum.

To chamber, is merely, to enclose, shut up. A chamberer is applied by Shakespeare to those whose pleasures are in chambers; who are lascivious, wanton, intriguing. And so also chambering in the Bible. Chamber is much used—prefixed, as chamber-maid.

Any arch, or vault; any hollow, or cave or cavity a protected, or secluded, or retired room or apartment; whether for lodgment, or council, private deliberation or converse—as a bed-chamber, a council-chamber.

Powere man wel ofte into hyre chambre heo drou
Lotte meseles & other. R. Gloucester, p. 424

——— Wan ich ofte was
In chambre mid my felawes, ther com to me biras
Ane swythe fair mon with alle. Id. p. 129.

As hya cuambericon hym brogte, as he rose aday,
A morwe worte werye, a peyre hose of say,
He easte, "wat hii costened hi thre seyllyng" the other seyde. Id. p. 390.

Chambres with chymeneys, and chapeles gave.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And ye schulen seye to the housebondeman of the hous, the mayster seyth to thee, where is a chamber where I schal ete pask with my disciplis?—Wiclif. Luke, c. 22.

And say vnto ye good mā of the house. The master saieth vnto the: where is the gest chamber, where I shal eate myne ester lambe with my disciples?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This miller to the toun his doughter send
For ale and bred, and rosted hem a goos,
And bond her hors, he shuld no more go loos:
And in his owen chambre hem made a belde
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4137.

And but thou do to my norice honour,
And to my chamberere within my bower.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5882.

And shortly of this matere for to sayn,
He fell in office with a chamberlain,
The which that dwelling was with Emelie.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1420.

Elda come home the same night:
And stille with a preule light,
As he that wolde not awake
His wife, he hath his weye take
In to the chambre. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

For there is none so litell page,
Ne yet so symple a chamberere,
That I ne make hem all chere. Id. Ib. b. iv.

Contecke, as the bokes saine,
Foole hast hath to his chamberlaine. Id. Ib. b. iii.

And soo she and he wente thyder all alone, and nother chamberer nor varlet entred with them, for the lady had noo mistrust in hym of ony dyshonoure.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 61.

This Persuall came to Jhon Ward, a secrete chamberer to the Duke of Gloucester.—Hall. Edw. V.

Let vs walke honestly as it were in the day lyght not in eatyng and dryneckyng; neither in chamburynge and wantones.—Bible, 1551. Romaynes, c. 13.

The hard ground is his feather bed, and some block or stone his pillow; and as for his horse, he is as it were a chamber-fellow with his master, faring both alike.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 250.

The Lord Lisle was made Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Great Chamberlainship was given to him; and the Lord Sudley made Admiral of England: all these things were done, the King being in the Tower.
Burnet. Records. K. Edward's Journal.

I interchangeably hurl down my gage
Vpon this ouer-weening traitor's foote
To prove myself a loyall gentleman,
Euen in the best blood chamber'd in his bosome.
Shakespeare. Richard II. Act i. sc. 1.

Nor in a secret cloister doth he keep
Those virgin-spirits, till their marriage day;
Nor locks them up in chambers, where they sleep,
Till they awake within these beds of clay.
Davies. Of the Creation of Souls.

——— Haply, for I am blacke,
And haue not those soft parts of conuersation
That chamberers haue.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

Nor in the house with chamber-ambushes
Close-banded durst attaque me, no not sleeping,
Till they had hir'd a woman with their gold
Breaking her marriage faith to circumvent me.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

I grieve not court-ling thou art started up
A chamber-critick and dost dine and sup
At madam's table, where thou makst all wit
Goe high, or loe, as thou wilt value it.
B. Jonson. To Court-ling.

Maid. I'll conduct ye
Even to her chamber-door, and there commit ye.
Beaum. & Fletch. Mons. Thomas, Act iii. sc. 6.

——— Auerring notes
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 5.

And the said chamberlains and factors to be appointed by the Queene's Majestie, shall have sufficient power to intromit and uptake the fruits and profits aforesaid, in such fulnesse as if speciall letters of factory and chamberlaincie were granted to them thereupon.—Knox. Hist. Reform. p. 323.

Where yet there is not laid
Before a chamber-maid
Discourses so weigh'd as might have serv'd of old
For schools, when they of love and valour told.
B. Jonson. Answer to an Ode by O. Feltham.

And yet Appollo is much more ridiculous, if it be so, that he sits, giving answers and oracles as touching golden chamber-pots, gards and fringes of gold, yea, and tripping and stumbling of the foot.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 878.

But that in his chamber-pray'rs,
Persuade they would the multitude
This king too holy is and good.
Drummond. An Anti-Covenanter.

Satan may looke in at my doors by a tentation: but he shall not have so much as one chamber-room set apart for him to sojourne in.—Bp. Hall. Medit. & Vows, cent. i. § 5.

About twelve o'clock we went to take our places in the house; Mr. Lenthal our Speaker leading the way, and the officers of the army lining the rooms for us, as we passed through the painted chamber, the court of requests, and the lobby itself: the principal officers having placed themselves nearest to the door of the Parliament-house; every one seeming to rejoice at our restitution, and promising to live and die with us.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 165.

I shall say nothing of those silent and busy multitudes that are employed within doors, in the drawing up of writings and conveyances; nor of those greater numbers that palliate their want of business with a pretence to such chamber practice.—Spectator, No. 21.

I have upon my chamber-walls, drawn at full length, the figures of all sorts of men, from eight foot to three foot two inches.—Tatler, No. 93.

The day after, the Dutchess of Somerset was also sent to the Tower, with one Crane and his wife, that had been much about her, and two of her chamber-women.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, b. i. pt. ii. an. 1551

With nobler gifts of native worth adorn'd,
The heroic maid her sex's softness scorn'd;
The silken indolence, and soft fatigue,
The chamber'd spleen and closeted intrigue
Brookes. Jerusalem Delivered, b. ii.

The most magnificent and costly dome
Is but an upper chamber to a tomb.—Young. Last Day, b. ii.

CHAME'LEON. Gr. Χαμαιλεων, from χαμαι, humi; and λεων, leo; humilis, sive pumilus leo: a low or little lion—creeping on the ground. Χαμαι, Vossius remarks, in composition, diminishes.

Plinie calls it a kind of crocodile. The modern animal is a kind of lizard of a very harmless character.

There is not a creature in the world thought more fearfull than it; which is the reason of that mutabilitie whereby it turneth into such variety of colours: howbeit of exceeding great power against all sorts of hawkes or birds of prey, for by report, let them flie and soare never so high over the chamæleon, there is an attractive vertue that will fetch them down.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 8.

Though the camelion loue can feed on the ayre, I am one that am nourish'd by my victuals and would faine haue meate.—Shakes. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. sc. 1.

He could frame altogether with [men's] manners and fashions of life, transforming himself more easily to all manner of shapes, then the camelion. For it is reported, that the camelion cannot take white colour, but Alcibiades could put upon him any manners, customs, or fashions, of what nation soever, and could follow, exercise, and counterfeit them when he would, as well the good as the bad.—North. Plutarch, p. 175.

Here in the court, camelion like I fare,
And as that creature, only feed on air.
Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles

As the camelion, who is known,
To have no colour of his own;
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His white or black, his green or blue,
And struts as much in ready light
Which credit gives him upon sight,
As if the rainbow were in tail,
Settled on him and his heirs male;
So the young 'squire. Prior. The Camelion.

CHA'MFER, v. }
CHA'MFER, n. }

Fr. "Chanfrain. A channel, or a channel, furrow, hollow gutter, or streak, in stone-work," &c. (Cotgrave.) From the Fr. Chambré, cambré, Curvatus, fornicatus, striatus, sulcatus, curved, vaulted, furrowed, (Skinner.) And thus of the same origin as chamber, though so differently applied.

To form or cut furrows, grooves, channels, wrinkles; to furrow, to groove.

But eft, when ye count you freed from feare
Comes the breme Winter with chamfered browes,
Full of wrinckles and frosty furrowes.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

The cornell tree is of a deep yellow, whereof are made the faire bore-speare staves, which shine againe, and bee studded (as it were) with knots and chamfred betweene, both for decencie and handsomenesse.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 38

CHA'MLET, n. }
CHA'MLETINGS. }

See CAMEL. A kind of stuff made of camel's hair; a stuff made to resemble it. Chamletings, is applied to the waving pattern or figures upon it.

All the strete of Saint Denyce was couered ouer with clothes of sylk and chamlet, suche plentie, as though suche clothes shulde cost nothing.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 157

No man that is not worth 200*l.* or else 20*l.* in living certain, to wear any kind of chamblet.
Strype. Memorials Edw. VI. an. 1551.

That [vesture] seem'd like siluer sprinkled here and there
With glittering spangs, that did like starres appeare,
And wav'd vpon, like water chamelot,
To hide the metall, which yet euery where
Bewrayd itselfe.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

The same chameletings and undulations we may observe from a like cause in the grains of timber, shapes of plants and flowers, variegations of stones, and some minerals
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 401. Beale to Mr. Boyle.

CHAMM. }
CHA'MMING. } Chamm is merely champ.

And if we haue anye stronger meate, it must be chammed afore by the nurse, & so put into the babe's mouthe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 241.

But he that repenteth toward the lawe of God and at the sight of the sacrament, or of the breaking, feling, eating, chamming or drinking, &c.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 316.

CHAMOI'ZE. A word coined by Shelton. Made of the hair of the Chamois.

Don Quixote left his soft bed, and nothing lazy put on his chamoiz'd apparel, and his boots, to hide the hose in his stocking.—Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 5.

CHAMP, v. } I know not, says Skinner,
CHA'MPER. } whether from the Fr. Champayer, depascere, vel depasci, (as Cotgrave explains it, to run, feed, graze or pasture in fields,) or from the Gr. Καπτειν, to devour greedily.

To champ seems to be distinguished from to chaw; the latter being applied to the grinding action of the chaws or jaws; the former to the compression of the teeth, unaccompanied by the grinding motion of the jaw.

In chamber long she staies, and redy brydled best beseene
The palfrey standes in gold, attired riche, and feerce he stampes
For pride, and on the fomy bit of gold with teeth he champes.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. iv.

After whose [Ialycus] example, Nealces, another painter, did the like, and sped as well in making froth failing naturally from the horses mouth; namely, by throwing his sponge against the table before him, at what time as he painted a horse-rider cheering and chirking his horse, yet reigning him hard as he champed upon his bit.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 10.

Psyche observ'd how they this serious bit
Into their mouths like sullen horses took;
How mutinously they foam'd and champed it,
And in their hearts the reins aforehand broke.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 20. s. 249.

The courser paw'd the ground with restless feet,
And snorting foam'd, and champ'd the golden bit.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

One day, playing with a tobacco pipe between my teeth, it happen'd to break in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I could not be satisfied till I had champ'd up the remaining part of the pipe.—Spectator, No. 431.

Now Mr. Spec. I desire you would find out some name for these craving damsels, whether dignified or distinguish'd under some or all the following denominations, (to wit) trash-eaters, oatmeal chewers, pipe champers.—Id.

—— In hue of snow
His horse, of all Nisæa's breed the choice,
Caparison'd in rubies, champs the gold,
Which rules his mouth.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. xxiii.

CHA'MPAIN, or CHA'MPAIGN, n. CHA'MPAIGN, adj. } Champion ground, says Skinner, from the Fr. Champaigne; It. Campagna, locus campestris, seu aperta planities; an open plain. From the Lat. Campus. See CAMP.

A plain field, large plain, wide and level piece of ground, (Cotgrave.)

Thus the fresh Clarion being readie dight,
Vnto his iourney did himself addresse,
And with good speed began to take his flight:
Ouer the fields in his franke lustinesse,
And all the champaine o're he soared light.
Spenser. Muiopotmos, s. 19.

But when th'approaching foes still following he perceives
That he his speed must trust, his usual walk he leaves:
And o'er the champain flies: which when th'assembly find,
Each follows, as his horse were footed with the wind.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

All night the dreadless angel unpursu'd
Through heav'ns wide champaign held his way, till morn,
Wak't by the circling hours, with rosie hand
Unbarr'd the gates of light.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

As you travel on the left hand of Arabia, (famous for plenty of sweet odours,) there lieth a champaign country placed between Tigris and Euphrates.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 3. s. 12

—— Where delicious paradise,
Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
As with a rural mound the champain head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairie sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wilde
Access denid. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

So let them be, and, as I was saying,
They their live engines play'd, not staying
Until they reach'd the fatal champaign
Which th' enemy did then encamp on.—Hudibras, pt i. c 2.

——Far beyond
That Malian champain, stretching wide below,
Beyond the utmost measure of the sight
From this aspiring cliff, the hostile camp
Contains yet mightier numbers.—Glover. Leonidas, b. iii.

CHA'MPERTY. } Fr. Cham-parter, to divide
CHA'MPERTOR. } a field into even or due parts, (Cotgrave.) See the example from Blackstone, and an example from Milton under the word CHAPLAIN.

Thus may ye seen, that wisdom ne richesse,
Beaute ne sleighte, strengthe ne hardinesse,
Ne may with Venus holden champartie,
For as hire liste the world may she gie.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1951.

Champarty, campi-partitio, is a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire, to divide the land or other matter sued for between them, if they prevail at law; whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expence.—Blackstone, b. iv. c. 10.

CHA'MPION, v. } Fr. Champione; It. Cam-
CHA'MPION, n. } pione. "One that fights
CHA'MPIONESS. } a publick combat in his own or another man's quarrel," (Cotgrave.) See CAMP.

To champion,—(Shakespeare,) to challenge.

For goure champion chivaler, chief knyght of gow alle
Yelt hym recreaunt. Piers Ploughman, p. 344.

Sothly, he that despeireth him, is like to the coward champion recreant, that flieth withouten nede.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Of crueltee the felonie
Engendred is of tyrannie,
Ayene the whose condicion
God is hymselfe the champion.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Then these two champyons were set one agaynst another, and so mounted on theyr horses, and behaued them nobly, for they knewe what perteyned to deades of armes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 61.

Rather then so, come fate into the lyst,
And champion me to th' vtterance.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii sc 1.

Dear country, O I have not hither brought
These arms to spoil, but for thy liberties;
The sin be on their head that this have wrought,
Who wrong'd me first, and thee do tyrannize,
I am thy champion, and I seek my right:
Provok d I am to this by others spite.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b i.

Then laid the noble championesse strong hond
Upon th' enchaunter, which had her distrest
So sore, and with foule outrages opprest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Next march'd the brave Orsin, famous for
Wise conduct, and success in war;
A skilful leader, stout, severe,
Now marshal to the champion bear.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

When the tongue-battle was over, and the championess had harness'd her peacocks, to go for Samos, and hear the prayers that were made to her.
Dryden. Amphitryon, Act i. sc. 1.

In a battle, every man should fight as if he was the single champion; in preparations for war, every man should think as if the last event depended on his counsel.—Idler, No. 8.

CHANCE, v. } Chance, ("high Arbiter," as CHANCE, n. } Milton calls him,) and his CHANCE, adj. } twin brother "Accident," are CHA'NCEABLE. } merely the participles of CHA'NCEABLY. } Echeoir, cheoir, and cadere. To CHA'NCEFUL. } say, "It befel me by chance or by accident," is absurdly saying, "It fell by falling." (See Tooke.)

See the quotation from Dr. Clarke, and Wilson's Logick.

G. Douglas renders "Zephyris felicibus," to the chancy windes.

Chance is used elliptically for perchance, or by chance.

Toward the south side turned thie thar fiete
Thar fader & thei a chance togider gan mete.
R. Brunne, p. 59.

Bote throw a charme hadde ich a chaunce. and my chief hele. Piers Ploughman, p. 91.

Seven is my chance, and thin is cink and treye.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,587.

O thou Cupide, O thou Venus,
Fortuned by whose ordinance
Of loue, is euery man's chance
Ye knowen all myn hole herte.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

As they joygned themselfe togyders, they came to fyght hande to hande, and enforcedde themself to enter the one into the ships of the others, whyche thynge chancedde in many of them, for that the place was narrowe.
Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 192.

Commonly one vnhappines chaunceth not, but another foloweth.—The Golden Boke, c. 27.

—— The floods fell from the hils:
Dido a den, the Troyan prince the same
Chaunced vpon. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

For that is chanceable which happeneth; and if it happen, there was a time before it happened, when it might haue not happened or else it did not happen, and so if chanceable, not eternal.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

And he hath not appointed vs, an vncertaine and chanceable conflict, but doth promise such a reward, to the which we ought to confer all the counsells, studies, and desyres of our lyfe.—Caluine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

For to put our lyfe in danger, without any cõsideratiõ vnadui sedly, and chanceably, is most against nature.—Id. Ib.

Those accidents are called things chauncing, which chaunce about a thing, so that whether these things chaunce, or no, the thing itselfe may be, or though the thing be not, these may so chaunce to be. As for example, paleness may chaunce before sickness, and the same also may chaunce, though a man be not sicke, and a man may be also sicke, and yet nothing pale at all.
Wilson. Logike. Things Chauncing called Contingentia.

Till on a day roaving the field, I chanc'd
A goodly tree farr distant to behold,
Loaden with fruit of fairest colours mixt,
Ruddie and gold. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

—— Chaos umpire sits,
And by decision more imbroiles the fray
By which he reigns: next him high arbiter
Chance governs all. Id. Ib. b. ii.

All which kinds [of lots] howsoever they may seem chanceful, are yet ordered by God, as in the Proverb: The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposition is of the Lord.
Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b ii. c. 16. s. 2.

About that time I chanced to go to the Prince after supper, and found him in the worst humour that I ever saw him
Sir W. Temple. Memoirs, 1672—79.

It is not, I say, merely in a pious manner of expression, that the Scripture thus ascribes every event to the providence of God; but it is strictly and philosophically true in nature and reason, that there is no such thing as chance or accident; it being evident that these words do not signify any thing really existing, any thing that is truly an agent or the cause of any event; but they signify merely men's ignorance of the real and immediate cause.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 98.

Yet besides chance ships of other nations, there come hither a Portuguese ship or two every year in their way to Brazil.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

A man that is out of humour when an unexpected guest breaks in upon him, and does not care for sacrificing an afternoon to every chance comer; that will be the master of his own time, and the pursuer of his own inclinations, makes but a very unsociable figure in this kind of life.
Spectator, No. 132.

If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate.
Gray. Elegy in a Country Church-yard.

The superiority of which manner is never more striking, than when in a collection of pictures we chance to see a portrait of Titian's hanging by the side of a Flemish picture, (even though that should be of the hand of Vandyke,) which however admirable in other respects, becomes cold and gray in the comparison.—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Disc 8.

Our studies will be for ever, in a very great degree, under the direction of chance; like travellers we must take what we can get, and when we can get it.—Id. Disc. 12.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, properly CHAUD-MEDLEY. } Fr. Chaudemelle, caude mellée; Mid. Lat. Calida mellata. (See Du Cange.) Chaude or Caude, from Calidus or Calidus, hot, and Mellée, a squabble, a conflict, from Meler, to mix. See the quotation from Blackstone.

If the offence be committed vpon a prepensed minde, and wilfully, wee make much more adoe, than if it were chaunce-medly.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, p. 135.

Since that lov'd hand this mortal wound does give,
So handsomely the thing contrive,
That she may guiltless of it live;
So perish, that her killing thee
May a chance-medley, and no murder, be.
Cowley. The Concealment.

If such an one should have the ill hap at any time to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medly, the poor man (God knows) being no ways guilty of any design of wit.
South, vol. i. Ser. 9.

But the self-defence, which we are now speaking of, is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault, or the like, in the course of a sudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And this is what the law expresses by the word chance-medley, or, (as some rather choose to write it,) chaud-medley, the former of which in its etymology signifies a casual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion; both of them of pretty much the same import.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14.

CHA'NCEL. From the Franco-Norman Chancel, from the Lat. Cancelli. (See CANCEL.)

A part of a church, so called, because formerly separated from the rest of the church a cancellis, by bars or lattice-work, (Skinner.)

And thus lith Alison, and Nicholas,
In the besinesse of mirthe and in solas,
Til that the bell of laudes gan to ring,
And freres in the chancel gon to sing.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3656.

From thence, into the sacred church he broke,
And rob'd the chancell, and the deskes downe threw,
And altars fouled, and blasphemy spoke;
And th' images, for all their goodly hew,
Did cast to the ground.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

Now did Ridley, Bishop of London, by his injunctions, order the altars in his diocese to be taken down, as occasions of great superstition and error, and tables to be set in their room in some convenient places of the chancel or choir.
Strype. Memoirs. Edw. VI. an. 1550.

Whoever gives a pair of velvet shoes
To th' holy rood, or liberally allowes
But a new rope to ring the curfew bell,
But he desires that the great deed may dwell,
Or graven on the chancel-window glasse,
Or in the lasting tombe of plated brasse!—Bp. Hall. Sat. 4.

CHA'NCELLOR, n. } Sir Edward Coke says, he has his name
CHA'NCELLERY. } of Chancellor from the CHA'NCELLORSHIP. } highest point of his
CHA'NCERY. } jurisdiction; viz. a cancellando; that is, from cancelling the King's letters patents, by drawing strokes through it like a lattice. But it is well known, as Hobbs observes, that cancellarius was a great officer under the Roman Empire, whereof this island was once a member, and that the office came into this kingdom, either with, or in imitation of, the Roman government. (Hobbs's Dialogue on the Common Law of England.) This officer appears at first to have been a mere clerk, appointed to receive petitions addressed to the Emperor, and to breviate the matter of them; and because he sat, (for whatever purpose,) within a room partitioned off by certain bars or lattice-work, cancelli, he was called Cancellarius. (See Spelman and Menage, Junius and Skinner.) Chancery seems to be an abbreviation of chancellery.

Somme serven the kynge, and hus selver tellen
In the chekkere and the chaunceirie, chalengynge hus dettes.—Piers Ploughman, p. 5.

I not what thinge it male amount,
Upon thilke ende of our accompte,
Whiche Christ hym selfe is auditour,
Whiche taketh none hede of vein honour,
The office of the chancelleric.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And he tolde me that it was wel and clerelye proued that the chaunceler and hys clerkes had kylled the man fyrst, and then hanged him after.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 235.

In the tyme of hys hyghe chauncellourshippe, beynge but an alebruer's sonne of Londō, Johan Caygraue sayth, that he [Beckette] toke vpon him as he had ben a prince.
Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

While these two kynges, theyr sonnes and counsailours were at Calais, there was dayly commonynge, and newe ordenances deuysed and conferined to ratifye the peace, nat lyttel nor brekynge the first letters: for they were euer made beynge one date, to be ye more suretie: of the whiche I haue sen the copy of the regestres in the chauncerues of both kynges.—Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 213.

After which Dr. Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Lord Chancellor of England, finding Wolsey, being no Cardinal, to meddle more in his office of chancellourship, than he could well suffer, resigned up the seal, which the King presently gave to Wolsey.—Baker. Hen. VIII. an. 1516.

For else how should his sonne maintained be
At inns of court or of the chancery:
There to learn law, and courtly carriage,
To make amends for his mean parentage.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 2.

In April 1692, he [Treby] with others, being called to the degree of serjeants at law, were sworne at the chancery-bar on the 27th of the said month.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

The Lord Sommers was made a Baron of England; and as he was one of the ablest and most incorrupt judges that ever sat in chancery; so his great capacity for all affairs made the King consider him beyond all his ministers.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1698.

He professed to speak from the records of chancery; and he added another very striking fact, that on the property actually paid into his court, (a very small part, indeed, of the whole property of the kingdom,) there had accrued in that year a net surplus of 800,000*l.* which was so much new capital.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

CHA'NDLER, n. } Fr. Chandelier, (q. d.
CHA'NDLERLY. } Candelarius. (Skinner.)
CHA'NDLERY. } "Chandelier, a candlestick;
CHA'NDRY, n. } also a chandler, a candle-maker," (Cotgrave.) "A chaundler,—a candlestick. Sheffield," (Ray.)

The word is not now limited to a maker and seller of candles, but is applied to dealers in various articles of household consumption. Also to dealers in corn, as a corn-chandler.

——— Oh—Ruby lips,
Love hath to you been like wine-vinegar,
Now you look wan and pale, lips ghosts ye are,
And my disgrace sharper than mustard seed.
Cra. How like a chaundler he does vent his passions.
Beaum. & Fletch. Queen of Corinth, Act iv. sc. 1.

They would bear us in hand that we must of duty still appear before them once a year in Jerusalem, like good circumcis'd males and females, to be tax'd by the poll, to be scor'd our head money, our two pences in their chaundlerly shop-book of Easter.—Milton. Of Reformation in England.

The serjeant of the chandlery was ready at the said chamber door to deliver the tapers.
Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1557.

Forty other devices I had, of wyre-men and the chaundrie, and I know not what else, but all succeeded alike.
B. Jonson. Masques. Love freed, &c.

His [Col. Okey] parentage was as mean as his calling, having been originally as 'tis supposed to be a drayman, afterwards a stoaker in a brew-house at Islington, near London, and then a poor chandler near Lyon-key in Thames-street in London.—Wood. Fasti Oxon.

Such is the caprice of fortune, the grand-daughter of a man, who will be an everlasting glory to the nation, has now for some years with her husband, kept a little chandler's or grocer's shop, for their subsistence, lately at the lower Holloway, in the road between Highgate and London, and at present in Cock-lane, not far from Shoreditch-church.
Newton. Life of Milton.

CHANGE, v. } Fr. Changer; It. Cangiare; formed, says Menage, from Cambiare; and Cambiare from the Lat. Cambire, and this from the Gr. Καμπτειν, flectere, to bend.
CHA'NGE, s.
CHA'NGER.
CHA'NGEABLE.
CHA'NGEABLENESS.
CHA'NGING, n.
CHA'NGEFUL.
CHA'NGELESS.
CHA'NGELING, n.

To move from place to place; to cause to be otherwise or different from what it was; different in place, form, or colour; in any mode or manner; to alter, to vary; to exchange, or give one thing for another.

Changeling, n. See the quotation from Spenser for a particular application. An idiot is also so named. See the quotation from Locke.

Louerd, he seyde, that ech thyng madest queynte & sley,
And changest poer and kynedoms al at thy nowe rede,
And monne's sones wreche senst of her fader mys dede.
R. Gloucester, p. 350.

For fraith [fraught] with such frayltie is worldly prosperity,
That suddenly it slideth, chaunging as the moone.
Id. p. 579. Appendix.

Now he changes his weie, till Acres may be nought.
R. Brunne, p. 159.

And I wolde now be at ghou and chaunge my voie for I am confoundid among ghou.—Wiclif. Galathies, c. 4.

I would I were with you now, and could chaunge my voyce: for I stande in a doute of you.—Bible, 1551. Gal. c 4.

For what profiteth it to a man, if he wynne al the world and do peyrynge to his soule? Or what chaunging schal a man geve for his soule?—Wiclif. Mark, c. 8.

Therefore it behovede thee to bitake my money to encrees to chaungeris that whanne I cam I schuld reseeyve that that is myn with usuris.—Id. Matthew, c. 25.

Thou oughtest therefore to haue had my money to the chaungers, and then at my comynge shoulde I haue receaued myne owne with vauntage.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For thilke time (I vnderstonde)
The lumbarde made non eschange
The bishopriches for to change.—Gower. Con. A. Prologue.

The spring is come, the goodly nimphes now
daunce in euery place,
Thus hath the yere most pleasauntly of late
ychaunged his face.
Vncertaine Auctors. All worldly Pleasures fade.

His fift head was lyke a leopardes head of many colours, full of fyckelenesse and chaungeableneuse.
Bale. Image, pt i.

Suche constaunte folke be better then
those chaungynge in and oute,
Who plunge in euery follye, whiche
theire heades can bringe aboute.
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 7

——— After which they [Castor and Pollux] found
Such grace with Joue, that both liu'd vnder ground,
By change of daies: life still did one sustaine
While the other died; the dead then liu'd againe,
The liuyng-dying. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi

Thrones and Imperial powers, off-spring of heaven,
Ethereal vertues, or these titles now
Must we renounce, and changing stile be call'd
Princes of hell. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

But of these things we need not here stand to argue, though such opinions be not unworthy the propounding, in this consideration, of an eternal and unchangeable cause, producing a changeable and temporal effect.
Raleigh. History of the World, Pref. 26

Vnto such lawes it is expresly sometimes added, how long they are to continue in force. If this be no where exprest, then haue we no light to direct our iudgments concerning the changeableneese or immutability of them, but by considering the nature and qualitie of such lawes.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 10

Besides, her face and countenance euery day
We changed see, and sundry formes partake,
Now horn'd, now round, now bright, now browne and gray;
So that as changefull as the moone men vse to say.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 7.

Troi. No, but something may be done that we will not,
And sometimes we are diuels to our selues,
When we will tempt the frailtie of our powers,
Presuming on their changefull potencie.
Shakespeare. Troilus & Cressida, Act iv. s. 4.

Vnto the cuckooe, ouerkindo
To broke eorluals, she
Adjudg'd a spring-time's changeles note,
And whilst his young ones be
By others hatcht, to name and shame
Himself in euery tree.
Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 37.

From thence a faery thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slept'st in tender swadling band,
And her base elfin brood there for thee left:
Such, men do chaungelings call, so chaung'd by faries theft. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

Changer of all things, yet immutable;
Before and after all, the first and last:
That moving all is yet immovable.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

Still, as you rise, the state exalted too,
Finds no distemper while 'tis chang'd by you;
Chang'd like the world's great scene! when without noise
The rising sun night's vulgar lights destroys.
Waller. To my Lord Protector.

Especially since most human acknowledgments, being of so changeable-coloured a complexion, that like pigeon's necks they have various representations, as they are variously looked on.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 44.

I chuse to give an instance in the stuff I have been speaking of, because the mixture being more simple, the way whereby the changeableness is produced, may be the more easily apprehended.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 64.

What power but his can rule the changeful main,
And wake the sleeping storm, or its loud rage restrain.
Hughes. Ode to the Creator of the World.

Fairest, if, time and absence can incline
Your heart to wandering thoughts no more than mine:
Then shall my hand, as changeless as my mind,
From your glad eyes a kindly welcome find.
Buckinghamshire. A Letter from Sea.

Nay, some are so studiously changeling in that particular, they esteem an opinion as a diurnal, after a day or two scarce worth the keeping.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 35.

It would possibly be thought a very bold paradox, if not a very dangerous falsehood, if I should say, that some changelings, who have lived forty years together without any appearance of reason, are something between a man and a beast.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 4.

I would not exclude alteration neither; but even when I changed it should be to preserve.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

We all know how often those masters, who sought after colouring, changed their manner, whilst others, merely from not seeing various modes, acquiesced all their lives in that which they set out with.

Sir J. Reynolds. Works. Life, lv.

I judged that it was high water at the full and change, about one o'clock; and that the tide rises and falls upon a perpendicular about four or five feet.

Cook. Voyages, vol. iv. b. iii. c. 11.

Such are the vicissitudes of the world, through all its parts, that day and night, labour and rest, hurry and retirement, endear each other, such are the changes that keep the mind in action, we desire, we pursue, we obtain, we are satiated, we desire something else, and begin a new pursuit.—Rambler, No. 6.

In groundless hope and causeless fear,
Unhappy man! behold thy doom,
Still changing with the changeful year,
The slave of sunshine and of gloom.

Johnson. The Winter's Walk.

CHA'NNEL, v. } Lat. Canalis. See CANAL,
CHA'NNEL, n. } and KENNEL.

To hollow out; to cut out hollow tracts or courses,—in the earth, in rocks, &c.

If that their water, in the poules
and cisternes closely standle
Or if it sweetly bubble throughe
the silver channeld sande

Drant. Horace. Epistle to Valla.

The floode that is in many channels take,
In eche of them shall feble streames make,
The lone that is deuided among many,
Unneth suffiseth that euery part haue any

Sir T. More. Workes, p 28.

And if it had not chanced that wee had fallen into a channell of deepe water, closer by the shoare then we accompted of, wee could neuer haue gone cleare of the poynt that lyeth to the southwards of Kenrick's mounte.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 293.

Sometimes likewise, but rarely, channeled, and a little slight sculpture about the hypotrachelion or neck, under the capital.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 24.

Thus wonne he Troy, and sacked Troy
And channels flowed blood,
Nor did he breathe whilest any part
Of all the citie stood.

Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 5.

The 28 day of Aprill diuers young men of ye citie picked quarrels to certaine strangers, as they passed by the streetes, some they did strike and buffeted, and some they threw into the channel.—Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1517.

The dart fell through his channel bone,
Pierc't through his shoulders upper part; and set his spirit gone. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

With all their mouths the nerves these spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainer sink;
These all the channell'd fibres every way,
For motion and sensation still convey.

Blackmore. The Creation, b. vi.

Thus was the world running apace into idolatry, and ready to lose the very notion of the true God, and his worship; had he not been pleased to interpose, and take effectual care to preserve these pure in some one nation; to be kept apart from the common contagion, and made, as it were, the repository of true religion, and a channel to convey it to the rest of mankind, as soon and in as high a degree, as they should become capable of receiving it.—Law. Enquiry, pt. ii.

While those, [Naiads] who love still visible to glad
The thirsty plains from never-ceasing urns,
Assume more awfull majesty, and pour
With force resistless, down the channel'd rocks.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

With this squadron, together with the St. Albans and the Lark, and the trade under their convoy, Mr. Anson, after weighing from St. Helena, tided it down the channel for the first forty eight hours, and on the 20 September 1740, in the morning, we discovered off the Ram-head the Dragon, Winchester, South-sea Castle, and the Rye, with a number of merchantmen under their convoy.

Anson. Voyage round the World, b. i. c. 2.

CHANT, v. }
CHANT, n. }
CHA'NTER. }
CHA'NTERSHIP. }
CHA'NTICLEER. } Fr. Chanter; Lat. Cantare, to sing.
CHA'NTMENT. }
CHA'NTRESS. }
CHA'NTRY. }
CHA'NSON. }

Chantry, — the place in which they chant. In Chaucer, an endowment for the payment of a priest, to sing mass agreeably to the appointment of the founder, (Tyrwhitt.)

Chant is more particularly applied to—

The musical modulation of voice in the recitation either of prose or verse, used in the cathedral service.

Chanticleer,—avis seu gallus clarum canens,—a bird that chants clearly, (Skinner.)

Chauntement,—(R. Gloucester and Chaucer,)—as we now use incantation. See CANT.

Merlyn with ys chauntement, and myd ys quoyntyse, ther Sette vp the stones rygt so, as heo stode in Yrlond er

R. Gloucester, p. 149.

The slacke skin about his necke shaketh,
While that he sang, so chanteth he and craketh.

Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9754.

How (quod I) han men to forne this tyme, trusted in writtes and chauntementes, and in helpes of spirites, that dwellen in the aire.—Id. Test. of Love, b. i.

He sette not his benefice to hire,
And lette his shepe acombred in the mire,
And ran into London, unto Seint Poules,
To seken him a chanterie for soules.—Id. Prologue, v. 512.

In diecant and in chant, I streined many a yell,
But since musicians be so madde, fansie (quoth he) farewell.—Gascoigne. Green Knightes Farewell to Fansie.

I haue gotten (sayth he) ye great chaunter, and a good quere man to answere hym, in the same note, and here I delyuer them to you.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

By tale we say orysons, and
To words vnknowne Amen:
The quier doth chaunt, we knock our breasts,
We bow, and crosse vs then.

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 23.

But cottage, herd or sheep-cote none he saw,
Only in a bottom saw a pleasant grove
With chaunt of tunefull birds resounding loud.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

A shepherd sitting on a bank
Like chanty-cleer he crowed crank
And pip'd full merrily. Drayton, Ecl. 4.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy,
Thee chauntress, oft the woods among
I woo, to hear thy even-song.—Milton. Il Penseroso.

His chapel be a mournful cypruss shade,
And for a chantry Philomel's sweet lay,
Where prayers shall continually be made
By pilgrim lovers, passing by that way.—Drayton, Ecl. 2.

Fiue hundred poore I haue in yeerely pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold vp
Toward heauen, to pardon blood:
And I haue built two chauntries,
Where the sad and solemne priests sing still
For Richard's soule.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 1.

Let us behind these myrtles' twining arms
Retire unseen; from thence survey her charms,
Wild as the chanting thrush upon the spray,
At man's approach, she swiftly flies away.

Gay. Dione, Act ii. sc 2.

He [Wettenhall] became first schoolmaster of the public school in Dublin, then curate of S. Warburgh's, and afterwards chantor of Christ church there.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

The chanter at his early matins yawns

Garth. The Dispensary, c. 5.

In 1334, he [Richard Langrigg or Langrish] became Archdeacon of Cleveland, in the place of Dr. Will. Clyffe, promoted to the chauntorship of York.—Wood. Fasti Oxon.

Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer;
So light her cock, whose singing did surpass
The merry notes of organs at the mass

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox

These [Christmasse carolles] were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas celebrity; and not such religious songs as are current at this day with the common people under the same title, and which were substituted by those enemies of innocent and useful mirth, the Puritans.—Warton. Hist. of England. Poetry, vol. iii. s. 26.

We observed, that they used to be well pleased with hearing the chant of our two young new Zealanders, which consisted rather in mere strength, than in melody of expression.—Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. b. ii. c. 9.

——— Resume the lyre,
Chauntress divine, and every Briton call
Its melody to hear.

Lyttelton. On Reading Miss Carter's Poems.

O'er the sepulchre profound
E'en now, with arching sculpture crown'd,
He plans the chantry's coral shrine,
The daily dirge, and rites divine.

Warton. The Grave of King Arthur

CHA'OS. }
CHAO'TICK. } Chaos, properly, is a vast
CHA'OS-LIKE. } gap, vastus hiatus; but afterwards, rudis indigestaque moles, (see the quotation from Sandy's Ovid,) from the ancient Χα-ω, to gape, to open.

A huge, confused or disorderly heap; a measureless, shapeless mass.

They breaking forth with rude vnruliment,
From all foure parts of heauen, doe rage full sore,
And tosse the deepes, and teare the firmament,
And all the world confound with wilde vprore,
As if instead thereof they chaos would restore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9

As yet this world was not, and chaos wild
Reign'd where these heav'ns now rowl, where earth now rests
Upon her center pois'd.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v

The sea, the earth, all-covering heaven unfram'd,
One face had nature, which they chaos nam'd:
An undigested lump, a barren load,
Where jarring seeds of things ill-joyn'd abode.

Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

At that time (whatever it was) when the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subsided, then those several beds were in all probability reposited in the earth, in that commodious order in which they now are found.—Derham. Phys. Theol. b. iii. c. 2.

Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain;
Here earth and water seem to strive again;
Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruis'd,
But, as the world, harmoniously confused:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, all agree.

Pope. Windsor Forest.

Out of this chaos of mingled purposes and casualties, the ancient poets, according to the laws which custom had prescribed, selected, some the crimes of men, and some their absurdities; some the momentous vicissitudes of life, and some the lighter occurrences, some the terrours of distress, and some the gaieties of prosperity.

Johnson. Preface to Shakespeare

In these early and unrefined ages the jarring parts of a certain chaotick constitution supported their several pretensions by the sword.—Burke. Vindication of Nat. Society.

CHAP, v. }
CHAP, n. } From A.S. Yppan, go-yppan,
CHA'PLESS. } to open, to gape. Gap and chap vary only by pronouncing ch in the one and g in the other.

To chap is to open; and is applied, particularly, when the cold breaks the continuity of the skin; causes gaps, openings, or separations in it.

Chap, n.—Applied to those parts of the face, which, by their separation, open (sc.) the mouth. Also the chops or chaps of a river, of the British Channel, &c. where the mouth or entrance opens between the opposite banks or shores into the river or channel.

And when he gapes full gredilie
unthriftie thirst to slake,
The river wasteth speedilie,
and awaywarde goes the lake:
That all the licour from his lips
And dryed chaps away it slips.

Turberville. The Louer obtaining his Wish.

When the heat of lust hath shriveled up the conscience into wounds and clefts, (as rain on earth that's chapp'd) repentant tears will fill up all those chasms.

Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 19

It cureth clifts and chaps.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 4.

And with my manies blood
Imbrud their fierce deuowring chappes,
And forced me to clime
This tree, where I (vnhappy man!)
On leaues haue fed long time.

Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 5.

While she thus musing sat, run from the wood
An angry lion to the crystal springs,
Near to that place; who coming from his food,
His chaps were all besmeard with crimson blood.

Cowley. Pyramus & Thisbe

Ham. Why e'en so: and now my Lady Wormes chapless, and knockt about the mazard with a sexton's spade.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

Bel. Heaven further it:
For till they be key-cold dead, ther's no trusting of 'em.
Whate'r they seem, or howsoe'r they carry it,
Till they be chap-fain, and their tongues at peace.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act iv. sc. 3.

Refresh'd with heat, the ladies sought around
For virtuous herbs, which gather'd from the ground,
They squeez'd the juice and cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks, and their chapt skins
they laid. Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

As when th' impatient grey-hound, slipt from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe, to course the fearful hare,
She in her speed does all her safety lay;
And he with double speed pursues the prey;
O'er-runs her at the sitting turn, and licks
His chaps in vain, and blows upon the flix.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. I.

The tumor reached to the neck, but did not seem much to swell under the chap, the epiglottis with the rima lævigas, which remained gaping, was protruded almost to the further end of the nether-chap.
Boyle. Workes, vol. iii. p. 357.

CHAPE, n. } Fr. Chappe, the chape, or
CHA'PEAU. } locket of a scabbard, (Cotgrave.)
CHA'PELESS. } Vaginæ mucro ferreus, (Skinner.) And the Fr. Chapeau, is a hat, hood, or bonnet, for the head. See CAP.

He had a page that rode behynde hym, bearynge on his heed a chapeuce of Montaban, bright and clere shynynge agaynst the sonne.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 137.

On his hedde a chapeau Montabin with a rich coronall, the fold of the chapeau was lined with crimsen satten.
Grafton. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

This is Monsieur Parrolles, the gallant militarist, that was his own phrase—that had the whole theoricke of warre in the knot of his scarfe, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.—Shakes. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 3.

An olde rusty sword tane out of the town armory, with a broken hilt and chapiease.
Id. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 2.

CHA'PEL, v. } Fr. Chapelle; It. Capella;
CHA'PEL, n. } Sp. Capilla; Dut. Kapelle.
CHA'PELRY. } Much has been written upon
CHA'PLAIN. } this word, especially by Du CHA'PLAINCY. } Cange and Menage; but CHA'PLAINSHIP. } Spelman appears to have
CHA'PLAINRIES. } traced it most satisfactorily.
CHA'PLET, n. } He derives it a Ciceroniano capsâ, (see CAPSULE,) et Pliniano capsellâ; S elimi-nato. Capella, pro cistâ, scrinio seu repositorio—A chest, a repository, (sc.) in which the reliques of the martyrs were preserved; then for any building, in which these capellæ of reliques were laid; and again, for any sacred place or place of prayer.

These, he adds, were first called Capellani or Chaplains, who had the care of these capellæ of reliques; then those, who had the care of the sacred place where these capellæ were placed or deposited; and at length, all who ministred in sacred offices; Clerici, nempe, et sacerdotes, (Spelman, Gloss. Archaiol.)

On slepe sone he felle, the sweuen bifor him ran,
Him thought in his chapelle he was withouten man,
Ne non he sauh no herd. R. Brunne, p. 93.

I seigh halles ful heygh and houses ful noble,
Chambres, chymeneys, and chapeles gay.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

They shapen her chapolories. Id. Ib.

And whan he rode, men mighte his bridel here
Gingeling in a whistling wind as clere
And eke as loude, as doth the chapell belle.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 171.

Flaterers ben the devil's chappeleines, that ever singen Placebo.—Id. Persones Tale.

——— If I maie hir leds
Unto the chapell, and againe,
Than is not all my wey in vayne.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

He wold have ben right fayne
To haue ben a chaplayn.
Skelton. Why come ye not to Court?

Moreover, her Highnesse, with the advice of the Councill aforesaid, hath statuted and ordained, that annuells, marles, and duties within free burroughs, or other townes of this realme, as well pertaining to chaplainries, prebendaries, as to friers, &c.—Hall. History of the Reformation, p. 324.

Having conversed much with a stripling divine or two of these newly fledg'd probationers, that usually come scouting from the university, and lie here no lame legers to pop into the Bethesda of some knight's chaplainship, where they bring grace to his good cheer, but no peace or benediction rests to his house, these made the champarty, he contributed the law, and both joined in the divinity.
Milton. Colasterion.

Nay, as the grossest Idolatry, ye set up a chapel or shrine with an image in it, and that image the image of one of the Egyptian kings, under the title of Mars.
Hammond. Paraphrase. Acts, vii. 43.

Old Sir Harbotle Grimston lived still, to the great indignation of the court; when the fifth of November, being gunpowder treason day, came, in which we had always sermons at the chapel of the Rolls, I begged the master of the Rolls to excuse me then from preaching; for that day led one to preach against popery, and it was indecent not to do it.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1684.

But Bishop Burnet, angry at this book, complains to the Bishop of London, that his chaplain, (R. Altham, lately Proctor of Oxon,) should license such a book full of scurrility, whereupon the said Mr. Altham was forced to make a submission or recantation.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Before I went, Du Moulin met my chaplain in the Voorhout, and told him he was so ill, that he knew he had not long to live; and that he could not die in quiet without asking my pardon for so many false and injurious things as he confessed to have said of me, since my last embassy in Holland.—Sir W. Temple. Memoirs from 1672 to 1678.

Where yon old trees bend o'er a place of graves,
And, solemn, shade a chapel's sad remains,
Where yon scath'd poplar through the window waves,
And, twining round, the hoary arch sustains.
Mickle. Pollio. An Elegy.

After the restoration, he [Sprat] took orders, and by Cowley's recommendation was made chaplain to the Duke of Buckingham, whom he is said to have helped in writing The Rehearsal. He was also chaplain to the King.
Johnson. Life of Sprat.

CHA'PLET, n. Fr. Chaplet, from the Lat. Caput.
A garland or wreath for the head.

And where that suche one goth about
To fore the forest of the route,
Where as thei sitten all a rewe,
There wille he moste his body shewe,
His croked kempt, and therupon set
An ouche, with a chapelet. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Cal. Christella, Philema, the chaplet! Ithocles,
Upon the wings of fame, the singular
And chosen fortune of an high attempt,
Is borne so past the view of common sight,
That I myself, with mine own hands have wrought,
To crown thy temples, this provincial garland;
Accept, wear, and enjoy it as our gift
Deserv'd, not purchas'd.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act i. sc. 2.

——— Hoare-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose,
And on old Hyems chinne and icie crowne,
An odorous chaplet of sweet sommer buds,
Is as in mockry set
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act ii. sc. 2.

Attir'd in mantles all the knights are seen,
That gratify'd the view with cheerful green:
Their chaplets of their ladies colours were,
Compos'd of white and red, to shade their shining hair.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Yet let not man too much presume,
Though grac'd with beauty's fairest bloom,
Though for superior strength renown'd
Though with triumphal chaplets crown'd.
West. The Eleventh Nemean Ode.

CHA'PMAN. } A. S. Ceapman; Dut.
CHA'PMAN-HOOD. } Koopman; Ger. Kaufman,
CHA'PWOMAN. } from A. S. Cyppan, to traffick, bargain, buy, or sell: and man. See CHEAP.
Any one, who trafficks, bargains, buys or sells.
Chap is sometimes in common speech used alone; and is also applied to one who is peculiar in his dealings, in his conduct.

Yus ones quath he ich was yherborwed, wt an hep of chapmen.
Ich aros and rifled here males.—Piers Ploughman, p. 99.

In Surrie [Syria] whilom dwelt a compagnie,
Of chapmen rich, and therto sad and trewe,
That wide were senten hir spicerie,
Clothes of gold, and satins riche of hewe.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4535.

Now fell it, that the maisters of that fort
Han shapen hem from Rome for to wende,
Were it for chapmanhood or for disport.—Id. Ib. v. 4563.

——— And more yit
Of chapmanhode he fonde the waye,
And eke to coygne the money
Of sundrey metall. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

——— But is there hope, Sir,
He has got me a good chapwoman.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act iii. sc. 2.

Through ev'ry climate, and to ev'ry gale,
They launch the cargo, and expand the sail:
Wide, with their name, their reputation grew,
And to their mart concurring chapmen drew.
Brooke. The Man of Lawes Tale

For you are to consider these critical chaps
Do not like to be snubb'd, you may venture perhaps,
An amendment, where they can see somewhat amiss,
But may raise their ill blood if you circulate this.
Byron. Critical Remarks, &c.

CHA'PTER, v. } Fr. Chapitre; It. Capi-
CHA'PTER, n. } tolo; Low Lat. Capitulum,
CHA'PTER-HOUSE. } from Caput, the head. (See CAPITULATE.) It is applied to—
The divisions of a book into heads, or principal subjects; to an assembly of heads or chiefs of the church.
The verb is used by Dryden as the Fr. Chapitrer, to school, to correct, to reprove; i. e. to act the part, to perform the part or office, of the heads or chiefs of the church.

And he wold feeche a feined mandement,
And sompne hem to the chapitre bothe two,
And pill the man, and let the wenche go.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v. 6943.

Vnto as little purpose he spēdeth an other peuyshe chapiter after, in whyche because he would yet faine have it seme necessary, that there should be such a feling faith, he telleth vs a long tale, that the faith which depēdeth vpon another man's mouth is weake.—Sir T. More. Workes p. 704

Also all through the storie of the Britons, wherein he followeth Geffrey of Monmouth, I haue caused his storie to be conferred with Gefferies, and noted in the chapiters in the margine, where out the matter is taken.—Fabyan, Pref

And syr Phelyp of Maysyeres, chauncellour to Peter of Lieseignen, kynge of Cyprea, wrote on his tombe as it foloweth, the copy wherof is in y^e chaptre house of the freer Celestynes in Paris.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 40.

At Canterbury they bring him into the chapter-house, where the Earl of Gloucester standeth forth in the midst, calls out the Earl, not by the name of King, but Richard Earl of Cornwal, who in a reverend manner coming forth, taketh his oath in these words.—Baker. Henry III.

He more than once arraigns him for the inconstancy of his judgment, and chapters even his own Aratus on the same head; shewing by many examples, produced from their actions, how many miseries they had both occasioned to the Grecians.—Dryden. The Character of Polybius.

CHAR. } From A. S. Cyran, acyran, to CHA'RCOAL. } turn, to turn about, turn backwards and forwards, (Tooke.) In Chapman's Odyssey, b. iii. p. 44, we find,

Then Nestor broil'd them on the cole-turn'd wood.

Char-coal is wood or other substance turned coal by fire.

The fault is hers that made me go astray;
He needs must wander that has lost his way:
Guiltless I am, she did this change provoke,
And made that charcoal which to her was oak.
Carew. The Spark

His profession being to make chymical medicines in quantity, obliges him to keep great and constant fires, and did put him upon finding a way of charring sea-coal, wherein it is in about three hours or less, without pots or vessels, brought to charcoal, of which having, for curiositie's sake, made him take out some pieces, and cool them in my presence, I found them upon breaking to appear well charr'd.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 141.

Love is a fire that burns and sparcles,
In man, as nat'rally as in charcoals,
Which sooty chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals;
So lovers should their passions choke,
That though they burn they may not smoke.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

CHA'RACTER, v. } Fr. Charactère; It.
CHA'RACTER, n. } Carattere; Sp. Cha-
CHA'RACTERISE. } or Ca-racter; Gr. Χαρακτηρ, a mark en-
CHA'RACTERISM. } graved or inscribed; from Χαρασσειν, to CHA'RACTERIST. } engrave or inscribe. "Fr. Character. A
CHARACTERI'STICK, adj. } character, letter,
CHARACTERISTICK, n. } figure, or form of
CHARACTERI'STICAL, adj. } writing; also a mark,
CHA'RACTERISTICAL, n. } token, sign, seal, im-
CHARACTERI'STICALLY. } pression, or print in CHA'RACTERLESS. } a thing," (Cotgrave.)
CHA'RACTERY. } To character or CHARACTE'RICAL. } characterise, then is,—to engrave or inscribe. And CHA- or CA'-RACT. } thus—
CHA'RACTURE, n. }

To engrave, inscribe, or describe, (sc.) the marks or notes which designate, distinguish, or represent, the qualities, whether good or bad, of any person or thing, whether virtues or vices, merits or demerits, effects or defects.

And he schal make alle, smale and greete, and riche and pore, and fre man and bonde man to have a carecter in her right hond, either in her forheedis, that no man bie either selle but ther han the carecter either the name of the beeste, either noumbre of his name.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 13.

——— And eke it was through writ
With names, whiche he shuld witte
As she hym taught tho to rede,
(She) bad hym as he wold spede,
Without rest of any while,
Whan he were londed in that ile,
He shuld make his sacrifice,
And rede his carecte in the wise,
As she hym taught.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

They had wrytynge some Greke, some Ebrew,
Some Romayne letters as I vnderstode,
Some were olde written, some were writen new,
Some carectis of Caldy, some French was full good.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory!
Which shall above that idle rank remain,
Beyond all date, even to eternity.—Shakes. Son. 122.

——— Was every sin,
Character'd in his satires, made so foul
That some have fear'd their shapes, and kept their soul,
Safer by reading verse.—Donne. Elegie on the Author.

Yet there remains in them also a burden on it as heavy as the other two were disgraceful or superstitious, and of as much iniquity, crossing a law not only written by Moses, but charactered in us by nature, of more antiquity and deeper ground than marriage itself.
Milton. Doctrine &c. of Divorce, Pref.

He, I say, for that appears by the event, and the correspondencies of their sayings to his person: he was described by infallible characterisms which did fit him, and did never fit any but him.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

Here I confidently deny the assumption. For it is not the characteristicall of a body to have dimensions, but to be impenetrable.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 10.

Mightie states characterlesse are grated
To dusty nothing.—Shakes. Troil. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 2.

A third sort in a mean course betwixt the two other, and compounded of them both, bestowed their time in drawing out the true lineaments of every virtue and vice, so lively, that who saw the medals might know the face: which art they significantly termed characterie.
Bp. Hall. Charact. of Vertues & Vices. A Premonition.

Fairies vse flowres for their characterie.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

——— Euen so may Angelo
In all his dressings, caracts, titles, formes,
Be an arch-villaine.—Shakes. Meas. for Meas. Act v. sc. 1.

Sweet brook in whose clear crystal I my eyes
Have oft seen great in labour of their tears;
Enamell'd bank, whose shining gravel bears
The sad characteres of my miseries.
Drummond. Sonnets, pt. i. s. 18.

Because some Protestants practise this and characterical cures (which notwithstanding are more frequent among Roman Catholics) he therefore calls them Magi-Calvinists, characterists, &c.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i. p. 500.

He [Richard Martin] was worthily characterized by the virtuous and learned men of his time, to be princeps amorum, principum amor, &c.—Id. Ib.

From top of this there hung a rope,
To which he fasten'd telescope,
The spectacles with which the stars
He reads in smallest characters.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

Of sensible substances there are two sorts; one of organized bodies, which are propagated by seed; and in these, the shape is that which to us is the leading quality and most characteristical part that determines the species.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6.

You must know, Sir, I am one of that species of women, whom you have characterized under the name of Jilts.
Spectator, No. 401.

So far as they have some characterising marks in common, they may be judged by a common standard; but an allowance must always be made for the sentiments which are peculiar to the several characters.
Introd. to Fletcher's Piscatory Eclogues.

The levee swarms, as if in golden pomp
Were character'd on ev'ry statesman's door,
"Batter'd and bankrupt fortunes mended here."
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

Almost all the men had their names traced upon their arms in indelible characters of a black colour, and the women had a square ornament of flourished lines impressed in the same manner, just under the bend of the elbow.
Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 9.

He will represent to him as often, and with as much zeal, as you or I should, the virtues of his ancestors, and what a glorious weight of illustrious characters he has to support.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 3.

In short, whatever partakes of fancy or caprice, goes under the denomination of picturesque, which (however it be admired in its proper place,) is incompatible with that sobriety and gravity, which is peculiarly the characteristick of this art, [sc. sculpture.]—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Disc. 10.

It has, indeed, been advanced by Addison, as one of the characteristicks of a true critic, that he points out beauties rather than faults.—Rambler, No. 132.

Such transitions often excite mirth, or other sudden or tumultuous passions; but not that sinking, that melting, that languor, which is the characteristical effect of the beautiful as it regards every sense.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, s. 25.

How characteristically does hope prolong her strain, repeat her soothing closes, call upon her associate echo for the same purposes, and display every pleasing grace peculiar to her!—Langhorne. On Collins. Ode on the Passions.

His next tragedy, (1702) was Tamerlane, in which under the name of Tamerlane, he intended to characterize King William, and Lewis the fourteenth under Bajazet.
Johnson. Life of Rowe.

CHARE, v.
CHARE, n.
CHARE-WOMAN.
CHARE-WORK.

From the A. S. Cyran, acyran, vertere, revertere, to turn, to turn about, to turn backwards and forwards.

A char, when used alone, means some single separate act, such as we likewise call a turn or bout.

A char-woman, then, is one who takes her turn or bout, at any work; who goes out for a day's turn at work; and not, surely, as Tooke asserts, so called, because she returns home to her own place of abode, and returns again to her work, when required.

A first turn boy, a second turn boy, &c. is a common name for drivers at inns.

His hands to woll, and arras worke,
And women's chares hee laide.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 11.

Cleo. No more but in a woman, and commanded
By such poore passion as the maid that milkes,
And does the meanest chares.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 13.

And when thou hast done this chare, he gaue thee leaue
To play till Doomesday.—Id. Ib. Act v. sc. 2.

Bob. I approve
Your counsel, and will practise it; bazilee manos:
Here's two chewres chew'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. Loves Cure, Act iii. sc. 1.

Get three or four chair-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay at small charges, only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders.
Swift. Directions to Servants, c. 2.

Agree, that in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare work did aspire:
Meat, drink, and two pence, was her daily hire.
Dryden. Third Idyll of Theocritus.

Sent for the dame, who poor and willing,
Would take a job of charing work,
And sweat and toil like any Turk,
To earn a sixpence or a shilling.
Lloyd. The New River Head.

CHARGE, v.
CHARGE, n.
CHA'RGEABLE.
CHA'RGEABLENESS.
CHA'RGEFUL.
CHA'RGELESS.
CHA'RGEOUS.
CHA'RGER.

Fr. Charger; It. Caricare; Sp. Cargar; (Menage, Skinner and Junius agree,) from the semi-barbarous Caricare, (from Carrus,) pro onerare, ac proprie carrum onerare, (See Vossius de Vit. Ser. lib. iv. c. 3.) Hence also cargo, (qv.)

To load; to place, put or lay a load, or burthen; to impose a weight or burthen. And (met.)—

To impose a weight or burthen, (sc.) of an accusation or crime, a censure, a debt, or expense, a command or order; an injunction; a commission, trust or duty; a risk, a task; to lay on, impose or fix a price; and hence:—to accuse, to censure, to command, to commission, to entrust.

To charge the enemy,—is to bear upon them, make an onset or attack upon them, with all weight, force, or vigour.

To charge the jury,—is to lay before them the whole weight of the evidence of the case.

Charger, a dish,—ab onere, says Skinner because it can hold heavier or weightier loads or quantities. Also, a horse, on which his rider charges the enemy.

Heo chargede here schippes faste and wel with alle gode,
And wende uorth with god wynd & wel dryuyng flode
R. Gloucester, p. 20.

Some of ther heyres so hard charged wore,
& git many it peyres, & som has satled sore
R. Brunne, p. 225

And for chef charyte, we chargeden vs seluen
In amendyng of this men, we maden oure celles.
Piers Ploughman. Crede

Alle ye that traveilen and ben chargid come to me: and I schal fulfille you. Take ye my yok on you, and lerne ye of me, for I am mylde and meke in herte and ye schal fynde reste in your soulis for my yoke is softe and my charge light.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 11.

For if any man hath madd me sorouful, he hath not madde me sorouful but a part—that I charge not you all.
Id. 2 Corinth. c. 2.

And whanne I was among ghou and hadde nede I was chargeous to no man.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

Who so shall tell a tale after a man,
He moste reherse, as nighe as ever he can,
Evrich word, if it be in his charge,
All speke he never so rudely and so large.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 735.

For he taketh of nought els kepe
But for to fylle his bagges large:
And al is to hym but a charge.
For he ne parteth nought withall,
But keepeth it as seruaunt shall.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

But for Charlys was at that tyme lettyd with chargeable busynesse, he therefore sent a noblaman agayne them called Comard, vnto the riuer of Sayne to wt stande ye said enemyes.—Fabyan, c. 165.

By reason wherof we be most notably charged with masses, sufferings, & other alms deeds, for his benefite to us most chargeably exhibit.
Strype. Records, No. 30. Abbot of York to Wolsey.

For lo (as Paul witnesseth afterwarde) whan he was full pore and nedy preaching among the people, he was not chargeous vnto them, but with his handes he traueled not only to get his owne lyuynge, but also the lyuyng of other poore and nedy creatures.
State Trials. Thorpe for Heresy, an. 1407.

Such plenty siluer plate behynd them left they glad did lose,
Good armour, chardgers great, and costly carpets tapistry gay.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. ix.

The heralds then, he strait charg'd to consort
The curld-head Greeks, with lowd calls to a court.
Chapman. Homer, Odyssey, b. ii.

For never in any other warre afore, gave the Romanes a hotter charge upon the enemies: so much had they of the one side with spitefull taunts and reproaches netled them, and the consuls on the other side with their long delaies whet them on.—Holland. Livie, p. 75.

And all this tract that fronts the falling sun
A noble peer of mickle trust and power
Has in his charge, with temper'd awe to guide
An old and haughty nation proud in arms.—Milton. Comus.

Suppose we that God himselfe delighteth to dwell sumptuously, or taketh pleasure in chargeable pompe? No, then was the Lord most acceptably serued, when his temples were rooms borrowed within the houses of poor men.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 15.

The Parliament voted, that it be referred to persons out of the House to take into consideration, what inconveniencies there are in the law, and how the mischiefs that grew from the delays, the chargeableness, and the irregularities in the proceedings of law, may be prevented.
Whitelock. Memoirs, an. 1651.

——— Here's the note
How much your chaine weighs to the vtmost charect,
The finenesse of the gold and chargeful fashion,
Which doth amount to three odd duckets more
Then I stand debted to this gentleman.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iv. sc. 1.

The first pretence was, that the committee, who now was at charge of an house to sit in, might make their dayly session there, being a place both more publick, roomy, and chargeless, the committee after many consultations resolved it convenient to move thither.—Bp. Hall. Hard Measure.

Men do not use to pick quarrels with their friends; and, therefore, when we find any charging the Scripture with obscurity and imperfection, we have reason to believe they hope for no comfort from it.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

And now embark'd they seek the British isles.
Pleas'd with the charge, propitious ocean smiles
Hughes. The Triumph of Peace.

It seems to be with the devil in respect of the disorders of the soul, as it is with the spleen in respect of the distempers of the body, whatsoever is amiss, or indisposed, the charge is sure to lie there.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

These being mighty scrupulous and precise in observing the traditions of their fathers and the little rites and ceremonies of their law, which were not very troublesome, or chargeable, they were esteemed very righteous, both by others and themselves too, altho in the meanwhile they neglected the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith, as our Saviour tells them to their faces.

Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. ser. 84.

—— Nor dare close their eyes,
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry-furr'd tongues, else minutely to death
Obnoxious, dismal death, th' effect of drought.

J. Phillips. Cider, b. ii.

We took in 270 lbs. of fresh beef and a live bullock charged at 613 lbs.—Cook. Voyages, vol i. b. i. c. 1.

A musket was therefore fired over them, but finding it did them no harm, they seemed rather to be provoked than intimidated, and I therefore fired a four pounder charged with grape shot, wide of them.—Id. Ib. vol. i. b. ii. c. 2.

Those holy Beings, whose superior care
Guides erring mortals to the paths of virtue,
Affrighted at impiety like thine,
Resign their charge to baseness and to ruin.

Johnson. Irene, Act iii. sc. 8.

Of this interest, three hundred and eighty-three thousand two hundred pounds a year stood chargeable on the public revenues of the Carnatic.

Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

CHA'RIOT, v. }
CHA'RIOT, n. }
CHARIOTE'ER. } Fr. Chariot, charette; It. Carretta; Sp. Carcta. The past part. of the A.S. Cyran, to turn, turn about. See CHAIR.

A kind of car or carriage turning on wheels, (now used for comfort or pleasure rather than other purposes.)

To chariot, is to carry, or ride in, to drive, a chariot.

No; age forbids, and fixt within depe brest
H s countrey's loue, and falling Rome's ymage;
The charret turn, sayth he, let loose the raines,
Roun to the undeserved death.

Incertaine Auctors. Marcus Tullius Ciceros Death.

He had intended moreouer (since he was reputed to have equalled Apollo in singing and matched the sun in chariotting) to imitate also the worthie acts of Hercules.

Holland. Suetonius, p. 208.

O wherefore was my birth from Heaven foretold
Twice by an angel, who at last in sight
Of both my parents all in flames ascended
From off the altar, where an off'ring burn'd,
As in a fiery column charioting
His Godlike presence, and from some great act
Or benefit reveal'd to Abraham's race?

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

—— Forth rushd with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal Deitie,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd
By four cherubic shapes.—Id. Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 750.

Four nimble gnats the horses were.
Their harnesses of gossamere,
Fly Cranion, her charioteer,
Upon the coach-box getting.

Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

They raisde a huge pile, and to armes went every Myrmidon
Charg'd by Achillis; chariots and horse were harnessed,
Fighters and charioteers got up, and they, the sad march led:
A cloud of infinite foot behind.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

—— Undelaying each
Complied, and in bright arms stood soon array'd,
Then mounted combatants and charioteers
First mov'd the chariots, after whom the foot
Dense as a cloud. Cowper. Id. Ib.

——All the ground
With shiver'd armour strown, and on a heap
Chariot and charioter lay overturn'd
And fierie foaming steeds.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

With what a cheerly face the golden sun chariots thorow the rounding skie!—Feltham, Pt. i. Res. 18.

In pursuance of this resolution, I departed from London, accompanied with my wife, in a small chariot drawn by two horses, having sent two servants before, well mounted to attend me on the road, with a led horse for myself, if there should be occasion.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 371.

The said chair drawn by six chariot horses trapt with black velvet, upon every horse four escutcheons of the King's arms and Queen's, beaten in fine gold upon double sarsenet; and upon every horse's forehead a shaffron of the said arms.—Strype. Memoirs. Edw. VI. an. 1557.

—— But I disdain
The nauseous task to paint her as she is,
Cruel, abandon'd, glorying in her shame!
No.—let her pass, and, chariotted along
In guilty splendour, shake the public ways.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

If Poussin, in imitation of the ancients, represents Apollo driving his chariot out of the sea, by way of representing the sun rising, if he personifies lakes and rivers, it is nowise offensive in him; but seems perfectly of a piece with the general air of the picture.—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Disc. 5.

CHA'RITY. }
CHA'RITABLE. }
CHA'RITABLENESS. }
CHA'RITABLY. }
CHA'RITATIVE. }
CHA'RITOUS. } Fr. Charité; It. Carita; Sp. Caridad; Lat. Caritas. Carus, (says Vossius,) properly signifies, pretiosus; and Carus (Perottus,) a carendo. When there is a dearth of food—carent homines, and then it is said to be Cara. And Scaliger is to the same effect.—Of similar origin and application is the English, Dear, (qv.) Carus, then, signifies—

Precious, valuable; and therefore valued, highly prized, much esteemed, much loved,—because the dearth, scarcity, or want of that, so valued, is hurtful or painful; attended with anxiety or care. And charity is applied to—

The feeling caused by the perception of the wants or sufferings of others;—to a desire to relieve them, to a love for our fellow creatures, or goodwill, benevolence; to acts for their relief, or beneficence. And see the example from Dr. S. Clarke.

But charite and chastite, beh chaced out clene.

Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Charite is pacient, it is benygne. charite enuyeth not, it doith not wickidli, it is not blowun, it is not coueitous, it sekith not the thingis that ben his owne, it is not stired to wraththe, it thenkith not yuel, it ioieth not on wickednesse, but it ioieth togidre in truethe. it suffrith alle thingis, it beleueth alle thingis, it hopith alle thingis, it susteyneth alle thingis. charite fallith neuere doun.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 13.

But for to speken of hire conscience,
She was so charitable and so pitous,
She wolde wepe if that she saw a mous
Caught in a trappe, if it were ded or biedde.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 143.

But nowe hereafter thou shalt here
What God hath wrought in this matere,
As he that doothe all equitee
To him that wrought charitee,
He was ayneward charitous,
And to pitee he was pitous.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

After his connyng and power a priest sholde besy him to enfourme, and to reule whomesoeuer he myght charitably.

State Trials. Thorpe for Heresy, an. 1407.

It pleased my mynde exceedyngly, that your accustummed louynge charitablenesse toward me, (whiche was entermitted for a small space) encreased againe, and was as freshe as euer it was towardes me.—Udal. Philippians, c. 4.

And here I make a petition to you my friends, who would have bestowed any thing on me. I beseech you, for charity sake bestow it yearly on my wife, who hath four small children, and God hath now taken me away who was her staff and stay.—State Trials. Dr. Story. 14 Elizab. an. 1571.

Say, heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love,
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime, and just th' unjust to save,
Dwells in all heaven charitee so deare?

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

I will be charitably jealous of those men, which from notorious lewdnesse leap at once into a sudden forwardnesse of profession. Holinesse, doth not, like Jonas gourd, grow up in a night.—Bp. Hall. Meditations & Vows.

For this charitative fraternal corruption then, which is not any man's peculiar province or inclosure, but the engagement and duty of every brother, or common Christian, it is the same thing (though belonging to us in another capacity) that the first admonition both Matt. xviii. & Titus, iii. was.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 290.

To this immediately succeeded the Latine tract of confirmation, in answer to the exceptions of Mr. Daillée which was then prepar'd for the press, though detain'd much longer upon prudential or rather charitative considerations.

Fell. Life of Hammond, p. i.

From this passage [1 Cor. xiii. 2,] it appears that, the word charity, in the New Testament, does not signify (as we now use it) only alms to the poor; but that universal love and goodwill towards all men, which includes both it and all other virtues; the constant practice of which universal charity, is indeed worshipping God in spirit and in truth.

Clark, vol. i. Ser. 6.

The precepts of charity delivered by our Saviour and his apostles are so plain, so full, so many, so easie to be understood, and those precepts inforced by so just, and reasonable and pious considerations, with respect to God, to the world, to fellow Christians, to the honour of our religion, and lastly to ourselves, from the comfort that is in welldoing, and the reward that follows it; that a man must have great impudence to profess himself a Christian, and yet to think himself not obliged to do acts of charity.

Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

But it matters not much which of them to pitch upon, for they all come to one sense; and that is this, That to be very charitable in this world, is a good means to secure to ourselves a little of eternal happiness in the next.

Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 4.

In fine, without any prejudice to this age be it said, he seemed to me, by his faith and by his charitableness, to include in his soul some grains of the golden age, and to be a relick of those times, when piety and miracles were sincere.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. ii.

He is no fool, who charitably gives
What he can only look at whilst he lives;
Sure as he is to find, when hence he goes,
A recompense which he can never loose.

Byrom. Miscellaneous Pieces.

Mr. Samuel Johnson (author of London, a Satire, and some other poetical pieces) is a native of this county, and much respected by some worthy gentlemen in the neighbourhood, who are trustees of a charity-school now vacant.

Lord Gower, in Murphy's Life of Dr. Johnson.

CHARK. To Chark, is to Char, (qv.)

There is no fyre there is no sparke,
There is no dore, whiche maie charcke.

Gower. Con. A. b iv.

When excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a feaver, like fire in a strong-water shop burns him down to the ground. Or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal.—Grew. Cosme. Sacra, b. iii. c. 5.

Oh if this coale could be so charcked as to make iron melt out of the stone, as it maketh it in smiths forges to be wrought in the bars.—Fuller. Worthies. Shropshire.

But I will now describe to you the mystery of charking (whereof something was but touch'd in the process of extracting tar out of the pine) as I received it from a most industrious person.—Evelyn. On Forest Trees, c. 30.

CHA'RLATAN, n. }
CHARLATA'NICAL. } Fr. Charlatan; It. Ciarlatano, cerretano, from Ciarlare, to talk much, itself of uncertain etymology. See Menage, Dict. Etymologique, and Le Origini della Lingua Italiana.

"Fr. Charlatan, a mountebank, a cousening drugseller, a prattling quacksalver, a tatler, babler, foolish prater, or commender of trifles."

Ordinary quacks and charlatans are thoroughly sensible how necessary it is to support themselves by these collateral assistances, and therefore always lay their claim to some supernumerary accomplishments, which are wholly foreign to their profession.—Tatler, No. 240.

A cowardly soldier, and a charlatanical doctor, are the principal subjects of comedy.—Cowley.

CHARM, v. }
CHARM, n. }
CHA'RMED, adj. }
CHA'RMER. }
CHA'RMERESS. }
CHA'RMFUL. }
CHA'RMING, adj. }
CHA'RMINGLY. } "From the Fr. G. Charme; It. Ciarma, carmen; Fr. G. Charmer; It. Ciarmare, incantare; all from the Lat. Carmen, i. e. carmen magicum," (Skinner.) Of the Lat. Carmen, the etymology is unknown.

To charm is to act upon by charms or incantations.

To delight, to please in a high degree; to enchant, to enrapture; to enslave or enthral the affections,—with delight, with any subduing, overpowering influence,—so as to stun or palsy the faculties of the mind, to deprive them of action, of discrimination, or discernment.

Bote thorw charme hadde ich a chaunce and my cheif hele.

Piers Ploughman, p. 91.

There saw I—charmeresses,
Old witches, sorceresses,
That usen exorcisations.—Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

And with spellyng, and hir charmes
She toke Eson in both hir armes,
And made hym for to slepe fast,
And hym vpon hir herbes cast.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

He had as leue sande as holy saite, and be smered with vnholowed butter as anoynted wyth the holye chrisme, which he calleth charmed oyle.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 377.

Thou art conuersaunt with them that contrarye to theyr Christen profession support the execrable doctryne of that subtyle sothsayer & cursed charmer Balaam.

Bale. Image, pt. i.

And Gaal answered agayne, and sayde; see there come folcke doune by the myddle of the lande, and another companie come alonge by y^e charmars oeke.

Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 9.

And he at the voyce of Jesus, as thoughe it hadde bene one by some strong charmyng or enchauntemente elene chaunged into an other manner of man, ariseth vp, and all thynges leafte alone behynde him, euen as he was, he folowed the Lorde.—Udal. Luke, c. 5.

This word charmes, derived of carmina, serveth to shew the great reverence those wits are held in, and altogether not without ground, since both the oracles of Delphos and the Sybels prophesies were wholly delivered in verses; for that same exquisite observing of number and measure in the words, and that high-flying liberty of conceit proper to the poet, did seem to have some divine force in it.

Sydney. Defence of Poesy.

Apollo (angry at the sight) from top of Ilion cride,
Turne head, ye well route peeres of Troy, feed not the Grecians pride;
They are not charm'd against your points of steele, nor iron fram'd,
Nor fights the faire hair'd Thetis sonne, but sitts at fleet inflam'd.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Vain wisdom all, and false philosophie:
Yet with a pleasing sorcerie could charm
Pain for a while or anguish.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

—— Who knows not Circe,
The daughter of the Sun, whose charmed cup
Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
And downward fell into a groveling swine?—Id. Comus.

He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and sea,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.—Id. s. 8.

If you be gentle, and inclined
To let me taste the comfort of your wine:
Dissolue the charmes, that their forc't formes enchaine,
And shew me here, my honour'd friends, like men.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

So that if (as hath been proved) their not acknowledging of the true God, was grounded upon a perverse resolution, not to change any custom of their fathers, either in opinion or practice, though never so absurd; then was the ignorance, (or as St Paul might have called it, the idolatry) of those times impious, affected, not a natural blindness, but a pertinacious winking, not a simple deafness, but a resolved stubbornness not to hear the voice of the charmer.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 643.

Whilst this great vision labours in his thought,
Lo! the short prophesy & effect is brought:
In treacherous haste he's sent for to the king,
And with him bid his charmful lyre to bring.

Cowley. Davideis, b. i.

Per. This is a most malestick vision, and Harmonious charmingly; may I be bold
To thinke these spirits?—Shakes. Tempest, Act iv. sc. i.

Let any one read the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of St Matthew's gospel, and judge if they do not, as it were, set before his eyes such a lovely image and representation of the true vertue as Plato said could not but charm men with the strongest degree of love and admiration imaginable.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 10

Those who did not know him well, [Wm. III] and who imagined that a crown had charms, which human nature was not strong enough to resist, looked on all this as an affectation, and as a disguised threatening, which imported, that he would leave the nation to perish, unless his method of settling was followed.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1689.

Sweet is the spring and gay the summer hours,
When balmy odours breathe from painted flowers;
But neither sweet the spring, nor summer gay,
When she I love, my charmer is away.

Broome. Daphnis & Lycidas.

So the sweet Thracian, with his charming lyre,
Into rude nature virtue did inspire;
So he the savage herd to reason drew,
Yet scarce so sweet, so charmingly as you.

Verses in Praise of Dryden.

I should be glad to see our supplant negotiator in the act of putting his feather to the ear of the directory, to make it unclench the fist; and by his tickling, to charm that rich prize out of the iron gripe of robbery and ambition!

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

We see children perpetually running from place to place, to hunt out something new; they catch with great eagerness, and with little choice, at whatever comes before them; their attention is engaged by every thing, because every thing has, in this stage of life, the charm of novelty to recommend it.—Id. Of the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. i. s. 1.

—— She through all the herd
Proceeding, each anointed with a charm
Of other pow'rs, and at the wholesome touch
All shed the swinish bristles by the drug,
Dread Circe's former magic gift, produc'd.

Cowper. Odyssey, b. x.

CHA'RNEL, adj. } From the Lat. Caro, carnis, flesh.
CHA'RNEL, n. }

"Fr. Charnier,—a place wherein dead bodies are laid or their bones kept," (Cotgrave.)

Whose fugemēt semeth me somewhat like, as though mē should gesse y^e bewty of one longe before departed, by her scalpe taken out of the charnell house.

Sir T. More. Works, p. 57.

Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp
Oft seen in charnel vaults, and sepulchres,
Ling'ring and sitting by the new made grave,
As loth to leave the body that it lov'd.—Milton. Comus.

When Antiochus was marching on furiously to turn Jerusalem into a charnel, a noisome disease did intercept his progress.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Now from yon black and funeral yew,
That bathes the charnel-house with dew
Methinks I heare a voice begin.

Parnell. A Night Piece on Death.

Let us with silent footsteps go
To charnels and the house of woe,
To gothic churches, vaults and tombs,
Where each sad night some virgin comes,
With throbbing breast and faded cheek,
Her prostrate bridegroom's urn to seek.

Dr. Burton. Ode to Fancy.

I see thee now, delusive as thou art,
Without one symbol to alarm the heart.
Not ev'n upon thy flowing vest is shown
An emblematic dart, or charnel-bone.

Hart. The Vision of Death.

CHART. } Fr. Chartre; Lat. Charta;
CHA'RTER, v. } Gr. Χαρτης, from Χαρασσειν,
CHA'RTER, n. } sculpere, inscribere, (Eustathius and Martinius.) And Χαρτης, id quod inscalpitur sive inscribitur; that which is written upon.

Maps or geographical delineations or descriptions are called charts. See CARD or CARTS.

A charter is that, on which any thing is written; more especially, by which any rights or privileges are affirmed or assured; by which any thing is given or granted, covenanted or agreed upon.

The King made ek is chartre to the court of Rome,
To become the Pope's man and homage him do

R. Gloucester, p. 506.

His other soune William Inglond assigned he,
And ase that of him cam with chartre mad he fre.

R. Brunne, p. 83.

—— And seide to here a chartre
That Gyle hath gyve to falsnesse.—Piers Ploughman, p. 27.

A mery child he was, so God me save.
Wel coud he leten blod and clippe, and shave
And make a chartre of lond, and aquitance.

Chaucer. The Millers Tale, v. 3227.

With that the kynge right in his place
Anon foorthe in that freshe hete,
An erledome, whiche than of eschete
Was late falle into his honde,
Unto this knight, with rent and londe,
Hath youe, and with his chartre seased.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Some shewed his safe conduct, some shewed his chart.

Skelton. The Crown of Laurell.

For in his books of the feats of war, and how battles should be ordered, he was not onely contented to see them drawn and set out in charts and maps, but would also put them in execution, in the places themselves as they were set out.

North. Plutarch, p. 307.

But in the first year of this King's reign, [William the Conqueror,] he granted to the city of London their first charter and liberties in as large form as they enjoyed them in the time of King Edward the Confessor, which he granted at the suit of William, a Norman Bishop of London; in grateful remembrance whereof the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, upon the solemn days of their resort to Pauls, do still use to walk to the grave stone where this Bishop lies interred.—Baker. William I. an. 1079.

Turne him to any cause or pollicy,
The Gordian knot of it he will vnloose,
Familiar as his garter: that when he speakes,
The ayre, a charter'd libertine, is still

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 1.

Do we not see, among ourselves, the owner use his cattle as he pleases, employ them as he thinks fit, keep what he will alive, kill what he will, and in what manner he will; and all this without any injury to them, only by virtue of a grant and charter from both his and their maker?

South, vol viii. Ser. 11.

The foregoing account of these islands, in the order in which we explore them, not being particular enough either as to situation or description, it may not be improper now to give a more accurate view of them, which, with the annexed chart, will convey to the reader a better idea of the whole groupe.—Cook. Voyages, vol. iv. b. iii. c. 7.

The charters, which we call by distinction great, are publick instruments of this nature, (formal recognitions, by the sovereign power, of an original right in the subject, I mean in the charters of King John and King Henry the Third. The things secured by these instruments may, without any deceitful ambiguity, be very fitly called the chartered rights of men.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

CHA'RY. } From the Eng. to care, (q.d.)
CHA'RILY. } accuratus, (Skinner.)
CHA'RINESS. } Careful, cautious, wary, circumspect.

Being al to ware, to wise, and to charely circumspecte.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

Didst not, O Pallas, thou to me, thy sier, thus promise make
That charely thou woldst thy self to cruel warre betake?

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xi.

O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I not for myself, but for thee will;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary,
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.

Shakespeare, Son. 22.

Mis. Ford. Nay I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not sully the charinesse of our honesty.

Id. Merry Wives, Act ii. sc. 1.

Earthly greatnesse is a nice thing, and requires so much charinesse in the managing, as the contentment of it cannot requite.—Bp. Hall. Of Contentation.

CHASE, v. See ENCHASE.

CHASE, v. } Fr. Chasser; It. Cacciare;
CHASE, n. } Sp. Cazar. Menage thinks
CHA'SABLE. } from the Lat. Captare, to CHA'SER. } catch at.

To pursue, to follow, to hunt. Chase, the noun, is not only applied to—

The pursuit, but to that which is pursued; and to the place in which it is preserved, and hunted or pursued.

So gret treson worth among hem, that aftur the schal come,
As the Cornwaile's bor [boar] hem schal chacie some.

R. Gloucester, p. 134.

In the contre of Canterbury mest plente of syche ys.
And mest chase a boute Salesburi of wylde bestes ywys.

Id. p. 6.

We be comen alle of kynde of Germonie,
That chaced has the Bretons here of ther kythe.

R. Brunne, p. 2.

But charite and chastite, ben chased out clene.

Piers Ploughman. Crede.

O Sathan envious, sin thilke day
That thou were chased from our heritage,
Wel knowest thou to women the olde way.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4786.

And shortly forth this tale for to chace.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8269.

From thennes forth the Jewes han conspired
This Innocent out of this world to chace.

Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,496.

Like to the chased wilde bore
The houndes whan he feleth sore
To throwe, and goth forth his wey.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And every man went on his side
Hym to pursewe, and I to ride
Began to chase, and sooth to saie
Within a while out of my waie
I rode. Id. Ib. b. v.

To make his huntyng, and his chace,
Where him best thought in every place
To find game in his waie. Id. Ib. b. i.

With arowes brode vnder the side,
And bow in honde, of whiche she slough
And toke, all that hir lyst enough
Of beastes, whiche ben chaceable. Id. Ib. b. v.

The chased dere hath soile,
To coole him in his heate;
The asse after his wery toil
In stable is vp set.

Vncertaine Auctore. That al Things, &c.

If thou, fighting 'gainst heaven's enemies,
Shalt flie away, abandoning the cross,
The ensign of thy holy general,
With shame thou justly shalt be rob'd of it,
Chas'd from our company, and cut away,
As an infectious, putrefied limb.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act v. sc. 1.

—— Why (Peleus sonne Pursue't thou being a man) a god? thy rage hath never done.
Acknowledge not thine eyes my state? esteems thy minde no more
Thy honour in the chace of Troy, but puts my chace before
Their utter conquest?—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Adam observ'd and with his eye the chase
Pursuing, not unmov'd to Eve thus spake.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

—— Then beginne
A stop i' th' chaser; a retyre: anon
A rowt, confusion thicke.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 3.

Yet had she oft been chas'd with horns and hounds,
And Scythian shafts; and many winged wounds
Aim'd at her heart, was often fore'd to fly,
And doom'd to death, though fated not to die.
Dryden. Hind & Panther.

The glare did not continue long before it rained again, and kept us from sight of each other but if they had seen and chased us we were resolved to run our bark and canoes ashore, and take ourselves to the mountains.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. i. c. 1.

——— Like some poor exil'd wretch,
The frighted chase leaves her late dear abodes,
Oer plains remote she stretches far away,
Ah! never to return! Somervile. The Chase.

I must have leave to be of opinion, that the agitation of that exercise (hunting), with the example and number of the chasers, not a little contribute to resist those checks, which compassion would naturally suggest in behalf of the animal pursued.—Pope. Guardian, No. 61.

Meantime the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And taking chace-guns through our sterns they send:
Close by, their fire-ships, like jackalls, appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

When we were got about two or three miles from the shore, we perceived some of the natives following us in a canoa with a sail; we did not, however, think it worth while to wait for her, and though she had passed the reef, she soon after gave over the chace.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 7.

CHASM, s. Gr. Χασμα, from Χαιν-ω, hiscore, to gape, to open.

Desire had now the goal in sight:
It was a tower of monstrous height,
Where on the summit fortune stands,
A crown and sceptre in her hands;
Beneath, a chasm, deep as hell,
Where many a bold adventurer fell.
Swift. Desire & Possession.

As the memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and fills up the chasms of thought with ideas of what is past, we have other faculties that agitate and employ her upon what is to come. These are the passions of hope and fear.
Spectator, No. 471.

Between the lowest positive existence and nothing, wherever we suppose positive existence to cease, is another chasm infinitely deep, where there is room again for endless orders of subordinate nature, continued for ever and for ever, and yet infinitely superior to non-existence.
Johnson. Review of a Free Enquiry.

CHASTE, adj.
CHA'STEN.
CHA'STENER.
CHA'STENING, s.
CHA'STELY.
CHA'STENESS.
CHA'STITY.
CHASTI'SER.
CHASTI'SEMENT.
CHASTI'SER.
CHASTI'SING, s.

Fr. Chaste; It. and Sp. Casto; Lat. Castus. Vossius thinks from Καζω, which signifies Κοσμεω, ornare, decorare; and thus, Castus will be quasi Κασνος, i.e. ornatus, decorus, adorned, decorated. As now applied it is—

Pure, uncorrupt, uncontaminated; not spotted, blemished, tarnished, or stained; by any action, passion, or affection, that can pollute either mind or body. Applied to style in composition—

Pure, free from false ornament, from bad taste, from licentiousness.

To chasten—to purify, to free from impurity, to free from spot or blemish, to remove a fault, to correct.

To chastise—to chasten, to purify, to amend, to correct, to castigate, (&c.) by punishment, and thus—to punish.

Cheste in Piers Plouhman, see CHEST.

The kyng it was herd, and chastised his meyne,
& other afterward left of ther nycete.—R. Brunne, p. 123.

Be as chast as a chyld, that noght chit ne fyghteth
Piers Plouhman, p. 21.

What cheste & mescheaunce, to children of Israel
Fyl on hem that free were, thorwe two false preestes.
Id. Ib. p. 6.

I loue ghou bi the loue of God for I haue spousid ghou to oon housbonde to gheldc a chaast virgyn to Christ.
Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 11.

I am gelous ouer you with godly gelousy. For I coupled you to one man, to make you a chaste virgin to Christ.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And while he disputide of rightwisenesse and chastite, and of doom to comynge, Felix was maad tremblynge.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 24.

The Lord chastiseth him that he loueth, he beetith euery sone that he receyueth, abide ghe, stille in chastysyng, God profrith hym to ghou as to sones.—Id. Hebrewis, c. 11.

It is to sayn in English, Heven's lilie,
For pure chastenesse of virginitee.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,535.

For he fro vices wold him ay chastise
Discretely, as by word, and not by dede.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 13,123.

And they that han will to do wickednesse, restreinen hir wicked purpos, when they sen the punishing and the chastising of the trespassours.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

The kynge bethought himselfe tho,
Howe he his brother mote chastie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

So that with vaine honour deceiued
Thou haste the reuerence weiued
From hym, which is the kynge aboue,
That thou for drede ne for loue
Wolt nothynge knowen of thy God,
Whiche nowe for the hath made a rod,
Thy vain glorie, and thy fame,
With great perues to chastie. Id. Ib. b. i.

He that nowe beholdeth another mannes wife chastely, like as he looketh vpon his sister, or daughter, he hath well cast out his noysome eye, and taken for it the eye of a doue, a cleane and a single eye.—Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

Wherefore if they dedicate them selues vnto Christ, out of faith to liue purely, and chastly, then let them so remayne wythout any fable, and strongly, and stedfastly to abyde the reward of virginitie.—Barnes. Works, p. 318.

And sooth it is, she liude
in wiuely bond so well,
As she from Colatinus wife of chastice bore the bell.—Turbervile. To his Love, &c.

But maisters, how was God mercifull to Pharoa, by softnesse and by sufferaunce, whome hee chastened so sore with ten plagues, and with such plagues as Moyses maruey'led of.
Barnes. Works, p. 281.

A solempe censor, and chastner
of euery younge man's sinne.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetry.

Beholde happie is the man, whom God punisheth: therefore despice not thou the chastenings of the Almighty.
Bible, 1551. Job, c. 5.

My Ratcliff, when thy retchlesse youth offends,
Receue thy scourge by others chastisement,
For such calling, when it workes none amendes,
Then plages are sent without aduertisement.
Surrey. Exhortation to learne by others Trouble.

Oh! diverse are the chastenings of sinne
In meate, in drinke, in breathe, that man doth blowe,
In slepe, and watch in fretynge styl within.
That neuer suffer rest unto the myndc
Fulde wythe offence. Wyat, Psalm 32.

Her heart was that strange bush where sacred fire
Religion, did not consume, but inspire
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, she turn'd to pray.
Donne, Elegie 11 Death.

Till (by thy promise grown secure)
That hope was to assurance brought,
My faith was such, so chastely pure,
I doubted not. Cotton. A Valediction.

The infant world great freedome d'd allow,
To these delights which people did the ground,
At least strict lawes did furnish none as now,
For any fault that did not wedlock wound,
And chastenesse then had beene a foolish vow,
When parents praise a populous ofspring crown'd
Stirling. Doomes day. The Ninth Houre.

——— Must she
Who hath preserved her spotless chastity
From all solicitation, now at last
By agues and diseases be embrac'd?
Forbid it holy Dian.—Carew. Upon the Sickness of E. S.

He chastiseth and corrects, as him seems best, in his deep, unsearchable, and secret judgment, and all for our good.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 329.

Then the nine tribunes, by setting down a decree between them, made an end of the strife: and pronounced by authority of their colledge, that they would assist C. Valerius the Cos. to award any penaltie, restreint, or chastisement, upon them that refused to be enrolled for warfare.
Holland. Livie, p. 173.

[There were] other imitators of his [Hercules] vertue, as Dio, Timolion, Aratus, Harmodius, Aristogiton, with other such honourable princes bearing titles of chastisers, and correctors of tyrants.—Prynne. Sovereigne Power, pt. iii. p. 22.

It is well known by the learned, that there was a temple upon Mount Ætna dedicated to Vulcan, which was guarded by dogs of so exquisite a smell, say the historians, that they could discern whether the persons who came thither were chaste or otherwise. These dogs were given to Vulcan by his sister Diana, the goddess of hunting and of chastity, having bred them out of some of her hounds, in which she had observed this natural instinct and sagacity.
Spectator, No. 579.

He [Dr. Sacheverel] resolved to force himself into popularity and preferment, by the most petulant railings at dissenters, and low churchmen, in several sermons and libels, wrote without either chasteness of style, or liveliness of expression: all was one unpractised strain of indecent and scurrilous language.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1709.

He useth all means to prevent their falling into sin, and to keep them steadfast to their duty, he affords them all the means of grace and assists them in the use thereof. if notwithstanding they offend against his laws, he chastiseth them one way or other, not for his own pleasure, but for their profit, that they may partake of his holiness.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 68.

If their enemies are afflicted, then God's judgments argue his hatred: but if themselves are brought low, judgments then are only chastisements, or at the most casual contingents.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 11.

I go farther: it must keep alive some part of that fire of jealousy eternally and chastely burning, or it cannot be the British constitution.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

It was then, that some gallant spirits, struck with a generous indignation at the tyranny of these miscreants, blessed solemnly by the bishop, and followed by the praises and vows of the people, sallied forth to vindicate the chastity of women, and to redress the wrongs of travellers and peaceable men.—Id. Abridgement of English History.

Oh! gently on thy suppliant's head,
Dread goddess, lay thy chastening hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrours clad,
Nor circled with the vengeful band,
As by the impious thou art seen.—Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

A certain friend of mine lately chastised his son, in my presence, for being somewhat too expensive in the article of dogs and horses.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. ix. Let. 9.

Upon our complaint to one of them, of a theft that had been committed on board the ship by a man that came with him, he gave him several blows and kicks, which the other received as the chastisement of authority, against which no resistance was to be made, and which he had no right to resent.—Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. b. ii. c. 10.

If the enemy you have to deal with should appear, as France now appears, under the very name and title of the deliverer of the poor, and the chastiser of the rich, the former class would readily become, not an indifferent spectator of the war, but would be ready to enlist in the faction of the enemy.—Burke. Obser. on the Conduct of the Minority.

CHAT, v.
CHAT, n.
CHA'TTY.
CHA'TTER, v.
CHA'TTER, s.
CHA'TTERER.
CHA'TTERING, s.

"Fr. Caqueter, to tattle, babble, prattle, prate, use many words," (Cotgrave.) Dut. Kouten, fabulari, nugari, sermocinari, serere sermones, miscere verba. The Dut. Citteren, tremere; Eng. Chytter, and the Ger. Zittern, to chatter, are all, says Skinner, formed from the sound, which those who shiver make with their teeth. To chatter, as birds do, he considers also from the sound; probably from the resemblance of their noise, to that made by the teeth.

Chat, however, seems formed from the past part. Chawed, chaw'd, chaut, chat: we still use jaw, i. e. chaw, for talk, in vulgar language: Hold your jaw. Chatter is the dim. of chat.

Chat is small talk, easy, careless prattle. Chatty, too familiar to be common in writing.

And yf he chide other chateres, hym chyvyth the worse.
Piers Ploukman, p. 263.

The eridom of envye, and yre he hym graunteth
Wt the castell of thefte, and chatering out of reson.
Id. Ib. p. 28.

They mow wel chateren, as don thise fayes.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,865.

But whan the wodde is woxen grene,
And comen is the sommer tide,
Then fleeth she forth, and ginneth to chide,
And chatereth out in her langage,
What false hede is in mariage.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

But yet whan he hire tonge reste,
A litell part thereof he leste:
But she withall no worde maie sowne
But chatre, as a byrde fargowne. Id. Ib.

Birds of the aire, perceiuing their young ones taken from their neast, chitter for a while in trees thereabout, and straight after they flye abroade and make no more adoe.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, p. 76.

But this sophism haue I writtē to stop the chatteryngc mouthes of the sophisters and to cast them a bone to gnaw vpon.—Frith. Works, p. 27.

They should vnderstand then, that when the men called thē mery conceited, they ment they were bablers and chatterers.—Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 16

He pratlyng thus, a frende of mine,
one Fuscus Aristie,
Met me, who knew this chatting syr
almoste as well as I. Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 9.

In fine when Argus had his cunning showde,
And ech to other chatted had a space,
Of this and that as was befelne abrode,
Mercurius tooke his pipe from out his case
And thereon play'd hee so passing well,
As most of Argus eies to slumber fell.
Turbervile. Agaynst the lelous Heads, &c.

And sister-like they single oft,
And chat of manye things.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 11.

The shepherds on the lawn,
Or e'er the point of dawn,
Sat simply chatting in a rustic row.
Milton. On the Nativity.

But if thee lust to holden chat
With seeley shepheardes swayne,
Come downe, and learne the little what,
That Thomalin can sayne.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. July.

Yea, blessed be the Lord, who hath added this unto the load of his other mercies to his unworthie servant, that the same tongue, which was called, not long since, to chatter out our publike mournings, in the solemne fast of this place, is now imployed in a song of praise.
Bp. Hall. Sermons, Ps. lxviii. 19, 20.

He staid and trembled, and his teeth did chatter in his head.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x. p. 139.

The ape and monkey such a chattering keep
With their thin lips, which they so well express'd
As they would say, we hope to be releas'd.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

They who by riches nought save pleasure sought,
And griev'd for nothing but when forc'd to dye,
To heaven (poore soules) as hardly can be brought,
As cable-ropes come through a needle's eye.
O what huge hosts even more than can be thought,
With shaking joints and chattering teeth I spie.
Sterling. Domes-day. The seventh Houre.

By thoughts, I meane those talkings of our middes with the things wee know, as the Scripture calls it (Prov. vi. 22,) those same parleys, enterviews, chattings, the mindo hath with the things wee feare, with the things wee love.
Goodwin. The Vanitie of Thoughts.

The mimic ape began his chatter,
How evil tongues his life bespatter:
Much of the censuring world complain'd,
Who said, his gravity was feigned.
Swift. The Beast's Confession to the Priest.

Another grins and leaps about,
And keeps a merry world of rout,
And talks impertinently free,
And twenty talk the same as he:
Chattering, idle, airy, kind:
These take the monkey's turn of mind.
Parnell. Bacchus.

And still returning to the neat,
In easy mirth we chatted o'er
The trifles of the day before.
Whitehead. Variety. A Tale for Married People.

She found as on a spray she sat
The little friends were deep in chat;
That virtue was their favourite theme,
And toil and probity their scheme.—Cotton, Fab. I.

——— This libel says
Some birds there are, who, prone to noise,
Are hir'd to silence Wisdom's voice,
And, skill'd to chatter out the hour,
Rise by their emptiness to pow'r. E. Moore, Fab. I.

A very beautiful bird was shot in the woods at Norton Sound, which, I am told, is sometimes found in England, and known by the name of Chatterer.
Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. iv. c. 11.

CHA'TELAINE. } Fr. Chastelet, a little
CHA'TELET, n. } castle, fort, or hold.
Chastellanie,—the tenure or honour of a castleship, (Cotgrave.)

Therle of Salisbury was taken prisoner with the Erle of Suffolke, before Lyle in Flanders, as ye haue harde before, and was in prison as then in the chatelet of Parys.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 76.

Then therle of Mountfort entred into the castell with certayne nombre, and received the feaultie of all the men of that chatelayne.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c 65.

The town and chatellanies of this barrier always maintained their garrisons when they were in the hands of France.—Swift. On the Barrier Treaty.

CHATTELS. Fr. Catcud; Dut. Chattels, bona mobilia, and Cattle, pecus, are called by the same name, Kateylen, kateelen. See CATTLE. Spelman says—

All goods movable or immovable. See the quotation from Blackstone.

Ich gou myd me at holde, and in grete richesse gou do
Of gyftes, and of chatews, and of londes al so.
R. Gloucester, p. 113.

The saide officer or officers shall haue further power and authoritie for the default of payment, or for disobedience in this behalfe (if neede be) to set hands and arrest as well the bodie and bodies, as the goods and chattels of such offender and offenders, & transgressers, in euery place and places not franchised.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p 271.

——— He 'ad got a hurt,
O' th' inside, of a deadlier sort,
By Cupid made, who took his stand
Upon a widow's jointure land,
(For he, in all his am'rous battles,
No 'dvantage finds like goods and chattles)
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

Chattels, Sir Edward Coke says, is a French word, signifying goods. The appellation is in truth derived from the technical Latin, catalla; which primarily signified only beasts of husbandry, or (as we still call them) cattle, but in its secondary sense was applied to all moveables in general.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 24.

CHAW, or CHEW, v. CHAW, or CHEW, n. CHEWING, n. } A.S. Ceowan, ceowian, mandere, mandicare; Dut. Kauwen; Ger. Kauwen, (which Wachter thinks is from Ke-ew, scindere.) Chaw, the noun, is now written jaw.

To chaw, or chew, is to compress, to crush, to grind with the jaws.

But first he cheweth grein and licorise,
To smellen sote.—Chaucer. Miller's Tale, v. 3690.

Thus thoughtful as I lay, I sawe my withered skin,
How it doth shew my dented chewes the flesh was worn so thyn,
And eke my totheless chaps, the gates of my right way,
That opes and shuttes as I do speake, doe thus vnto me say.
Surrey. How no Age is content with his owne Estate, &c.

The trampling steed with gold and purple trapt,
Chawing the foamie bit, there fiercely stood.
Id. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

When he stode musynge he would byte and chaw basely his nether lippe, as who sayd, that hys fyerce nature in his cruell bodye alwaies chafed, sturred and was euer vnquiete.
Hall. Rich. III. an. 3.

This with sharpe teeth the bramble leaves doth lop,
And chew the tender prickles in her cud.
Spenser. Virgil's Gnat, s. 11.

And they who write, because all write, have still
Th' excuse for writing, and for writing ill.
But he is worst, who (beggarly) doth chaw
Other wit's fruit. Donne, Sat. 2.

Like to the cur with anger well-near wood,
Who makes his kennell in the ox's stall,
And snarleth when he seeth him take his food,
And yet his chaps can chew no hay at all.
Drayton, Ecl. 7.

——— They fondly thinking to allay
Thir appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. x.

The chewing of the quickest and most biting radishes, keepeth them awake that are given to overmuch drowsinesse, and enclined to the lethargie
Holland. Plinie, b xx. c. 4.

Hee called for a mirror, and commanded the haire of his head to bee combed and trimmed; his chawes also readie for weakenesse to hang or fall, to be composed and set straight.—Id. Suetonius, p. 84.

They use to seeth or stew it betweene two platters with salt and grease, wherewith they make a liniment or ointment to take down the swelling of the chawes and the nape of the necke.—Id. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 2.

I wyl put an hoke in thy chawes, and hange al the fyshe in thy waters vpon thy scales.—Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 29.

CHA'WCERS. In MS. version, preserved in the library of Bennet College, Calceamentorum, (Mark i. 7,) is rendered—of his Chawcers.

And he prechyde sayande, a stalworther thane I schal come eftar me, of whom I am not worthi downfallande or knelande to louse the thwonge of his chawcers.
Lewis. English Translations of the Bible.

CHAWME. Chawmes appears to be merely chasms. See CHASM.

Sherwood gives Chawne the verb, Chawne the noun, and Chawned the verb adjectived. Cotgrave, in v. Tender, has "full of choanes." Chawn is perhaps from the A. S. Geonan, hiare, oscitare, to yawn, to gape.

There be lands also that put forth after another manner, and all at once show on a sodaine in some sea: as if nature cryed quittance with herselfe, and made even, paying, one for another; namely, by giving againe that in one place, which those chaumes and gaping gulfes took away in another.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 86.

——— Oh, thou all bearing earth,
Which men do gape for, till thou cramm'st their mouths,
And choak'st their throats with dust: O chawne thy breast,
And let me sink into thee.—Ant. & Mell. Anc. Dr. ii. p 144.

CHEAP, v. CHEAP, n. CHEAP, adj. CHE'APEN, v. CHE'APENER. CHE'APLY. CHE'APNESS. } A.S. Cyppan, to traffick, bargain, buy, or sell; Dut. Koopen; Ger. Kauffen. See CHAPMAN.

"Good-cheap or bad-cheap; i. e. well or ill-bargained, bought or sold; such were formerly the modes of expression. The modern fashion uses the word only for good-cheap; and therefore omits the epithet good as unnecessary," (Tooke.) And thus—

To cheap or cheapen, is to buy or bargain (subaud.) well; to buy at a low price; at a lower price than first asked; to lower the price or value, to bid or offer a lower price than asked.

Cheaping: the place for buying and selling: the market or market place.

By that yt neihed harvest. and newe corne com to chipynge.
Piers Ploughman, p. 145.

And fro thenne whanne britheren hadden herd thei camen to us to the cheping of Appius, and to the three tauernys.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 28

And if that she be foule, thou sayst, that she
Coveteth every man that she may see;
For as a spaniel, she wol on him lepe,
Til she may finden some men hire to chepe.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5850.

Gret prees at market maketh dere ware,
And to gret chepe is holden at litel prise;
This knoweth every woman that is wise.—Id. Ib. v. 6105.

But man can loke before they leape,
And be at price for euery ware,
And penniworths cast to bye good cheape;
And in eche thing have eye and care.
Incertaine Auctors. An old Lover to a young Gentlewoman.

He, that is so respectlesse in his courses,
Oft sells his reputation, at cheape market.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 1

——— If there be love
Tis shew'd ye by so dark a light, to bear out
The bracks and old stains in it, that ye may purchase
French velvet better cheap.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act ii. sc. 3.

——— Thus saying rose
The monarch, and prevented all reply,
Prudent, least from his resolution rais'd
Others among the chief might offer now
(Certain to be refus'd) what erst they fear'd;
And so refus'd might in opinion stand
His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
Which he through hazard huge must earn.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Bold was the wretch that cheapen'd thee;
Since Magus, none so bold as he:
Thou'rt so divine a thing, that thee to buy
Is to be counted simony. Cowley. Love & Life.

——— Did we not know
Thy mighty fate, and worth that makes it so,
We should not cheaply that dear blood expose,
Which we to mingle with our own had chose.
Id. The Davideis, b. iii.

And not only this, but most silk countries are stockt with great multitudes of poor people, who work cheap and live meanly on a little rice; which if not very cheap as it commonly is here, the poor people are not able to maintain themselves.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

The cause of this great cheapness of corn seems to be not so much a cause (q. course) of plentiful and seasonable years, as the general peace that has been in Europe since the year 59, or 60; by which so many men and so much land have turned to husbandry, that were before employ'd in wars, or lay wasted by them in all the frontier provinces.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 6.

Harley, the nation's great support,
Returning home one day from court,
(His mind with public cares possess'd,
All Europe's business in his breast)
Observ'd a parson near Whitehall
Cheapening old authors on a stall.
Swift. Horace, b. i. Ep. 7.

She that has once demanded a settlement has allowed the importance of fortune, and when she cannot show pecuniary merit, why should she think her cheapener obliged to purchase!—Rambler, No. 75.

Now they devote their treasure to the seas:
Unload their shatter'd bark, though richly fraught
And think the hopes of life are cheaply bought
With gems and gold, but oh, the storm so high!
Nor gems nor gold the hopes of life can buy.
Young. Last Day, b. ii.

Whatever is found to gratify the publick, will be multiplied by the emulation of venders beyond necessity or use. This plenty, indeed, produces cheapness, but cheapness always ends in negligence and deprivation.—Idler, No. 7.

CHEAT, v.
CHEAT, n.
CHE'ATABLENESS.
CHE'ATER.

Escheats, (qv.) were a great source of power and revenue to our early kings; and escheatours, from the nature of their office, were exposed to many strong temptations; various acts of Parliament were passed to protect the people from their frauds and extortions; grievous complaints, it appears, having been made to the King of them and "their evill behaviour;"—many of them were said to "be insufficient and of light conscience, and to set their office to farm unto oppressors of the people." (See Rastall, Collection of Statutes—Eschetors.) Mr. Steevens, in a note upon Henry IV. (after quoting from Mihil Mumchance, and from Lord Coke's Charge at Norwich, 1607, certain passages to the purpose) observes, "hence perhaps the derivation of the verb, to cheat, which I do not recollect to have met with amongst our most ancient writers." See note 4, on 2 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

To cheat is to defraud; to effect or obtain by out-witting, deceiving, deluding, or imposing upon.

She beares the purse too: she is a region in Guiana, all gold, and bountie: I will be cheaters to them both, and they shall be exchequers to mee.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. sc. 3.

Falst. Hee's no swaggerer (hostesse:) a tame cheater he.
Id. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

But since it is not so much worth our labour to know how deepe the pit is, into which we are fallen, as how to come out of it, heare rather (I beseech you) for a conclusion, how wee may avoid the danger of the deceit of heart: even just so as wee would prevent the nimble feats of some cheating Jugler; search him, watch him, trust him not.
Bp. Hall. The great Impostor.

——— Thus I hurl
My dazzling spells into the spungy air,
Of pow'r to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
And give it false presentments.—Milton. Comus.

And when himself [the devil] could not keep his kingdom any longer, as he had done, to be immediately worshipped, then he sets up the Pope, (the greatest cheat that ever was in the world) a son of his own raising, after whom the whole world ran a wondering.—Goodman. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 41.

The calmest style I can speak in, is, that it is the believing of a lie, and so not faith, but folly, an easy cheatableness of heart, and not confidence, but presumption.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 554.

Sallust therefore, who was well acquainted with them both, and with many such like gentlemen of his time, says, "that it is the nature of ambition, to make men liars and cheaters; to hide the truth in their breasts, and show, like jugglers, nothing in their mouths."—Cowley. On Liberty.

No specious swell, no frothy pomp of words,
Fell on the cheated ear; no study'd maze
Of declamation, to perplex the right,
He darkning threw around.
Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

The pretence of public good, is a cheat that will ever pass in the world;—though so often abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it any longer.
Sir W. Temple. Of the Cure of the Gout.

Unhappily the same care was not taken to prevent frauds, as had been taken before, so that the Indians, finding that they could cheat with impunity, grew insolent again, and proceeded to take great liberties.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. ii. c. 3.

When publick villainy; too strong for justice,
Shews his bold front, the harbinger of ruin,
Can brave Leontius call for airy wonders,
Which cheats interpret, and which fools regard.
Johnson, Irene, Act i. sc. 1.

CHECK, v.
CHECK, n.
CHE'QUER, v.
CHE'QUER-CHAMBER.
CHE'QUER-MEN.
CHE'QUER-WISE.

Chess seems to have been immemorially known in Hindustan, by the name of Chaturanga, that is, the four angas or members of an army, (sc. elephants, horses, chariots, and foot soldiers.) Chaturanga was corrupted by the old Persians into Chatrang: the Arabs, who had neither the initial nor the final letter of that word, further altered it into Shatranj, which was adopted into the modern Persian, and at length into the dialects of India, and by successive changes has been transformed into exedrez, shacchi, echecs, chess, and by a whimsical concurrence of circumstances, has given birth to the English word Check, and even a name to the Exchequer of Great Britain. See Sir William Jones on the Indian Game of Chess.

To check or chequer is, consequentially, to form into parts or divisions of different colours, like those of a chess board; and thus literally and metaphorically—

To variegate, to diversify, to intermix.

The court of Chequer or Exchequer (scaccharium) is so called,—"from the chequed cloth resembling a chess board, which covers the table there; and on which, when certain of the King's accounts are made up, the sums are marked and scored with counters," (Blackstone, b. iii. c. 4.)

To check an account may be deduced immediately from the King's Court of Chequer or Exchequer, "the primary and original business of which is to call the King's debtors to account." And thus—

To check an account, is to examine it, to compare it with vouchers or documents.

Somme wyth lance some wyth suerd, wythoute vylenye
Wyth pleyynge at tables, other atte chekere.
R. Gloucester, p. 192.

——— Reson. thou shalt nat ryden hennes
Bote be my chef chaunceler. in chekyr. and in parlement.
Piers Ploukman, p. 73.

The wealthy spring yet never bore
That sweet, nor dainty flower,
That damask'd not the chequer'd floor
Of Cynthia's summer bower.
Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

Clear had the day been from the dawn,
All checquer'd was the sky,
Thin clouds like scarfs of cobweb lawn,
Veil'd Heaven's most gracious eye.—Id. Nymphal 6.

It seems that families sometimes are checquered as in brains, so in bulk, that no certainty can be concluded from such alterations.—Fuller. Worthies. Rutlandshire.

It was resolved by all the Judges in the Chequer-chamber, that the possession of the Crown takes away all defects; yet for honour's sake all records of his attainder were taken off the file.—Baker. Hen. VII. an. 1485.

This lord [Dorset] was of excellent parts, and in his place exceeding industrious; and I have heard many chequer-men say, there never was a better treasurer, both for the King's profit, and the good of the subject.—Id. K. James, an. 1608.

Of old time our countrie houses in steed of glasse did vse much lattise and that made either of wicker or fine rifts of oke in checkerwise.—Harrison. Descr. of England, b. ii. c. 12.

More like a prince than a prelate, attended with so many officers and servants, as is almost incredible, were not his [Wolsey's] check-roll yet to be seen.—Speed, b. ix. c. 21.

In our present condition, which is a middle state, our minds are, as it were, chequered with truth and falsehood; and as our faculties are narrow and our views imperfect, it is impossible but our curiosity must meet with many repulses.—Spectator, No. 237.

Why to the purpose—that you may not strike me upon the sore places; and that as he beat me last night cross-ways, so you would please to beat me long-ways, to make clean work on't, that at last my skin may look like chequer-work.—Dryden. Amphitryon, Act iii. sc. 1.

My friend took care to put me in mind of the pig the old King gave me in the morning; for which I now gave a chequed shirt and a piece of red cloth.
Cook. Voyages, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 2.

Of the finer sort [of cloth] they have some that is striped and chequered, and of other patterns differently coloured.
Id. Ib. vol. v. b. ii. c. 11.

Oft in the lone church yard at night I've seen,
By glimpse of moonshine chequering thro' the trees,
The school boy, with his satchel in his hand,
Whistling aloud to bear his courage up.—Blair. Grave.

CHECK, v.
CHECK, n.
CHE'CKFUL.
CHE'CKLESS.
CHECK-MATE, v.
CHECK-MATE, n.

See To CHECK, ante.

To check the course, career, or progress of any thing, is, to stop, repress, moderate, restrain it; as of a horse—by the bit; of our own passions—by self-command, self-government; of the passions of others—by reproof, by rebuke. And hence—

To repress, to rebuke.

This application seems derived from that move at the game of chess, by which the King is put in check. See the first quotations from Chaucer and Strype.

In Falconry, when the hawk stops his flight in pursuit of game to follow other prey, he is said—to check.

Right in alle this fare wex an euel chek.—R. Brunne, p. 225.

Therewith fortune said, checke here
And mate in the mid point of the checkere
With a paune errant, alas
Ful craftier to play she was
Than Athalus that made the game
First to the chesse, so was his name.—Chaucer. Dreame.

Shall no husband saine to me checkemate
For either they been full of ielousie
Or maisterfull, or louen noueine.—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

It was not meet, comely, nor fitting, that in our prayers we should make a God or Saviour of any saint in heaven, no not of our blessed Lady, neither was it meet to make them check with our Saviour Christ, much less to make them check-mate.—Strype. Mem. an. 1535. K. Henry's Primar. Admon. to the Reader.

The hauke may check, that now comes faire to fist.
Incertaine Auctors. The Lover to his Love, &c.

That is the reason that men commonly tarie the ende of a merie play, and cannot abide the halfe hearing of a sower checking sermon.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 3.

There be two things in persecutions greuous tedious & intolrable to the flesh, whereof the one consisteth in the checkes and rebuks of men, the other in the payne & tormēt of the body.—Coluine. Foure Godlye Sermons, s. 2.

One of the bishoppes ministers that by chaunce stoode nexte him, not tarrying for any commaundement of his lorde, gaue Jesus a blow vpon the cheke, and such a chekful rebuke as was fit for suche a byshop, and suche a felow his seruant,—saying: aunswerest thou the byshop so.
Udal. John, c. 18.

For when the zealous anger of my friend
Checkes my unusuall sadnesse: I pretend
To study vertue, which indeede I doe,—
He must court vertue who aspires to you.
Habington. Castara. Vpon Disguising his Affection.

On the nineteenth of Aprill, an houre before sun-setting, he entred the harbour of Cales, & his fleete; there checked with him at the entring thwart the towne, sixe galles: but they in short time retired under their fortresses.
Stow. Q. Eliz. an. 1587.

Yet half his strength he put not forth but check'd
His thunder in mid volie, for he meant
Not to destroy, but root them out of Heav'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Though her feare made her false to him in his riddle, yet shee was true to his bed: that weake treachery was worthy of a checke, not a desertion.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Samson's Victory.

P. Jac. My cell 'tis, lady; where, instead of masks,
Music, tilts, tournies, and such court-like shows,
The hollow murmur of the checkless winds
Shall groan again.—Marston. The Malcontent, Act iv. sc. 5.

Pal. Good sir! 'tis not your active wit or language,
Nor your grave politic wisdoms, lords, shall dare
To check-mate and controul my just demands.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act iv. sc. 3.

And [Crumwell] writ him an angry letter: using many expressions therein, that did in no small measure afflict the bishop, even to teares, thus to be checked in the execution of his office in his own diocese.
Strype. Memoirs. Hen. VIII. an. 1535.

I thought not fit to communicate it to Monsr. de Witts till the day before the exchange was to be made, because I knew it could not escape him, and did it then only between ourselves: and he immediately checked when he came to the words supra memoratum garantiam.
Sir W. Temple. Letter to Sir John Trevor.

Do we not sometimes see, in persons of equal guilt and demerit, and of equal progress and advance in the ways of sin: some of them maturely diverted and took off, and others permitted to go on without check or controul, till they finish a sinful course in final perdition?—South, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

It [the air] certainly aggravated the diseases which we brought with us from Batavia, and particularly the flux, which was not in the least degree checked by any medicine, so that whoever was seized with it, considered himself as a dead man.—Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 14.

All the ancient, honest juridical principles and institutions of England are so many clogs to check and retard the headlong course of violence and oppression.
Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Heroes proceed! what bounds your pride shall hold!
What check restrain your thirst of pow'r and gold!
Johnson. London.

CHEEK.
CHE'EKED.

A.S. Ceac; Dut. Kaetche. A.S. Ceac-ban, cheek-bone. Junius suggests, from the Gr. Κεαζειν, findere, conterere, comminuere; since we crush and tear to pieces our food with our cheeks. It is perhaps formed of Chaw or cheo, and ic (i. e. eke,) thus—Chewic, chewe, cheek.

It is also applied to the opposite sides of a cavity or aperture, as the cheeks are of the mouth. Thus a door-cheek; the cheeks of a grate or stove.

So often away he was, & vmwhile cheke bil cheke.
R. Brunne, p. 223.

On bothen his chekes, and his chyn.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

The bitter teres, that on my chekes fall.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2329.

But howe and euer that it be,
I thonke vnto the goddes all,
As yet for ought, that is befal
Mate no man do my chekes redde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

You'll find your little officer
Ragged as his old colours are;
And naked, as he's discontent,
Standing at some poor sutler's tent,
With his pike cheek'd, to guard the tun,
He must not taste when he has done.
C. Cotton. Epistle to the Earl of ——.

A Tuscan soothsayer, as Paterculus tels the story, perceiving himself and Fulvius Flaccus his deare friende, now both caried to prison by Opimius, and in despaire of pardon, seeing the young man weepe, (said) do as I doe; and with that knocke out his braines against the moore cheeke as he was entring into prison, and so desperately died.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 694.

—— So much the more
His wonder was to find unwak'ned Eve
With tresses discompos'd and glowing cheek,
As through unquiet rest.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Rise Lord, save me, my God, for thou
Hast smote ere now
On the cheek bone alle my foes,
Of men abhorr'd
Hast broke the teeth. Id. Psalm 3.

Why, we are your honest neighbors, the cobler, smith, and botcher, that have so often sate sweating cheek by joll with your signiorie, in rug at midnight.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 1.

A liberty might at least be left to the judges and the bench, according to the difference of persons, crimes, and circumstances, to inflict either death or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose or such brands upon the cheeks that can never be effaced by time or art.
Sir W. Temple. Of Popular Discontents.

The shape of the face is comely, the cheek bones are not high, neither are the eyes hollow, nor the brow prominent.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 17.

CHEER, v.
CHEER, n.
CHE'ERER.
CHE'ERFUL.
CHE'ERFULLY.
CHE'ERFULNESS.
CHE'ERILY.
CHE'ERISHNESS.
CHE'ERLESS.
CHE'ERLY, adj.
CHE'ERLY, ad.
CHE'ERLINESS.
CHE'ERY, adj.

Fr. Chère; It. Cera; Sp. Xera. Skinner and Junius think from the Gr. Χαιρειν, gaudere. Menage and Du Cange say, from Cara, the visage, which they suppose to be derived from the Gr. Καρα, caput. Hispani et provinciales nostri, (observes the latter,) even now use Cara, pro vultu et facie. Dante,—Cera. In ancient Flemish also Carre, vultus; to which the old Eng. Cheere seems perfectly similar.

The Fr. Chère, Cotgrave explains;—"the face, visage, countenance, favour, look, aspect." Cheer is now applied to—

That which acts, has an effect upon the face, the countenance;—which enlivens, gladdens, exhilarates, heartens;—which inspires with mirth or gaiety, with life, spirit, vivacity;—with courage, with fortitude: to vivacity, gladness, mirth, spirit, courage; to the countenance which manifests the inward feelings; to the food, or entertainment which causes them. See CHEERISH.

Hit hath hym were meet priue, asked wu yt were
The kyng tho he hem come, & wy he made such chere.
R. Gloucester, p. 332.

—— Opene the gates
And lat yn the frere and hus felawe, and make hem faire chyre.
Piers Ploughman, p. 410.

And as ich wente by the waye when ich was thus awakede
Hevy chired ich goode.
Id. p. 392.

For if ony man is an heerer of the word, and not a doer, this schal be likened to a man that biholdith the cheer of his birthe in a myrrour.—Wiclif. James, c. 1.

And doun he kneleth, and with humble chere
And herte sore, he sayde as ye shul here.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2221.

This marchant, whan that ended was the faire,
To Seint Denis he gan to repaire,
And with his wif he maketh feste and chere.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,257.

Welcome, quod she, my sister by the rode
She feasted her, that ioye it was to tell
The fare they had, they drank the wyne so clere.
And as to purpose now and then it fell
She chered her, with, how, sister, what chere?
Wyat. Of the meane and sure Estate to John Poinz.

The next part that he hath to play is to chere his geastes, and to make them take pleasure, with hearing of thinges wittely deuised and pleasauntly set foorth.
Wilson. The Art of Rhetorique, p. 3.

O that the raging surges great that lechers bane had wrought
When first with ship he forowed seas, and Lacedemon sought;
In desert bed my shiuering coarse then shold not haue sought rest
Nor take in grief the chereful sunne so slowly fall to west.
Vncertaine Auctors. Penelope to Vlisses.

Here the sayde captaine found a gret black island, whervnto hee had good liking, and certifying the company thereof, they were somewhat comforted, and with the good hope of his wordes rowed cheerfully vnto the place.
Hacklayt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 88.

Yf any man shew mercy let him do it with cherfulnes.
Bible, 1551. Romaynes, c. 12.

Behold the flocke of sixe and sixe that yonder cheerly flies
Of swannes, whom late an egle fierce did chace through al the skies.
Phaer. Virgil. Aeneidos, b. i.

From man to man he steppes, and chafing vp their corage cheeres,
With loude exherting noise. Now now (quoth he) with might and maine,
Now cheerely stur your otes, now al your force do you constraine
Id. Ib. b. v.

Atrides, what I ever seem'd, the same at every part
This day shall shew me at the full, and I will fit thy heart.
But thou should'st rather cheere the rest, and tell them they in right
Of all good warre, must offer blowes, and should begin the fight.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

—— But (father) follow mee.
That (cheer'd with wine and foode) you may disclose
From whence you truly are; and all the woes
Your age is subject to.
Id. Odyssey, b. xiv.

Thus their sport and pastime upon this sturre and fright, was marred, and the parents of the virgines fled away with heavie cheere, blaming them highly and complaining of their breach of hospitalitie.—Holland. Livius, p. 8.

He ended, and his words thir drooping cheere
Enlightened, and thir languisht hope reviv'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Vnpruned, dyes.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

Rouse up thyselfe, my gentle muse,
Though now our greene conceits be gray,
And yet once more do not refuse
To take thy Phrygian harp, and play
In honour of this cheerefull day.
B. Jonson. On the King's Birthday.

Though wickedness be sugar in their mouthes, and wantonnesse as oyle to make them looke with cheerefull countenance, neuertheles if their hearts were disclosed, perhaps their glittering estate would not greatly bee enuied.
Hooker. Sermon. A Remedie against Sorrow.

For other things mild heav'n a time ordains,
And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.
Milton, Son. 21.

His nimble hands instinct then taught each string
A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance.
Crashaw. Music's Duel.

That man neglects his living, is an asse;
Farewel, come chearily boyes, about our business.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Little French Lawyer, Act v. sc. 1.

So every true Christian in a higher order of priesthood is a person dedicate to joy and peace, offering himself a lively sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, and there is no Christian duty that is not to be season'd and set off with cheerfulness.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, c. 7.

From heven high to chace the chearlesse darke
With merry note he lowd salutes the mounting larke.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

With wofull mind, with pale and chearlesse face,
With trembling voice, that came from bitter thought,
He said, he much desir'd to see this place,
Where such strange feats and miracles were wrought.
Harrington. Orlando, b. v. s. 41.

Their fellow traytor, and their fellow-son,
For from my body sprung both he and they?
Nor breeds their knawing more vexation
To generous Herod, than his smiles, away.
Fetch me his head that having blest'd mine eye
With that revenge, I may the chearlyer die.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 8. s. 302.

They to the vulgar sort now pipe and sing,
And make them merrie with their fooleries;
They cheerelie chaunt, and rymes at random fling,
The fruitfull spawne of their rank fantasies.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses. Terpsichore.

Oft list'ning how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumb'ring morn,
From the side of some hoar hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill.
Milton. L'Allegro.

And he beheld more sweetness in her eyes
And saw her more than she was yesterday.
A cheerfulness did with her hopes arise,
That lamped clearer than it did before,
And made her spir't and his affections more.
Daniel. Hist. of Civil War, b. viii.

He [the Christian] is justly cheered by the assurance he has, that there will come a time, when oppressed and disfigured innocency shall shine forth and triumph, and his good name, as well as his body, shall have a glorious resurrection, even in the sight of his accusers and enemies, and of all those, whom their slanders did either prevail with, or startle.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 555.

And indeed the Tonquineers in general are very free to their visitants, treating them with the best cheer they are able to procure.—Dampier. Voyage, an. 1688. c. 4.

I would only take notice of such incitements to a chearful temper, as offer themselves to persons of all ranks and conditions, and which may authentically shew us that Providence did not design this world should be filled with murmurs and repinings, or that the heart of man should be involved in gloom and melancholy.—Spectator, No. 387.

An inward chearfulness is an implicit praise and thanksgiving to Providence under all its dispensation. It is a kind of acquiescence in the state wherein we are placed, and a secret approbation of the Divine will in its conduct towards man.—Id. No. 381.

Yet ev'n this season pleasance blithe affords,
Now the squeez'd press foams with our apple hoards.
Come, let us hie, and quaff a cheery bowl,
Let cyder new "wash sorrow from the soul."
Gay. Friday. Or the Dirge.

Men of rank and ability, with the spirit which ought to animate such men in a free state, while they decline the jurisdiction of dark cabal on their actions and their fortunes, will, for both, chearfully put themselves upon their country.
Burke. On the Cause of the present Discontents.

But, O, how alter'd was its sprightlier tone!
When chearfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
Her bow across her shoulder slung,
Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
The hunters call to Faun and Dryad known.
Collins. The Passions.

Whoever has passed an evening with serious melancholy people, and has observed how suddenly the conversation was animated, and what sprightliness diffused itself over the countenance, discourse, and behaviour of every one, on the accession of a good humoured, lively companion; such a one will easily allow, that cheerfulness carries great merit with it, and naturally conciliates the goodwill of mankind.
Hume. Of Qualities agreeable to Ourselves, s. 7.

It is some consolation to me in the cheerless gloom which darkens the evening of my life, that with them I commenced my political career, and never for a moment in reality, nor in appearance, for any length of time, was separated from their good wishes and good opinion.—Burke. To a Noble Lord.

Hurdles to weave, and cheerly shelters raise,
Thy vacant hours require.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

CHEESE. n.
CHE'ESE-CAKE.
CHE'ESY.

A. S. Cyse; It. Cascio; Sp. Queso; Lat. Caseus. Of the Lat. Caseus, various etymologies have been proposed. Varro;—Caseus, a coacto lacte, ut coaxeus dictus, (lib. iv.) And—sic e lacte coacto caseus nominatus, (lib. v.) Julius Scaliger;—a casa, (De Caus. lib. i. c. 34.) The language of Columella, (manu pressus) and Suetonius, and also of Virgil, (pressi copia lactis,) cited by Vossius, confirm the etymology of Varro. See the quotation from Holland's Suetonius; and that from Dodsley.

Cheese-cake, — a cake made of curds (as cheese is) and other ingredients.

Lend in no wise, for feare that thou do want,
Unlesse it be, as to a calfe a chese;
But if thou can be sure to win a cant
Or half at least.
Wyat. How to use the Court and Himselfe therein.

As touching diet (for I may not overpasse so much as this) hee was a man of verie little meate;—second breade and small fishes, cheese made of cowes milke, and the same pressed with the hand.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 72.

This too, the more is the pittie
Is of the breed, of the same citie,
A true owle of London
That gives out he is undone,
Being a cheese-monger,
By trusting two of the younger
Captaines.
B. Jonson. The Masque of Owles.

What I have to beg of you now is, to turn one speculation to the due regulation of female literature, so far at least as to make it consistent with the quiet of such, whose fate it is to be liable to its insults; and to tell us the difference between a gentleman that should make cheese-cakes, and raise paste, and a lady that reads Locke, and understands the mathematicks.—Spectator, No. 242.

Of milk, the cheesy part is separated and dissolved by the bile.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 6.

Is cheese her care? warm from the teat she pours
The milky flood. An acid juice infus'd,
From the dried stomach drawn of suckling calf,
Congulates the whole. Immediate now
Her spreading hands bear down the gathering curd,
Which hard and harder grows; till clear and thin,
The green whey rises separate.—Dodsley. Agricult. c. 3.

CHELE. A.S. Celan, to keel or cool; to chill.

Mathew maketh mencion of a man that lente
Hus silver to thre menne, and menynge that thei sholde
Chaffare and cheve ther with, in chele and in hete
And he that best laborede, best was alowede.
Piers Ploukman, p. 141.

And make vnto myselfe a whippe:
With whiche in many a chele and heate
My wofull herte is so to beate,
That all my wittes ben vnsafte.—Gower. Con. A. b. 8.

CHE'RISH, v. } From Cheer, (qv.) in its CHE'RISHER. } consequential usage,—
CHE'RISHING, n. } To hearten, to encourage, to CHE'RISHMENT. } foster, to nourish, to protect.
CHE'RISANCE. } Spenser writes cherry.

The first of them hight mylde Euphrosyne;
Next faire Aglaia; last Thalia merry);
Sweete goddesses all three, which me in mirth do cherry!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

For I ne knew no cherisaunce.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Thus was I in the court of the erle of Foix, well cherysshed and at my pleasure.—Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 21.

The cherishing and sufferance of the fathers and mothers hurteth much the children, that grueth them an vnbridled libertie vnto infinite vices, and specially the maides.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. i. c. 2.

No sumptuous chimney-piece of shining stone,
Invites the stranger's eye to gaze upon,
And coldly entertain his sight, but clear
And cheerful flames cherish and warm him here.
Carew. To my Friend G. N.

Hee that comforts my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood.—Shakes. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc. 3.

For what admir'st thou, what transports thee so,
An outside? fair no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing, thy honouring, and thy love,
Not thy subjection. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

One onelie flues, her age's ornament,
And myrrour of her Maker's majestie,
That with rich bountie, and deare cherishment,
Supports the praise of noble poesie.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses. Polyhymnia.

In the infant state of the world, mankind were led, as it were, by the hand in matters of religion; directed by visible appearances, on every occasion, fed with a present portion of this world's goods, and cherished with temporal prospects.
Law. Theory of Religion, pt. ii.

It is better to cherish virtue and humanity, by leaving much to free will, even with some loss to the object, than to attempt to make men mere machines and instruments of a political benevolence.—Burke. French Revolution.

CHE'RRY, n. } Fr. Cerise, the fruit; Ceri-
CHE'RRY, adj. } sier, the tree. It. Ciregia and Ciregio; Lat. Cerasum, cerasus; Gr. Κεραος. Of uncertain origin. Lennep says, Nescio an a κειρειν, carpere, to pluck. See the quotation from Pliny.

Cherry is used prefixed, to denote the delicate rosiness of the cherry. As cherry-lip, cherry-cheek, &c.

Thei prechen vs in audience
That no man shall his soule empeire
For all is but a cherse feire.
This wordes good, so as thei tell.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

And so hope cometh in at last,
When I none other foode knowe,
And that endureth but a throwe,
Right as it were a cherse feste. Id. Ib. b. vi.

Her lippes soft and mery
Enbloomed like the cherry.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

If fortune then would frowne
or sought me to disgrace:
The touching of hir cherry lip
such sorrowes would displace.
Turbervile. The Lover declareth, &c.

And after, pleasing gifts for her purvaid,
Queene apples and red cherries from the tree,
With which he her allured and betrayd,
To tell what time he might her lady see
When she her selfe did bathe that he might secret bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Before the time that L. Lucullus defeated King Mithridates, there were no cherrie-trees in Italie: but after that victory, (which was about the 680 yeare from the foundation of the city of Rome,) he was the man that first brought them out of Pontus, and furnished Italie so well with them, that within six and twentie yeares, other lands had part thereof, even as far as Britaine beyond the ocean.
Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 25.

I [Lord Falkland] see all parents labour to fix opinions into their children before they come to an age fit to judge of any greater doubts than what may happen at span-counter or cherry-pit; and they again seldom labour to set right, what education hath swayed.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 679.

The matron of the assembly of ladies, who was dressed in a cherry-coloured hood, commended the discretion of the writer for having thrown his filthy thoughts into Greek, which was likely to corrupt but few of his readers.
Spectator, No. 271.

But dull was that black laughing eye,
And pale those lips of cherry-aye
And set those teeth of ivory.
Warton. Maiden's Garland, or High-street Tragedy.

CHE'RSONESE. Gr. Χερρονησος, χερσονησος, from χερρος or χερσος, land, and νησος, an island. Insular land; or land in form or state of an island; but united by a narrow neck to the main land. A peninsula.

——— And thence
To Agra and Lahor of Great Mogul
Down to the Golden Chersonese.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. xi.

From India and the Golden Chersonese
And utmost Indian Isle Taprobane,
Dusk faces with white silken turbants wreath'd.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

CHE'RUB, n. } Fr. Chérubin; It. Cheru-
CHERU'BIC, or } bino; Sp. Cherubin, from the CHERU'BICAL. } Heb. a celestial spirit, which,
CHE'RUBIS, adj. } in the Hierarchy, is the first
CHE'RUBIN, n. } after the Seraphims. (Menage.) Cherub is applied (hyperbolically) to—
An infant of exquisite beauty and innocence.

In which was a pott of gold hauinge manna, and the gherde of Aaron that florischide and the tablis of the testament, on which thingis weren cherubyns of glorie ouershadewynge the propiciatorie.—Wiclif. Ebreis, c. 8.

A sompnour was ther with us in that place,
That hadde a fire red cherubinnes face.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 626.

And he cast Adam out, and sette at the entering of the garden Eden, cherubin with a naked swerde mouynge in and oute, to kepe the waye to the tree of lyfe.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 3.

Bid her that heart-confounding reason tell,
Why looks so sweet such cruel wiles disguise,
Why in a cherub's lips deceits should dwell,
Or murd'ring pitying from an angel's eyes.
P. Fletcher, Eclogue 3.

A throne of pure and solid splendor framed,
On which the Monarch of Immensity
With such intolerable brightness flamed
That none of all the purest standers by
Could, with cherubic or seraphic eyes,
His vast irradiations comprise.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 24. s. 138.

Where the bright seraphim in burning row,
Their loud up-lifted angel-trumpets blow,
And the cherubic host in thousand quires
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires.
Milton. Ode at a Solemn Music.

Why did you not call to mind the cherubical angel, which in the form of crucifix spoke to St. Francis.
Sheldon. Miracles of Antichrist, p. 162.

Yet far more faire be those bright cherubins,
Which all with golden wings are ouer dight,
And those eternall burning seraphins,
Which from their faces dart out fierie light
Spenser. Hymne to Heavenlie Beautie, s. 11.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heaven's new born heir
Milton. Christ's Nativity. The Hymn, s. 11.

——— This fell whore of thine
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin looke.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

That first between the cherubs bright
Between their wings outspread
Shine forth. Milton, Psalm 80.

Th' eternal heard, and from the heav'nly quire,
Chose out the cherub with the flaming sword;
And bade him swiftly drive th' approaching fire,
From where our naval magazines were stor'd.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

The rising god forsakes the tomb,
Up to his father's court he flies,
Cherubic legions guard him home
And shout him welcome to the skies.
Watts. Looking Upward.

CHE'RUP, v. } Junius and Skinner both
CHE'RUP, n. } think,—a word formed from CHE'RUPING. } the sound. See CHIRP.

And taught the byrdes, which in the lower spring
Did shroude in shady leaves from sunny rayes,
Frame to thy songe their cheerful cherping.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. June.

